PREFACE.

THE importance of placing in book form biographical history of representative citizens—both for its immediate worth and for its value to coming generations—is admitted by all thinking people; and within the past decade there has been a growing interest in this commendable means of perpetuating biography and family genealogy.

That the public is entitled to the privileges afforded by a work of this nature needs no assertion at our hands; for one of our greatest Americans has said that the history of any country resolves itself into the biographies of its stout, earnest and representative citizens. This medium, then, serves more than a single purpose; while it perpetuates biography and family genealogy, it records history, much of which would be preserved in no other way.

In presenting the COMMEMORATIVE BIOGRAPHICAL RECORD to its patrons, the publishers have to acknowledge, with gratitude, the encouragement and support their enterprise has received, and the willing assistance rendered in enabling them to surmount the many unforeseen obstacles to be met with in the production of a work of this character. In nearly every instance the material composing the sketches was gathered from those immediately interested, and then submitted in type-written form for correction and revision. The volume, which is one of generous amplitude, is placed in the hands of the public with the belief that it will be found a valuable addition to the library, as well as an invaluable contribution to the historical literature of the State of New York.

JOSEPH F. BARNARD.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

ARNARD, HON. JOSEPH F.

The family of this distinguished citizen of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, is of English origin.

In very early times two brothers by the name of Barnard received a patent from the king of Great Britain of a considerable tract of land upon the island of Nantucket, and there they and their descendants made their home until about the year 1818. The father of Joseph was born upon that island, as was his father and his father's father, and his father's grandfather also.

This makes quite a long line of American citizenship. By birthright the Judge must be an American of Americans. The business of all upon this island from time immemorial was to "go down to the seas in ships," a life of trial, adventure and profit, in pursuit of the whale, principally, but sometimes chartered for commercial ventures the world over. At about the age of twenty years Frederic Barnard, the father of Joseph, came to the fore and took command of a ship sailing in all the seas where the whale was to be found. He seems to have been the last male representative of the name and fortunes of the Barnards at Nantucket. About this time he married a Miss Margaret Allen, a native of Millford Haven, on the border of Wales and the kingdom of Great Britain. William and Thomas were born there. Remaining there a few years, Frederic brought his family to Nantucket, and having accumulated a fair competence he migrated with his family of two children and wife to the east bank of the Hudson river about two miles north of the then village of Poughkeepsie, and settled upon an estate of about 100 acres of farm and wood lands. It is said that he was attracted to this location partly by the fact that there was a company here engaged in sending out a fleet of whalers to search the seas for whales, then valuable for oil and bone. But the father of Joseph engaged in no further business ventures. He lived quietly upon his lands, doing not much more farming than seafaring men are accustomed to do when upon the seas. Here were born to this father and mother eight additional children, six sons—Thomas, Henry, Joseph F., John, Frederic, George—and two daughters—Margaret and Martha. Each of these lived to adult age except Henry, who from some child's sickness died as a little one of some half dozen years.

Capt. Frederic Barnard used his time and resources most faithfully and wisely for the profit of his numerous family, for every child, nine in number, both girls and boys, were as thoroughly educated as was possible in this country. William, Thomas, Robert and Frederic were each graduates from Union College, while John, Joseph F. and George G. were graduated from Yale. This shows remarkable fixedness of purpose in a parent, and shows also that there were no idle ones in that family. Capt. Barnard seems to have taken the bearings of life early and to have sailed the ship without variation from the true course. In that day the funds and opportunities for education were far more difficult of attainment than now since the cities and State almost fill one with learning with but one price—the boy must be diligent. In 1836 Frederic Barnard parted with the lands upon the Hyde Park road and purchased of Walter Cunningham the premises known as 47 Cannon street, where he died at the age of eighty years. The house is still owned within the family, and Margaret Barnard, and Martha B. Jones, widow of Judge Samuel Jones, now reside there during a portion of each year. All of the brothers of Joseph F. Barnard are now deceased. William, Thomas and Henry died at Poughkeepsie, and John at Santiago, in the Republic of Chili, where he acted most successfully and with uncommon skill in behalf of the government as a civil engineer. He was said to be one of the ablest in his profession. Frederic and Robert practiced law in California and died there. George G. was a lawyer, recorder, and judge in New York City and died there. Every member of this large family who lived to manhood or womanhood, was known for quick abilities, thoughtful also, and won to themselves the firmest personal friendships and regard from others.

On December 31, 1893, our subject laid off the robes as presiding justice of the supreme court, he having then reached the age of seventy years—the constitutional limit. On this occasion the story of his life as here given appeared in the Poughkeepsie News-Telegraph of about that date:

“Joseph F. Barnard was prepared for college at the Dutchess County Academy in the village of Poughkeepsie and finished the course at Yale, graduating in 1841. He returned to Poughkeepsie and resided at the Barnard house on Cannon street. He entered the law office of Stephen Cleveland, then that of Henry Swift, each most able lawyers of that day here. He was admitted to practice about the year 1845. He began his career as a lawyer at Poughkeepsie alone. He was tall, thin and pale, but athletic, given to rowing, swimming, and keeping out of doors a good share of the day, although he attended carefully to his little business. He was alert, independent, not at all given to oratory, but his work was done and the matter was either won or lost, and no one found fault with him or his effort. It seemed to be from the time of his first efforts that the work was thought to be well done if he did it. He used his time upon a wise plan, such as to be sure of having what he wanted of it for his business. He arose early, and the office work, drawing of papers, writing letters, and hunting law, was done at once. Much was added to his knowledge of law, and his clients' business was attended to, and then he had more leisure time for recreation, and had done as much work as any man on the street. He had no influences of family, or corporation to help him. He got clients, poor ones with small business at first, but the people began to discover that there was something to get in his office; and the farmers and able people of the county who wanted a militant lawyer, and did not expect to be fawned over in a law office, began to be seen there early in the morning. He had them, after a few years, sufficient for full employment; he was earnest in whatsoever he took hold of; if he was not to be, he let go of it very quickly—the dawdling client's money had no place in his pockets, and this quick-brained, truthful lawyer had no use for any part or parcel of such case or man. He won the cases in court that work, ingenuity and law would win; fair charges were made, collected, and business closed. Next morning he was early at the office ready for a new investment in himself. The clients came more and more plentifully until his time was used fully, and if there was a tough, hard job of litigation or a close legal question, and people wanted sure work, and answers to live and die by to questions of law, the hard-headed working and business men stated their cases to him, and sometimes the statements had to be shortened, too, for he was ready to answer, and it may be that he wanted the question or statement to be lively in its delivery also. At any rate he got a place as lawyer at the Poughkeepsie bar, wherein he had more real clients than any other lawyer here. No large corporations—but suits for all the people everywhere, suits about little things and big. People who wanted right protected or a wrong stopped took him for lawyer quickly. The trials, as to all the various businesses of men, in which he put his fervid, his best, efforts, it was always one thing with him, the best he could do; they were all the time going on and covered our county completely, until he was the head of the profession here, and people commonly said if he said a thing it must be so. He was careful of money, but obliging with it in all proper situations, often helping the needy client with aid to tide him over troubles. He did not appear to think life was all on one side, and that side for himself.

“In 1863 there was an opening for some Democratic lawyer in this judicial district to be elected as justice of the supreme court. Joseph F. Barnard was the choice of the profession and people in Dutchess county. There was no question made as to that here, and, after some little struggle at Brooklyn, he was nominated and elected for eight years at a salary of $2,500 per year; after serving this term he was again elected, in 1871, for the term of fourteen years, at a salary of $8,500 per year; this term he served in full, and was again re-elected in 1885, for the term of fourteen years; for each of these two latter terms he was renominated by both political parties, and with the expiration of this year (1893) the eighth year of the present term, his official duties end as judge.

“Judge Barnard began the discharge of his official duties with the same earnestness with which he had acted as advocate or counsel. He was the servant of the people and did their work only, and this was first with him, above all things, during these whole thirty years. He was early at his post—indeed, his life work thus far has been largely done by noon of each succeeding day, and it has been an exceedingly active lawyer who has been able to be at the court room before him with business for the judge, or order, or paper for him to sign. This has enabled him to dispose of the business, and to take upon himself to personally see to many things, in the administration of the law, that are usually disposed of otherwise. This has been largely to the benefit of the people in money, and in the saving of their time. There is a vast amount of work for the judiciary of the district of which Dutchess county is a part to do, it being a district with as great a population as any in the State. But the appeal calendar under Judge Barnard was clear each term, the special and regular court terms for trials are made to move with vigor, lawyers, jurymen and all are kept busy with this system of going ahead with business. When the court house bell is ringing the judge is on the bench ready, with gavel in hand, to begin the duty of the day. This place, he considered, was as important as a railroad train, and why delay and use up the people's money in idle court hours when just a little pains on the part of each would bring all of them along in time? At any rate the system of this judge has kept our calendars clear of stale suits, and there is no long deferred litigation to worry and perplex litigants.

“In the work of Judge Barnard as a trial judge a great benefit has been conferred. The case, and nothing else, was to be heard. The attorney who wandered, as many are prone to do, into illogical paths, was suddenly brought up with an admonitory word, and things moved on apace. There has been no known delay of this judge to administer the word, and the ways were made plain, kindly but firmly. How is it? It is often asked, ‘Does the judge try cases all the time?’ It has come about in Dutchess county, that almost all the law cases are left to arbitrament by Judge Barnard without a jury, and thus, day by day, the weeks, months and years have been going away—the judge constantly trying cases, as it makes so much less trouble to the litigants and less expense in all ways. The practice in this respect has brought cases to a conclusion, and prompt justice is had.

“What scenes of legal work have transpired in those plain rooms wherein our special terms are held! The judge has sat there as any other occupant of the room, near the table, surrounded by the counsel for the parties, with nothing in seat or station to indicate his rank in the assembly. At times the room is filled with the leading lights of the profession from New York and Brooklyn, and some great case is heard, involving millions of property rights, perhaps; the arguments are varied, opposing and masterly; but almost invariably as soon as the argument is ended, if there is need of decision, it is rendered at once, orally—in a few plain words, directly to the point, and decisive of the subject matter. This quickness of decision has been of great value to both lawyers and their clients.

“Sometimes it has seemed that the case has been by him rolled up and handed over in a very small parcel, and just a little warm from the mental forging, but it has had the thing in it that has satisfied the people, for it was right and men could see it. It is a great thing for a man to have so satisfied the conscience of all the people through thirty years of living under their gaze, and administering their affairs. Of friends the judge has many, but some of those, with whom youth and manhood were passed, have gone from earth. Other lawyers were here to strive and work with him, Judge Charles Wheaton, Homer A. Nelson, John Thompson, Edward Crummey, Cyrus Swan, E. Q. Eldridge, L. B. Sackett, and others; with them, as a lawyer, he had his struggles, but he was just as ready to help them to win their cases when he was not engaged against them, as he had been to win his own. He has greatly enjoyed the society of his legal brethren, and jokes and pleasant talks were a daily repast; indeed, the writer has often, in the early days, found great pleasure in the talks of Judge Charles Wheaton, and those other gentlemen of the law. Sometimes the joke would be upon Judge Barnard—often this way when Judge Wheaton was to the fore—and the Judge has not failed since his accession to the bench to use and fully enjoy these kindly and familiar social habits. But, in passing, a word must be in justice said, that many a hard knock-down has come to many of us when our cases did not upon examination bear his acute inspection. What a legal fight there was about the building of the reservoir, about the walling in of the Fallkill and the Quicksilver Mining Company case; and cases without number could be mentioned, especially remarkable, from the public interest as to their decision, and by reason of the eminence of the counsel engaged—but why particularize when it has been every-day business for him for thirty years full of work.

“The father of Judge Barnard and his ancestors for many generations were of the sect known as Quakers, bringing with them to Nantucket this religious faith and practice. The mother was of the Church of England, and Joseph and the other children were, through her influence, brought up in the American representative of her faith, the Episcopal Church. The Judge is a most faithful reader of the Bible and a firm believer in the doctrines it sets forth, and it is often that he speaks with wonder of the wealth of wisdom in the book.

“Judge Barnard has become the owner of many farms in the county of Dutchess, and also of a number in other counties. He has taken much care of these possessions, and has put the buildings and the farm appurtenances in first-class order; indeed, nearly all of them have new sets of buildings upon them, and, perhaps, in this opening for personal attention to the management of lands, crops and nice stock of farm animals, he may find a charming employment, in out-door life, in his days of leisure to come. It has been his constant pleasure to walk over the roads and fields, taking close note of all that there is in Nature—getting health, rest and amusement. All the roads and ways upon each side of the river for miles around have been well and frequently traveled by him. He continues to practice, as a means of throwing off the burdens of in-door life. Judge Barnard has always been a Democrat, and a man in sympathy with the people.

In 1861 he was married to Miss Emily B. Hasbrouck, of Kingston, Ulster county. They have two children—Frederic Barnard, yet residing with his parents in their beautiful home in Poughkeepsie, and a daughter named Maud, who is now Mrs. James Lenox Banks, of New York City; each of these, the son and son-in-law, are graduates of Yale College, and are each lawyers working in the profession for its emoluments and honors. A young lawyer bids us say, and we cannot refrain from so doing, since we think it a sure mark of greatness and broadness of thought in a man who has won high position by dint of merit, to remember how weak and timid Joseph F. Barnard once was as a lawyer; and so we must say that, to the young lawyer, diffident, strange in the place, poor, usually, and needing help just then with his case, no parent with his child could have been more considerate than Judge Barnard was with him. No attempt at praise in this article has been intended, and only the facts of this useful service to us all has been the purpose of this story to plainly and truthfully give.”

JUDGE CHARLES WHEATON (deceased). The subject of this sketch, one of the most talented and distinguished members of the Dutchess County Bar, was born May 21, 1834, at Lithgow, in the town of Washington, Dutchess county.

He was connected by marriage and blood with many well-known residents of this region, the Bockee, the Carpenter, the Barculo, the Smith and the Thompson families, and his ancestors in the direct line were among the most prominent citizens of their day. His (Charles Wheaton's) great-grandfather Wheaton died during the Revolution, in the city of New York. His grandfather Augustus (born in 1774 in New Milford, or town of Washington, Conn., and died in 1851 in New Milford) was married, about 1796, to Hannah Givan, of the town of Washington, Conn.; she was born in 1776, and died in 1825 in Pompey, N. Y. In about 1802 Augustus Wheaton came to the town of Northeast, Dutchess county, where he remained till 1810, managing one of Judge Isaac Smith's farms. In 1810 he moved to Pompey, N. Y., with his family, where he bought a farm and lived till about 1840. In 1833 or 1834 he was appointed by the Governor as inspector of salt, which position he held for about five years. Later he removed to his former home, New Milford, Conn., where he married Miss Bestwick. He died in 1851.

On December 15, 1804, Charles Wheaton's father, Homer, was born about three-quarters of a mile north of the Square. He commenced his school life at Pompey, where he entered the academy at eight years of age. His precocity is evidenced by his being already engaged in translating Xenophon when nine years old. He entered Hamilton College in 1819, being graduated in 1822, and delivering the English oration. He studied law, was admitted to the bar, and began to practice in Syracuse. On June 23, 1830, he married Louisa Smith, daughter of Judge Isaac Smith, a well-known jurist and large land-owner of Dutchess county, and as she preferred to live near her old home he gave up his profession and came to Lithgow, where his time was largely occupied in managing the estates of his wife. He prepared for the ministry of the Episcopal Church, was ordained in 1841, and in 1842 was made assistant rector of Christ Church, Poughkeepsie, and in 1846 was chosen rector, serving one year, when he resigned and returned to Lithgow. Here he acted as rector of St. Peter's Church, building Episcopal churches in Amenia Union and Beekman during his ministry. In 1854 he was urged by a number of the clergy for the bishopric then vacant by the death of Bishop Wainwright, but his religious views were undergoing a change, and he discouraged the movement. In 1855 he became a Roman Catholic, and thereafter resided at his beautiful country home till within a few years of his death, which occurred in his ninetyeth year. He had become quite deaf, and was accidentally killed by the cars at Millbrook, on November 12, 1894.

As to the maternal ancestry of Charles Wheaton: His mother, Louisa Smith, was born March 29, 1805, and died May 21, 1863. Her father, Isaac Smith, was born at the Square, July 25, 1767, and died at Lithgow in 1825. Early in the century he held the office of county judge, and served also as member of the Assembly of the State. For the earlier history of the Smith family we copy the following from an old record: "William Smith came from Gloucestershire, in England, in or about the year 1635 or 1636, unto Boston, where he was persecuted for his religious principles. He left Boston and came to Hempstead, on Long Island, in the year 1639, where about forty families that had left Boston on the same account had settled about two years before, under the States of Holland. He was killed a few years after by the Indians. He left several sons: John, Abraham and Morris. Abraham had two sons—Isaac and Abraham; the youngest removed to Cape May, in New Jersey. Abraham died, aged eighty-six years. Isaac Smith, he settled on the side of Hempstead Plains. He was born about the year 1657 or '8, and died in the year 1746. He left two sons—Jacob and Micah. Jacob was born December, 1690; Micah was born 1703. Jacob died in the year 1757. He left two sons—Thomas, born 9th of August, 1720; Jacob was one of the judges of the Court of Common Pleas when he died. Isaac Smith was born the 9th day of September, 1722, and moved from Hempstead, in Queens county, where his ancestors had resided nearly a century before, to the town of Amenia, in Dutchess county, the year 1769"—and from another section: "Isaac Smith was born September 9, 1722; Margaret Platt was born August 16, 1728. They were married January 2, 1743 or '4. Of eleven children born to them, Isaac Smith was the tenth, born July 25, 1767," the grandfather of Charles Wheaton, subject of this sketch.

Of the two sons of Homer Wheaton, the elder, Isaac Smith, died in November, 1872; Charles, the younger son, was a graduate of the College of St. James at Hagerstown, Md., and a tutor there for two years. He then studied law in the office of Thompson & Weeks, of Poughkeepsie, was admitted to the bar, and entering the office of Silas Wodell, then district attorney, he became assistant district attorney. In 1863 he was elected county judge, and on the resignation of Judge Homer A. Nelson, who had been elected to Congress, he was appointed to fill his unexpired term in addition to that for which he had been chosen. He declined a renomination, and never again held a public office, although as an ardent believer in the principles of the Democratic party he valiantly led a "forlorn hope" several times against the overwhelming Republican majority of his district. He seemed to care nothing for defeat; the cause was all that he considered; the principles which he held dear filled him with enthusiasm, in which the thought of self had no place. He was candidate for Congress in 1866, for the U. S. Senate in 1873 (against Roscoe Conkling), and for State Senator in 1877, bearing the party standard as gallantly as if success instead of defeat were assured. He was frequently a delegate to State Conventions, and on several occasions was chairman, his clearness of intellect and judicial fairness making him an ideal presiding officer. He held minor offices of public trust, fulfilling their duties with scrupulous care, serving on the board of education, and on the board of managers of the Hudson River State Hospital for many years. With his high intellectual endowments, and a manner which never failed to establish a spirit of good-fellowship, it has been a matter of surprise to many that he did not make use of opportunities for distinction in public life which arose from time to time. But he was genuinely indifferent to official honors for himself, and preferred rather to help his friends, when victory was probable, than to enter into competition with them. Again, his high sense of honor has stood in his way on more than one occasion, and the story is told that in 1879, during the preliminary campaign for the nomination of a governor, a friend asked his support for the State Treasurership. Judge Wheaton's promise was readily given, and when he was afterward notified by several delegations that he could be named for governor if he so desired he informed them that he could not accept the nomination as his promise had been given to support a Dutchess county man for the Treasurership, and two could not be chosen from that county. Had he been nominated, he could certainly have been elected, as he would have reconciled all factions. Public opinion is united in the belief that had he possessed greater ambition, and a less scrupulous sense of honor, he would have filled a larger place in the public eye. This is doubtless true, but one may well question whether he would have found in official place and power the satisfaction which private life afforded one of his temperament. A lover of books and travel, of home and all the refinements of cultured society, it is no wonder that he turned from the turmoil of political life with perfect contentment. He died Tuesday, May 11, 1886, at the early age of fifty-two, after a brief illness. The funeral services were held in St. Paul's Church at eleven o'clock, Friday, May 14, and the sad event was marked by sincere grief among all classes. The members of the Dutchess County Bar, who attended the funeral in a body, passed the following resolutions of condolence and respect:

WHEREAS, The members of the bar of the County of Dutchess have learned, with great sorrow, of the death of the Hon. Charles Wheaton, and have met in council to publicly express their appreciation of the man and their sympathy with his family:

Resolved, That in the loss of our well-beloved associate and friend, ever upright, courteous and generous, pure of character, honest of purpose, filling every position with sagacity and courage, never faltering or hesitating in following his convictions of duty, a profound lawyer and learned man, an impartial and clear-minded judge and a wise counsellor, always ready to aid the younger and less experienced of his associates, and a firm and steady friend, we desire to place on record an expression of our common loss, and to his family our condolence and our sympathy in their bereavement.

On further motion it was resolved that, out of respect for the deceased brother, the members of the bar attend the funeral.

Judge Wheaton was married in Poughkeepsie, October 26, 1859, to Miss Caroline Barculo, who survives him. They had five children: Barculo, born September 24, 1861, died at the age of thirteen; Louisa, born August 6, 1863, is a sister in the order of The S. H. C. J. at the convent at Sharon Hill, Penn., near Philadelphia; Isaac Smith, born December 13, 1864, resides at Lithgow, and is married to Helen Marguerite Fairchild, of New York; Frank died at the age of fourteen months; and Agnes, born January 19, 1870, is in the convent at Sharon Hill. A few years after his marriage Judge Wheaton built the brick mansion in North Hamilton street, which faces Mansion square near the intersection of Mansion street. There his children were born, and there he accumulated his library. He was rarely absent from home, and never for a long period of time. He made an extended trip through Europe in 1880 in company with his family, and returned with probably acuter and more appreciative knowledge of what he had seen than most travelers gain. Extensive reading had prepared his mind for the scenes and objects he was to visit; therefore, sight of them was had with a relish that was keen and intelligent. He loved to talk of his experiences; those that were vital with humor or exhibited striking phases of human nature were narrated by him with bright phrases and a verbal coloring that indicated his many-sided apprehension. His amusements were all of an intellectual character; outdoor diversions seemed to have but little attraction for him. In his younger manhood his physique was almost perfect, his sound health imparting a ruddiness to his skin and a brightness to his eyes that set him forth one of the handsomest of men. These qualities, added to his native bonhomie, made him especially attractive. His courtesy toward women, and good fellowship with men, assured him a lasting popularity. It can be said with literal truth that Charles Wheaton was one of Nature's noblemen. His intellect was a noble gift; his perceptions were of the keenest, his powers of expression superior; he apparently lacked nothing of a thoroughly-equipped mind. His knowledge of history was wide and exact; perhaps few men in this State exceeded him in the wealth of middle-age and modern history. Polite literature was a favorite study in his younger years, and as he approached the end of half a century of life his literary tastes and reading were unabated. He was especially informed concerning the literature of the Elizabethan, the Queen Anne and the Georgian eras of English drama, oratory and belles lettres. The law seemed to possess more attractions for him in his early manhood than in his later years, and while such attractions receded from him, the allurements of modern and coetaneous literature exerted their spell upon his receptive mind.

Hon. Seward Barculo, the father of Mrs. Charles Wheaton, was the son of Rev. George Barculo, who, at the time of his son's birth, September 22, 1808, was pastor of the two churches at Hopewell and New Hackensack, Dutchess county. Seward was a favorite of his uncle, Jacobus Swarthout, with whom he spent much of his time in boyhood, and who adopted him and provided for his education. As a boy he was remarkable for the active and mischievous turn of his mind, while he was at the same time truthful, generous, fearless, and firm. He began his academic course in December, 1826, at the academy in Fishkill village, then under the charge of Rev. Cornelius D. Westbrook. He prepared for college at Cornwall, Conn., and entered the freshman class at Yale in September, 1828, remaining until August, 1830, when owing to some difficulty with the Faculty he received an honorable discharge and went to Rutgers College, N. J. He was a year in advance of his class there, and after three months he returned home; the Faculty being displeased at this step, expelled him, and this ended his college course. He commenced the study of law with S. Cleveland, Esq., of Poughkeepsie, and was admitted to the bar in the spring of 1834. He then began to practice under circumstances which, though generally deemed favorable, are in reality a disadvantage to a young man anxious to commence the trial of causes at nisi prius. He entered into partnership with Mr. Cleveland, whose many clients were always desirous that he should personally conduct their cases. The junior partner rapidly acquired confidence, and began to try his skill unaided by senior counsel, and as Mr. Cleveland was in New York much of the time, the young man gradually assumed the business of the office with credit to himself and satisfaction to his clients. He was appointed judge of the county court in April, 1845, by Gov. Wright, on the unanimous recommendation of the Dutchess County Bar, and in 1846 was appointed circuit judge by Gov. Wright. In 1847 he was elected one of the justices of the supreme court for the Second District, and drew the longest term, serving six years and a half.

Judge Barculo had no negative characteristics; none of the easy and facile utterance of non-committal expressions which mark the weak and mediocre man who aims at political "availability." He was an extensive reader, possessed of fine literary taste, and he took great interest in the public library of the city of Poughkeepsie. Horticulture was a favorite pursuit with him, and his varieties of strawberries, peaches, pears and other fruits became quite celebrated in his section. To the culture of the grape he paid especial attention, and the manufacture of wine, of which he left some fine varieties. Some valuable papers were written by him for the "Horticulturist," on the varieties and management of fruit.

In 1846, 1850 and 1854, he visited Europe, as much for the sake of being on the ocean as to observe for himself the manners and customs of foreign society, and the machinery of their social and political life. His fondness for the water amounted to a passion. He owned a sail boat, and would occasionally hoist sail and pass down the river to New York City, across the bay, and up the Shrewsbury river, where he would spend weeks in sailing and bathing. During his last trip to Europe his health failed perceptibly while he was in London and Paris, but he never complained. Always kind and considerate to those about him, he would insist upon going with his young friends to places of interest, that their visit might not be marred by his afflictions. Finding himself growing feebler, in June, 1854, he turned his face homeward, his one wish being to die in his own home, surrounded by those who were near and dear to him. But that home he never reached, for on June 20, 1854, he died in New York City. His unconscious dust reposed for a while in its desolate halls, and then—

Gently we laid him down to rest,
With his own white roses upon his breast.

He was buried with the solemn ritual of the Episcopal Church, of which he was a member, on June 22, 1854, in the cemetery which, shortly before his departure for Europe, he was most active in procuring, as if in prophetic knowledge that he would soon occupy it. Eleven weeks later, September 4, 1854, in Poughkeepsie, his only son, Sidney, was killed by an accidental fall, and their remains rest side by side.

On May 12, 1834, Judge Barculo was married to Cornelia, daughter of John H. and Sarah (Somerville) Talman, of New York City. His wife survives him with two daughters—Caroline T., born March 1, 1835, and Marion, born June 5, 1836; Cornelia F., born March 31, 1851, died August 6, 1881.

It is one of the consolations of a good man that his memory shall not die; that the remembrance of his services and virtues shall be preserved as an inheritance to his children, and as an incentive to others who may be treading the arduous path of public life. The sentiment, which seeks its gratification in the desire for honest fame while we live, may legitimately be extended to posthumous renown. It is a premonition and prophecy that we are not all mortal, but that something survives and claims a consciousness of the character it leaves behind. Judge Barculo well merited the epitaph inscribed upon his monument:

In Society, an Ornament;
In the State, a Judge, fearless, dignified and incorruptible;
In habit, simple and pure.
He died young, but mature
In usefulness and fame,
Adorning Jurisprudence by the clearness of his decisions,
And illustrating Religion by The Strength of his Faith.

MOMER AUGUSTUS NELSON (deceased). The subject of this memoir, a native of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, born August 31, 1829, was at the time of his death characterized by one of the Poughkeepsie journals as "the first citizen of this city and county." This unusual tribute was deserved. The son of John M. Nelson, a Dutchess county farmer, Judge Nelson achieved a prominent place in State and National affairs, solely by virtue of his inherent abilities. He was educated at the Dutchess County Academy, and afterward studied law in the offices of Tallman & Dean, Varick & Eldridge, and Hon. Charles H. Ruggles, all of Poughkeepsie, and at twenty-one years of age was admitted to the bar.

He at once began to attract attention as a lawyer by his keen analysis of legal questions, while in politics he was speedily recognized as a leader of the local Democratic party. In 1855, when but twenty-six years old, he was elected judge of Dutchess county, being the youngest man ever chosen to that office. He served upon this bench with distinction for two terms. In 1859 he was renominated unanimously, and re-elected by a large majority, notwithstanding the fact that all the other candidates on the Democratic ticket were defeated.

At the breaking out of the war of the Rebellion he was made colonel of the 167th Regiment, N. Y. V. I., and would have accompanied his command to the front but for the urgent pleading of his numerous friends, who prevailed on him to take his seat in Congress, where they considered his services would be of more value to the country at large. In the fall of 1862 he was elected to Congress, and in the following year entered upon his duties there, having, at the special solicitation of his bosom friend, Mr. Kelly, of Rhinebeck, resigned his commission in the army. It may be here mentioned that Col. Nelson's regiment was among those that suffered most in the great struggle, a large proportion of its officers and men having been numbered among the killed and wounded. In December, 1863, he proceeded to Washington, and on New Year's Day, 1864, he was present at a reception held at the White House, to which all the generals in the army were invited, the first and only occasion of the kind during the war.

During his entire Congressional term Judge Nelson warmly advocated and supported all measures for the vigorous prosecution of the war, and the suppression of the Rebellion. The adoption of the Constitutional Amendments for the Abolition of Slavery was doubtless due in a large measure to his efforts, for he was not only one of the few Democrats to vote for them, but he also exerted his influence to induce others of his party to support them at a time when they could not have been secured without a partition of the Democratic vote in the House of Representatives.

In 1867 he was elected a delegate to the Constitutional Convention of New York State, where he rendered conspicuous service, leading to his nomination and election the same year as Secretary of State. He was re-elected two years later by a majority which at that time was the largest ever given to a Democratic candidate in the State. His success in this position was acknowledged even by party opponents; but he generously declined a re-nomination for a third term in favor of a friend, Diedrich Willers, who was his deputy.

After his retirement in 1871 from the office of Secretary of State, Judge Nelson removed his law office to New York City, where he was engaged in litigations of the greatest importance. He retained his residence at Poughkeepsie, however, and in 1881 was elected State Senator from Dutchess county, serving as chairman of the Judiciary Committee, in which capacity his services were invaluable in the revision of the penal code. His appointment by the Governor, in 1890, as a member of the commission to prepare and propose to the Legislature amendments to the judiciary article of the Constitution, was a recognition of his distinguished services, and of his learning, ability, and experience as a lawyer. Altogether he was one of the most prominent, active, and influential members, and during his career in the House served as chairman of three committees. As a member of the legal profession, he was highly popular, not only with his colleagues, but among all classes, and was universally respected. At the bar he was as distinguished as when he sat in both Congress and Senate, and in 1857 Rutgers College, New Jersey, conferred upon him the honorary degree of Master of Arts, in token of the esteem in which his abilities had thus early won him.

With the young men of his time, and especially with the then struggling law student, or newly-fledged attorney, Judge Nelson's memory will be ever held in kindly reverence. To these he was always considerate and helpful, encouraging and affable, and none ever came to him for advice or counsel that was not cheerfully given. On one occasion, having delivered an address in the Opera House, a reporter waited on him with the request that he, the Judge, would repeat certain points in his address. The Judge not only immediately acceded to this, but cheerfully repeated the whole of the address to the reporter. In fact, Judge Nelson was one of the most urbane and courteous of men, and possessed the faculty of putting at ease all who approached him. He was also possessed of an extremely generous heart, was charitable to all deserving causes, and the poor at all times had his counsel "without money and without price." All these characteristics, and more, the outcome of genuine kindness of heart, were the completion of his well-rounded character. Physically he was a man of fine presence, handsome, standing six feet in height, and well built in proportion. He was fond of sport, even boyish in his tastes and enjoyments, and delighted to join with children in their games and sports.

The Judge was married in September, 1855, to Miss Helen J. Stearns, daughter of a well-known attorney, John M. Stearns, of Brooklyn, N. Y. Judge Nelson departed this life at Poughkeepsie, April 25, 1891, the cause of his death being heart trouble, and on the day of his funeral, out of respect to his memory, the entire business in town was suspended. He was a member of the State Bar Association, and was a Freemason.

MON. LEVI PARSONS MORTON, ex-Vice-President of the United States, and ex-Governor of the State of New York, claims descent from an old French family, one member of which (supposed to have been Robert Comte de Mortain) joined William the Conqueror, in Normandy, in his famous expedition to England. This Count Robert had a son, William, Earl of Moriton and Cornwall, and from these first of the name in England sprang many men of renown both in Church and State.

Prominent among the English Mortons who early came to America were Thomas Morton, Esq., Rev. Charles Morton, Landgrave Joseph Morton, and (I) George Morton, the ancestor of our subject. He was born about 1585, at Austerfield, Yorkshire, England, and about 1622, accompanied by his wife and five children, he set sail for America, as one of the "Pilgrims," in the "Ann," reaching Plymouth in June, 1623. He did not long, however, survive his arrival, dying in June of the following year. He married Juliana Carpenter, and by her had five children: Nathaniel, Patience, John, Sarah and Ephriam. The mother married a second time, and died at Plymouth, February, 18, 1665.

(II) Hon. John Morton, second son of George and Juliana Morton, was born in 1616-17, and came with his parents in the "Ann." From Plymouth he removed to Middleboro, in the same county, and there died, October 3, 1673. He married Lettice —, who married again, and died, February 22, 1691.

(III) John Morton, eldest surviving child of Hon. John and Lettice Morton, was born at Plymouth, December 21, 1650, and died at Middleboro in 1717. He married, about 1680, Phœbe —, and after her death wedded, about 1687, Mary Ring.

(IV) Capt. Ebenezer Morton, fourth child of John and Mary Morton, was born at Middleboro, October 19, 1696, and died there in 1750. He married, in 1720, Mercy Foster, born 1698, died April 4, 1782.

(V) Ebenezer Morton, fourth child of Capt. Ebenezer and Mercy Morton, was born at Middleboro, August 27, 1726, and married there, July 23, 1753, Mrs. Sarah Cobb.

(VI) Livy Morton, fourth child of Ebenezer and Sarah Morton, was born at Middleboro, February 4, 1760; removed to Winthrop, Maine, where his children were born, but subsequently returned to Middleboro, where he died July 19, 1838. He married (first) March 13, 1788, Hannah Dailey, born November 15, 1760, died in 1807; married (second) in 1808, Catherine Richmond, who died in 1849.

(VII) Rev. Daniel Oliver Morton, A. M., eldest son of Livy and Hannah Morton, was born at Winthrop, Maine, December 21, 1788, and died at Bristol, N. H., March 25, 1852. At Pittsfield, Vt., August 30, 1814, he married Lucretia Parsons, daughter of Rev. Justin and Electa (Frery) Parsons; she was born at Goshen, July 26, 1789, died at Philadelphia, January 11, 1862. Children of Rev. Daniel Oliver, and Lucretia Morton, all born at Shoreham, Vt., were Daniel Oliver, Lucretia Parsons, Electa Frery, Levi Parsons, Mary and Martha.

(VIII) Hon. Levi Parsons Morton, fourth child of Rev. Daniel Oliver and Lucretia (Parsons) Morton, was born May 16, 1824. Early in life he became a merchant's clerk, and later was a merchant in Hanover, N. H., where he continued until 1850, in which year he entered the firm of Beebe, Morgan & Co., then one of the leading dry-goods houses in Boston. In the following year the firm opened a branch house in New York, to which Mr. Morton was detailed as resident partner and manager. On January 1, 1854, he withdrew from the firm to form the dry-goods commission house of Morton & Grinnell. In 1863 he established the banking houses of L. P. Morton & Co., in New York, and L. P. Morton, Burns & Co., in London. In 1869 the firm became Morton, Bliss & Co., in New York, and Morton, Rose & Co., in London, where his principal partner was Sir John Rose, formerly Minister of Finance, Canada. It was through this house that the United States Government paid Great Britain the Halifax fishing award of five million five hundred thousand dollars. Mr. Morton was one of the noted American bankers whose advice and assistance were sought by the Treasury Department in the movements of specie payments.

Early in his business career in New York Mr. Morton evinced an interest in public affairs, and his counsel was frequently solicited in the political concern of the Republican party, especially of New York, but not till 1876 did he enter actively into political life. In this year he was, without his knowledge, nominated for Congress by the Republican party in the Eleventh District, and, although unsuccessful, he nevertheless materially reduced the usual Democratic majority. In 1878 he was appointed by President Hayes honorary commissioner to the Paris Exposition, and in the autumn of the same year he was again nominated for Congress, and after a vigorous canvass was elected by 6,000 majority, which majority was larger than the number of all the votes of his opponent. This was the first time the district had been carried by the Republicans.

Mr. Morton took his seat in Congress (the Forty-sixth) March 18, 1879, and he immediately secured a high position in the legislative councils. On April 21, 1879, he was appointed on the Committee on Foreign Affairs, where he served acceptably and with distinction. In 1880 he was again elected to Congress from the same district, by an increased majority.

When the Convention of 1880 had nominated Mr. Garfield for President of the United States, it turned to New York to find a candidate for Vice-President, and Mr. Morton was urged to permit the use of his name. He, however, declined the honor, and the choice then fell upon Mr. Arthur. Mr. Garfield offered Mr. Morton the choice of the Secretaryship of the Navy, or the position of Minister Plenipotentiary and Envoy Extraordinary to France. The latter office he accepted, and in the summer of 1881 sailed with his family for the French capital.

The pre-eminent fitness of the new envoy at once became apparent, and the success of his diplomatic career has probably never been surpassed, if equalled, by any American representative to a foreign court. Shortly after President Cleveland entered upon the duties of his office Mr. Morton resigned, and May 14, 1885, the retiring minister presented his letter of recall to the President of the Republic.

In January, 1885, while he was yet in France, Mr. Morton's name was brought before the Republican caucus of the New York Legislature as a candidate for the Senate of the United States, the vote being: William M. Evarts, 61; Levi P. Morton, 28; Chauncey M. Depew, 3. Two years later his name was used in the same connection, but after the first ballot in the Legislature Mr. Morton withdrew in favor of Mr. Hiscock, who was elected.

Early in the Presidential campaign of 1888, when Gen. Harrison was nominated for President, Mr. Morton was nominated for Vice-President, and both candidates were elected, after a most hotly contested campaign. The successful vote in New York was universally conceded to have been largely due to Mr. Morton's strength and popularity in that State. On March 4, 1889, he entered upon the duties of the Vice-Presidential office, and discharged the same during his four-year term with marked ability; and it may not be too much to say that the United States Senate has never been presided over with greater courtesy, dignity and efficiency. In 1894 Mr. Morton was nominated for and elected governor of the State of New York, his term of office expiring January 1, 1897.

Mr. Morton has not only achieved distinction in financial and political circles, but in charitable deeds as well, as witness his munificent donation to the Irish poor during the great famine in Ireland, of 1888, and his generosity on several other occasions. A park to the city of Newport; a house and lot in Hanover to Dartmouth College, that the College might be enabled to erect an art gallery and museum; $10,000 toward the foundation of a professorship of Latin and French in Middleburg College; $75,000 to Grace Church, New York, to provide a building for a day nursery, as a tribute to the memory of his first wife, Mrs. Lucy Kimball Morton, and her interest in the children of the poor—all these stand out from the list of Mr. Morton's public and private benevolences.

From Middleburg College, in 1881, he received the degree of LL. D., also from Dartmouth College in 1882. Socially, he is a member of the Union, Union League, Metropolitan, Century, and Lawyers Clubs of New York; the Metropolitan Club of Washington, D. C.; the Historical and American Geographical Societies of New York, and the New England Historic Genealogical Society.

On October 15, 1856, Mr. Morton was married at Flatlands, Long Island, to Lucy Kimball (born July 22, 1836, died July 11, 1871), daughter of Elijah H. and Sarah Wetmore (Hinsdale) Kimball, of Flatlands, Long Island. On February 12, 1873, Mr. Morton, for his second wife, married Anna Livingston Reade Street, born May 18, 1846, daughter of William Ingraham Street, Esq., and Susan Kearney, his wife. The following children have been born to Levi Parsons and Anna (Street) Morton: Edith Livingston, born at Newport, R. I., June 20, 1874; Lena Kearney, born at Newport, May 20, 1875; Helen Stuyvesant, born at Newport, August 2, 1876; Lewis Parsons, born at London, England, September 21, 1877, and died there January 10, 1878; Alice, born at New York, March 23, 1879; and Mary, born at New York, June 11, 1881.

Among the finest country seats of America is Mr. Morton's "Ellerslie," at Rhinecliff-on-the-Hudson, beautifully laid out and adorned, a spot that Rhinebeck is justly proud of.

W WALLACE SMITH has the reputation of a strictly first-class business man, reliable and energetic, and is a citizen of whom Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, may be justly proud. He is an offspring of excellent stock of stanch Scotch ancestry, his grandfather having come from Scotland to the New World, becoming a cabinet-maker of New York City. Politically, he was an Old-line Whig, and in religious faith was a member of the Reformed Dutch Church.

William Smith, the father of our subject, was a native of New York City, where he grew to manhood and followed cabinet-making. There he was married to Miss Jemima Horn, who was born in that city, and was descended from Mathew Van Horn, who, with his brother James, came from Holland and located in New York City, where their descendants now live. She was a daughter of Mathew and Margaret (Hagerman) Horn, who were born, reared and died in that city, where her father engaged in the real-estate business, owning a large amount of property. In the metropolis five children were born to the parents of our subject: John H., who was one of the valiant soldiers of the Civil war, and died of starvation in Salisbury (N. C.) prison; W. Wallace, the subject of this review; George E., who is engaged in the trunk business in New York City; Margaret, who died unmarried; and Sarah H. Smith. For twenty years after his marriage the father continued to reside in New York City, and then went to Baltimore, Md., where he engaged in the trunk business for five years. His death, however, occurred in Poughkeepsie, in 1864, where he had removed in 1859. His wife died in 1889. In politics he loyally adhered to the Republican party.

The birth of W. Wallace Smith occurred in New York City, September 20, 1834, and there he spent the days of his boyhood and youth, attending the city schools and learning the bookbinding business with A. Appleton & Co., with whom he remained until the panic of 1857. He then shipped on board the "Niagara" to help lay one of the Atlantic cables, which they commenced to lower on reaching England; but after it broke he returned to that country, though the "Niagara" came on to the United States. He next boarded the "Susquehanna," making a trip up the Mediterranean Sea. In 1858 the vessel was ordered home; but during the passage the yellow fever broke out, and only eighty-seven of the three hundred and fifty on board reached America. Mr. Smith then followed his trade of bookbinding in New York until the breaking out of the Civil war, when he joined Company L, Ninth N. Y. State Militia, and remained with the regiment for two years, during which time he participated in several battles, but while on picket duty just before the battle of Bull Run, he caught a cold which caused the loss of one eye. Returning to New York, he was with D. Appleton & Co., until 1870, when he came to Poughkeepsie and purchased the Poughkeepsie Book Bindery, of Gidley & De Garmo, at No. 258 Main street, and has conducted a very successful business there ever since, doing all kinds of bookbinding.

In 1869 Mr. Smith was united in marriage with Miss Martha W. Avery, a native of West Point, N. Y., and a daughter of Josiah Avery, who was of Holland descent. Four children were born of this union, two of whom died in infancy. Those living are William Wallace, Jr., and Franklin A., who are with their father. In his political views, Mr. Smith coincides with the Republican party; was elected alderman of the Fifth ward of Poughkeepsie, January 1, 1887, serving four terms, and in 1893 was elected supervisor of the Seventh ward. Socially, he is an honored member of the Grand Army of the Republic. He is highly respected and esteemed by the entire population of the city, and looked up to as a man truly honorable and upright in all things, and one whom they can depend upon as a friend.

MON. HARVEY G. EASTMAN, LL. D., founder of Eastman Business College, Poughkeepsie, and one of the most remarkable men of his time, was born October 16, 1832, in Marshall, Oneida county, New York.

The earlier years of our subject were passed upon the farm which his father owned and cultivated, receiving as he grew up an academical education, and while still very young he became a pupil and afterward a teacher in a commercial school in Rochester, N. Y., taught by an uncle of his. It was while engaged in this school that Mr. Eastman conceived the idea of a Commercial or Business College, and, as the plan took definite form, he put it into practice by founding, December 19, 1855 (when he was but twenty-three years of age), the first school of any prominence of that class in Oswego, N. Y. In the spring of 1858 he opened a Commercial College in St. Louis, Mo., in one of the finest buildings in the city, equipped with all the appointments for his method of instruction, and, by judicious management and systematic advertising, it at the end of the year had become the largest and most popular private school in the West. Owing, however, to some differences existing among a certain class as to the political status of some of the lecturers brought to this institution by Mr. Eastman, he sold his good will in the College and turned his eye eastward for a new and permanent location.

In 1859 Mr. Eastman came to Poughkeepsie—a place he had never visited before, but where his name and his College had by skillful advertising already become “familiar as household words”—and here founded the present Eastman National Business College, which at once became famed for its practicability and usefulness, and has for many years now been the recognized leader in business education throughout the United States. He rented his first room in the old Library building for seventy-five cents a week, and with temporary desks started his school, November 3, 1859, with three students in attendance. The beginning of the second week showed an attendance of sixteen, and before the end of the month this new school—started by a stranger at a few days' notice, and without friends or capital, and with no small degree of opposition from a large body of citizens—had outnumbered in patronage other institutions many years its senior. By 1861 the attendance had increased to 500; in 1863 to 1,200, every State, Territory and several foreign countries being represented; while in 1864-65 the daily attendance had reached the extraordinary number of more than 1,700 students. By 1864 the college proper had increased from one room to five distinct buildings, used for instruction alone, and sixty-four teachers were employed, beside numerous assistants. A secretary and six assistants were required to attend to the official correspondence, which, it may be inferred, was one of no small magnitude. Each building was supplied with a stationery store to supply students, and a bindery belonging to the college was devoted exclusively to ruling, making and binding the blank books used. In 1876 the building was considerably enlarged to meet the phenomenal growth of the business which seventeen years before had been established by Mr. Eastman without the aid of an endowment to the amount of a dollar, or a subscription to the extent of a penny.

Mr. Eastman died of pneumonia in the prime of early manhood, July 13, 1878, at Denver, Colo., whither he had gone for the benefit of his health. He was a man of indefatigable energy, and through his enterprise became one of Poughkeepsie's most prominent citizens. In 1867, and again in 1873, he was appointed a commissioner of charities for the Second district; in 1872, and again in 1874, he represented the Second district of Dutchess county in the Assembly; in 1871, and again in 1876, he was elected mayor of Poughkeepsie. The degree of LL. D. had been conferred on him, and he was repeatedly urged to accept positions of greater public trust. Personally, he was one of the most genial, whole-souled men, a polished and accomplished gentleman; socially, he was a man of exemplary virtues, a true and valued friend; in business he was prompt and reliable. Physically, Mr. Eastman was a tall, slim, winning man, with keen, flashing eyes that lit up when engaged, indicating a soaring, restless ambition; he was compactly built, apparently of an iron constitution, with a vast amount of the go-ahead element in his nature.

Mr. Eastman was the owner of a valuable property of twenty-seven acres, known as “Eastman Park,” situated almost in the heart of the city, and celebrated as one of the most beautiful and valuable private estates in the country. On the purchase and the elaborate preparation of the grounds he invested upward of two hundred thousand dollars, and the entrances were always wide open, inviting citizens and strangers alike to enter. In the midst of this grand park he erected his own residence, a castellated building of much attractiveness. On an eminence, known as Eastman Terrace, he also erected two blocks of houses—twenty-four in number—which have lawns, gardens, etc., and command an extended view up and down the Hudson.

In 1857 Mr. Eastman was married to Miss Minerva M. Clark, of Canastota, N. Y., and children as follows were born to them, three daughters—Cora C., Charlotte C. and Minerva; Minerva died in infancy. In October, 1884, Mrs. H. G. Eastman was married to Clement C. Gaines, president of Eastman Business College, Poughkeepsie, and of the New York Business College, New York City, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere.

In his political preferences Mr. Eastman was a staunch Republican; socially, he was a member of the F. & A. M. and K. of P., and he was vice-president of the Poughkeepsie Bridge Company.

The founder and genius of Eastman Business College is no more, but the name of Harvey G. Eastman is held in loving remembrance by the friends who knew him, the students who revered him, and the city which honored him. Other hands picked up the dropped threads, and continued the work which his hands had laid aside, and Eastman Business College remains a lasting monument to his memory. His motto throughout life was—"Peace and good will toward all;" and his last words were—"I have tried to so live as to do no man injustice."

JOHAN DONALD (deceased). The subject of this sketch was a member of the firm of Donald, Converse & Maynard, one of the largest dry-goods houses in this section of the country. He was born in Lanfine, Scotland, August 17, 1844.

In early life our subject learned the dry-goods trade in Scotland, and with his brother William went to Aberdeen, where they formed a partnership in that business, continuing it for four years. In 1869 John came to America and located at Hartford, Conn., where he had charge of one of the departments in a dry-goods store. He remained there about five years, and in 1874 returned to Scotland and married Miss Jessie Frew, a native of that country, and a daughter of Alexander Frew, a tile manufacturer. Mr. Frew married Miss Mary Douglas, and they had two children: Jessie and William, the latter a physician in Scotland. Mr. Frew and his wife died in Scotland.

In 1875 Mr. and Mrs. Donald came to Poughkeepsie, and he formed a partnership with C. E. Converse and R. L. Maynard, the firm name being as above. Two children were born to our subject and his wife: William A. who is in the store at Poughkeepsie, and Douglas, who is at school. Mr. Donald died November 20, 1894. Politically he was a Republican, and fraternally a Mason. He and his wife were members of the Congregational Church, and took a deep interest in all Church affairs. He was an elder and deacon, and superintendent of the Sunday-school at the time of his death. He was a merchant of high standing, and greatly respected by all. His place in the store has been taken by his son William.

William Donald, the father, was born in Lanfine also, where he married Janet Kay McWhirter, and they brought up a large family of children, the youngest of whom was our subject. William spent all his life on a farm.

GEORGE H. WILLIAMS, the son of George and Catherine Williams, was born at Chestnut Ridge, Dutchess Co., N. Y., September 16, 1844, and resided there until 1860, when he removed to Poughkeepsie, where he has since resided.

During his residence in the country he attended the district school, and one year in a private school in the Clove kept by George Draper, later school commissioner of Dutchess county. After removing to Poughkeepsie he took a course at Eastman Business College, and then commenced studying under a private tutor for the purpose of taking an examination for admission to Yale College; but the wave of war fever then extending over the country was too much for him, so, leaving thought of college behind, he, on September 22, 1862, joined Company G, 150th regiment, N. Y. S. V., and on October 11 left with the regiment for the front, and continued to serve with it until it was mustered out at the end of the war, June 8, 1865. During the time of his service in the army he was engaged in the battle at Gettysburg, Penn., in the campaign from Chattanooga, Tenn., to Atlanta, Ga., in Sherman's march to the sea, in the campaign from Savannah, Ga., to Raleigh, N. C., and the surrender of Johnston's army; was wounded in the arm and hand at New Hope Church, Ga.; marched in the grand review at Washington, D. C., May 24, 1865.

After his return home he studied law with his father at Poughkeepsie, and was admitted to the bar May 18, 1866, and has ever since practiced law there. He has since been admitted to practice in the U. S. Courts.

In 1865 he joined the 21st regiment, N. G. S. N. Y., and continued a member until it was mustered out, he being at that time its lieutenant-colonel.

Mr. Williams was city chamberlain of Poughkeepsie in 1875 and 1876, and Deputy Collector of U. S. Internal Revenue during part of President Cleveland's first administration. He is a Knight of Pythias and a P. C. of Armor Lodge 107; a member of the G. A. R., and P. C. of D. B. Sleight Post 331; belongs to the Masonic order, and is captain-general of Poughkeepsic Commandery No. 43, K. T., and a member of the Mystic Shrine; and secretary of the Veterans Association of the 150th regiment, N. Y. S. Volunteers.

Our subject is descended on the side of his father from a brother of Roger Williams, who settled in Rhode Island, and comes from a line of soldiers, his grandfather serving in the war of 1812, and his great-grandfather during most of the Revolutionary war, and his great-great-grandfather being in the French and Indian war. On his mother's side he is descended from Henry Emigh, who came to this country from Holland about 1696 and settled in Clove, Dutchess county, building a stone house which is still standing and inhabited.

JAMES SPENCER VAN CLEEF, one of the most prominent and successful lawyers of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, was born August 1, 1831, at Athens, Greene Co., N. Y. He is descended from one of the old Knickerbocker families, the first American ancestor being Jans Van Cleef, who came from the town of Cleve or Cleef, Holland, as early as 1659, settling in New Utrecht, L. I. He was probably a descendant of the old Dukes of Cleve, whose inheritance, now vested in the Emperor of Germany, was the immediate cause of the Thirty-years War. There is also a legend that Lohengrin was a Van Cleef.

Jans Van Cleef represented Borwick (now Bushwick) in the General Provincial Assembly at New Amsterdam, April 10, 1664, under Peter Stuyvesant, Director General, in relation to the "protection of the inhabitants against the malignant English." He married Enjeltje Lowerons Preterse prior to 1661, and had eight children, among whom was Benjamin, the third child and first son, born November 25, 1683. He married Hendriks Supten as early as 1711, and settled in New Jersey, where they reared a family of twelve children. One son, Laurens, married Jen-netje Loan, and had five children, among whom was Isaac, our subject's great-grandfather, who was born October 24, 1742. He married Dorcas Pumyea in 1769, and had eleven children. Their son, Cornelius, our subject's grandfather, was born January 2, 1777, and died July 10, 1855. He became a leading farmer at Harlingen, N. J., and an active supporter of the Reformed Dutch Church there. He married Margaret Kershau, granddaughter of Lucas Nevius, who was a grandson of the Johannes Nevius who was clerk of the city council. They had four children, namely: Cornelius, Isaac, George, and Matilda, who married Garrett Hegeman. The family have generally been engaged in agricultural pursuits, the majority living in New Jersey, but one branch residing on Staten Island has engaged in commercial pursuits. They have always been adherents of the Reformed Dutch Church, and many have been ministers. Rev. Paul D. Van Cleef, D. D., of Jersey City, is a member of the family.

Our subject's father, Rev. Cornelius Van-Cleef, was educated at Dickinson College, Carlisle, Penn., with a view to entering the ministry. Soon after entering college he joined with a fellow student in establishing the first students' prayer meeting ever held there, meeting once a week in their several rooms. For more than a year this faithfully-conducted exercise was treated with ridicule by the other students, but during the second year, on the occasion of the death of Rev. John M. Mason, D. D., a son of President Mason, of the college, the attendance at the prayer meeting became very large and nearly every student was converted, including all but one in Cornelius Van Cleef's class. All but two of his class entered the ministry, the Rev. Dr. George W. Bethune, of Brooklyn, being one of the most successful. After leaving college Cornelius Van Cleef studied in the Theological Seminary of the Reformed Dutch Church, then located at New Brunswick, N. J., and on graduating, in 1823, he immediately offered his services to the Board of Domestic Missions, or what was then called the Board of Managers of the Missionary Society of the Reformed Dutch Church. He was sent to Palatine, N. Y., where he remained six or eight months, and as a result of his labors the foundation was laid for the now flourishing Church at Fort Plain. He was then transferred to Manayunk, near Philadelphia, where he remained two years, and there also was successful in establishing a Church, now known as the Fourth Church of Philadelphia. From the missionary field he was called to the Church at Athens, N. Y., where he was installed as a settled pastor. He remained there five years, and during that time the country was visited by its first scourge of cholera, Athens being especially afflicted and losing many of its inhabitants. Mr. Van Cleef remained there throughout the plague, ministering to the sick and the dying, and so generally beloved did he become that when he returned years afterward to visit his old charge all the other churches closed their doors for the purpose of hearing him. His pastorate there was very successful, the membership increasing from forty to about one hundred and sixty. In 1833 Mr. Van-Cleef accepted a call to the Church at New Hackensack, and remained there thirty-three years, when, because of advancing age, he moved to Poughkeepsie. Here he held no stated charges, but preached as opportunity offered, and we may without impropriety call him the honorary pastor, indeed, almost the apostle, of many of the Churches in this vicinity. It was largely through his efforts that the Second Reformed Dutch Church was established in Poughkeepsie in 1848, and the Church at Millbrook about 1870. During his active ministry he was once appointed president of the General Synod of the Reformed Dutch Church, which position he filled with great ability and dignity. As a speaker he was faithful, earnest and impressive, and being more solicitous concerning truthfulness and clearness than grace and embellishment, his discourses were marked by simplicity and Godly sincerity. As a pastor he had in rare measure the one qualification which is first of all in importance, and without which all others are of little avail—a hearty love for his people.

It has been said of him by one who knew him well, "As a Christian man his character was so exquisitely beautiful that I know not in what character to describe it." He passed the borders of the unseen on Sunday morning, June 13, 1875, in his sixty-seventh year, leaving two children, James Spencer and Sophia Somers Van Cleef.

James Spencer Van Cleef was educated at College Hill, Poughkeepsie, and Rutgers College, New Brunswick, N. J., graduating in 1852 with the degree of A. B., to which was added later that of A. M. He entered the office of Holden & Thayer, of New York City, as a law student, and was admitted to the bar there in 1855. In 1858 he began the practice of his profession at Poughkeepsie, and in the following year formed a partnership with Hon. Mark D. Wilbur, which continued until the close of the Civil war. During this time Mr. Van Cleef had almost exclusive charge of the business, Mr. Wilbur being in the army. About 1870 Mr. Van Cleef entered into partnership with Prof. Samuel W. Buck, of Lyndon Hall; but two or three years later this was dissolved, and for twenty years he has practiced alone. He has been very successful especially in cases connected with the Surrogate's court, in which he has for many years ranked among the leading practitioners. He was married in 1862 to Harriet Mulford Howell, daughter of Capt. George Howell, a prominent resident of Sag Harbor, N. Y., and has had three children: Elizabeth Howell, who married Dr. B. C. Kinnear, then of Boston, and died in 1886, leaving no children; Ellen Shepard, who married Walter M. Jones, of the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Co., of New York, and has four children; and Henry Howell, now a student in his father's office.

Mr. Van Cleef was originally a Whig in political faith, but in 1856 he became an ardent supporter of the principles of the Republican party. Prior to the Civil war he took an active part in the politics of Dutchess county, and he has now been a member of the board of education in Poughkeepsie for twenty years, being the oldest continuous member of same. During this time he has been largely instrumental in bringing the schools of the city into their present satisfactory condition. In any movement for the public welfare he has taken a prompt and hearty interest, and one of the largest industries in the city was located there a few years ago mainly through his influence. For many years he has been an active member of the Second Reformed Dutch Church.

Mr. Van Cleef is known as a very successful angler; is one of the leading members of the State Association for the Protection of Fish and Game, and since its organization has been a member of the Committee on Law and Legislation. In the fall of 1894 he was retained as counsel for the Senate Committee on Game and Fish, and at their request drew up the new fish and game law, which was passed substantially as the original draft made by him.

GEN. ALFRED B. SMITH (deceased). Among the leading citizens of Poughkeepsie none holds a higher place in the estimation of his fellow men, or has taken a more active part in the development and growth of all those enterprises which go to make up a flourishing city than did the gentleman whose name introduces this sketch. As a man of business; as a member of the legal fraternity; as an honored veteran of the Civil war; as a worker in Church and philanthropic matters; as a friend of education and as a public official, he always commanded the respect and admiration of those more intimately connected with him.

Stephen Smith, the great-great-grandfather of our subject, was a farmer in Massachusetts in the early Colonial days. He married Dorothea Matton, a sister of Gen. Matton, of Massachusetts, who was a major in the Revolutionary war. Three brothers of Stephen Smith also served throughout that war. Arad, a son of Stephen, and our subject's great-grandfather, was born in Salem, Massachusetts.

The grandfather, also named Arad, was born at Amherst, Mass., and married Salome Elmer, by whom he had fourteen children, of whom Adolphus H. was the father of our subject. In 1808 Arad Smith moved with his numerous family to St. Lawrence county, N. Y., and settled on a one-square mile tract of land in the primeval forest. There he made his home until 1833, when he removed to Elyria, Ohio, where he died about the year 1865. Politically he was a Whig, and in religious belief he was a Congregationalist.

Adolphus G. Smith, our subject's father, born August 22, 1800, at Amherst, Mass., was married on July 4, 1824, to Miss Nancy Dodge, who was born in Addison, Vt., a daughter of Major Thomas Dodge. Her father was of English descent, and was one of twelve children, of whom several sons served in the war of the Revolution, in the war of 1812, and in the Mexican war. After their marriage Adolphus G. Smith and his wife settled on a farm in St. Lawrence county, N. Y., where they reared a family of eleven children, of whom the following record is given: Alfred Baker, the subject of this sketch, was the eldest; Selome E. married Newcomb Perkins, a farmer of Augusta, Wis.; Clarissa C. died in 1850; Hannah D. is the widow of Harvey D. Hyde, who was a farmer in St. Lawrence county, N. Y.; Thomas D. is a farmer in Rolla, Mo.; Martin M. is farming at Massena, Cass Co., Iowa; Wallace H. was a clerk in the post office at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and died in 1875; Silas C. was a carpenter by trade, and died in 1880, near Rochester, N. Y.; Dorothy became the second wife of Newcomb Perkins, and died in 1870; Lepha E. is the wife of Emmett Russell, a carpenter in Massenas, Iowa; and Gustavus A. is farming at the old homestead. The father always followed the occupation of a farmer, and in politics was originally an Old-line Whig, in later years becoming a member of the Republican party. He died August 26, 1879, his wife passing away in January, 1894, at the good old age of ninety years.

Alfred B. Smith was born November 17, 1825, in Massena, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., spent his boyhood days on his father's farm, and received his early education in the district school. When seventeen years old he began teaching, spending his vacations in work in the fields and other farm duties. In the fall of 1848 he entered Union College, at Schenectady, N. Y., from which he was graduated in the class of '51. Shortly afterward he came to Poughkeepsie, and became teacher of mathematics in the school of Charles Bartlett, on College Hill, which position he filled some four years, during that time devoting his leisure hours to the study of law under Judge James Emott. He was admitted to the bar in 1855, and for three years was a partner of Mathew Hale; then formed a partnership with Charles Williams, with whom he practiced until the spring of 1862.

In the meantime the Civil war had broken out, and the fighting spirit inherited from his martial ancestors on both sides proved stronger than all other incentives. Our subject was among the first to raise a regiment in Dutchess county, which became the 150th N. Y. V. I., and of which he was made major. His first commission was that of lieutenant-colonel; later he was promoted to major, and when he became colonel he was made brevet brigadier-general for gallant and meritorious service under Sherman, in Georgia and the Carolinas. At the battle of Gettysburg, Gen. Smith's regiment (mustering about 500 men) formed part of the Corps No. 8, No. 12, No. 20 and No. 28, and was on the celebrated march to the sea. The General served until the close of the war, and was mustered out with his regiment June 8, 1865.

When peace was again restored Gen. Smith returned to Poughkeepsie, and resumed his practice of law in partnership with L. B. Sackett, which connection lasted some twenty years, after which he practiced alone. At the time of his death he was the only one living of the twelve men who were the first members of the Republican party in Dutchess county, and he always took an active part in politics. Gen. Smith held various responsible public offices, and always fulfilled his duties with faithfulness and to the satisfaction of all concerned. For thirty-three years he was a member of the board of education; was president during eight years of that time, and also for some years was chairman of the building committee, all of the school houses in the district having been erected under his supervision. In 1892, after being elected city recorder, he resigned from the board.

Just after the war Gen. Smith served as deputy collector of internal revenue. In 1867 he was appointed postmaster of Poughkeepsie, by President Johnson, and was reappointed by President Grant, holding the office for eight years. He also served two terms as supervisor of the Fifth ward of the city, and did much to establish the Hudson River State Hospital. He always took a leading part not only in political and public affairs but also in Church matters, and, indeed, to quote from an article printed during his lifetime, in one of the city newspapers, "one cannot mention a good cause in which Gen. Smith has not taken a part." He had been an elder in the Presbyterian Church and superintendent of the Sunday-school for many years, and was sent as delegate to three of its General Assemblies which met at Madison, Wis., Philadelphia, and Washington, D. C., respectively. He was instrumental in the formation of what is known as "the Poughkeepsie Plan," which has for its object the breaking down of the barriers between the Catholics and Protestants, and which is recognized not only in the United States, but also in Europe. Gen. Smith was connected with the Electric Light Co.; was a member of the State Bar Association; of the Loyal Legion; of the Masonic fraternity, and was a Knight Templar and chief counsel of King Solomon's Temple. In 1867 he organized the first G. A. R. Post in Poughkeepsie, now known as Hamilton Post No. 20.

On June 20, 1854, Gen. Smith was married to Ann Eliza Mitchell, who was born at Jewett Heights, Lexington, Greene Co., N. Y., a daughter of David and Leah (Dunham) Mitchell. Her parents were of English extraction, and her father was a merchant tailor. Two children—one daughter and one son—were born to our subject and his wife, to wit: Margaret J., born September 2, 1855, died May 3, 1875; and Matthew J., born April 21, 1860. Mrs. Smith died January 5, 1894; she was a most estimable woman, affectionately remembered by a large circle of warm friends. Gen. A. B. Smith departed this life at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., January 28, 1896.

ANDREW JACKSON KETCHAM, of Poughkeepsie, one of the oldest and ablest financiers in this section, was identified with various banking institutions in Dutchess county for half a century previous to his retirement, in 1890, from the position of president of the Poughkeepsie National Bank.

His family originated in England, and his grandfather, Solomon Ketcham, who was born there April 6, 1757, was the first of the line to come to America. He located at Huntington, L. I., where he followed agricultural pursuits throughout the remainder of his life. He entered heartily into the struggles of the Colonies for freedom, and in a speech by Hon. Henry C. Platt, on "Old Times in Huntington, L. I.," this account appears: "He lent his energies to the battle-field, and fought for the birthright of freedom when the storm-cloud of Revolution burst upon the infant America and threatened to overwhelm the Nation in its fiery torrent." * * * "Among the prisoners taken by the British during the Revolutionary war we find the name of Solomon Ketcham, and they were carried aboard the 'Swan' in 1777. Solomon Ketcham lived on Main street. He got into difficulty with the British soldiers, and snatching a picket from a fence offered to fight three or four officers. He was afterward confined in the fort on Burying Hill, and kept on a diet of bread and water. He never forgot his imprisonment nor forgave his enemies, and when the British fleet dropped anchor in Huntington Bay during the war of 1812, the old man might have been seen prowling around the shores of Lloyd's Neck and Bay, gun in hand, and woe to the son of Britain who came within his reach." He married Rebecca Platt, who died April 17, 1834, and he survived until February 19, 1851. They had seven children, whose names with dates of birth and death are as follows: Jonas, December 4, 1779, died October 31, 1842; Hannah, born March 29, 1782; Solomon, Jr., December 12, 1784, died March 28, 1852; Oliver, October 11, 1788, died August 5, 1792; Amos Platt, May 12, 1791, died October 19, 1825; Conklin, October 22, 1794, died December 16, 1821 (lost at sea); John, September 2, 1797.

Amos P. Ketcham, our subject's father, left the old home in Huntington, and moved to the town of Amenia, Dutchess county, where he ran a flouring-mill and engaged in farming in a small way. In 1821 he removed to Poughkeepsie and established the first steam-boat house in the city, about 300 yards from the dock at the foot of Main street. Later he moved into a house on the dock which was known as "The Exchange," and was for some time the leading hotel of the city. He was married September 9, 1811, to Miss Anna Rogers Platt, who was born November 26, 1793, and died at Poughkeepsie, October 31, 1861. After his death she conducted the hotel alone until her marriage February 2, 1832, to Warren Skinner, who took charge of it. By the first marriage she had five children: Esther Emily, Alonzo R., Zephar Platt, Andrew J. and Rebecca, of whom, the last two are the only survivors. Two children by the second marriage died in infancy.

Mr. Ketcham was born in the town of Amenia, March 18, 1819, but with the exception of two years in a select school there he was educated in Poughkeepsie at the Dutchess County Academy, which stood in his early years on the corner of Cannon and Academy streets, but afterward was moved to the upper part of the city. His education was practical and quite extensive for the times, and his wide reading has kept him well abreast of the world's progress. In early manhood he became a partner in a grocery business in upper Main street, the firm name being Gale & Ketcham. After a few years there he began his successful career in finance as clerk in the Farmers & Manufacturers Bank, under Frederick W. Davis, and a few years later was appointed teller. In 1852 he was appointed cashier of the First National Bank of Saugerties, N. Y., which he had helped to organize. In 1861 he started the Saugerties Bank, and in 1865 he went to Dover Plains, N. Y., as cashier of the Dover Plains National Bank, and held that position nineteen years. He retired in 1884 and moved to Poughkeepsie; but in 1886 he was made president of the Poughkeepsie National Bank, and was in charge of that institution for four years. Throughout these years of service he has performed the duties of every position with marked ability and unvarying rectitude, and by his wise management he has not only won success for himself but has satisfactorily cared for the interests of others.

Mr. Ketcham was married first, in 1842, to Sarah Anderson, daughter of Nathan Anderson, a well-known resident of Rondout, N. Y. They had six children: Richard Platt is cashier of the Dover Plains National Bank; Annie married Arthur Bangs, of Dover Plains; and Gaston is secretary of the Borden Condensed Milk Co., of Wassaic, N. Y. Of the others, Andrew Golding died at the age of nine years, Golding at the age of six, and John at one year. Mr. Ketcham formed a second matrimonial union, with Mary Frances Cowles, daughter of a leading citizen of Stamford, N. Y., Jesse F. Cowles. They have one son, Charles Andrew, now a clerk in the First National Bank, Poughkeepsie. Mr. Ketcham and his wife are prominent members of the Second Reformed Church, in which he has been an elder for ten years. He takes great interest in public affairs, and while he has never sought political office, has given strong support to the party which represents his convictions. Originally a Democrat, he adhered to that party until the Civil war broke out, and since that time he has been a Republican.

JAMES E. DUTCHER, president of the board of public works of Poughkeepsie, is one of the best-known and most prominent men in Dutchess county, having been a member of the State Legislature, twice elected sheriff, and chairman of the Republican County Committee, besides holding minor offices.

The Dutcher family is of Holland descent, and Abraham, the grandfather of our subject, was a farmer in the town of Beekman, Dutchess county, where he died. He had a family of eleven children, of whom, Abraham, Jr. (the father of our subject), was born in Lagrange, Dutchess county, and married Miss Gertrude, daughter of Stephen Van Vores, who was of Dutch descent. They settled on a farm in Lagrange, but afterward removed to the town of Beekman, where the father died in 1869; he followed farming all his life. In his early days he was a Whig, afterward becoming a Republican. The mother died in 1892. Their family consisted of five children, as follows: Daniel V. is a resident of Matteawan, Dutchess county; James E. comes next; William H. is a farmer in the town of Beekman; Mary F. is unmarried, and resides in Beekman; and Allison died in 1882.

James E. Dutcher was born in the town of Lagrange, January 21, 1838. He was twelve years old when his parents removed to Beekman, and after completing his education worked upon his father's farm until his marriage, in February, 1869, with Miss Elizabeth Flagler. She was born and reared in the town of Beekman, and is a daughter of Benjamin F. Flagler, a farmer of that town. In 1876 Mr. Dutcher was elected sheriff of Dutchess county, and was re-elected in 1882, which office he filled three years longer. During this time he also served as chairman of the Republican County Committee. In all these responsible positions he won the confidence and esteem of the people by the faithful and impartial discharge of his duties, and proved himself a man of more than usual ability and progressive ideas. During his term as sheriff, a house on Pawling hill was blown up with dynamite, one man being killed, and for this offense three men were tried, convicted and sentenced to Sing Sing for life. After retiring from the shrievalty Mr. Dutcher engaged in the coal business, which he successfully carried on until 1894, when he retired from that. He is at present serving as president of the board of public works of Poughkeepsie, having been elected to that office in May, 1896.

Socially, our subject is a member of the F. & A. M. He is public-spirited, always ready to assist in matters relating to the welfare of his city or county, and is held in high esteem by his fellow-citizens. The family are identified with the Congregational Church, of which Mrs. Dutcher is an active member.

MON. JOHN THOMPSON (deceased) was a native of Dutchess county N. Y., born in the town of Rhinebeck July 4, 1809, a son of Robert Thompson, a farmer of near the village of Rhinebeck, and his wife, a Miss Scott, the daughter of Rev. Robert Scott, who for many years kept a boarding school for boys. At this institution our subject received the rudiments of his education, up to the age of thirteen years, when, the school being discontinued, he for the next four years spent the most of his time in establishing his always extensively delicate health in the light work about the farm, also in reading and study.

On October 26, 1826, Mr. Thompson entered the office of Francis A. Livingston, then district attorney of Dutchess county, and at once began the study not only of law, but of general literature. Within the first year of his clerkship he acquired a perfect knowledge of the routine of the duties of the district attorney's office, and in many ways soon made himself an indispensable acquisition to Mr. Livingston, attending court with him, etc., at the same time pursuing his studies in English literature and philosophy.

On the removal of Mr. Livingston to New York, in 1829, Mr. Thompson went into the office of Hooker & Tallmadge, in the then village of Poughkeepsie, and, upon receiving his license as an attorney, was taken into partnership by James Hooker, then surrogate of the county.

In 1834 Mr. Thompson was married to Miss Mary Smith, youngest daughter of Judge Isaac Smith, of Lithgow, in the town of Washington, Dutchess county, and, she owning a farm received from her father's estate, much of her husband's time was taken up in its management. In 1840, however, he gave this up and devoted himself exclusively to his profession. He was cotemporary with some of the most learned of the old school of lawyers, with whom it is but just to say that he "held his own," and was engaged in the trial of every important case from 1845 till his retirement. Not the least of his labors was his acquisition for the Hudson River Railroad Co. of the title of much of the lands needed for the use of the road from Poughkeepsie to Albany. Mr. Thompson was for many years connected in business with James H. Weeks, under the firm name of Thompson & Weeks, which firm, by the admission of Frank B. Lown, in 1878, became Thompson, Weeks & Lown. Mr. Weeks died in 1887, and the firm then remained as Thompson & Lown, which partnership continued until Mr. Thompson's death.

In the summer of 1856 Mr. Thompson was asked to represent Columbia and Dutchess counties in Congress, and induced to accept the nomination, though the result seemed dubious, considering the heavy and influential Democratic majority in the district. However, he at once organized a series of meetings in the two counties, and by a thorough discussion of the momentous issues then pending, so aroused public sentiment, man, Mary E. is deceased, and resided in Dutchess, and Alice in Dutchess 1852.

Mr. Thompson

James E. Dutcher was born in the town of Lactaria, January 21, 1831. He was twelve years old when his parents removed to Dutchess, and after completing his education worked upon his father's farm until his marriage, in February, 1850, with Miss Elizabeth Fisher. She was born and reared in the town of Dutchess, and is a daughter of Benjamin F. Fisher, a farmer of that town. In 1850 Mr. Dutcher was elected Sheriff of Dutchess county, and was re-elected in 1852, which office he filled three years longer. During that time he also served as chairman of the Republican County Committee. In all these responsible positions he won the confidence and esteem of the people by the faithful and impartial discharge of his duties, and proved himself a man of more than usual ability and progressive ideas. During his term as sheriff a house on Pawling hill was blown up with dynamite, one man being killed, and for this offence three men were tried, convicted and sentenced to Sing Sing for life, coming out from the sheriff's custody. Mr. Dutcher was engaged in the coal business, which he successfully carried on until 1856, when he retired from the same. He is at present serving as president of the board of public works of Poughkeepsie, having been elected to that office in May, 1897.

Socially, our subject is a member of the F. & A. M. He is well-to-do, always ready to assist in anything relating to the welfare of his city or county, and is held in high esteem by his fellow-citizens. The family are identified with the Congregational Church of which Mrs. Dutcher is an active member.

WILLIAM THOMPSON (deceased) was a native of Dutchess county, N. Y., born in the town of Rhineback July 2, 1812, a son of Robert Thompson, a farmer of that village of Dutchess, and his wife, a Miss Scott, the daughter of Gen. Robert Scott, who for many years kept a boarding-house for boys. At that institution our subject received the rudiments of all education up to the age of thirteen years, when his father being convinced by his friends to send him to the common school of his town to establish him in a regular course of study, and to the next year send him to the academy in the same town, also in reading and writing.

On October 20, 1830, Mr. Thompson entered the office of Francis A. Livingston, then justice of the peace of Dutchess county, and at once began the study not only of law, but of general literature. Within the first year of his apprenticeship he acquired a perfect knowledge of the routine of the duties of the district attorney's office, and in many ways soon made himself an indispensable acquisition to Mr. Livingston, attending court with him, etc., at the same time pursuing his studies in English literature and philosophy.

On the removal of Mr. Livingston to New York, in 1839, Mr. Thompson went to the office of Hooker & Tallmadge, in the then village of Poughkeepsie, and, upon receiving his license as an attorney, was taken into partnership by James Hooker, then surrogate of the county.

In 1834 Mr. Thompson was married to Mrs. Mary Smith, youngest daughter of Judge Isaac Smith, of Lithgow, in the town of Washington, Dutchess county, and, she owning a farm received from her father's estate, much of her husband's time was taken up in its management. In 1845, however, he gave this up and devoted himself exclusively to his profession. He was cotemporary with some of the most learned of the old school of lawyers, with whom it is but just to say that he "held his own," and was engaged in the trial of every important case from 1845 till his retirement. Not the least of his labors was his acquisition for the Hudson River Railroad Co. of the title of much of the lands needed for the use of the road from Poughkeepsie to Albany. Mr. Thompson was for many years connected in business with James H. Weeks, under the firm name of Thompson & Weeks, which firm, by the admission of Frank B. Lown, in 1878 became Thompson, Weeks & Lown. Mr. Weeks died in 1877, and the firm then remained as Thompson & Lown, which partnership continued until Mr. Thompson's death.

In the summer of 1870 Mr. Thompson was elected to represent Dutchess and Dutchess counties in Congress, and refused to accept the nomination, though the county seemed delighted in considering the heavy and influential Democratic majority in the district. However, in at once organized a series of meetings in the two counties, and by a thorough discussion of the prominent issues thus pending, secured public sentiment, that he was elected by over 1,200 majority on the side of the Republican ticket. During the sessions of '57-58 Mr. Thompson entered into the debates on the floor of the House of Representatives, and a number of his speeches were circulated throughout the district and country. One upon the exciting topic of the hour, "The Admission of Kansas," and another on the "Mormon Question" were warmly received, thousands of copies being circulated by members all over the Southern as well as the Northern States.

A second nomination was tendered Mr. Thompson, but declined by him on account of pressing business duties. After his Congressional career, he held no public office of a political nature, but beside his professional duties, gave his efforts to benevolent and philanthropic movements of society and in the Church, with which he was united while a student at law. For some ten years in the earlier history of the organizations of Lyceums and Young Men's Associations, he lectured in their aid. He twice delivered the oration before the literary societies at Union College on commencement day—at New Brunswick and at Williamstown; was elected a member of the Phi Beta Kappa at Union, and received the degree of A. M. from Union and Yale. He was a lifelong student, devoting his leisure to the cultivation of general literature, especially of theology, delivered many Sunday evening lectures, and also published numerous essays—one on "Inspiration," one on the "Atonement," and another on the "Inner Kingdom." He also published an article vindicating the miracles of the New Testament. When Matthew Vassar had settled upon devoting his wealth toward the founding of Vassar College, Mr. Thompson was among the first persons consulted by him, and was chosen one of the trustees of that institution. For many years he was vice-president of the Fallkill National Bank, of Poughkeepsie, and at the time of his death was president of that institution.

Mr. Thompson, in 1835, built his residence at the corner of Market and Church streets, and passed the rest of his life there, except some four or five summers spent by the family at a cottage owned by Mrs. Thompson, in New Hamburg, on Wappingers creek. In 1871 Mr. Thompson spent a year in Europe, both for his health and mental improvement.

Mr. Thompson was possessed of rare forensic and rhetorical gifts, which gave grace to his pen, and beauty and strength to his utterances. His style was ornate, without weakness, and philosophical without obscurity; on the platform or at the bar, he was one of the most effective speakers in the land. His kindness of heart, cheerful temperament, abundant humor and quick repartee, made him an agreeable companion and the best of friends. The weight of his character from early manhood had been on the side of Christian principle, in which regard he was of vast benefit to the moral and philanthropic movements of his times.

Mr. Thompson died June 1, 1890, leaving surviving him his second wife, Caroline (a daughter of the late James Bailey, of Prattsburg, N. Y.), and several children.

MON. ISAAC S. CARPENTER, one of the most prominent citizens of Dutchess county, is a worthy representative of an old and honored family. He is the eighth generation in direct descent from William Carpenter, who was born in England in 1576, and came to America in 1638 in the ship "Bevis," landing at Weymouth, Mass. His son, William (2), born in England in 1605, accompanied him, bringing also his wife, Abigail. In 1643 the family moved from Weymouth to Rehoboth, Mass. William and Abigail Carpenter had seven children: William, Samuel, Joseph, John, Abiah, Hannah and Abraham—the last three born in America. John Carpenter came to Long Island in early manhood, and in 1663 was chosen townsman of Hempstead; later his name is on the records as captain of fusiliers in the Narragansett expedition. He was married in 1665 to Hannah Baright, and made his home at Jamaica, where he died May 23, 1695. He and his wife had five children: John, William, Samuel, Hope and Hannah. William (3), our subject's great-great-grandfather, was born at Hempstead, and after his father's death he bought his mother's right in the estate there, and moved from Jamaica with his wife, Eliza. They had three children: Daniel, John and Elizabeth. Daniel Carpenter, our subject's great-grandfather, was born in Hempstead, and in 1752 came to Dutchess county, where he bought a farm at Crum Elbow, Hyde Park, and there died in 1777. On February 4, 1729, he married Sarah Hall, of Hempstead, by whom he had six children: (1) Joseph, who was a merchant of Bangall, and a justice of the peace of the town of Stanford, married Dorcas Smith, whose father was an officer in the British army during the Revolutionary war; they had five children: John and Smith (who both entered the naval service), Joseph, Benjamin and Dorcas. (2) Daniel, who was a resident of Fishkill. (3) William. (4) Joseph. (5) Benjamin. (6) Mary, Mrs. John Carpenter.

Benjamin Carpenter, our subject's grandfather, was born at Hempstead July 11, 1749, and lived for many years at Crum Elbow on land given him by his father. He was persecuted during the Revolution by the Tories of his locality for raising a company for the Colonial army, having his home robbed three times; on other occasions he was saved by his immense greyhound. He bought land of Job Swift in 1782, and of Samuel Pugsley in 1796, and in 1798 he purchased from John Miller a farm on "Carpenter Hill," where, in 1804, he built the house now occupied by our subject. On September 9, 1773, he married Mary Pugsley, who was born March 25, 1756, the daughter of Samuel Pugsley, of Westchester. She died November 16, 1821, he surviving until January 17, 1837. Eight children were born of this union, whose names, with dates of birth and death are as follows: (1) Sarah, August 6, 1774, died November 30, 1852 (she married George Ferris, of Peekskill). (2) Hannah, February 25, 1776, died in 1845 (she married Noah Tabor and had two children—Benjamin and Maria). (3) Maria, April 14, 1778, died September 2, 1839 (she married Bernard Matthewson). (4) Daniel, October 29, 1785, died May 3, 1853 (he was a resident of Amenia, and was married to Zayde Perlee, and had four children—Hannah, Benjamin (who married Tamma Hunting), Edmund P. (who married Frances Hoag) and Tazde. (5) Cornelia, November 6, 1789, died March 12, 1840 (she never married). (6) Elizabeth, April 26, 1791, died young. (7) Samuel P., March 8, 1780, died January 30, 1814. (8) Morgan, November 4, 1795, died November 14, 1871, our subject's father.

Morgan Carpenter received his early education in the district schools near his home, and in a private school near Peekskill. He was for some years associate county judge, under appointment from Gov. Seward. On February 3, 1819, he was married to Maria Bockee, who was born in the town of Northeast, Dutchess county, January 3, 1794, the daughter of Jacob and Catherine (Smith) Bockee. In 1852 they moved to No. 333 Mill street, Poughkeepsie, where they spent their later years, his wife dying January 29, 1871, less than a year from the time of his own death. Nine children were born of this union: (1) Catherine, born November 23, 1819, died February 2, 1820. (2) Benjamin Platt, born November 25, 1821, died December 30, 1836. (3) Catharine Bockee, born June 24, 1823, married George B. Lent, of Poughkeepsie, October 28, 1847, and died September 17, 1879. (4) Mary M., born February 1, 1825, married Edward G. Tyler, October 1, 1844 (he died April 21, 1891), and has three children—Maria Seymour (born February 3, 1846), Morgan Carpenter (born December 22, 1847), and Mary Catharine (born December 31, 1856). (5) Jacob Bockee, born July 16, 1826, was a leading resident of this locality, and was chosen supervisor of the town of Stanford in 1855, member of the Assembly in 1856, Presidential elector in 1860, supervisor of the Fifth ward of Poughkeepsie in 1870, and mayor of Poughkeepsie in 1875-76. He lived in Stanford and Northeast until 1861, and then moved to Poughkeepsie, later to Little Rest, where he died April 9, 1894. On January 28, 1860, he was married to Sarah E. Thorne, and had three children, whose names, with dates of birth, are here given: Mary Thorne, March 18, 1861; Jacob B., September 17, 1863 (died December 15, 1874); and Maria B., October 12, 1865, who was married June 5, 1890, to Joseph S. Tower. (6) Isaac Smith, June 24, 1828, was twice married, first on August 28, 1851, to Julia Willson, who died May 22, 1858, and second on September 5, 1860, to Sarah Rebecca Willson. Three children were born of the first marriage: Eliza, September 19, 1852; Morgan, June 7, 1854, was married December 14, 1876, to Virginia A. Bartlett, of Hampton, Va., and has two children, Maria V. and Miriam; Maria Bockee, November 21, 1856, was married, October 17, 1888, to Thomas C. Clark, of Grand Island, Neb., and has two sons—Henry C. and Isaac C. Of the second marriage three children were born: Willson, October 7, 1861, graduated from Yale in 1884; Julia, March 25, 1864; and Sarah Louisa, December 6, 1865. (7) Louisa S., November 26, 1830, was married July 21, 1851, to Abram Staats, of Red Hook, and had one daughter, Catherine Eliza, born May 23, 1852, died in 1890. (8) Sara Maria, March 25, 1832, took a prominent part in reform movements, and was a member of the State Board of Charities. She died March 22, 1894. (9) Benjamin P., May 14, 1837, was a lawyer and a prominent politician. He was a supervisor of Amenia in 1861, district attorney of Poughkeepsie in 1858, member of the Constitutional Convention, State senator in 1875, county judge from 1877 to 1883, delegate to the National Republican Convention in 1884, governor of Montana in the year 1884, and member of the Code Commission. He was married in 1860 to Esther Thorne, who was born July 3, 1840, daughter of Stephen Thorne, of Poughkeepsie. Four children were born to them: Estelle, June 5, 1861 (died January 9, 1863); Nina, August 26, 1863, was married April 8, 1885, to Albert E. Tower, and has one son—Albert, born November, 1887; Kate, October 12, 1866; and Stephen, June 14, 1869, is now the city attorney of Helena, Mont. He was admitted to the bar December 3, 1890, appointed United States Commissioner in March, 1892, and elected Assemblyman in 1892.

Isaac Smith Carpenter, the subject proper of this sketch, received his early education in the public schools of Stanford, the Amenia Seminary, Pittsfield Gymnasium, Warren Institute, in Connecticut, and College Hill, Poughkeepsie. He has always lived at the old homestead in Stanford. His distinguished abilities and high character have enabled him to sustain well the position in the community which was his by family inheritance, and he is foremost among the supporters of any worthy public movement. He was supervisor of the town of Stanford four terms, and was elected to the Assembly from the First district in 1879, and again in 1880, serving each term as a member of the Ways and Means committee.

MON. JOHN BOWDISH DUTCHER, one of the ablest and most distinguished sons of Dutchess county, is noted for his ability as a financier and as an organizer and manager of large corporate interests, as well as for his effective work in political lines. The simplest summary of the various positions of trust and honor which he holds, or has held, would cover widely different phases of political, social and business life.

Mathew Dutcher, grandfather of our subject, came from Holland, and settled in what is now the town of Dover, Dutchess county, where he probably passed the remainder of his life as a farmer. He died at a comparatively early age, but his wife, Sarah Dutcher, survived him many years, dying in her ninety-first year. They had five children: Harry, who located in Ontario county, N. Y.; David, our subject's father; Phœbe, the wife of William Kronkright; Clarissa, who married Ephraim Kronkright; and Pattie, the wife of Ferris Carey. David Dutcher was born in the town of Dover in 1796, and lived all his life near South Dover. He was a man of strong character and great energy, wielding great influence in local affairs, and making a success of his business as an agriculturist and dealer in live stock. In the latter branch he had an extensive trade, supplying the local and New York City markets. He commenced life poor, but at his death, which occurred June 9, 1853, he owned about six hundred acres of land. He married Amy Bowdish, daughter of Asa Bowdish, and a descendant of an old Quaker family, which had settled at an early period near New Bedford, Mass. She was born in 1799, and died June 5, 1875. Eight children were born of this union: Albro, who was quartermaster in the 21st Missouri Regiment during the Civil war, and died in the service; Asa, a resident of Sharon, Conn.; John B., our subject; Jane Ann, who married Frederick Coleman, of Warren, Conn.; Julia, the wife of Baldwin Stevens; DeWitt C., who enlisted in the army and was drowned while serving on the staff of Gen. Viele; and Charles (deceased), who was a paymaster in the navy during the Civil war, and later resided at White Plains.

Our subject was born in the town of Dover, February 13, 1830, was reared as a farmer boy, and obtained his education chiefly in the common schools. He has always been engaged in agriculture, at first in his native town, and later in the adjoining town of Pawling. In 1860 he married Miss Christina Dodge, daughter of the late Daniel Dodge, of Pawling, and in April, 1861, he located upon his present homestead in that town. He owns 1,600 acres of fine grazing land in Dutchess county, stocked with thoroughbred horses and 250 cows. His agricultural interests are now managed by his son, J. Gerow Dutcher (the only offspring of his marriage), who was united in wedlock in April, 1894, with Miss Helen Titus Willetts, daughter of Edward Willetts, of Roslyn, Long Island.

Possessing sound judgment, Hon. J. B. Dutcher has gained and kept the confidence of the people at large in an unusual degree. He was made supervisor of the town of Dover in 1857, and justice of the peace in the following year. A Whig in early years, he became a Republican on the organization of that party, and is still an ardent advocate of its principles. An injury prevented him from going to the front during the Civil war, but he was active and zealous in recruiting and equipping troops. He was a member of the State Assembly in 1861 and 1862, and of the State Senate in 1864 and 1865. In the Assembly he was chairman of the committee on Internal Affairs and a member of the committee on Railroads; in the Senate was a member of the committee on Cities, and chairman of the committee on Internal Affairs. For several years he was a member of the State Republican Committee. In 1864 he was a delegate to the National Convention which nominated Lincoln, and in 1880 he was sent in the same capacity to the convention that placed Garfield at the head of the National ticket. He keeps closely in touch with all the questions of the day, and is strongly in favor of the curtailment of the liquor traffic as far as possible.

In 1864 Mr. Dutcher became a director of the New York & Harlem railroad, and in 1865 he took charge of the department of live-stock transportation on the New York Central & Harlem railroads, and has ever since held this responsible position, to which has been added the West Shore railroad and the Rome & Watertown railroad. He is also prominently identified with other lines, being a director of the Spuyton Duyval railroad, the Poughkeepsie & Eastern railroad, and the New York & Putnam railroad. His other business interests are legion. He is president of the Union Stock Yards & Market Co., of New York City, and was one of its incorporators; president of the National Bank at Pawling, succeeding Albert J. Akin; director of the American Safe Deposit Company; director of the Fifth Avenue Bank; and one of the original stockholders in its incorporation in 1875; director of the Mizzentop Hotel Company at Quaker Hill, and formerly its president; member of the Chamber of Commerce and the Produce Exchange; and for many years before its sale was president of the St. Louis National Stock Yards, of which he was one of the founders. Not the least of his labors have been his successful efforts for the improvement of the village of Pawling, where he has built a fine block containing a hotel and number of stores. He is now the president of the village, and to his efforts the village is largely indebted for one of the best water-supply systems in the State; and he is president of the board of water commissioners. In his agricultural matters he is regarded as a leader; he was president of the New York State Agricultural Society for two years, and has been president of the Holstein Friesian Association of America. Socially he is no less prominent; he is one of the oldest members of the Union League Club, and a member of the St. Nicholas Society of New York City.

JAMES HENRY WEEKS. Among the influential and leading citizens of Poughkeepsie, none was held in higher esteem, or was more worthy a place in the records of her history than the subject of this sketch, who is held in kindly remembrance by all who knew him. In all the relations of life—as a lawyer, a law-maker, a citizen, and a tender and devoted husband and father—he fulfilled his duties with faithfulness and discretion, and left to his children the best of all legacies, “a good name.”

The Weeks family was of old English origin, the paternal grandfather of our subject having emigrated to America in an early day. Thomas Weeks, our subject's father, was born in Connecticut, where he followed farming. He married Elizabeth Bogardus, a daughter of James Cornelius Bogardus, and they came to Dutchess county, settling on a farm and rearing a family of children, as follows: Elizabeth, who died in 1892, unmarried; Emily, who married Isaac S. Vary, at one time teller of the Farmers' & Manufacturers' Bank, Poughkeepsie; Ann, married to John DePew, of Dutchess county; Eloise, who became the wife of Charles Barrett, a farmer of Putnam county, N. Y.; and James Henry.

James H. Weeks, the subject proper of this sketch, was born December 21, 1822, in N. Hackensack, N. Y. He attended the district school of his locality in early boyhood, continuing his education at the Dutchess County Academy, subsequently reading law with Alexander Forbes. He was admitted to the bar at Poughkeepsie, May 16, 1845, and shortly afterward formed a partnership with Hon. John Thompson, which continued for nearly thirty years, until the time of the death of Mr. Weeks. This firm was then the oldest law firm in the State. In 1878 Frank B. Lown was taken into partnership, the firm name at Mr. Weeks' decease being Thompson, Weeks & Lown.

Mr. Weeks was married June 28, 1866, to Harriet S. Babcock, a native of Salem, Mass., and a daughter of Rev. Rufus Babcock. Her father was born in Colebrook, Conn., and was pastor of a Baptist Church in Salem, Mass., and of one in Poughkeepsie; was also president of Colby University, at Waterville, Maine. He married Olivia Smith, a native of Barrington, R. I., born of English descent, and three children were the result of this union: Caroline, who married Horatio G. Jones, a lawyer of Philadelphia; Emily, the wife of George H. Swift, a lawyer of Poughkeepsie, but residing in Amenia; and Harriet (Mrs. Weeks).

Mr. Weeks died November 28, 1887, in Poughkeepsie, which had always been his home. He was closely identified with the interests of the city, and took an active part in all public enterprises. In his early years he was a Democrat in his political views, afterward, however, becoming associated with the Republican party, he was a leading spirit in its councils. He held several town offices, and in the winter of 1853-54 was a member of the Assembly at Albany, N. Y., during which incumbency he was chairman of the judiciary committee, and won the esteem of his constituency for his careful and untiring devotion to their interests. As a lawyer he was well known for his keen insight into human nature, his correct judgment on intricate questions, and his thorough knowledge of law in all its bearings. Personally he was a man of genial manners, generous and charitable in his disposition, and greatly beloved in his home. He was an able financier, and left some valuable property in Dutchess county and also in Rhode Island. He was a liberal supporter of the Presbyterian Church, to which his family belong. Mrs. Weeks and her daughters—Caroline Babcock and Elizabeth Mauran—are widely known and highly esteemed in the community, and are women of culture and refinement.

MON. JOHN A. HANNA, of Dover Plains, Dutchess county, member of the New York State Assembly from the First District, is one of the most distinguished citizens, and has made his way to the front in business and political life notwithstanding the fact that he is still young in years. He was born in Williamsbridge, near New York City, on October 8, 1859, and received a good education, attending first the schools of his native place, and later a private seminary at Dover. After his graduation he engaged in mercantile business, and in 1875 he established a general store in Dover Plains, which at once became a prominent factor in the commercial life of the town. His father-in-law, H. W. Preston, is associated with him under the firm name of J. A. Hanna & Co.

Mr. Hanna possesses the admirable traits of character which mark the leader in public affairs, and has been prominent in the councils of the Republican party from his first entrance into politics, being elected to various town offices at different times—including that of supervisor in 1890, for one year, and in 1893, for two years. May 20, 1889, he was appointed postmaster of Dover Plains, under President Harrison, and held that position until a short time ago, and in 1895 he was elected to the State Legislature, where he has served his constituency ably and faithfully. He belongs to the Royal Arcanum at Wassaic, N. Y., and is a leading member of the Baptist Church at Dover Plains, taking great interest in the prosperity and growth of that body. His wife, formerly Miss Ada Preston, is a descendant of one of the oldest families. They have one daughter—Julia E. Hanna.

The Hanna family originated in Mayhaland, County Londonderry, Ireland, and Mr. Hanna has made a visit to the old home of his ancestors while taking an extended European tour. Samuel Hanna, his grandfather, was born in Mayhaland, County Londonderry, Ireland, and was there reared and educated. He followed the occupation of a farmer and also engaged in the operation of a flax and grist mill at that place. He married Matilda Furgeson, and to their union were born thirteen children, namely: Jane, who married James Sergent; Thomas, who married Margaret Hutchinson; James and John, who died in infancy; Isabella, who married James Hutchinson; Nancy, who married William Hanna; John, who remained single; Robert, who married Matilda Dixon; Eliza, who died in girlhood; Peggy, who died in infancy; David, our subject's father; Sarah, who married a Mr. Livingston; and Alex.

David Hanna, our subject's father, during his boyhood attended the schools of his native land, and assisted his father in the work of the mills. On March 15, 1852, he married Miss Eliza Hutchinson, a daughter of Samuel and Arabella (Greer) Hutchinson, who lived on a farm in County Londonderry. Her father was one of the seven children born to Robert and Nancy (Patterson) Hutchinson, who were also agriculturists of the same locality, the others being: John, William, James, Bettie, Alex and Thomas. Shortly after his marriage David Hanna and his wife sailed from the Emerald Isle for the New World, and made their first location at Paterson, N. J., where they remained for some time. On leaving that city they went to New York, and for forty-three years Mr. Hanna was in the employ of the Harlem road, being fireman for seven years and five months, and was then given a position as watchman, which he held until his resignation a short time ago, owing to his age. His long continued service well indicates his faithful discharge of duty, and the implicit confidence placed in him by his employers. He had a family of seven children, namely: Arabella; Samuel, a conductor on the Harlem railroad, married Minnie McGlasson, and they have one child—Herbert J.; Matilda is now deceased; John is our subject; David, a conductor on the Harlem railroad, married Mary Hutchinson; Dorley is deceased; and Lizza A.

The ancestors of Mrs. John A. Hanna were early settlers in Rhode Island, where her great-grandfather, Ebenezer Preston, was born and educated. He was the first of the family to come to Dutchess county, and he became a successful farmer in the town of Dover. His wife was a Miss White, and they had five children: Bijah married Betsey Ross; Smith married Phœbe Eazener; John married Amy Wing; Ebenezer remained in single blessedness; and Hannah married Jackson Wing. John Preston, Mrs. Hanna's great-grandfather, was born in Dover Plains, and after attending the common schools for some years engaged in farming. He purchased a tract of land on the old post road near Dover Plains, upon which stood a house that was one of the historic land-marks of the locality, having been used for many years as a tavern. The days of the stage coach not yet being ended, he maintained it in that capacity for some years. He married Miss Amy Wing, daughter of Thomas Wing, a well-known farmer of Dover, and they had eight children, whose names with those of their husbands and wives are as follows: Myron married Sarah Ward; Shandinett married Sallie A. Sheldon; Harvey married Emeline Taber; Uriah, no record; George married Mary Germond; John married Sallie Thomas; Hannah married Oscar Taber; and Phœbe married David Vincent. The two younger daughters were twins.

Myron Preston, Mrs. Hanna's grandfather, was born in 1804, and after a course in the common schools in the town of Dover engaged in farming there. He was greatly interested in local politics; and held a number of offices. His wife was Miss Sarah Wood, daughter of Paltira and Anna Wood, who owned a fine farm near Dover Plains. Of the two children of this union the younger, Anna, married Abram Denton. The elder, Henry W. Preston, Mrs. Hanna's father, was born in 1830, and was educated in the schools of Dover Plains and at the Amenia Seminary. After graduating from the latter institution he engaged in farming for a time, but later became connected with a mercantile firm in Dover Plains as a clerk. In 1875 he formed the present partnership with his son-in-law, which has proved mutually advantageous. He married Miss Julia M. Pierce, the daughter of a prosperous saddle and harness maker of Salisbury, Conn., and Mrs. Hanna is their only child.

MON. ALFRED BONNEY. As one of the youngest and ablest members of the State Assembly of 1882, the subject of this review rendered good service to his constituency of the First District of Dutchess County, and proved himself a worthy descendant of an ancestry which has numbered more than one man of ability and note.

The Bonney family is of Anglo-Norman stock, and the head of the American line came from Dover, England, about 1604. For several generations the home of the family was in Massachusetts; but the numerous descendants have since become widely dispersed. Peter Bonney, our subject's grandfather, was born May 18, 1773, at Charlestown, N. H., and April 7, 1800, was married to Eleanor Savage, who was born November 16, 1781. Shortly after his marriage he settled at Littleton, N. H., and engaged in business as a tanner, and dealer in wild lands. He was a man of much influence, and in 1810 represented Grafton county, N. H., in the State Legislature. His death occurred December 15, 1836, his wife surviving him many years, dying at Jamaica Plains, Mass., October 7, 1873. They had eight children, all of whom (except the youngest) are now deceased, their names with dates of birth, &c., being as follows: Emily, May 30, 1801; Benjamin West, February 2, 1803; Elvira, March 14, 1805, married and settled near Boston; Almeria, September 9, 1807, also married and lived in New Hampshire; Franklin R., December 6, 1810; Elizabeth M., October 12, 1815, married and resided in San Francisco, Cal.; Alfred P., August 29, 1820, was married, and left a widow and four children, who now reside in Waterford, Caledonia Co., Vt., about fourteen miles from St. Johnsbury; and Ellen, April 2, 1825, widow of the late Rev. Oliver S. St. John, a Congregational minister.

Judge Benjamin West Bonney, our subject's father, received an elementary education in the common schools at Littleton, N. H., and then taught school in order to obtain funds for further study. Later he entered Dartmouth College, from which he graduated valedictorian of his class in 1824, and subsequently settled in New York City, where he began the study of law. In 1827 he was appointed commissioner of deeds; February 29, 1828, was admitted to practice as attorney in the Court of Common Pleas; on October 29, 1830, received his license as counsellor, and on the following day was licensed as counsellor at law in the Court of Common Pleas. On May 31, 1831, he became a licensed counsellor in all the courts of the State. He practiced his profession continuously in New York City until his death, except while serving as justice of the Supreme Court of the State of New York; and was widely influential in public affairs, religious, educational and political. He was an ardent supporter of the Republican party, from its formation. He was president of the New England Society in the City of New York; chairman of the Board of Audits; and one of the earliest members of the Union League Club; a director in the Washington Life Insurance Co.; general counsel of the Merchants Bank, and counsel for many years of Madame Jumel.

On April 28, 1848, he was married by Rev. Mancius S. Hutton, D. D., to Adriana Rapalje, daughter of Sylvanus Rapalje, who was born July 3, 1795, and died November 12, 1883; he was a prominent man of his day, in various lines of effort; he was twice married, first on June 11, 1823, to Susan Roe Van Voorhis, who was born April 14, 1805, and died January 26, 1832. To their union were born three children: Adelaide, August 7, 1824; Jeromus, February 25, 1826; and Adriana, our subject's mother, November 11, 1827. On November 16, 1833, he married, for his second wife, Rachel Ann Van Voorhis, a native of Fishkill, Dutchess county, and a sister of his first wife. She died March 23, 1877. They had three children, viz.: William, born August 20, 1834; Susan Augusta, widow of the late Rev. Lester M. Dorman (Yale '54), January 21, 1839; and Stewart, September 6, 1843.

Our subject's parents made their home in New York City, where the father died August 18, 1868, and the mother on August 15, 1891. They reared a family of seven children, to all of whom were given unusually good educational advantages. Their names, with dates of birth, etc., are here given: Eleanor, March 2, 1849, married Edward F. Brown, a lawyer of New York City; Adriana R., March 30, 1850, is the widow of Dr. Weber-Liel, late of Bonn, Germany, where she now resides; and Benjamin W., April 2, 1852, is a farmer at Fishkill Plains; Susan R., May 20, 1854, married Major of Cavalry Carl Emil Schultz-Schulzenstein, of Berlin, Germany, and died in Charlottenburg, Germany, September 26, 1895; Alfred, our subject; Jeromus R., May 6, 1859, who has never married, is a civil engineer; Elvira B., July 5, 1863, married Anton L. Bamberger, who died in London, England.

Hon. Alfred Bonney was born February 17, 1857, at No. 18 West 14th street, New York City, where his education was begun in its schools, and in 1869 he, in company with his mother, brothers and sisters, went to Germany to study. He spent one year at Dusseldorf-on-the-Rhine, and two years at Berlin, and then returned to the United States. He attended the Brooklyn Polytechnic and Collegiate Institute for a time, and later entered Cornell University, where he remained three years, making a special study of agriculture. In 1878 he settled in the town of East Fishkill, Dutchess county, purchasing his present estate of 151 acres, then known as the "old Rapalje farm," but now re-christened the "Green Meadow farm." Here his thorough scientific training for his calling has been put to a successful test in the raising of general crops, and he is regarded as one of the leading farmers of that section. His activities are not confined to agricultural work, however, and he has been prominent in the Republican party, being chosen, as has been said, to represent the Assembly District in the Legislature at Albany.

On April 30, 1889, Mr. Bonney married Miss Sarah A. Luyster, daughter of the late Peter Luyster, and they have one son, Alfred, Jr., born April 20, 1890. Mr. and Mrs. Bonney are members of the Reformed Church at Hopewell, in which he has held office as deacon. He is a member of the Alpha Delta Phi fraternity, Cornell Branch, and is a life member of the New England Society.

BISBEE FAMILY, THE, of which Joseph B. Bisbee, of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, is a worthy and respected representative, is of English origin, and the progenitor of the American line came to this country in 1734, the name appearing in the early records as "Besbedge." He settled at Plymouth, Mass., but his descendants located at various points, being named among the first settlers at Mansfield, Pembroke and Scituate, Mass. Gideon Bisbee located at Chesterfield, Hampshire Co., Mass., and was the father of two sons, Jotham and Gideon. Jotham had ten children: Jonathan, Asenath, Elisha, Lucy, Rebecca, Lydia, Rachel, Jotham, Job and Ashael.

Job was born in 1797, and during his early manhood was a farmer at Worthington, Mass. In 1819 he married Miss Susan Buck, who was born in 1800, and was of the sixth generation in descent from James Buck, of Hingham, Mass., who at one time was town clerk of Scituate. He died in 1695. His son Isaac married Frances —, and had a son Matthew, born in 1724, who married Elizabeth Howard. Their son Thomas married Silence Brett, and had a son Cyrus (Mrs. Bisbee's father), who was born in 1775 and died in 1860. About 1830 Job Bisbee removed to Ellicottville, Cattaraugus Co., N. Y., with his family, and engaged in farming until 1864, when he went to Poughkeepsie to reside. His death occurred there March 11, 1866, his wife surviving him until April, 1881. Job Bisbee was a man of strong character and fine mental ability, and held a high place in the esteem of his associates. He was well read, much noted as a mathematician, and taught with great success in Worthington, Mass., and in Cattaraugus county, N. Y. Although he was not a member of any Church, he was of unblemished Christian character, and his influence was always powerful for good. He was especially pronounced in his views upon public questions. He and his wife reared a family of nine children, to whose education he gave careful attention: Otis, Alvin (a resident of Nebraska) and George (deceased) were born at the old home in Massachusetts; the others were natives of Cattaraugus county. Jane married Manley Fuller, and lives at Rochester, Minn.; Mary married Dr. Edwin Kimball, of Haywards, Cal.; Samantha married Dr. John Veach (now deceased), formerly of Kentucky, but later of Portland, Oregon; Susan never married; Adelia is the wife of Oren Cobb, of Winthrop, Maine; and Anna married George Gifford, Esq., of Jamestown, New York.

OTIS BISBEE, one of the most successful educators of the State, and the founder and principal of Riverview Academy, was born February 14, 1822, in the town of Chesterfield, Hampshire Co., Mass., and came with his parents to New York State during boyhood. Until he was fifteen years old his schooling was limited to two or three months' attendance each year at the district school, his help being needed on the farm at other seasons. The country was new, much rough work having to be done, and in that he rapidly developed the independent spirit and industrious habit which carried him through the exacting duties of later years. At the age of thirteen he showed these traits by undertaking to make maple sugar by himself, and so thoroughly in earnest was he that he made from sixty-five trees a larger proportionate amount than any one else in the neighborhood. One evening he remained at the camp until about ten o'clock, and the next morning traces of wolves following a deer were found near the place. His father was a well-informed man, and encouraged discussion while they were working about the farm, and thus the boy's mind was early stimulated to thought, and a keen desire awakened to learn the answers to the questions which remained unsolved in their often-interrupted conversations, while his reading in biography and history helped him to form a determination to leave his narrow life. An accident in his seventeenth year confined him to the house, thereby giving him leisure for study; so he availed himself of the opportunity by preparing himself for the teacher's examination, and subsequently secured a school in a backwoods district. Then followed three years of work among strangers, in which the sorrow of being parted from the old home was only relieved by the thought that he was helping to pay off a debt which lay heavily upon his father. He succeeded in this, and in securing a small fund for himself. The next four years were spent with his uncles in Herkimer county in dairy farming, and the last three of these were passed in the town of Fairfield, where a celebrated academy and medical college were located. While there he taught for several winters, and studied as he could at Fairfield Academy.

In 1847 he entered the sophomore class of Union College, of which Dr. Nott was then the head; but young Bisbee was not inclined to play any pranks, he did not become as well acquainted with that noted educator as some of his less steady-going companions. In 1848 he was president of the Adelphi Literary Society, and during his term the society held its semi-centennial celebration, imposing upon him the duty of welcoming back to the old walls the Alumni who gathered on that happy occasion. Mr. Bisbee left college in 1849, to teach in Mr. Charles Bartlett's school in Poughkeepsie, and on the graduation of his class he was elected to membership in the Phi Beta Kappa Society. In 1850 he married Miss Frances C. Bartlett, and two years later built a house for a dwelling and school on the southwest corner of Mill and Hamilton streets, Poughkeepsie. [The house standing just south on Hamilton street, of the present building, was the school room and dormitory.] On the death of Mr. Bartlett in 1857 he became, in company with Mr. Charles B. Warring (later the principal of Poughkeepsie Military Institute), an associate principal of the Poughkeepsie Collegiate School. Mr. Warring retiring in 1862, Mr. Bisbee introduced some changes in the school, notably the military character which it afterward retained. In 1866 he erected the building known as Riverview Academy, which under his able management became one of the best institutions of its grade in the State. In 1885 Mr. Bisbee passed away, and his mantle fell upon his son, Joseph Bartlett Bisbee.

JOSEPH BARTLETT BISBEE, principal and proprietor of Riverview Military Academy, was born in 1853 in the building now standing on the southwest corner of Mill and Hamilton streets. In 1857, with his father, he moved to College Hill, and then began his studies and received his military instruction, which has been of untold value to him in his career as a teacher. In 1867 his father moved the school to its present quarter at Riverview. In 1876 Joseph B. Bisbee entered Amherst College, where he remained three years, till called home to assist in the school. In 1884 Amherst College recognized his work and conferred upon him the degree of Master of Arts.

In 1880 Mr. Bisbee married Miss Sarah M. Pangburn, of Albany, N. Y. They had one child, Elsie P. Mrs. Bisbee died March 3, 1884. In December, 1885, Mr. Bisbee married Miss Winifred Dana Wheeler, daughter of the late Francis B. Wheeler, D. D., who was pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Poughkeepsie for nearly forty years. They have had three children: Francis Wheeler, who died in 1888; Joseph Bartlett Bisbee, Jr.; and Eleanor Dana. Mr. Bisbee is a member of the Masonic order, and an elder in the Presbyterian Church.

JOSEPH E. ODELL, M. A. The first Baron Odell was a count of Flanders, and Matilda, the wife of William the Conqueror, was a daughter of one of these counts, and presumably the sister of the first Baron Odell, whose title and estates were bestowed by William. These honors were conferred for distinguished military services in the conquest of England. The estate consisted of, perhaps, twenty thousand acres of land, and extended into two counties, containing within its boundaries upward of twenty villages or small towns. The head of the Baroncy was at Odell, Bedfordshire, England, where Odell Church and Odell Castle still stand, both of which have been erected within recent times, but are near or upon the site of the ancient fortress. Here the church and town records disclose vast numbers of inhabitants of that name from remote times to the present.

The direct descendants of the first Baron Odell were closely related to at least four Kings of England: William the Norman, Alfred the Great, Edward the Second and Henry the Eighth. They were also related by blood or marriage to upward of fifty families entitled to bear arms, that is, those belonging to the gentry and nobility of England. The title from which the name was derived was bestowed in 1066, and from about 795 to the present time the line from father to son is unbroken, the name of not a single individual being wanting. There were many obstacles to the completion of the early part of this record, but diligent and patient research overcame them. Previous to 795, however, no record of the family line has been found, and reliance must be placed upon general historical statements discovered here and there, often in rare and curious forms of ancient record. Assuming the correctness of such authorities, there existed in the possession of the Counts of Flanders a complete and unbroken record, traced back, step by step, to Priam, King of Troy, or to about 1200 B. C.

No remnant of this alleged record has been discovered. But as such a record would naturally be in some French repository of ancient learning, and therefore difficult of access, it is scarcely surprising that the discovery has not been made. It is known, however, that throughout a long period the Counts of Flanders were almost or quite equal in power to the Kings of France, and that in the turbulent times of the Dark Ages they were practically kings, with a horde of dependents to do their bidding. Such families make history, and, doubtless, there were always at hand persons able and willing to write it as fast as it was ready for the pen. And astonishing as the statement, of an unbroken record back to Priam, appears at first glance; on mature reflection, there should appear nothing in it more surprising than that the record should stand unbroken, as it unquestionably does, from 1066 to the present time. The keeping of a family history could not have been more difficult than it has been subsequently.

The line as traced downward includes about thirty generations from the first Baron Odell until the present time. His direct descendants of the same name are now very numerous, and of these the subject of this sketch is a representative. To his efforts are due in a great degree the discovery and arrangement of the facts necessary to furnish proof of the connection with the ancient baronial family, and he has laid under contribution legal documents, church, immigration and shipping records, public speeches and prints, and many volumes, ancient and modern. The result of these labors is a host of facts, sufficient, probably, for a large volume. As an example of the exhaustiveness of the investigation, it has been found that the name, during a period of about 800 years, has been authentically used under no less than forty different spellings, Wahul predominating at first, and Odell now. To sum up, here is a lineage covering 3,000 years, or about ninety generations, carrying us back to what it pleases us to call the infancy of the world. During this time nations have gone to decay, languages have perished, a new world has been discovered, time and space have been annihilated by inventions, the Iliad and Bible have been written, and Christ and His religion have illumined the world! It would scarcely seem presumptuous were the Odells of this line to issue a challenge to the world to produce a more ancient family record.

William Odell, the first of the family in this country, settled in Concord, Mass., about 1639, and his descendants have since occupied a prominent place in the annals of this country, three of them having been Congressmen from this State, Moses F. Odell and N. Holmes Odell, from Brooklyn, and Benjamin Odell, from Newburg. The minor posts of honor held by members of the family have been numberless. The descendants are widely scattered, being found in Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Nebraska, Illinois, Alabama, Minnesota, and also in Nova Scotia. They are very numerous in eastern Massachusetts, southern Connecticut, Long Island and Westchester, Orange, and Dutchess counties, those of the latter locality being mainly offshoots from the Odells of Westchester county. At an early date an intermarriage took place with the Bolton family, a branch of which has long been resident in Dutchess county. The Boltons worthily boast a noble and honored lineage, stretching back in unbroken line far within the luminous mists of the ancient nobility of England. At the same time that William Odell settled at Concord there came also the Rev. Peter Bulkeley, who had been a clergyman in the Odell Church in England, and had married a near relative of the Odells there. Having been silenced for non-conformity, he came to a freer land, and his descendants have made the family name widely known and greatly honored, especially in the eastern States.

In 1639, at Concord, Mass., now a suburb of Boston, came William:—then in direct line William; then Isaac; then Joshua; then John; then Daniel, whose son was Joseph E. Odell, the subject of this sketch. John Odell came to Dutchess county from Westchester about 1795. He settled at Pleasant Plains, where for many years he was the proprietor of a country store, but later removed to Beekman, where he had purchased a large farm, to which his son Daniel succeeded and where Joseph E. Odell was born April 5, 1848, the third in a family of four sons, the others being Eliphalet P., John D., and Caspar L., whose biography appears elsewhere. His mother was Malinda, daughter of John LeRoy, who for a long time was proprietor of the store, flourmill, sawmill, shops of various kinds, and farm, where Frost's Mills now stand. The church at Pleasant Plains probably owes its existence to his liberality, and its later prosperity to the generous support of his children.

In 1856 Prof. Odell's parents moved to the town of Hyde Park, a mile south of Pleasant Plains church, and in 1868 to Schenectady. He attended the common schools of Beekman and Hyde Park during boyhood, and in 1867-68 studied in the High School at Poughkeepsie under Prof. John M. Clarke. He was graduated from the Union Classical Institute at Schenectady in 1870, and from Union College in 1874, standing first in his class in both institutions and taking the Nott Scholarship Prize of $150 offered yearly in the college to the one who should stand at the head of his class, not in one but in all studies. He received the degrees of A. B. and A. M. from Union College. While a student in the Institute he originated the A. Z. fraternity, of which he was the first president, and he was a member of the Psi Upsilon Society at college. After graduating, he engaged in teaching, and was principal of the schools at Fishkill Landing, and Scotia, N. Y., and Storm Lake, Iowa. He studied law, and was admitted to the bar while at Storm Lake, and returning to the East he taught at Berwick and Academia, Penn., as principal of the academies there. In 1879 he was admitted to the bar at Brooklyn, N. Y., and practiced for a short time. He then resumed teaching, and was principal of the schools at Greenville, N. Y., and Monroe, La., and of Leslie Academy, in Poughkeepsie. For the last ten years he has been a successful private tutor at Poughkeepsie, giving thorough preparation for college to a large number of students.

Prof. Odell was married in November, 1875, to Miss Clara A. Page, of Schenectady. They have no children. He has done some valuable literary work, having been a regular contributor to the Poughkeepsie Eagle, and in former years having furnished numerous articles on various topics to other papers and periodicals.

He is also the author of a work on English Grammar, and one on Geometry as applied to surveying. His learned acquirements include many languages, ancient and modern; and, as to proficiency in matters purely scholastic, he has few superiors. He is remarkably efficient as a teacher, and many now successful young men can gratefully attribute the beginning of their ascent to his wise and helpful instruction and advice.

Prominent among those who have rendered assistance in collecting the above facts concerning the Odell family, is Mr. Rufus King, of Yonkers, N. Y., who is an experienced genealogist, whose mother was an Odell, and whose father's family, for several generations, has taken a leading place in State and National politics. There are numerous Odells whose connection with this family cannot be established with the facts at hand. Whether they are of a different origin, or are offshoots who have lost the proofs of connection with this line, seems difficult of determination.

HON. STORM EMANS. Among the early comers from Holland to this country were the ancestors of the Emans family, so well and favorably known in this section. They came about the time of the Huguenot immigration, and located for the most part in New England, some of their descendants, however, becoming pioneer settlers in Dutchess county.

There is ground for belief that James Emans, our subject's great-grandfather, was born in Dutchess county, and it is at least certain that he spent the greater part of his life in what is now the town of East Fishkill, where he obtained a grant of 137 acres of land from Madame Brett, which tract is still in the possession of the family, having never been alienated. Here James Emans followed farming until his death. He and his wife reared a family of eight children, of whom the four sons—Cornelius (who died in 1849), James, John and Hendrick—all engaged in farming. Of the daughters, Elizabeth and Catherine never married; Ann was the wife of Samuel Betty, a farmer, and Margaret married John Miller, also a farmer. John Emans, our subject's grandfather, married Abby Way, and settled at the old homestead where he passed his life. Five children were born to him: Albert, who died in 1895, was a farmer in the town of Lagrange, and also engaged in freighting and speculating; James C. is a farmer in East Fishkill; John S. is mentioned more fully below; George (deceased) was a prominent farmer in Lagrange; and Charles W. is also an agriculturist in East Fishkill.

John S. Emans, the father of our subject, was born in 1824, and grew to manhood at the old homestead. He engaged in agriculture there, taking also a keen interest in public affairs and holding a prominent place in that locality. Although he was not a lawyer, his mind was of a judicial cast, and he was very often called upon to try cases and advise in legal controversies. He was a justice of sessions for some time, represented his town repeatedly on the county board of supervisors, and was one of the three excise commissioners of Dutchess county. In his political views he was a Democrat, and he was elected many years ago on that ticket to the State Legislature. A man of commanding influence, he left a memory which is a cherished legacy among his descendants. He married Eliza Storm, a member of an old and highly respected family, and a daughter of Garret Storm, of East Fishkill. The Emans family have been members of the Reformed Church from a very early period, and our subject's parents were both active and faithful adherents. The father died September 1, 1877, the mother on May 26, 1882. Of their five children, the first and third, Catherine and Abby C., died in early youth; Albert S. is a merchant at Gayhead, in the town of East Fishkill; and Lillian married Dr. Leslie A. Sutton.

Storm Emans, the fourth member of this family, was born at the old homestead, June 12, 1856, and after attending the neighboring district schools for some years went to Poughkeepsie for a course in Bishop's Select School, but ill health compelled him to give up his studies sooner than he intended. After leaving this school he learned telegraphy, and followed it five years at Matteawan, Millerton and Millbrook, operating a private line for the president of the Dutchess & Columbia railroad. He then went to Saratoga Springs, N. Y., where he met the president of the Atlantic & Pacific Telegraph Co., and was appointed to open and take charge of the office at Newburgh; but he remained in that position only a short time, owing to the death of his father. Returning to his old home, he was chosen, in 1877, to fill his father's unexpired term as justice of the peace, and in 1881-82-86-87 he served on the board of supervisors, and was chairman of various committees. In 1883 he was a member of the State Assembly, having been elected to the office in the First Assembly District of Dutchess county, and in 1890 he was appointed index clerk of that body; from 1891 to 1894 he held the office of clerk of Dutchess county. At present he is secretary and treasurer of the Mitchell Heater Co., and his time is devoted to that business and the management of his farms.

On January 26, 1881, Mr. Emans was united in marriage with Miss Alice A. Waterbury, daughter of William Waterbury, a prominent hardware merchant of Saratoga Springs, and they have one son, Storm Waterbury, born May 22, 1883.

EDWARD HAZEN PARKER, son of Hon. Isaac and Sarah (Ainsworth) Parker, was born in the city of Boston, Mass., in 1823.

Dr. Parker graduated from Dartmouth College in 1846, and received his medical degree from Jefferson Medical College in 1848. In the same year he was appointed lecturer on Anatomy and Physiology at Bowdoin Medical College, and for the following nine years was editor of the "New Hampshire Medical Journal." In 1853 Dr. Parker was called to the chair of Physiology and Pathology in the New York Medical College, and associated himself in practice with Dr. Fordyce Barker in New York City. He at this time established the "New York Medical Monthly," which he continued to edit personally for many years with great ability and success. In 1854 he received the degree of A. M. from Trinity College. In 1858, as the result of overwork, Dr. Parker had serious trouble with his eyes, necessitating his removal from the city, and in the out-door life of a country practice to seek the recovery of his health. He came to Poughkeepsie, where, as a general practitioner and consultant, he practiced his profession for nearly forty years. He was elected president of the New York State Medical Society in 1862, and in the same year, and in the succeeding one, went to the front

Edu. C. H. Parker

as a volunteer surgeon in the service of New York State.

The Doctor was one of the trustees of, and visiting surgeon to, St. Barnabas Hospital from its opening, until it was closed in 1887. In 1887 he was appointed visiting surgeon to Vassar Brothers' Hospital, and elected president of the medical board. Dr. Parker died November 10, 1896. He was twice married. His first wife, Sarah (Heyderk), died in 1880, leaving three daughters and one son, Dr. Harry Parker, all of whom are living. In 1883 he married Jeannie C. Wright, who with one son survives her husband.

Dr. Parker was a physician of signal competency and skill, and as a surgeon he had few superiors. He was a man of very fine fibre, of unusual cultivation, and of high scholarly attainments. His classical education was sound and liberal, his sympathies most acute, and he was also possessed of a fine poetical talent, which in his busy life, were less frequently exercised than his friends could have desired. The poem, a single verse of which is given below, was composed by Dr. Parker in 1879. It applies most fittingly to his life, which was marked through the long years of his devotion to his work by a conspicuous purity of character, great unselfishness and self sacrifice.

"Life's race well run;
Life's work all done;
Life's victory won;
Now cometh rest."

CHARLES WALSH, the well-known editor of the Amenia Times, is conducting this paper with signal ability and success, and holds a prominent position among the journalists of Dutchess county.

Mr. Walsh was born at Futtegarh, India, March 14, 1854, but is descended from a well-known New York family of Irish ancestry. William Walsh, his paternal grandfather, was a native of Newburgh, N. Y., and in later years was president of the Bank of Newburgh; he died there in 1847.

Rev. John Johnston Walsh, the father of our subject, was born at Newburgh, Orange county, in 1820, received his classical education at Union College, class of '39, and later graduated at the Princeton Theological Seminary. At the age of twenty-one, he went to India as a Presbyterian missionary, and there faithfully served for twenty-eight years. On account of cataract of the eye, he returned to America, where he found that it was incurable, and subsequently for three years was pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Miller-ton, N. Y. He wrote and published the "Martyred Missionaries," a memorial to those massacred during the Sepoy rebellion in 1857, at which time he was on a trip to the United States to leave his children to be educated.

At Fishkill, N. Y., in 1841, Rev. Mr. Walsh was married to Miss Emma Brett, a daughter of Henry Brett; she is still living, making her home at Newburgh, N. Y., but her husband died at Amenia in 1884. Henry Brett was a direct descendant of Francis Rombout, proprietor of the famous Rombout Patent. The only child and heiress of Francis Rombout was Katrina, who married Lieut. Roger Brett, of the English navy. Lieut. Brett, dying in early manhood, left his wife with the management of a large estate, which she conducted with marked ability. The name of Madame Brett is a noted one in the early annals of Dutchess county history; she died at an advanced age, leaving a goodly number of descendants.

Although born in India, our subject was educated in the public schools of Newburgh, and at the Newburgh Academy, preparing for college at Cornwall-on-the-Hudson. For four years he was then engaged in the drug business at Newburgh and New York City. In 1876 he purchased a half interest in the Amenia Times, which was established in 1852, and in 1878 bought out his partner, William L. De Lacey. He then conducted the paper alone until 1888, when he sold a fourth interest to Theron Griffin, who has been connected with the office for thirty years. It is a bright, spicy paper, well edited and non-partisan in politics. On July 1, 1895, Mr. Walsh also purchased the Pawling Chronicle, which he has since greatly enlarged and improved.

On April 8, 1890, at Amenia, Mr. Walsh was married to Miss Georgia A. Thompson, daughter of Hon. George Thompson, Judge of the City Court of Brooklyn, N. Y., and they now reside at their pleasant home in Amenia. Mrs. Walsh belongs to the old Dutchess county family of Thompsons, who migrated from Connecticut in 1750.

Mr. Walsh has always been an ardent Democrat in politics, and was appointed post-master at Amenia in August, 1893. He has proved a popular and capable official, and succeeded in having the office changed to the third class December 27, 1894. Socially, he belongs to Amenia Lodge No. 672, F. & A. M., and to the Royal Arch Chapter, Poughkeepsie, and the Royal Arcanum. He is also connected with Amenia Grange. He takes an active part in the work of the Presbyterian Church of Amenia, of which he is a consistent member, and is at present serving as superintendent of the Sunday-school.

JEREMIAH S. PEARCE, the present sheriff of Dutchess county, and a well-known citizen of Poughkeepsie, was born August 28, 1837, in the town of Pawling, Dutchess county. The Pearce family is of Welsh extraction, and the father and grandfather of our subject were of the same nativity as himself.

Henry Pearce, the grandfather, married Miss Rebecca Birdsill, who was born in Dutchess county, and they settled on a farm in the town of Pawling. In politics he was a Whig, and both he and his wife were members of the Methodist Church. Five children were born to them: Nathaniel (who was made assessor of his township), Sally, Rebecca, Amie and Benoni.

Benoni Pearce, the father of our subject, was reared on the old home farm, and married Miss Mary Ann Stark, who was born in the town of Dover, Dutchess county, a daughter of Benoni Stark, a farmer of that town. After their marriage they settled on a farm, and there reared a family of seven children, as follows: Henry is a physician in Pawling; Lillius H. married A. J. Brown, a farmer in Yates county, N. Y.; Jeremiah S. is our subject; James S. is a druggist and undertaker in Pawling; Charles W. resides in New York City; Elizabeth married John Gelder, a farmer in Yates county, N. Y.; and Edwin died in 1877. In 1849 the family removed to Yates county, where the father carried on farming until his death in 1893. He was a Whig, later a Republican, and at one time was captain in the State militia. Both parents were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Jeremiah S. Pearce, whose name opens this sketch, spent his boyhood days on the farm in Pawling, attending the district school until about fourteen years of age, when the parents removed to Yates county. He was twenty-two years old when the Civil war broke out, and the same year, 1861, he enlisted in Company I, 33d N. Y. V. I., and was sent to Washington. Being taken ill, however, he was discharged. This did not dampen his ardor, and as soon as convalescent and able for duty, he re-enlisted, in the spring of 1862, this time in the 128th N. Y. V. I., being commissioned second lieutenant. In 1863 he was made first lieutenant, and the following year was promoted to the rank of captain of Company B. He served throughout the entire war, and was mustered out July 12, 1865, during which time he participated in many important battles, among them those of Cedar Creek, Winchester, Fisher's Hill, and was in the Shenandoah Valley with Gen. Sheridan, besides taking part in minor skirmishes, etc. In all these years of fighting he was so fortunate as to escape without a wound.

At the close of the war Mr. Pearce returned to Pawling, and for a number of years was engaged in various occupations. On September 8, 1875, he was married to Miss Elizabeth Chase, who was born in Pawling, and is a daughter of Darius Chase, a station agent on the Harlem Road railway. They have two children, Carrie L. and Charles D. Mr. Pearce is a Republican and prominent in his party; served several terms as supervisor of Pawling, and twelve terms as assessor. In 1894 he was elected sheriff of Dutchess county, in which office he is giving satisfaction to the public by the faithful and judicious discharge of its responsible duties. He is a public-spirited man, believes in progress, and is interested in all projects for the growth and development of the county and State. He and his wife are liberal supporters of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and are highly esteemed citizens.

WELLINGTON C. LANSING, secretary and city editor of the Poughkeepsie Enterprise, is a native of New York City, where he was born June 20, 1855.

Richard E. Lansing, father of our subject, was born in the town of Hyde Park, Dutchess Co., N. Y., January 30, 1830, and there spent his early boyhood, going to school and working upon the farm. Later he moved to Princeton, N. J., and clerked in a store, from there, after his first marriage, removing to New York City, where he clerked in a dry-goods store. In 1859 he came to Poughkeepsie, and for ten years was engaged in the grocery business at No. 16 Washington street, being the leading grocer of his time. He is now, and has been for the past twenty years, in the real-estate and insurance businesses at the same location. In religious circles he is quite prominent, and has been a director and vice-president of the Y. M. C. A.; is a trustee of the Old Ladies' Home and of the Old Men's Home; is one of the organizers and the first superintendent of Cherry Street Chapel, and is a deacon and trustee of the Baptist Church; is also a director of the Poughkeepsie Lyceum. Politically, he is a Republican, and has served as city treasurer of Poughkeepsie, also alderman of the Third ward, and was a candidate for mayor.

Richard E. Lansing has been twice married, first time in 1851 to Miss Emily Welling, by whom there was one child, Wellington C., our subject. This wife was afflicted with heart disease, and thrice before she was five years old was laid out for burial, her death finally occurring May 17, 1863, when she was thirty-one years old. Her mother is still living at the advanced age of ninety-five years. In September, 1876, Mr. Lansing, for his second wife, married Miss Sarah Hull, a daughter of Thomas Hull, by which union there is no issue.

Garrett P. Lansing, grandfather of our subject, was born in Hyde Park, Dutchess county, in 1790, a son of Peter Lansing, who died at Hyde Park at the age of ninety-eight years. Garrett P. was married to Miss Melinda G. Husted, by whom he had fourteen children, seven of whom are living, all now over fifty years old. They are: William H., of Troy, N. Y.; George E.; Lewis L., of Minneapolis; James F., Richard E., Garrett P., Jr., and Margaret J., of Poughkeepsie. Mr. Lansing was a cabinet maker by trade, and also carried on farming. In politics he was a Democrat, and at one time was collector of the town of Hyde Park. He served in the war of 1812. His death occurred January 7, 1847.

The maternal great-grandfather of Wellington C. Lansing was one of the original Nine Partners, who at one time owned nearly all of Dutchess county.

Wellington C. Lansing, our subject, spent his early life in the public schools of Poughkeepsie, and later attended the Classical and Scientific Institute of Hightstown, N. J. He was married in Catskill, N. Y., May 17, 1877, to Miss Mary D. Bogardus, who is a lineal descendant, like himself, of Anncke Jans, who owned the Trinity Church property in New York City. To Mr. and Mrs. Lansing the following children have been born: Sarah Emily, who died when eight years old; Charles A., born November 7, 1879; Irene E., born February 19, 1881; Bertha D., born August 12, 1882; May B., born May 11, 1886.

Mr. Lansing was employed in the Eagle office until 1882, when he and Edward VanKeuren bought the paper called the Dutchess Farmer, an agricultural weekly, which they conducted until June, 1883, at which time they formed a partnership with Derrick Brown, who was then editor of the Poughkeepsie News, and they formed a new company, Mr. Brown becoming editor-in-chief, and Mr. Lansing city editor, while the name of the paper was changed to the Evening and Weekly Enterprise. In 1892 the paper was bought by a company of Cleveland Democrats, and the above firm runs the paper for it. Mr. Brown is now business manager and treasurer, and editor-in-chief, and Mr. Lansing is secretary and city editor.

Our subject at one time was prominent in firemen's circles, and was president of Davy Crockett Hook and Ladder Co. No. 1. He is past chancellor of Armor Lodge, K. of P., of Poughkeepsie, and past district deputy of the same order; was vice-president of the Y. M. C. A., which office he has held two terms; has been superintendent of the Baptist Sunday-school; president of the Y. P. S. C. E.; president of the Baptist Boys Brigade, and president of the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Association. In principle he is a Prohibitionist, but votes independently.

COLVIN CARD, editor and proprietor of the Millerton Telegram, the leading paper of the northeastern portion of Dutchess county, is one of the most prominent of the younger men of that region, and one who has without doubt a fine future before him. His grandfather, Eason Card, was an early settler upon the Livingston estate in the town of Ancram, Columbia county, and his father, Eason H. Card, was born there in 1826, in early life coming to Dutchess county and engaging in farming in the town of Northeast. In 1863 he returned to his native county, and for eight years was engaged in mercantile business and farming at Scotchtown Mills. In 1872 he purchased a farm of 500 acres of land near Boston Corners, and has since resided there, being one of the principal farmers of that vicinity. In public affairs he is prominent also, taking an active part in the work of the Democratic organization, and serving for many years as justice of the peace. He is a leading member of the Presbyterian Church at Ancram Lead Mines. In 1856 he married Dorcas Decker, a daughter of Everett Decker, and they have two children: Adelbert, born August 28, 1858; and Colvin, our subject. The mother died in 1892; the father is still living on the old farm.

The subject of our sketch was born July 20, 1866, in the town of Northeast, on a farm near Boston Corners, and he was educated mainly in the common schools, with some excellent practical finishing touches in the office of the Millerton Telegram. At the age of nineteen years he left the home farm and taught school for ten years, being principal of the Millerton public schools for four years. After two years at Irondale he returned to Millerton for one year, and in March, 1889, he bought the Van Scriver interest in The Telegram, and continued the paper under the firm name of Deacon & Card until February 15, 1891, when he became the sole proprietor. Since his connection with the paper it has increased in circulation from 480 subscribers to 1,108, and has become the principal paper in the locality. In politics Mr. Card himself is a Democrat, but his paper is independent. He is an energetic, enterprising young man, and finds time to conduct some profitable real estate transactions, and to carry on a successful auction business in partnership with W. D. McArthur. Always loyal to the interests of the village, he is active and influential in local politics; has been town clerk for two terms, and is now a member of the board of education. Socially he is also prominent, being an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and a leader in the choir, and he also belongs to Webatuck Lodge No. 480, F. & A. M., of Millerton, and to Millerton Lodge No. 383, I. O. O. F.

CHARLES P. LUCKEY (deceased), the founder and, at the time of his death, the senior partner in the well-known firm of Luckey, Platt & Co., the leading dry-goods merchants in Poughkeepsie, was born May 30, 1832, near Ithaca, N. Y. His ancestors settled in Dutchess county in early times.

Thomas P. I. Luckey, father of our subject, was born in the city of Poughkeepsie in 1803, and was a farmer by occupation. In early manhood he removed to Ithaca, later to Chautauqua county, but he and his wife returned to Poughkeepsie to spend their declining years. On April 28, 1824, he was married to Jane Ann Hoffman, daughter of Loderwick Hoffman, and they had five children: John, Theodore H., Catherine, Charles Pinckney and Francis Drake, all now deceased. The father died in Poughkeepsie, September 16, 1868, the mother on March 19, 1879.

Charles P. Luckey, the subject proper of this review, shortly after the return to Dutchess county, began his business career as a clerk for W. H. Nase, Dover Plains, and for some years he was employed in that capacity in Hustonville and New Hamburg. In 18— he became a clerk in the dry-goods store of Robert Slee, of Poughkeepsie, and in February, 1866, he was admitted to partnership in the firm. In 18— he established, at No. 328 Main street, the firm of Luckey, Vail & Mandeville, which existed a year and a half, when Mr. Vail withdrew, and about eighteen months afterward, or in 1869, the firm became Luckey & Platt. Later it became Luckey, Platt & Co., S. L. De Garmo being the third member. They owned the largest dry-goods store in the city, with a trade which extended through several counties, and their name became a synonym for enterprise and sound methods.

Mr. Luckey was twice married, the first time in New York City to Miss Annie E. Brush, a daughter of Alfred Brush; she died in 1867, leaving one son, Frank M. R. Luckey, now a Congregational minister at New Haven, Conn.; he is remarkably gifted as an orator, in early life had an inclination for the stage, and spent three years in the company of William Florence. His education was thorough, and he was a graduate of both Cornell and Yale; his wife was Miss Lettie A. Rensley, of Poughkeepsie. For his second wife, Charles P. Luckey was married, on April 6, 1871, to Miss Cecelia Reed, a daughter of John Reed, of Syracuse, N. Y., by which marriage there were no children. Mr. Luckey died January 30, 1896, of heart failure, having been afflicted for some considerable time; his widow is now living in Poughkeepsie.

Mr. Luckey held high rank among the business men in this region, and took part in various enterprises. He was director and vice-president of the First National Bank, and president of the Retail Merchants Association in the city. He never engaged in politics, and was not a member of any club or secret organization; a thorough home man, he was ever happiest there. He was a man of large heart, generous and charitable in all his acts, and possessed of a well-balanced mind. As far as his boyhood educational advantages were concerned, they were limited, but he was fond of reading, and he was twelve years old when he entered the arena of business. For several years he lived in Eastman Terrace, in 1893 removing to his late residence on Garfield Place, Poughkeepsie.

THEODORE ADDISON HOFFMAN, county clerk of Dutchess county, is a native of the county, having been born in the town of Red Hook, May 23, 1844. Theodore Hoffman, his father, was a son of Zacharias Hoffman, who owned a tract of land near Tivoli, along the Hudson river.

Our subject is a member of that steady and worthy class whose ancestors were among the first settlers of Dutchess county. He received his early training at the public schools and at Trinity School, from which he was graduated at the age of fifteen years. After leaving school he was employed as clerk in a general store, and at the age of twenty-two he embarked in mercantile business at Tivoli, N. Y. When twenty-three years old he was appointed postmaster at Tivoli, N. Y., which office he held for eighteen years, and the office has been in his store for some thirty years. He was elected president of the village of Tivoli. In 1888 he was elected county clerk of Dutchess county on the Republican ticket, and in 1891 he was removed from office by Governor Hill for refusing, as he says, to sign what was known as the Mylod return of the county canvassers. In 1894, however, he was re-elected county clerk, which office he now holds.

In 1866, at the age of twenty-two, Theodore A. Hoffman was united in marriage with Harriet Saulpaugh, daughter of Augustus Saulpaugh, a well-known farmer, and seven children have been born to this union—three sons and four daughters: John T., Harry, Frederick, Helen, Maud, Florence and May. In politics Mr. Hoffman is a staunch Republican; in religious faith an Episcopalian; and socially he is a member of the Freemasons, and of the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

ALBERT R. HASKIN, the well-known secretary and manager of the Eastman Business College, Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, and one of the prominent financiers of that city, was born August 27, 1850, in Elkhart county, Indiana.

The family is of English origin with a strain of Scotch blood, and the first ancestor of the American line was an early settler in Vermont, his descendants branching out in later years to all parts of the country. Samuel Haskin, our subject's grandfather, was for a time a resident of Ticonderoga, N. Y., where his son, Caleb Almon (our subject's father), was born in 1826. When the latter was six years old the family moved to Addison county, Vt., later to Lockport, N. Y., and still later to Dowagiac, Mich., and then to Elkhart, Ind. He became a farmer by occupation, and in 1855 went to Marshall county, Iowa, where he entered 200 acres of government land, of which he has made a fine farm. He is a leader in the community, in both business and political affairs, has been a justice of the peace and supervisor of his town for many years, and has been urged to become the Republican candidate for Congress. In school matters he has taken more than ordinary interest, and he is also active in the work of the Baptist Church, of which he is a prominent member.

On May 27, 1849, Caleb A. Haskin was married in Indiana to Miss Rebecca Lacy, daughter of Laban Lacy, a leading citizen of Elkhart county, Ind., and a descendant of an old Virginia family. Seven children were born of this union, of whom four lived to maturity—one son (our subject) and three daughters, namely: Anna C., who married Adam Grimes, and died in 1893; Melissa J., the wife of Charles F. Ricker, a hardware merchant in Grundy Center, Iowa; and Hattie, who married Edward Shelton, of Michigan. The mother of this family died in 1884, and in 1887 the father married Miss Elizabeth Bibb, his present wife.

Albert R. Haskin, our subject, attended the district schools near his father's farm, and after acquiring an elementary education there he entered Iowa College, at Grinnell, Iowa, and for four years, from 1868 to 1872, pursued an elective course. In June, 1872, he came to Poughkeepsie and took a course in the Eastman Business College, graduating September 2 of the same year. His work as a pupil had been so satisfactory that he was appointed superintendent of the Banking Office department in the school, a position which he filled with marked ability for some years. He then became principal of the Theory department, and in 1885 was made principal of the school, which has prospered greatly under his able management. In November, 1896, he was appointed secretary and manager.

On December 31, 1874, Mr. Haskin married Miss Mary A. Cline, a daughter of Henry Cline, a prominent resident of Dutchess county, and late of Saratoga, N. Y. They have had three children, of whom two, Albert C. and Minerva M., are living. Mr. and Mrs. Haskin are leading members of the Baptist Church, in which he has held many official positions, and is now trustee and deacon. He is also a director of the Y. M. C. A. He is an ardent Republican, taking an active share in local politics, and in any enterprise for the public benefit. For thirteen years he has labored for the interests of the public schools as a member of the board of education, and he is now president of that body. His rare business abilities have won him the esteem and confidence of financial leaders, and he has become interested in a number of important business operations, being a director of the Poughkeepsie National Bank, of the Home Building & Loan Association, and of the Masonic Mutual Benefit Association of Dutchess county. He belongs to the I. O. O. F., Fallkill Lodge No. 297, and has passed the chairs; is also a member of the F. & A. M., Poughkeepsie Lodge No. 266, of which he is past master; of Poughkeepsie Chapter No. 172, R. A. M., of which body he is high priest; and of Commandery No. 43, K. T., also of Mecca Temple, of New York City.

SAMUEL MANSFIELD. No citizen of Wappingers Falls is better known, or stands higher in the estimation of his fellowmen, than does this gentleman, who for many years has stood in the front rank of the educators of Dutchess county.

Prof. Mansfield was born in New Baltimore, N. Y., July 14, 1834, his family being of English descent. His grandfather, Samuel Mansfield, was born in Greene county, N. Y., and was a soldier in the war of 1812. He married Hannah Hallenbeck, who was of Dutch stock, and they reared a family of five children, namely: William; Jehoiakim, who became a ship carpenter; Hannah, who married Peter Doty, a farmer of Saratoga county, N. Y.; Margaret, who married James Reed, superintendent of a paper factory at Saugerties, N. Y.; and Sarah, who became the wife of Sylvanus Rutan, a market man of New Jersey.

William Mansfield, the father of our subject, turned his attention to farming. He married Nancy Kelsey, who was born in western New York, and they settled in New Baltimore, where the following children were born to them: Samuel; Silas Wiltsey, who was a soldier in the Civil war, and is now deceased; James Reed, a farmer in Greene county, N. Y.; Sarah Amelia and Hannah Margaret, both deceased, and William Brooks, who died in infancy. The parents both died in Greene county. They were originally members of the Reformed Dutch Church, afterward uniting with the Methodist Episcopal Church. The father in his early life was a Whig, later joining the Republican party.

The subject of this sketch spent his boyhood on his father's farm, and attended the common schools of his vicinity until he was seventeen years old, when he entered the seminary at Charlotteville, N. Y. Afterward he taught school, and thus assisted in defraying his expenses while obtaining an education. He entered the Sophomore class of Union College in 1857, and was graduated in 1860, being chosen class poet. In 1862 he went to Wappingers Falls, and was appointed principal of the Union Free School, which he taught until 1878, resigning to accept the principalship of the Wappingers Falls Graded School, which position he is filling at the present time. During these long years of service in this responsible position, Prof. Mansfield has succeeded in securing the confidence and esteem of not only those under his immediate supervision, but of all those with whom he has been brought into business and social relations. As a teacher he has the best interests of his pupils at heart, and spares no pains in their training. He is firm in his government, yet so genial and companionable that he holds a warm place in the affections of all who have ever been under his care. He is a man of fine tastes and scholarly habits, and is a student and ardent lover of nature, as well as of books. Although popular in social circles, Prof. Mansfield has never been married, his whole life having been devoted to his vocation.

In addition to his school duties, Prof. Mansfield has always taken a lively interest in matters relating to the progress and welfare of the village, and has done much to aid in its development. He has been a member of the board of trustees of the village for many years, and was its president for four years. In 1882 he was made a trustee of the Wappingers Savings Bank, and in 1884 elected its president, which office he still holds. He is president of the board of Park commissioners, to which position he was elected in 1892. He is also one of the original trustees of the Grinnell Library, and chairman of the library committee. In politics, he is a staunch Republican, and has always taken a lively interest in the success of his party and the principles for which it stands. Although not a member of any Church, he is a regular attendant at Zion Protestant Episcopal Church, of Wappingers Falls. He ranks among the best citizens of Wappingers Falls, and has the respect and esteem of all classes of people.

LUKE D. WYMBS, the present school commissioner for the First District of Dutchess county, has been recognized for many years as one of the leading educators of this section.

Born in Livingston, Columbia Co., N. Y., August 21, 1845, he passed his youth at that place, attending the public schools, and making such good use of his advantages that at sixteen years of age he was qualified to teach. He began his professional career February 23, 1862, and among the schools over which he presided were those of Germantown, Livingston, Glencoe Mills, Pine Plains and Glenham. In 1864 he enlisted in Battery M, 3d New York Light Artillery, assigned to the army of the James, and his battery was in service against the fortifications around Petersburg and Richmond. At the close of the war he returned home and again engaged in teaching, spending nineteen years in the Glenham school. In the fall of 1893 he was elected on the Republican ticket to his present position, where his superior talents and wide experience enable him to benefit the cause of education throughout a larger field. He has always been prominent in teachers' associations, both in Dutchess and Columbia counties. On November 3, 1896, he was re-elected school commissioner by a majority of 2,600, being the largest majority ever given a school commissioner in his district.

In early manhood Prof. Wymbs married Miss Mary E. Simmons, of Taghkanick, daughter of Jeremiah and Almah (Tanner) Simmons. She died May 2, 1873, leaving one daughter, Iola M., now the wife of Bertrand J. Harder, of Mechanicsville, Saratoga Co., N. Y. On October 21, 1874, Prof. Wymbs was united in marriage with his present wife, Mary A. DeLamater, daughter of Osterhoudt and Mary (Decker) De Lamater. The Professor has always taken keen interest in public questions and in local affairs. He is a member of the G. A. R., and is past commander of Howland Post No. 48, Department of New York. He and his wife attend the Reformed Church at Glenham.

The Wymbs family originated in Scotland, and at the time of religious persecution in that country moved to the North of Ireland. Our subject's grandparents, Luke and Mary Wymbs, were residents of New York City, where the grandfather was a merchant in the early part of this century. During the war of 1812 he was making a voyage to Ireland with a cargo of linseed, accompanied by his wife and son, Luke D., when the vessel was captured by a British man-of-war, and Mr. Wymbs and his family were taken to Cadiz, and held as prisoners for five or six months. Luke D. Wymbs, the Professor's father, was then a mere boy. He was born in 1805, and on attaining manhood became a farmer in the town of Taghkanick, Columbia county. In 1840 he married Margaret Ferris, and our subject was their only son. Both parents passed from earth in 1886, the mother on February 13, the father on April 25. The mother was born in 1807, one of the fourteen children of her parents, William Ferris and his wife, Jane (Warren).

EDWARD BROWN DU MOND, principal of the Union Free School, in the village of Fishkill, Dutchess county, is one of the leading educators of this section, his professional labors covering a period of nearly thirty years, twenty of them in his present position.

His family, which is of Huguenot extraction, has been a resident in this State since an early period, and his great-grandfather, Johannes Philip Du Mond, was an ensign and lieutenant in the American army during the Revolution, in the regiment of Col. Johannes Snyder, and the company of Capt. Evert Bogardus. His commission, which is dated October 23, 1779, and signed by George Clinton, is now in the possession of our subject. He married Sarah Elmendorf, and their son Conrad (Prof. Du Mond's grandfather) married Catherine Copp. Philip Du Mond (our subject's father) was born May 28, 1817, and followed agricultural pursuits, first in West Hurley, N. Y., and later (in the "sixties") near Kingston, N. Y., where he lived several years, finally purchasing a farm at Accord, N. Y., spending the remainder of his active years there. He died at Fishkill, February 10, 1892, leaving a widow, Mrs. Cornelia Catherine (Brown) Du Mond, and six children, of whom our subject is the eldest. Mary Catherine is the wife of John H. Davis, a paper manufacturer of Millhook, Accord, N. Y.; Martha Antoinette lives in New Jersey with her sister Frances; John Calvin resides at the old homestead at Accord; Philip Nelson married Miss Kate Davis, daughter of Joseph and Charity Davis, and lives at Los Angeles, Cal.; and Frances Augusta married Joachim H. Davis, with the New York Mail and Express, and lives in New Jersey. The mother of this family, who was born June 28, 1817, now makes her home with our subject. She is a descendant of a well-known family, a daughter of Matthias and Mary (Copp) Brown, and granddaughter of Silas and Martha (Robinson) Brown, of whom the last named lived to the age of 102 years.

Prof. Du Mond was born in West Hurley, July 9, 1843, and received his education in the public schools at Kingston, and in the State Normal School at Albany, where he was graduated in 1867. His first professional work was at Stuyvesant Falls, Columbia Co., N. Y., where he remained a year and a half, and then taught the same length of time at Schodack Landing, Rensselaer county. In 1870 he became principal of the Fishkill school, and after twelve years of effective work went to Pelham Manor, N. Y., where he filled a similar position for six years. In 1888 he returned to his former place in Fishkill, and since the Union School came under the control of the Regents in 1894, he has also had charge of the academic department, which was then added.

Prof. Du Mond is one of the honored veterans of the Civil war, and his entrance into the service August 6, 1862, interrupted his studies. He was a member of the 120th N. Y. V. I., and participated in all the battles through which his regiment passed, until wounded, viz.: Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Mine Run, Wilderness, Spottsylvania, North Anna, Tolopotomy, Cold Harbor, Strawberry Plains, and the siege of Petersburg, where his left hand was shot off by a shell. He is a member of the G. A. R., and in 1890 was a delegate to the National Encampment at Boston, where 45,000 men took part in the parade. In politics he is a Republican.

On March 10, 1870, Prof. Du Mond married Miss Ellen L. Mathewson, daughter of Sylvanus and Adelia (Cleveland) Mathewson, of Oneida, N. Y. Three children were born of this union: Grace Lavina, Edna Brown and Marcia Adelle. The Professor and his family are members of the Reformed Dutch Church at Fishkill. Their home is a beautiful estate comprising two acres—the old Oppie homestead. Mrs. Du Mond owns desirable village property at Pelham Manor, N. Y.; she is also a graduate of the Albany State Normal School.

Mrs. Du Mond's grandfather, Winchester Mathewson, married Abigail Swift, and lived in Smithfield, Madison Co., N. Y., where they both died. Their family consisted of fifteen children—seven sons and eight daughters. Mrs. Du Mond's father, Sylvanus, who was the eldest, about the year 1830 married Adelia Cleveland, and their family consisted of ten children—five sons and five daughters—Mrs. Du Mond being the sixth child; at the time of her marriage she was living in Oneida Castle, Madison Co., New York.

JOHAN PETER NELSON (deceased). The subject of this sketch, who in his day was one of the most prominent men of Dutchess county, was born July 29, 1810, in the house now occupied by his widow, at the corner of Cannon and Liberty streets, Poughkeepsie.

Francis Nelson, the first ancestor of the Nelson family, emigrated from England to America about the year 1647, he himself settling at Mamaroneck, Westchester county, while part of his family came to Poughkeepsie and part remained in Peekskill. Col. Joseph

John Peter Nelson

Nelson, born April 1, 1786, at Clinton, Dutchess county, a descendant of this Francis Nelson, was an editor in Poughkeepsie, and in 1806 published a paper known as the Political Barometer, and was one of the leading citizens of his locality. He knew Washington, Hamilton, Burr and other prominent men of that time. He was a colonel in the war of 1812, and during his service contracted typhoid fever, from which he died in New York City, November 3, 1812. Col. Nelson married Hannah Fort, a daughter of Maj. Abram Fort, who fought in the Revolutionary war, and was well-known in his day. To Col. and Mrs. Nelson were born the following children: Jane Ann, who married Henry F. Granger, son of Judge Granger, of Grangerville; John Peter, our subject; and James Fort. Maj. Abram Fort was the father of the following children: Col. John A. Fort, who was one of Gen. Jackson's aides in the war of 1812; Peter Fort, also an aide on Gen. Jackson's staff, who each year, on January 8, hoisted the stars and stripes in honor of the battle of New Orleans; James Fort; Mrs. Pierson; Mrs. Abram Thompson; Alida; Sarah; Catharine; Mrs. Susan Haviland; Mrs. Maria Granger, and Mrs. Hannah Nelson.

John Peter Nelson, our subject, was educated in the private schools of New Orleans, where he spent the most of his boyhood. He also had a private tutor, and spoke several languages. After reaching his majority, he became a commission merchant, and owned several vessels which plied between New Orleans and England. Some years prior to 1845, he became interested in cotton growing in Louisiana, where he had a plantation of 1,400 acres, and owned 900 slaves who were freed by the Emancipation Proclamation. At one time, prior to the war, he was the richest planter in the State of Louisiana. He continued in business until 1874, when on account of ill health he retired, and in 1876 went to Europe, returning in the fall of 1877. His death occurred March 26, 1878. He was a remarkable man in many ways, was possessed of great firmness of character, a kind heart, great generosity—in fact, he was one of nature's noblemen. He was a kind father and a good husband. On December 5, 1839, he married Julia Ann Keese, who died May 23, 1841, leaving one child, Julia Keese Nelson, who married George Wetmore Colles, of New York City.

Mr. Nelson was married, the second time, in 1845, to Miss Cornelia Mandeville Nelson, and the following children were born to them: Peter Fort, who died of yellow fever at New Orleans in 1873; William James; Elizabeth Parker; Edward Beverly, principal of the New York Central Institution for Deaf Mutes, at Rome, N. Y.; Walter Huntington, in business in Washington, but living in Virginia; Thomas Grant; and Cornelia Mandeville.

Mr. Nelson was a staunch Democrat, a strong Union man, and did all he could to defeat the ordinance of Secession. He was a member of Christ's Episcopal Church, New Orleans, and contributed liberally to its support. In all matters he was a public-spirited man, much admired by all who knew him.

William Nelson, the father of Mrs. John Peter Nelson, widow of our subject, was born June 29, 1784, in Clinton (now Hyde Park), Dutchess county, and was the son of Thomas Nelson, an old citizen and native of the county, born in Clinton March 17, 1744, and died in Poughkeepsie, November 1, 1823. He married (first) Sarah Wright, of Somers, Westchester county, April 11, 1769, and (second) Mary Delavan. William Nelson attended the Dutchess County Academy, and received his legal education also in Poughkeepsie. He was admitted to the bar soon after reaching his majority, and went to Buffalo with a view to opening an office in that city. He spent a short time there, however, moving to Peekskill. He also practiced in the counties of Rockland, Putnam and Westchester. In the year 1812 he was elected to the State Senate, and took his seat there some two or three sessions. In 1848-49, and 1850-51, he was sent to Congress and was urged for re-election, but declined to accept. He was district attorney some thirty years, a remarkable length of time in that office. He was a man of great energy and will power, an extensive reader, and one of the foremost men of his community.

William Nelson was married to Miss Cornelia Mandeville Hardman, daughter of John Hardman, a West India merchant, of New York City, whose other children were: Sarah Ann, who married Dr. Thomas Mower, a surgeon in the army; and Eliza, wife of Henry Starr, of New York City. The children of William Nelson were: Joseph, living in Milwaukee; Dorinda, deceased wife of John Arthur, of San Francisco, Cal.; George P., a lawyer in New York City; Thomas, also a lawyer in New York City; William Rufus (deceased), who was a lawyer in Peekskill; Sarah A., who became the wife of J. Henry Ferris, a lawyer in Peekskill; Elizabeth, now the widow of Rev. John Johnson, of Upper Red Hook; Robert Dean (deceased); and Cornelia Mandeville, the wife of our subject. Mr. Nelson was an Old-time Henry Clay Whig, and personal friend of Daniel Webster, Abraham Lincoln and Henry Clay. He was a public-spirited man, and took great interest in all matters pertaining to his community. He died in October, 1869, aged eighty-five years; Mrs. Nelson passed away August 28, same year, five weeks before her husband.

REV. BENJAMIN E. DICKHAUT, A. M. As pastor, the subject of this sketch is one of a long line of able and eloquent workers in the cause of Christ, and his labors have shown him to be well-worthy of a place in that illustrious company.

His father, Rev. J. Conrad Dickhaut, was a zealous clergyman of the Reformed Dutch Church. He was born in Germany, February 17, 1815, and ordained in New York City, at the church in N. Williams street, by the Classis of New York. He at once organized the German Mission in Greenwich street, New York, but remained only a short time, as he took a settled charge at New Brooklyn, where he officiated twelve years, building meantime a new church edifice. His next pastorate was in the Presbyterian Church at East Williamsburg, N. Y., and after four years of faithful toil there, sickness compelled him to suspend his labors for two years. On resuming, he organized the Reformed Church at Canarsie and served as its pastor until April, 1887, when failing health again caused him to retire, it being in fact his last illness, as his death occurred December 30, 1887. In early manhood he married Miss Eva Ruby, who survives him. She was a daughter of Michael Ruby, and his wife, Margaret, who was a daughter of Martin Leyenberger. The following children were born to them: Conrad, Amelia, William, John, Sophia, Benjamin E., Timothy, Samuel and David. Of these, only three are now living: Sophia, Benjamin E. and Samuel.

Benjamin E. Dickhaut, our subject, was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., April 29, 1863, and attended the public schools of the city, and then the Polytechnic Institute, graduating from the latter in 1880. In 1884 he was graduated from Rutgers College with the degree of A. B., and in 1887 he completed his course in the New Brunswick Theological Seminary, receiving in the same year the degree of A. M. from Rutgers. At the beginning of his theological course at New Brunswick he was chosen for missionary work at the Middle Collegiate Church, New York City, and spent his vacation in this field. In the summer of 1885 he was engaged by the Collegiate Church to do missionary work in connection with DeWitt Chapel, and during the remainder of his seminary course he continued working there. On graduating from the seminary, he was ordained by the Classis of New York to do missionary work under the supervision of the Collegiate Church. In October, 1889, he accepted a call to the First Reformed Church of Fishkill, Dutchess county, which was his first independent charge. There he made his influence felt for good in many lines of effort. He was president of the Law and Order League of the village, and was on the executive committee of the county organization for good citizenship. On September 1, 1896, he accepted the call of the South Reformed Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., and the same aggressive methods employed by him at Fishkill have been productive of very encouraging results in his new field of labor. He is a most decided temperance advocate, and is frequently engaged on the platform in this cause. On March 17, 1888, he was married at New Brunswick to Miss Margaret P. Maddock, daughter of Rev. George C. and Mary (Price) Maddock. Her father is a minister for the M. E. Church, New Jersey Conference, and at present is chaplain of the New Jersey State Prison, at Trenton, N. J. Mr. and Mrs. Dickhaut have two children, viz.: Margaret Maddock and Dorothy.

The following is a list of the pastors of the Reformed Dutch Church of Fishkill since its organization in 1716 by Rev. Petrus Vas: Rev. Cornelius Van Schie, 1731-1738; Rev. Benjamin Meynema, 1745-1755; Rev. Jacob Vannist, served two and one-half years when he died, 1761; Rev. Henricus Schoonmaker, 1763-1772; also Isaac Rysdyck, jointly with Rev. Schoonmaker, 1765 to 1772, and alone until 1790; Rev. Isaac Blanvelt, 1783-1790; Rev. Nicholas Van Vranken, 1791-1804; Rev. Cornelius D. Westbrook, 1806-1830; Rev. Geo. H. Fisher, 1830-1835; Rev. Francis M. Kip, 1836-1870; Rev. Peter E. Kipp, 1870-1875; Rev. Asher Anderson, 1875-1880; Rev. M. Bross Thomas, 1881-1888; Rev. Benjamin E. Dickhaut, 1889-1896; Rev. Abel Huizinga, 1896, present pastor.

In the old Reformed Dutch church the Tory and other prisoners were confined, and from this building tradition teaches us that "Harvey Birch" (Enoch Crosby), having been arrested as a spy, effected his escape. During the Revolutionary war a part of the army was located in Fishkill, and their barracks extended from the Van Wyck place to the foot of the mountain. The officers' headquarters were in the dwelling well-known to the readers of the "Spy" as the "Wharton House" (occupied in 1866 by Sidney E. Van Wyck, and now (1896) by Miss Nettie Hustis); near the residence, by the large black walnut trees, south of the road and at the foot of the mountain, was the burial ground of the soldiers. The Episcopal church was used as a hospital, as was afterward the Presbyterian church at Brinckerhoff, about one and one-half miles north of the village.

EDWARD ELSWORTH, president of the Fallkill National Bank, and who has held various honorable and important offices in the city of Poughkeepsie, and in the county, was born January 6, 1840, in New York City. His parents were John and Martha (Van Varick) Elsworth, both natives of New York City, the former born in 1802. The father was a descendant of Christoffel Elswart, who was a free holder in New York in 1655, and the mother was a daughter of Joseph Van Varick, who was a merchant of that city.

In 1848 the parents of our subject removed to Poughkeepsie, where the father died in May, 1873, the mother surviving him until 1880. Mr. Elsworth was a Democrat, and both he and his wife were members of the Reformed Dutch Church. He was a school trustee of the town of Poughkeepsie, and a member and trustee of the Mechanic Society, of New York City. Their family consisted of four children: Two died in infancy; John K. was a merchant in New York City; and Edward, the sole survivor, is the subject of this sketch.

Edward Elsworth was eight years of age when his parents took up their residence in Poughkeepsie, and for a number of years was a pupil in the Dutchess County Academy.

His legal education was acquired in the State and National Law School, Poughkeepsie, from which he was graduated in the class of '58. For the following two years he was in the law office of Thompson & Weeks, and also in that of Judge Nelson. He then went to New York City, and for two years was in the law practice with Bernard Roelker, and later practiced in Rockland county. In 1866, he returned to Poughkeepsie, and, after practicing his profession for a time, entered into the hardware business in partnership with Guilford Dudley. During this time he was made director and also vice-president of the Fallkill National Bank, and in 1891 was elected its president; he is also vice-president of the Poughkeepsie Savings Bank.

On November 26, 1867, Mr. Elsworth was married to Miss Mary Johnston. The Johnston family are of Scotch extraction, and Mrs. Elsworth's father, Samuel B. Johnston, a descendant of Capt. Archibald Johnston, a Revolutionary soldier, was a cousin of Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston. He was a native of Connecticut, but for many years a resident of Poughkeepsie, where he was a banker, and for a long period was vice-president of the Fallkill Bank. Four children have been born to our subject and his wife, namely: Grace Varick, Mary Johnston, Ethel Hinton and Edward Wead, all of whom are at home. Mr. Elsworth is a staunch Democrat, and has always been prominent in his party. In 1874 he was elected supervisor of the Third ward of Poughkeepsie, and served one term. In 1880 he was made school commissioner, which office he filled for seven years. In November, 1886, he was elected mayor of Poughkeepsie, served one term, and in 1891 was re-elected to the same honorable position. He was elected a trustee of Vassar College in 1892, and is still serving as such. Mr. Elsworth also holds the following offices: Trustee and treasurer of Vassar Brothers' Institute; and vice-president for Dutchess county of the Holland Society of New York. He is also a member of the Sons of the Revolution. For several years he was judge advocate of the Eighth Brigade of the National Guard S. N. Y., and served in other offices in that organization. In 1891, he received the degree of A. M. from Rutgers College. The family are members and liberal supporters of the Reformed Dutch Church, and stand high in social and religious circles.

From the foregoing facts it will be seen that Mr. Elsworth is a man of more than usual ability, and business qualifications, and that his many sterling qualities are appreciated by his fellow citizens. In the numerous responsible positions in which he has been placed, he has fully merited their confidence and esteem, and no man occupies a higher place in the regard of the public, or in the friendship of his more intimate associates.

OLIVER H. BOOTH (deceased) was born in 1823 upon a farm within the present limits of the city of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, and died March 13, 1896, after an illness of twenty-two days—the first sickness he ever experienced. During his life of well nigh three-quarters of a century, he saw a marvelous transformation, not only in the outward appearance of that locality, but in all phases of our complex and constantly progressing civilization. His early home was on the south side of Fallkill creek, opposite the present location of Pelton's factory, and his father, George Booth, a prominent citizen of that day, had a woolen-mill for manufacturing cloth, the first of the kind run by machinery in the county. This was before the days of pins, and old citizens remember the large thorn bushes in the neighborhood from which Mr. Booth obtained thorns to fasten his bundles with. In the field north of the church of the Holy Comforter, he raised teazles, which were used in "gigging" the cloth.

During his early boyhood our subject attended a school that was kept in a small building which is yet standing in the rear of No. 120 Main street, Poughkeepsie, the teacher being Aunt Anna Haight, and he was proud of being able to say that he also, when a young boy, attended the old school at Pawling kept by Jacob Willets and his wife. It is said that this Jacob Willets was the author of the well-known rhyme about months "Thirty days hath September" etc.—which he introduced into his arithmetic. Later, Mr. Booth studied at the academy in Poughkeepsie, after which he was employed in his brother's (Alfred) store in Boston, Mass., but at the age of fourteen ran away, joining a sea-going vessel as cabin boy, and for four years he sailed the ocean. We next find him in a bank at Detroit, Mich., where he remained some time, then returning to Poughkeepsie, at the age of twenty-one, became bookkeeper in the Vassar Brewery, of which he ultimately was the owner. His mother was a sister of Matthew Vassar, Sr., and he became more or less identified with many of the extensive interests of that distinguished family. He was named as executor in the will of Matthew Vassar, Jr., and John Guy Vassar, and he was treasurer of Vassar Hospital, in which he took much pride, personally superintending the extensive improvements recently made in the grounds. As a financier his ability was acknowledged, and he was a director in several of the banks of Poughkeepsie, also vice-president of the City Bank. He left a large estate.

He was always fond of the sea and of shipping, and he found time in the midst of his extensive business dealing to indulge this taste, having been the owner or part owner of more vessels than any other resident of the city. In sailing vessels, he was interested in the sloops "Surprise" (formerly the "Revenge"), "Index," "Comet," "Agent," and "Timothy Wood;" also in the schooners "Matthew Vassar, Jr.," "Oliver H. Booth," and another which he bought in Wilmington, on which to bring the machinery for the "Underwriter" up the river. He built the steamer "Joseph F. Barnard," then the finest tug ever seen on the Hudson, and, whose history has a tinge of romance. During the trouble in Cuba, in the "sixties," he sold her to the Cubans, but in 1867 she disappeared, supposed to have been burnt at sea. Mr. Booth owned the news-yacht, "Herald," which he rebuilt and named the "Commodore," and then sold to parties in Norfolk, Va.; he also purchased and re-built the "O. M. Freleigh" and the "Idlewild," the latter being bought afterward by New Haven parties. The last boat that he built was the speedy steam yacht "No. 83." He owned the four-oared gig "Stranger," which was manned by workmen from the brewery, who were considered remarkably fast rowers in their day. He was also commodore of the old Poughkeepsie Ice Yacht Club, and the owner of the ice yacht "Restless."

The only political office that Mr. Booth ever held was that of member of the village board of trustees, of which he was elected clerk in 1843, and he held that incumbency until April 18, 1854, when the books were turned over to the new city government. Very early in life he became an active worker in the Fire Department, and June 18, 1844, he by request organized the Phoenix Hose

Chas. Booth

Company of Poughkeepsie. About the year 1850 he resigned as an active member, but was on the honorary list up to his death. In 1851 he was elected chief engineer of the Fire Department, and held the office three years, during which time the Booth Hose Company was named for him. At the time of his death he owned one of the old "goose-neck" engines "No. 7," and in 1886 he paraded with her as foreman. In that year the Veteran Firemen's Association was formed, of which he was chosen president, and he held that office several years, at last refusing a re-election, at which time his comrades desiring to signify their high regard for him, presented him with a costly loving cup on his retirement. Socially he was a member of the F. & A. M., Poughkeepsie Lodge No. 266.

Mr. Booth married Miss Ferris, daughter of Mr. John Ferris, of Milan, Dutchess county. She died in March, 1893, leaving but one child, a son, WILLIAM F. BOOTH, who now resides at the old homestead. The family residence on Market street was the scene of a solemn and affecting service at the funeral of Mr. Oliver H. Booth, which took place March 16, 1896, and a large gathering of the prominent citizens of the city and vicinity showed the esteem in which he was held, while many beautiful floral tributes offered their silent benediction.

JAMES L. WILLIAMS, one of the distinguished members of the Dutchess county bar, was born December 12, 1846, in the city of Poughkeepsie, with whose interests his entire life has been identified.

When a boy our subject received his education in the Dutchess County Academy, and after studying law he was admitted to the bar in 1867, and began the practice of his profession there. His first partner was Hon. Peter Dorland, ex-surrogate of Dutchess county, the firm of Dorland & Williams continuing until 1873, when Mr. Dorland was elected to a third term as surrogate. In 1873 Mr. Williams was elected district attorney, being the first Democrat elected to that position in twenty-five years; but at the expiration of his term he declined a renomination. In 1884 he became a member of the widely-known firm of Hackett & Williams, the senior member being John Hackett, who has since been twice elected district attorney. In 1883, without his solicitation, and even without his knowledge until the announcement was made, Mr. Williams was appointed State assessor by Grover Cleveland, then governor. This office he held until his resignation in 1892, serving with marked ability and success, and several important amendments to the tax laws were adopted by the Legislature at his suggestion. He holds a prominent place in business circles as well as in professional life, and is a director of the City National Bank, and other corporations. He organized and was first president of the Poughkeepsie News Company, publishers of the News Press and News Telegraph, the leading Democratic journals in the Hudson Valley, and until 1894 was very active in State and local politics, after which time till the Presidential campaign of 1896 he devoted his attention to legal business.

Mr. Williams has been a member of the Democratic State Committee; in 1887 was chairman of the State Executive Committee, and met and solved with rare courage and skill the intricate problems of the campaign of that year, complicated as it was with the Henry George and Labor movements. In 1894 he again served as a member of the Democratic State Executive Committee. In the fall of 1893 the delegations from Dutchess and other counties of the Second Department presented his name at the judicial convention held in Brooklyn as their candidate for justice of the supreme court to succeed Hon. Joseph F. Barnard, whose term expired that fall; but Mr. Pearsall, of Brooklyn, received the Democratic nomination, and was defeated by Hon. William J. Gaynor, the Reform and Republican candidate. Early in 1896 he protested against the proposed departure of the Democratic party from what he regarded as the ancient standards of his party, and on the adoption of the Chicago platform and the nomination of Mr. Bryan he formerly severed his connection with that party, and entered actively into the campaign for the Republican candidates. On January 1, 1897, he was appointed corporation counsel of the city of Poughkeepsie.

Mr. Williams is a member of many fraternal organizations, including the Freemasons, Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias, and he organized the Odd Fellows Mutual Benefit Association of Dutchess county with five members, the membership now being increased to nearly one thousand. He is president of the leading social organization of Poughkeepsie, the Dutchess Club, having succeeded Hon. Homer A. Nelson, its first president, and is a member of several clubs in New York and other cities.

ANTHONY UNDERHILL, M. D. (deceased). Among the talented men who have done honor to the medical profession in Dutchess county, the subject of this brief memoir held a worthy rank. The son of a prominent physician, his natural aptitude for the calling had unusual opportunities for development, and application in early life, and his later years of effort were rewarded with well-deserved success.

His family was of English origin, and his father, Dr. Joshua B. Underhill, was a lifelong resident of Westchester county, N. Y., where our subject was born in 1818. The common schools of that locality furnished him his academic education, and he then began the study of medicine with his father, and later attended lectures at the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York City. He opened a drug store in that city, which he carried on for some years previous to entering the medical department of Bowdoin College, at Brunswick, Me., from which he graduated in 1845. Locating at New Hackensack, Dutchess county, he engaged in the active work of his profession, and continued for about forty years, building up an extensive practice and enjoying the confidence of the people throughout a large circuit. In 1852 he married Miss Charlotte A. Marvine, who was born in 1832, in Wilton, Conn., the daughter of William M. Marvine. They made their home on a farm near New Hackensack, and reared a family of six children: (1) Charles married Miss Annie M. Rapelje, and lives at Hopewell Junction, Dutchess county, where he is the agent for the N. Y. & N. E. and the D. & C. railroads. (2) GEORGE resides at the old homestead. (3) William married Miss Mary E. Griffin, and lives at Fishkill, where he is employed as general passenger agent for the N. D. & C. R. R. (4) Frank is a farmer at home. (5) Lottie married Dr. R. C. Van Wyck, of Hopewell Junction, who was thrown from his buggy and killed in February, 1896. (6) Edward A. married Miss Jeannette E. Schubert, and resides in Glenham, where he is employed as depot agent and telegraph operator.

Dr. Underhill was prominent not only in professional circles, but in local political affairs, and took great interest also in educational matters, and in various movements for the public benefit. His death, which occurred September 4, 1889, caused a loss which was deeply and sincerely mourned among all classes of people. One of his sons, Frank, conducts the farm, a fine tract of one hundred acres, with a handsome residence and other improvements.

CHARLES F. COSSUM, of the well-known law firm of Wilkinson & Cossum, of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, was born in New York City, April 17, 1859. His father, Charles Cossum, was born in Hastings, England, in 1826.

Richard Cossum, grandfather of our subject, was also born at Hastings, and was the last male of his name of that generation. He was educated in England, and by occupation was a draper, or dry-goods merchant. In 1841 he moved with his family to the United States and settled in Oswego county, N. Y., where he retired from active life. In 1815 he was married to Miss Caroline Foster, and they had twelve children, of whom, Charles, Edwin, Fannie, Decimus, Elizabeth and Caroline are still living.

Charles Cossum, Sr., spent his boyhood days in Oswego county, N. Y., and at the age of thirteen years he started out on his own account. When twenty-five years old he was employed by the Hudson River R. R. Co. as a brakeman, from which he was promoted through the various positions to assistant superintendent and train master. He has a record of forty-two years with this road, and is still in the company's employ, stationed at Poughkeepsie. In 1858 he was married to Miss Sarah Wood, who was born in New York City, and who is a daughter of Peter Wood. They have four children: Charles F., our subject; Oscar, now living in Stamford, Conn., William H., a missionary in China, and Caroline.

Charles F. Cossum attended the schools of Peekskill, N. Y., from 1865 to 1872, at which time he went to New York City, and in 1873 was graduated from the Thirteenth Street Grammar School. He was then admitted to the College of New York City, but did not attend as he preferred to work. In 1875 he began the study of law with Homer A. Nelson, at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and subsequently entered the office of Robert F. Wilkin-son, and was admitted to the bar in 1880. In that year he was appointed deputy county clerk, and filled that incumbency five years. In 1886 he went on a business trip to England, which occupied him for a year, and upon his return he opened an office in New York City. In 1888 he returned to Poughkeepsie and formed a partnership with Robert F. Wilkin-son, with whom he is still associated. For five years he was the attorney for the League of American Wheelmen, and was first vice-president of the organization during 1896. He is president of the Amrita Club and Apo-keeping Boat Club; secretary and treasurer of the Poughkeepsie Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, and president of the Mitchell Heater Co. Mr. Cossum has not held any public office except that of deputy county clerk. Cossum is an unusual family name, there being but few persons in the world who bear it, and all of them are descendants of the grandfather of our subject.

JAMES C. McCARTY, one of the most able lawyers of Dutchess county, has for many years successfully engaged in practice at Rhinebeck. He traces his ancestry back to Daniel McCarty, who was born February 22, 1754, in Charlestown, then a suburb of Boston, Mass. His father was a Scotchman, who owned and sailed a schooner plying between New London, Conn., and Boston, and during the Revolutionary war he sailed with a full cargo and crew from the latter place, and, as they never returned or were heard from, it is supposed they were captured by the British privateers, being killed or taken prisoners, and the vessel and cargo confiscated. At the age of twenty-one Daniel joined the minute men in defense of the country against British aggression, and April 19, 1775, participated in the battle of Lexington, after which he enlisted for nine months in the company commanded by Capt. Josiah Harris. On June 17, 1775, he was in the battle of Bunker Hill, and soon after with his old captain he joined the Continental service, belonging to the regiment commanded by Col. Bond. After six months spent in New York the regiment was ordered to Fort Edward, Canada, where they joined Gen. Schuyler about December 1, 1776. Later a thousand troops, including his company, were ordered to New Jersey to join the army under Washington, where they arrived prior to the battle of Trenton, and took charge of the prisoners captured there.

Although his term of service had expired, Daniel McCarty remained with his command until January, 1777, when the army was encamped at Morristown, where he was discharged, but could not return home, as he had no money, so re-enlisted for three years, receiving $20 bounty, and liberty to go to his home in Boston and report for duty when ordered. In the spring of 1777 his regiment was reorganized under Col. Grayton, Col. Bond having died, and he was appointed sergeant, and afterward served in that capacity. They were again ordered to Fort Edward, Canada, where they met Gen. Schuyler's army retreating before Burgoyne, but soon after readvanced against that general, and engaged in all the battles that ended in the surrender of Burgoyne at Saratoga. The troops made a forced march from Albany to Kingston in one day, a distance of sixty miles, hoping to prevent the British from burning the latter place, but arrived just in time to see them escaping in their boats, after its destruction, October 16, 1777.

Soon after Mr. McCarty accompanied Gen. Gates to Yorktown, Va., as one of his body guards and was employed as messenger to and from Lancaster, Baltimore, and other places. In May, 1778, he returned north with that general, serving under him until the following December, after which he remained with his old company and regiment until honorably discharged December 1, 1779, at Peekskill, N. Y. When his enlistment expired he served as a substitute for Lieut. Young in Capt. Brown's company, Col. Mead's regiment of Connecticut State troops, employed chiefly in guarding the lines from Horseneck to Norwalk. About May 1, 1781, Gen. Waterbury took command of the Connecticut State troops, and gave Mr. McCarty a regular commission as lieutenant, in which capacity he served until the close of the war in 1783.

For a time Daniel McCarty made his home in Stamford, Conn., where his son Stephen was born February 14, 1783, but about 1790, he came to Rhinebeck, Dutchess Co., N. Y., and became head miller at Schuyler's Mills (now destroyed) two miles east of the village, on the place now owned and occupied by Dr. George N. Miller. In 1794, while living there, his first wife died and was buried in the cemetery connected with the little Methodist chapel near their home. The children of this marriage were: Stephen, Robert, Tolbert, Daniel and Katy. He later married a Mrs. Jay, by whom he had three children: William, an Episcopal minister, who lived and died in Canada; Eliza; and Rev. Dr. John McCarty, also an Episcopal minister, who was chaplain in the United States army, and was known as the fighting priest during the Mexican war. The father later removed to the village of Rhinebeck, where his youngest son was born in the old stone house now standing on the Huntington place. He and his wife spent their last days on the old homestead of Stephen McCarty, father of our subject.

On that place the birth of James C. McCarty occurred May 7, 1824, and at Rhinebeck he was educated by Messrs. Bell and Marcy, taking what constituted a full academic course, with the exception of Greek. On leaving school in 1843 he was made deputy clerk under his brother, Andrew Z., who was then county clerk for Oswego county, having been elected in the fall of 1840 for three years, and served as a member of the 34th Congress for Oswego and Madison counties, N. Y. For two years our subject filled that position, and while searching the records of that county for Peter Chandler, conceived the idea of studying law. As his term of service expired on January 1, 1844, he returned to Rhinebeck the following February and entered the law office of Ambrose Wager, with whom he remained for twelve years. In January, 1847, he was admitted to practice as attorney at law, being admitted at the supreme court at Albany, and his diploma signed by Green C. Bronson, and by the constitution of 1846 was counsellor at law and solicitor in chancery. While still with Mr. Wager he engaged in general practice, but in the fall of 1856 he was appointed superintendent of document room under President Pierce's administration, holding the position until the following fall, during which time the 34th Congress held both its first and second sessions. Returning to Rhinebeck, Mr. McCarty opened an office of his own, where he continued practice until 1861, when he was appointed assistant assessor of internal revenue for the district of Dutchess county, and during that year and the two years following was with Jacob W. Elsifer, at Red Hook. In 1864, however, he again resumed practice at Rhinebeck, although he still continued to be revenue collector. Up to 1872 he had been alone in business, but at that time formed a partnership with George Esselstyn, which connection still continues, theirs being the oldest law firm in Dutchess county. He takes rank among the successful and prominent lawyers of the county, and is one of the most highly respected legal practitioners in the community.

Mr. McCarty was married in August, 1847, the lady of his choice being Miss Louisa I. Cross, daughter of Moulton Cross, of Pulaski, Oswego Co., N. Y., and two sons were born to them: J. Canfield, who died of heart disease at the age of seventeen years; and Charles E., an attorney and counsellor at law, who is also engaged in the insurance business at Rhinebeck.

Mr. McCarty is an earnest defender of Republican principles, and is a man whose opinions are invariably held in respect. He has ever taken an active part in political affairs, in the years 1852, 1860 and 1861 served as supervisor of his town, and for several years has been clerk of the village, which office he is still holding to the satisfaction of all concerned. He has been quite prominently identified with civic societies, being the oldest living member of Rhinebeck Lodge No. 162, I. O. O. F.; belongs to the Knights of Pythias fraternity; and in 1860 joined the Masonic order, of which he is now an honorary member. In earlier years he took an active part in fraternal work, and passed through all the chairs of the lodges to which he belongs. For twenty years he has served as vestryman of the Episcopal Church, of which he is a faithful and consistent member.

MON. JOHN P. H. TALLMAN, the subject of this biographical sketch, was born in the town of Washington, Dutchess county, March 19, 1820. His ancestry for several generations had been residents of that county. Darius Tallman, his great-grandfather, emigrated from Nantucket, married Miss Southworth, and settled on Chestnut Ridge, near the place where in later years Mr. Benson J. Lossing, the historian, lived. His father's maternal grandfather was Capt. Harris, of the British army during the Revolutionary war, whose wife was a Miss Velie, of Lagrange. Deacon Benham, of New Haven, a Revolutionary soldier, was his maternal grandfather; he lived in the town of Washington, and married Miss Comstock.

Dr. Phil Fallman

Mr. Tallman's father, Darius Tallman, Jr., married Almira Benham in 1817. Both lived to be over eighty years of age.

John P. H. Tallman, the eldest son of these parents, worked upon his father's farm until he was fifteen years of age, when, being desirous of securing an education which would enable him to fill a position of usefulness in life, he entered the Amenia Seminary as a student, and remained at that institution for the three years required to complete the course of study. During that period he supported himself chiefly upon money borrowed for the purpose, and these loans were repaid out of his first earnings after entering upon the practice of his profession.

On leaving the Seminary he began reading Law in the office of Hon. James Hooker, then Surrogate of the County, and Hon. Virgil D. Bonesteel, in Poughkeepsie. While still a student his industry was rewarded by his promotion to the position of first clerk to the Surrogate; and upon the appointment of Hon. Robert Wilkinson to the surrogateship in 1840, Mr. Tallman became his managing clerk. In 1843, at the General Term in Utica, he was admitted to practice in the State Courts, and also in the District and Circuit Courts of the United States. The next year he was appointed Master in Chancery for Dutchess County by the Governor, on the recommendation of a County Convention of Delegates, Mr. Owen T. Coffin and Hon. Gilbert Dean being his competitors.

In 1847 Mr. Tallman received the unanimous nomination of the Democratic party for the office of Surrogate for Dutchess County. His opponent was the Hon. John Thompson, the nominee of the Whig party. In this contest he was successful; but before the election, and especially during the first term of his service, he was so violently and persistently assailed by the local organ of the Whigs that he deemed it necessary that he should lay before his fellow-citizens a defence of his conduct. This presentation of his case attracted much attention by its clear and convincing argument. Among those who read this paper, and were impressed by the evidence of intellectual vigor it displayed, was the Rev. Dr. Stephen Olin, then President of Wesleyan University. Shortly afterward that institution conferred upon Mr. Tallman the honorary degree of Master of Arts.

Mr. Tallman's friends insisted upon his becoming a candidate for re-election to the position of Surrogate. To this he consented, and he was re-elected by an increased majority. At the expiration of his second term, he declined to be again a candidate.

An interesting reminiscence of this period is a document to which Mr. Tallman attached high value. His political and personal adversaries carried their opposition so far as to present to the Governor of the State, Hon. Hamilton Fish, a petition for his impeachment. The petitioners, who belonged to the same political party as the Governor, naturally hoped that their request would prevail with him. The Governor, after carefully considering the arguments and evidence on both sides, wrote on the back of the paper: "I see nothing in the course of the officer complained of but what is commendable. H. Fish."

After the conclusion of his second term as Surrogate he never again held a political office. He was, however, for many years interested in local and State politics, and for a long time was chairman of the County Central Committee. His tact in management and his rare gift of personal influence over men fitted him for success in political life, had he chosen to pursue that course. But although tempting offers of preferment were held out to him, he concluded to devote himself to the practice of his profession.

His first partnership was with Hon. Gilbert Dean, afterward judge. Subsequently he was connected with Mr. Charles Powers, Mr. George W. Payne, Mr. George W. Lord and in later years with Mr. Walter Farrington, Capt. Pelatiah Ward, who fell in one of the battles of the Civil war; Hon. William I. Thorn, Hon. Homer A. Nelson, and Hon. A. M. Card were students in his office.

As a lawyer, Mr. Tallman's chief strength was in his comprehensive grasp of any matter which he took in hand, and in the cool and clear estimate which he formed of its bearings both near and remote. His familiarity with legal points was clear and accurate, so that he was eminently wise in counsel. His great industry and unflinching interest in his client's case, left nothing to the uncertainties of chance. His cases were carefully prepared, and the evidence was presented with convincing effect. Much of his practice was in the Surrogate's Court, for which the training and experience of his earlier professional life specially fitted him. He was retained in connection with several important and well-known cases, involving large interests.

In addition to his general law business, he had a special practice in the United States District and Circuit Courts. He was a member of the New York State Bar Association, and for some years was on the Executive Committee.

During the earlier years of his practice and prior to the period when that class of investments was taken up by insurance and other financial institutions, large transactions in real estate, bonds and mortgages were arranged for in his office. A wide acquaintance with investors was thus formed, which resulted in his being called to fill various positions of responsibility and trust.

In 1856 Mr. Tallman was offered the position of Treasurer of the Iowa Central Railroad Company. This road was projected from a point on the Mississippi river, where the City of Clinton now stands, to Cedar Rapids. Under another name it now forms part of the great line to California. He declined the office, but yielded to the request of the officers to accompany the reconnoitering party over the territory. He drew the report of the commission as to the feasibility of the project and the route which the road should take.

In 1855 he established a banking house in Davenport, Iowa, under the name of Tallman, Powers & McLean. The resident partner was Mr. Powers, who had been his clerk when he was Surrogate. The direction of the business of the firm was necessarily left chiefly in the hands of Mr. Powers. Though at first this business enterprise met with much encouragement, it was ultimately unsuccessful and involved Mr. Tallman in pecuniary losses which seriously embarrassed him for several years.

In 1859 Mr. Tallman was active in the effort to establish the City Bank of Poughkeepsie, and was chosen its first President. He did not accept the office, but favored in his stead the Hon. Joseph F. Barnard, who retained that position for upward of twenty years. Mr. Tallman, however, was appointed attorney to the Bank, and continued to act in that capacity for nearly thirty years.

Early in his career he favored the building of the Hudson River railroad. He gave his earnest assistance to the establishment of the Poughkeepsie and Eastern railroad, and of the Poughkeepsie City railroad, of which he was one of the incorporators. In 1853 he aided in establishing the Poughkeepsie Rural Cemetery; he was appointed a Trustee and continued to hold that position until his death. He was instrumental in having the Hudson River Hospital for the Insane located at Poughkeepsie and was a member of the first Board of Trustees. In 1852 he helped to organize the Home for the Friendless; he prepared its Act of Incorporation and was one of the first Board of Counsellors. At the time of his death he was one of the Trustees of the Vassar Brothers' Home for Aged Men.

He was interested in every plan to beautify the City of Poughkeepsie, and to make it pleasant and inviting to all who should seek a place for elegant and refined homes.

From his youth Mr. Tallman was one interested in the cause of temperance, having when nine years of age signed what was then known as the partial pledge. At the age of twenty he became an officer in the Young Men's Temperance Society, and soon after signed the total abstinence pledge. Later he was an officer in the Dutchess County Temperance Society, and occasionally delivered addresses before that and similar organizations. He was one of the founders of the State Inebriate Asylum at Binghampton, of which for several years he was a Trustee.

Mr. Tallman united with the Methodist Church at the age of seventeen, while a student at Amenia Seminary, then under the supervision of Dr. Merrick, later of the Ohio University, afterward Bishop, and Dr. Davis W. Clark. In 1840 he helped to found the Second Methodist Episcopal Church in Poughkeepsie, located in Cannon street. In 1842 he became a Trustee of that Society, and continued to hold that position and to maintain other official relations until his death. He was the representative of this Society to the first Electoral Conference of Laymen of the New York Conference in 1872, and was its presiding officer. For several years he was an officer of the Dutchess County Bible Society. He was a member of the first and only State Council of Methodists of the State of New York, which met at Syracuse, February, 1870, and was composed of about 600 representatives from most of the churches of the denomination in the State. This Council voted to raise about $200,000 for the Syracuse University and favored various reforms for Church and State. One of these was the establishment of the State Council of Political Reform, which was a potent factor in the overthrow of the Tweed Ring. He was a member of the State Executive Committee, and, although a lifelong Democrat, he disregarded any action inconsistent with the platform of the Council, which declared: "We leave the party relations of every man undisturbed, but when parties command the support of bad principles, bad measures, or bad men, we must refuse to obey."

In 1884 he was chosen a Lay Delegate from the New York Conference to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which met in the City of Philadelphia. In the assemblage of representative men of American Methodism he filled a place of marked importance. Although his voice was seldom heard on the floor in the debates, his wise and judicious counsels had weight in the deliberations of the Committees.

For many years it had been his hope that the Society with which he worshiped in the Cannon Street church should have a new and more eligibly located edifice, and to this subject he gave much thought. In the year 1892 circumstances seemed to favor the consummation of the plan. With characteristic earnestness Mr. Tallman gave himself to this welcome work. He encouraged the timid, admonished the faltering, guided the sanguine, and used his rare personal influence to create and mould a united sentiment which should make the movement for a new church a success. Largely through his efforts the site was selected, the ground purchased and prepared for building, the plans drawn, the mechanics set to work, the old property disposed of, the subscriptions obtained, the enterprise brought to a happy conclusion, and the Society put into the possession of its present beautiful and commodious place of worship. His whole heart was in the work, and his cheerful spirit and stimulating faith made him a leader whom it was a delight to follow.

In his home relations Mr. Tallman was seen at his best. If the work of the day had been severe and its results disappointing, no trace of this appeared upon his face or in his demeanor when he crossed the threshold of his home. His personal friendships were many, and he delighted to entertain his friends in his own house. Over those with whom he was brought in contact his influence was morally bracing. He never disguised or compromised his principle. Although far from obtrusive of his religious experiences, he never allowed himself to occupy a questionable attitude in that important relation.

Perhaps the most pronounced characteristic of Mr. Tallman was his hopefulness. No situation was so full of danger or doubt that he could not see a happy outcome. When others faltered, he smiled and pursued his way. And this did not result from insensibility or indifference, but was the endowment of his nature and the charm of his character. It was this that made him a cheerful companion and an enthusiastic guide.

Mr. Tallman married Miss Mary Newman, of South Egremont, Mass., in 1840; she died in 1850. In 1851 he married Miss Sarah J. Anderson, of New York, a lady of rare intellectual endowments.

It was permitted Mr. Tallman to enjoy a cheerful and healthful old age. He was able to attend the business of his office until within a few days of his death. His last professional service was in the Surrogate's Court on March 16, 1895. A few days afterward he was taken ill and his disease rapidly assumed a threatening character. After a week of great suffering he passed away, at the age of seventy-five years and four days. His funeral was attended by a large circle of friends in the Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church. The Revs. Doctors Osbon, Gregory and Stobridge, who had been his pastors, conducted the service, which was marked by the evidence of sympathetic feeling. Dr. Gregory, in the course of his remarks, said: "He was a manly man, with strength of principle and great force of character, possessed of refined sentiment and religious feeling, with clear convictions of truth and duty, which were freely expressed, but never ostentatiously obtruded. He was tolerant of the opinions of others who differed from him. He was not a pessimist, but had great faith in God, his fellow-men and in the future."

Mr. Tallman left four children: Mary E., wife of Theodore W. Davis, of New York; Augusta C., wife of John F. Phayre, of New York; JOHN FRANCIS, the General Agent in Brooklyn of the New York Life Insurance Company; and Katharine Eliot, wife of Rev. Dr. Maltbie D. Babcock, of Baltimore.

In the Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church in Poughkeepsie, in the erection of which he had labored with such joyous earnestness, the loving hands of his son have placed a tablet to his memory, bearing as its inscription the following words from the Book which he had made the guide of his life:

“He that overcometh I will make “him a pillar in the temple of God.”

LEWIS TOMPKINS (deceased). Few citizens of Dutchess county have done more to advance her interests than did the late Lewis Tompkins, of Fishkill-on-the-Hudson, who was for many years the acknowledged head of the wool-hat industry in the United States, and whose extensive factories have furnished a well-earned livelihood to hundreds of workmen whose homes have sprung up in the neighboring towns. He was himself familiar with the trials of honest poverty, though happily his later years were blessed with every comfort, and doubtless his well-known sympathy with the needy had its origin in a remembrance of his own early struggles.

Mr. Tompkins was descended from an old English family, and the first of the American line was Stephen Tompkins, who it is believed located first in Connecticut and from there moved to Westchester county, N. Y., where his later years were passed in cultivating the soil. He was the father of sixteen children, among whom were James, the great-grandfather of our subject, and Jonathan Griffin, both of whom rendered gallant service in the Revolutionary war on the patriot side. James served in the Seventh Dutchess county regiment under Col. Henry Luddington, and in company commanded by Capt. George Lane. This showed high courage, as Westchester county had a large Tory population, and neighbor was arrayed against neighbor, and friend against friend. Much of it was neutral ground, but spies were busy on both sides and perils abounded. The story of Enoch Crosby, the Harvey Birch of J. Fenimore Cooper's "Spy," is familiar to all, and there is no doubt that many another such romantic history might have been told. Jonathan Griffin Tompkins was the father of Daniel D. Tompkins, vice-president of the United States from 1816 to 1820. His was a notable career. He was graduated from college, read law and practiced with distinguished success, was a member of Congress, judge of the supreme court of New York, and governor of the same State, his last act in that office being to recommend the abolition of slavery.

Solomon Tompkins, a son of James, had a son Solomon (2), our subject's father, and the two left the old home to locate in the wilds of Greene county, near the present village of Ashland, in which region settlers were then few and far between. Although Mr. Tompkins' father had only limited educational advantages, he was not lacking in good judgment and practical ability, and he took a leading place among his associates. He married Elizabeth Randall, daughter of Timothy Randall, a citizen of Delaware county, but a native of Connecticut; she is still living, in a hale and beautiful old age, with a married daughter at Matteawan.

Lewis Tompkins, the eldest son of this worthy couple, was born at the old farm near Ashland, August 5, 1836, and received his education in the district schools of the vicinity, working upon the farm in summer and attending school for a few months each winter until he was about seventeen, when he began to learn the trade of hat finishing with Strong & Ruggles, of Ashland. After serving an apprenticeship of three years, he established a new hat factory at Ashland in 1852, in partnership with Leveritt Conine; but this venture ended two years later in a complete failure. With characteristic integrity Mr. Tompkins gave up everything to the creditors, even parting with his watch. Soon after he turned his face westward with just enough money in his pocket to carry him to Chicago, and from that point he made his way on foot to Kansas, seldom getting a ride, and often passing the night upon the open prairie. He finally reached Manhattan, Kans., and located upon a government claim on Blue river. That was a memorable period. The fiery discussion of a few years before on the Kansas-Nebraska bill had stirred the whole nation, and those territories were being rapidly settled. Young Tompkins was, of course, a Free-Soiler, and was early drawn into the struggle between the opposing factions, being appointed deputy sheriff and, later, a delegate to the Constitutional Convention at Topeka. He remained in the West about two years, returning home in November, 1859, for a brief visit, which lengthened into a permanent stay. At Middletown, Orange county, he accepted a position with Wilcox & Draper, which he held for a few months, and in the summer of 1860 he went to Matteawan, where he was employed for several years with the Seamless Clothing Manufacturing Co., and later he was in business as a clothier at Fishkill-on-the-Hudson; also at Matteawan. He wisely invested his gains in real estate, buying and subdividing a large tract. Succeeding in this, he bought other tracts of land and built a number of substantial dwellings, adding to his own prosperity and that of the town. In 1872 he sold out his business interests and made a trip to Europe, where he remained a year studying European industries and business methods. On coming home a new enterprise was begun—the building of a large hat factory near the river at Fishkill-on-the-Hudson, and notwithstanding the "hard times" of 1873, the Dutchess Hat Works was put into successful operation. The business grew from year to year, and additions were made to the works as needed; but it was soon deemed advisable to establish a branch at Tioronda, a mile away, and later another branch was opened at Middletown. The efficient hand of the founder of the business was on it all, mastering every detail; but he had capable coadjutors in his brothers, E. Lakin Tompkins, at Fishkill-on-the-Hudson, and Edward D. Tompkins, and Frank O. Tompkins, at Middletown. He became the leading manufacturer of wool hats in the United States, and at his death his fortune amounted to several hundred thousand dollars. One feature of his enterprise was the erection of comfortable homes for his employes, which proved a benefit to all concerned.

He was greatly interested in local progress, and especially in educational matters. A student of men and affairs rather than of books, he still appreciated to the full the advantages of a thorough system of popular education, and it was largely through his endeavors that Matteawan and Fishkill-on-the-Hudson secured their new and commodious school buildings. The building of the handsome hose house of the Lewis Tompkins Hose Co., at the latter place, was chiefly due to him, and he was a constant and liberal giver to the Churches of both towns. The Highland Hospital was a charity which found him a steadfast friend, and his purse was ever open to sustain or enlarge its usefulness. Many of his beneficences will never be known, as he could never withhold his help when his sympathies were touched, and his sense of justice wounded by the sight of suffering. He was a Republican in politics, and an influential one, but sought no office. He was a member of the board of education at Matteawan, and was at one time president of the village of Fishkill-on-the-Hudson. For more than thirty years he belonged to Beacon Lodge No. 283, F. & A. M.

In 1862 Mr. Tompkins married Miss Van-Voorhis, who did not long survive to bless his life. One son was born of their union, Charles Randall Tompkins, who died in 1892 in early manhood. A second happy matrimonial union was formed on January 3, 1868, with Miss Helen E. Mather, of Wellsboro, Penn. Her father was a lineal descendant of Cotton Mather, of New England, and her mother, whose name was Beecher, was collaterally connected with the Lyman Beecher family. The three children of the second marriage are all living: Jennie, Helen M. and Ralph S. The family residence is a beautiful place. It is appropriately named "Edgewater," being situated on the bank of the Hudson opposite Newburgh, and it commands a lovely view up and down the river. Here Mr. Tompkins proved himself a genial host and generous entertainer. He traveled extensively both in this country and in Europe, spending several winters in Paris, Nice, Algiers, Mentone-on-the-Mediterranean, Davos Platz, and other places rich in associations and delightful for situation. Mr. Tompkins had fine taste in art, and enjoyed visiting the celebrated galleries in which the chief works of the gifted artists of the past are preserved on canvas or in chiseled marble.

In the prime of his manhood, while the past was a pleasant memory and the future a delightful anticipation, this manly, generous, upright citizen passed from earth, breathing his last at his home on the 9th day of January, 1894. It is by his deeds alone that his merit was manifested, and the simple record of these shows him worthy of honor in every relation in life.

CHARLES E. SEGER, M. D. (deceased). The expulsion of the Huguenots from France, however it may have been regarded by the unhappy exiles at the time, resulted in un-mixed good to this country, bringing into its rapidly developing civilization a large body of high-spirited, courageous, intelligent and God-fearing people, whose influence at that critical period of our history can scarcely be estimated. Among these early emigrants were the ancestors of the subject of this biography. They settled near Kingston, Ulster Co., N. Y., about 1640, and some time afterward two brothers of the name moved to New Salem, Albany Co., N. Y., where the home of this branch of the family has ever since remained. Garret I. Seger, our subject's great-grandfather, was born there January 4, 1753, the son of one of the brothers alluded to. He became a farmer there, married and reared a family of ten children: John, Magdalene, Frederick, Henry, Mary, David G., Frances, Polly, Francis and Michael. They located in various places as they settled in life. Francis was a judge in Lewis county, New York.

David G. Seger, our subject's grandfather, was born January 31, 1794, and remained at the old homestead, farming and conducting a hotel until his death, March 31, 1859. He married Mary Stalker, who died leaving six children, of whom Garret D., our subject's father, was the eldest; John A. is a resident of Schoharie county, N. Y.; Catherine married Andrew Allen, a farmer at New Salem; Margaret, the wife of William McMillen, formerly a farmer, is now living in Albany; Laura married (first) John Van Der Zee, now deceased, and (second) George Strevell, a carpenter; Lyman, deceased, was a farmer.

Garret D. Seger was born October 31, 1816, and also settled near the old home. He has been engaged in farming and mercantile business, and has taken a leading part in various local movements. In politics he is a Democrat, and he belongs to the Christian Church; but his wife, formerly Miss Mary Shafer, is a Presbyterian. She is a descendant of a German family which has long been prominent in the town of Bern, Albany county. Her father, John Shafer, an agriculturist, was a soldier in the war of 1812. Our subject is the elder of two children. The younger, Florence, married Charles Wolf, of Albany, a bookkeeper for a fire insurance company.

On April 8, 1842, Dr. Seger entered upon his life's journey. He received his literary education in the district schools at New Salem and at Fort Edward Collegiate Institute, and then began his medical studies in the office of Drs. Fredenburgh & Mosher, of Coeymans. He remained with them four years, in the meantime attending Albany Medical College, and graduating in the class of 1863. For two years following he was in partnership with his former preceptors; but in 1865 he moved to Stockbridge, where he practiced successfully for nine years. From 1874 to 1885 he continued his professional work in Albany, but after that time he resided at New Hackensack. His ability and skill were widely recognized, and he had a fine practice.

On January 20, 1864, Dr. Seger was united in matrimony with Miss Agnes Schoonmaker, a native of Bayonne, N. J. Her father, John J. Schoonmaker, a shipping merchant of the firm of Schoonmaker & Johnson, and his wife, Jane Ann Van Buskirk, were both descended from old families of that place. Three children were born of this union: Mary L., Grace A. and Garretta K., who are all at home. The Doctor was identified with many progressive movements in his locality, and was health officer of the town of Wappinger for ten years. In politics he was a Democrat; he belonged to the F. & A. M., Albany Lodge No. 452, and to the Dutchess Medical Society. A victim of typhoid fever, Dr. Seger passed to his final rest December 10, 1896. Of him the Wappinger Chronicle says: "Dr. Seger was a man of mild and genial demeanor, quiet in manner, always the gentleman, and had a kind word for everybody. He was conscientious and punctilious to every duty, and this, added to his advanced medical experience, made him one, if not the best Health Officer Wappinger town ever had.

"He leaves a widow and three daughters, to whom the sympathy of the community is generally extended."

REV. ROBERT FULTON CRARY, D. D. To the American born, the story of Robert Fulton and the steamboat are matters of familiar interest, though it is difficult to realize that he lived but such a short time ago, and we here present a brief review of the life of his grandson, Rev. Robert Fulton Crary, D. D., rector of the Church of the Holy Comforter, Poughkeepsie, New York.

The Crary family have been known in America for over two centuries. Peter (I) Crary was a native of Groton, Conn., and signer of the Patent of New London October 14, 1704. In 1677 he married Christobel Gallup, daughter of Capt. John Gallup, one of the Crown captains who fell in the Narragansett Swamp fight, in 1675. In those days Groton was known as New Lucien. His son, Peter (II), married Anne Culver on January 11, 1709, and his son, Peter (III), had a son, Peter (IV), who married Lucretia Palmer December 8, 1771, and their son, Peter (V), a native of New York City and the grandfather of our subject, married Elizabeth Denison, a descendant of Maj. George Denison, of Stonington, Connecticut.

*Yours truly
Robert Fulton Crary*

Edward Charles Crary, the father of our subject, was the only son of Peter (V) Crary, of the well-known firm of Peter & John S. Crary, wholesale dry-goods importers, the largest firm of the kind in New York City at that day. Edward C. was born in New York City, and spent his early days there, attending school for a time, but completed his education from Columbia College, from which he graduated with the class of 1824. In New York, on June 20, 1831, he was married to Cornelia Livingston Fulton, second daughter of Robert Fulton. After his marriage Edward C. Crary assumed control of the English branch of the house, and he and his bride made their home in Liverpool, where their eldest son, Robert Fulton, our subject, was born. Their other children were Edward Francis (deceased); Charles Franklin; Ella Cornelia, who married Herman H. Cammann, of New York City, and Lena, who died in infancy. The family, returning to this country about the year 1837, made their home in New York. Cornelia L. (Fulton) Crary was born August 6, 1812, at Rose Hill, which is now about Nineteenth street, New York City, but which then was a suburban place where Robert Fulton was spending the summer and proceeding with his inventions. She died October 6, 1893.

Robert Fulton Crary spent his boyhood in New York City, and in June, 1861, was graduated from the General Theological Seminary. His first charge was as a missionary in Warren county, N. Y., where for six years he labored for the upbuilding of the Church. As lasting monuments to his work for these years are three stone churches, which were erected through his energies. In 1867 he accepted a call to become rector of the Church of the Holy Comforter at Poughkeepsie. This Church was dedicated in 1860, and our subject was its second rector. His long term as priest in charge has given him an intimate acquaintance with his parishioners, and he is now baptizing the children of those little ones whom he baptized in the early days of his pastorate.

On September 11, 1862, by the Rev. Dr. Hawkes, Dr. Crary was married at Trinity Chapel, New York City, to Agnes Boyd Van-Kleeck, daughter of Rev. Robert B. Van-Kleeck, D. D., and Margaret Schenck (Teller)

Van Kleeck. Mrs. Crary now owns the old Teller homestead at Matteawan, Dutchess Co., N. Y., said to be the oldest house in the county, having been erected in 1709 by Lieut. Roger Brett, of the Royal Navy, who married Katharine Rombout, only child and heir of Francis Rombout, a famous and influential citizen of New Amsterdam, who in 1682, with Gulian Ver Planck, was granted, by King James II, the large tract of land on the Hudson river, known as the Rombout Precinct. The union of Dr. and Mrs. Crary has been blessed with six children—five daughters and one son: Amy; Cornelia Fulton; Alice; Ella (deceased); Edith Livingston, who married Charles H. van Braam Roberts, June 3, 1896; and Fulton.

Believing that before God the souls of men stand stripped of all temporal guises, and whether high or low, rich or poor, each one alike meets that same justice tempered with mercy, Dr. Crary has always had a free church, never having any charge for pew rent. The degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred on him by St. Stephen's College, Annandale, Dutchess Co., N. Y., in 1892. Mrs. Crary is a worthy helpmeet of the Doctor, and nobly typifies "the mission of woman on earth! Born to nurse and to soothe, to solace and to heal the sick world that leans on her." She is a member of the Daughters of the Revolution and of the Colonial Dames.

Of Robert Fulton, the grandfather of Dr. Crary, we will give but few words. His life and works speak so well for themselves, and have been so exhaustively treated by our most able writers, that nothing more remains to be said. He was married in 1806 to Harriet Livingston, daughter of Walter and Cornelia (Schuyler) Livingston, the latter an intimate friend of George Washington. Harriet Livingston Fulton was a niece of Chancellor Livingston, and doubly connected with him by the marriage of her brother to his daughter.

JAMES C. GRIGGS, the popular proprietor of the "Morgan House," Poughkeepsie, was born at Milton, Ulster Co., N. Y., October 10, 1847, and is the son of Lewis and Eliza (Harcourt) Griggs. The maternal grandfather, Benjamin Harcourt, was also born at Milton, where his father, who came to this country from England and located in Ulster county, secured a large tract of land. On attaining man's estate Benjamin Harcourt was united in marriage with Miss Eleanor Wygant, a native of Ulster county, and took his bride to his extensive farm in that county, where their seven children were born: James C., Charles A., Eli, Eliza, Althea, Deborah A. and Sarah. The grandfather was a prominent Democrat of Ulster county, and filled the office of sheriff for some time.

The birth of the father of our subject occurred at Cornwall, Orange Co., N. Y., but he was reared at Milton, Ulster county, where he afterward taught school. He there married Miss Harcourt, and the only child born to them was our subject. Shortly after their marriage they located upon a farm in Orange county, to the cultivation of which the father devoted his time and attention until his death in 1850. He supported the Whig party in politics, and in his religious views was a Presbyterian. His widow later married his brother, Henry Griggs, and they now make their home in Washingtonville, Orange county.

Mr. Griggs, the subject proper of this sketch, spent his boyhood upon the farm of his grandfather Harcourt in Ulster county, and attended the district schools of that locality, but completed his education at Newburg, N. Y. At the age of fifteen years he entered the hardware store of J. C. Hardenbergh, of Newburg, N. Y., where he remained as clerk for about four years, and for the following six years was engaged in the crockery business for himself in that city. He then began the manufacture of brick at Fishkill, Dutchess county; but after carrying on that occupation for one year he leased the "Orange Hotel" at Newburg, which he conducted for five years. During the next year he carried on a summer hotel at Delaware Gap, after which he became the proprietor of the "United States Hotel" at Newburg, where he remained for seven years. In November, 1883, Mr. Griggs came to Poughkeepsie and purchased the "Morgan House," situated on the corner of Main and Catherine streets, which he has since successfully conducted. There are found all modern improvements, including hot and cold water, electricity, etc.; it is convenient and comfortable, while the cuisine is unexceptionable. The hotel will accommodate one hundred and fifty guests, whose interests and comfort are well looked after by the genial and pleasant landlord.

On the 10th of October, 1869, Mr. Griggs was married to Miss Josephine Cammack, a native of Orange county, and a daughter of Robert Cammack, who was of Scotch descent, and a leading stove dealer and plumber of Newburg, N. Y. Three children were born of this union: Lilly, who died at the age of eleven years; Harry E., who died at the age of twenty years, and Fred R., who is with his father. Mr. Griggs was called upon to mourn the loss of his wife, who died October 7, 1893. In politics he is a stanch adherent of the principles formulated by the Republican party, while socially he is connected with the Masonic fraternity, the Order of Friends and the Knights of Pythias. He has taken a prominent part in public affairs, always lending his influence to promote the best interests of the community, and is one of the most highly-esteemed citizens of Poughkeepsie.

CAPTAIN CHARLES W. BRUNDAGE (deceased), late a well-known forwarding and freighting merchant and coal dealer at Fishkill Landing, was born January 16, 1830, at Gay Head, Dutchess county.

Alton Brundage, father of our subject, was a native of East Fishkill, born April 30, 1805, and during his active life was a shoemaker at Stormville, and a steadfast supporter of the Democratic party. He married Lucy Ann Burrus, who was born in 1800, at Hopewell Junction, the daughter of Joseph Burrus, a prosperous merchant of New York City. Of the six children of this union, Charles W. was the eldest, the others being: James, Alonzo, Melissa, Catherine and Mary.

Captain Charles W. Brundage attended the district school of Stormville until he was thirteen years old, when he entered the employ of Francis H. Bowne as clerk in his dry-goods and grocery store. Two years later he went to Fishkill Landing to clerk for Charles B. Pungsley in the same business, and remained with him a year. He then became clerk of the "Mansion House" at Fishkill village, conducted by Mr. Lampson; but after a few months he left to take a position as clerk on the steamer "William Young," running between Low Point and New York City. On this boat he spent two years, and one on the steamer "Caledonia" with Captain Wardrop, of the firm of Wardrop, Smith & Co., of Newburgh. Afterward he became a clerk for Brett & Cromwell, forwarding and freighting merchants at Long Dock, Fishkill Landing, and up to the time of his death he had ever since been connected with that business, being at that time the sole proprietor. At Mr. Cromwell's death in 1869 the firm was changed to Brett & Matthews, and two years later it became Walter Brett & Co., composed of Mr. Brett, John Place (now treasurer of the Mechanics' Savings Bank at Fishkill-on-Hudson) and Captain Brundage. In 1874 Mr. Brett withdrew from the firm of Walter Brett & Co., and the firm became Brundage & Place until 1885, when Captain Brundage bought Mr. Place's interest, and up to the time of his death conducted the business alone. In August, 1895, he purchased the coal and merchandise business of Aldridge & Dorland on Main street, which he added to his own extensive coal trade that was established over twenty-five years ago, selling in recent years about ten thousand tons a year. He ran a daily transportation line from Fishkill to New York, transferring all kinds of freight to the Ransdell Transportation Co. Line of Newburgh. Captain Brundage was for many years captain of the "Walter Brett" and the "Independence," both of which ran from Fishkill to New York City.

On August 2, 1853, Captain Brundage was married to Miss Mary Boice, daughter of Henry Boice, a citizen of Williamsburg, N. Y.; she died in 1873, leaving no children. His second wife was formerly Miss Ella E. Murphy, daughter of Prof. John G. Murphy and his wife, Sarah C. Myer. Mrs. Brundage is a lineal descendant of Timothy Murphy, of Revolutionary fame, who participated in the battles of Bunker Hill and Saratoga, and was a noted Indian fighter, the scene of his exploits being largely laid in Schoharie county. Mrs. Brundage has a pleasant home on Ferry street, Fishkill-on-Hudson; she attends the Reformed Church of that place. In politics the Captain was a Republican.

GEORGE ESSELSTYN, a prominent attorney of Rhinebeck, Dutchess county, is a man who has brought his keen discrimination and thorough wisdom not alone in professional paths, but also for the benefit of the community where he has so long resided, and with whose interests he has been so closely identified. He holds and merits a place among the representative legal practitioners of Dutchess county.

Mr. Esselstyn was born in Claverack, Columbia Co., N. Y., on September 27, 1841, and can trace his ancestry back to Martin Esselstyn, who arrived in America about 1640. He had two sons, Jacob and Cornelius, the latter of whom married Cornelia Vredenburg, of Kingston, N. Y., and among their seven sons were Jacob and Gabriel, who removed to Claverack in 1710. Jacob wedded Magdalen Brodhead, of Ulster county, and to them were born five daughters and two sons, the latter being Richard and Cornelius. Among the children of Cornelius was Richard, who was born in 1731 and died in 1783, the year in which peace with England was declared. He was a patriot and soldier, holding the rank of major in a regiment of militia raised in Claverack to resist the northern encroachments of the British troops. He had two sons—Jacob, born in 1762; and Cornelius, born in 1765, who were the more immediate ancestors of the branch of the family now residing in Rhinebeck township, Dutchess county. From Jacob have descended Tobias, who occupies the very soil which has been transmitted down to the sixth generation in the same family; Jacob, a resident of Wisconsin; and John, of Mellenville, Columbia county.

Cornelius Esselstyn, who was also born at Claverack, was the grandfather of our subject. He was a large land owner of that locality, and one of the leading citizens. By his marriage with Clarissa Vonsburgh, he became the father of the following sons: Richard; Jacob, who during his lifetime occupied the place of the former patroon; Charles, a distinguished member of the bar; Isaac; William; Robert, the father of our subject; and Martin; all of whom were well-known citizens, worthy of their ancestry.

The birth of the father also occurred at Claverack, about 1807, and his entire life was devoted to the occupation of farming. He was an intelligent, well-read man, of high social ideas and great natural ability, and was one of the substantial citizens of Columbia county. In early life he supported the Whig party, and was a great admirer of Henry Clay, later joining the Republican party. Deeply interested in educational matters, he served for many years as trustee of the Claverack Academy, filling that position most of his life. He was married to Miss Catherine Vedder, daughter of Rev. Herman Vedder, who made his home near Mt. Ross, in Gallatin, Columbia county, and for sixty years served as minister of the Reformed Dutch Church. After many years of usefulness he died at the ripe old age of ninety-six years. The Vedder family, as well as the Esselstyn, was of Holland-Dutch origin. Two children were born to Robert Esselstyn and his worthy wife: George, subject of this review; and Henry, who died in 1883.

The preparatory education of our subject was received at Claverack Academy, where he took the regularly prescribed course, and at the age of sixteen entered Rutgers College, taking the full classical course there, and graduating in the class of '61. He took up the study of law in the office of Gaul & Esselstyn (the latter being a cousin), and was admitted to practice December 10, 1863, before the supreme court. He remained with his old instructors until March 20, 1865, when he opened an office at Rhinebeck, where he conducted business alone for seven years. In 1872 he formed the partnership with Mr. McCarty, which has continued from that time, and is now the oldest law firm in Dutchess county. He is a man of imposing presence, and is one of the most successful attorneys of the community.

On June 17, 1868, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Esselstyn and Miss Florence Cowles, who belongs to one of the old and prominent families of Rhinebeck, and is a daughter of William S. Cowles, of that village, where for years he has carried on merchandising. Seven children grace this union—two sons and five daughters: Louise, at home; Catherine, wife of Rev. William H. Morrison, an Episcopal clergyman of Stafford Spring, Conn.; Florence E., wife of Charles L. Brooke, son of Charfes W. Brooke, one of the most prominent criminal lawyers of New York City; Henry, of Stafford Spring, Conn.; Clara Perle and Mabel at home; and Robert, who is attending school at Sing Sing, New York.

For thirty-one years Mr. Esselstyn has served as attorney for the First National Bank of Rhinebeck. He is a staunch Republican in politics, working hard for the interests of his party; in 1872 was candidate for the Assembly, and in 1882 candidate for district attorney. For two terms he served as supervisor, being chairman of the board half of the time, and was also president of the village for two terms, while he is one of its oldest directors in point of time. For twenty-five years he has been one of the trustees of the Starr Institute, of Rhinebeck, and has served as secretary of the board the greater part of that time. He takes a prominent part in the Masonic order, being a Knight Templar, and for several terms has been master of the lodge, and past chancellor commander of the order of K. of T. Religiously, he belongs to the Reformed Dutch Church, but most of his family are Episcopalians.

HENRY H. HUSTIS (deceased), late attorney and counsellor at law, Fishkill-on-Hudson, and one of the oldest and most prominent members of the Dutchess County Bar, was born March 9, 1829, at North Highlands, town of Phillipstown, Putnam county, N. Y., and died at Fishkill-on-Hudson December 14, 1896.

His family is of English origin, and the first of the American line came to New England about 1630. He was of the sixth generation from Robert, who came from Fairfield county, Conn., about the year 1664, and settled at Westchester, Westchester county, N. Y., where David Hustis, our subject's great-great-grandfather, was born. He was a captain in the Revolutionary army in Col. Van Rensselaer's regiment, and must have been over sixty years of age at that time. In 1730 he bought from the Indians several hundred acres of land in Putnam county, three miles from the present village of Cold Springs, and this estate has since been owned and occupied continuously by the family, a portion of it, 120 acres, being now owned by our subject. A part of the old house built by Capt. David Hustis is still standing as it was during the Colonial period, additions have been made to it from time to time. The farm adjoining is now owned by Samuel D. Hustis, whose great-grandfather was a brother of our subject's grandfather. The house upon that estate was also built in Colonial times, and Gen. Washington and his staff stopped there on their way to West Point from Connecticut, and were met by a messenger who told them of the treason of Benedict Arnold. Capt. David Hustis had a son Joseph, who married Mary Hunt, and had three sons: Robert, Joseph and David. Robert Hustis married Tamar Budd, and had a son Nicholas, who was born at the old homestead in 1803, and was a farmer there all his life. He married Martha Haight, who was born in 1804, and they reared a family of nine children. The father died in 1866, and the mother passed away in 1886.

Henry H. Hustis attended the district schools near the old home for some time in boyhood, and later studied for two years in a Quaker school, finishing his academic education at Amenia Seminary. He began the study of law in Newburg with Judge William Fullerton, the great criminal lawyer of New York City, and afterward spent one year in the office of Judge Monell; and one year with Judge George. In September, 1852, he was admitted at Poughkeepsie to the bar of the Supreme Court, and June 3, 1853, he opened his office at Fishkill-on-Hudson, taking the practice of John Owens. For forty-three years he was continuously engaged in professional work, and won a high reputation as a practitioner. He took an active interest in local politics, and was an able worker in the Republican party. In 1866, 1868, 1870 and 1873 he was president of the village, and in 1874 he was elected supervisor of the town, and was chairman of the board of supervisors of Dutchess county in that year. The family have a pleasant home on South avenue. His wife was Miss Elizabeth V. W. Anthony, daughter of Nicholas and Maria (Knapp) Anthony. They had five children.

JOHAN P. ATWATER, M. D. This well-known and highly respected citizen of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, is a native of Carlisle, Penn., where he was born March 4, 1813, and where his early life was spent. The rudiments of his education were obtained at Hopkins' Grammar School, in New Haven, Conn., then, in 1830, he entered Yale College, and was graduated with the class of '34, after which he attended the medical college in New Haven, where he secured a practical knowledge of medicine.

In 1836 Dr. Atwater went to Cincinnati and practiced medicine there for a few years, when he retired, and returned to New Haven, where he lived quietly. In 1870 the Doctor moved to Poughkeepsie and took up his residence there. On July 27, 1845, he was married to Miss Lucy J. Phelps, who was from West Townshend, Vt., where she was born January 14, 1828. Her father, Charles Phelps, was a native of Vermont, and a son of Timothy Phelps, whose ancestors were English. To our subject and his wife were born the following children: Edward S. and Lucy. The Doctor is a Republican and, with his wife, contributes to the support of the First Reformed Church. They have a beautiful home, surrounded by spacious drives and walks, well-kept lawns, cosy nooks within the shadow of stately oak trees, and charming summer houses.

Jeremiah Atwater, father of our subject, was born in New Haven, Conn., October 1, 1774, where he grew to manhood, and was graduated from Yale College. He organized Middlebury College, and was selected as its first president; in 1809 he held the same office of Dickenson College, Carlisle, Penn. After moving to New Haven he lived a retired life. He married Miss Clarissa Storrs, a native of Sandisfield, Mass., where she was born January 7, 1776. Her father, Eleazer Storrs, was born in Mansfield, Conn. Mr. and Mrs. Atwater had three children: John P., our subject; William, formerly a druggist in Brooklyn, N. Y., who died April 20, 1873; Clarissa, born in 1803, who became the wife of Rev. Oliver Butterfield, and died January 16, 1871; and William, born in 1806.

Jeremiah Atwater, grandfather of our subject, was born in New Haven, Conn. He married Miss Lois Hurd, and they settled in New Haven, where he followed the occupation of a merchant. Their children were as follows: Jeremiah; John, a carriage maker; Charles, who settled in North Branford, Conn.; Lewis, who was a carpenter and house builder; Fannie, who married Zebul Bradley, a jeweler; Nancy, who died unmarried. Jeremiah died in 1835. His son, Jeremiah, died July 29, 1858.

Edward Storrs Atwater, a son of our subject, was born April 10, 1853, at Cincinnati. He took a preparatory course at Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass., and was graduated at Yale College, in 1875, from the classical course. After leaving college he studied law in Poughkeepsie with Judge H. M. Taylor, and was admitted to the bar in 1880. He engaged in the practice of law in office work until 1891, when he was elected president of the Farmers' & Manufacturers' National Bank, of Poughkeepsie, which position he has held ever since. In 1880 he was married to Miss Caroline P. Swift, a daughter of Charles W. Swift, and a graduate of Vassar College in the class of '77. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Atwater: Morton, Lucy, Eliot and Evelyn, all living at home. Mr. Atwater was formerly a Republican, but is now a Democrat, although he does not take an active part in politics. He is a member of the First Reformed Church, and of the Dutchess Club and Amrita Club, of Poughkeepsie. In public matters he is one of the leading men of the city, and is a director of the Poughkeepsie Iron Co. and of the Forest of Dean Iron Co., and a trustee of the Savings Bank. [Since the above was written Dr. Atwater died in May, 1897.]

REV. ACOMON P. VAN GIESON, D. D., pastor of the First Reformed Church of Poughkeepsie, is now in the thirtieth year of his beneficent service at that charge. He belongs to one of the old Holland-Dutch families, the first ancestor to cross the ocean having been Reynier Bastiansen Van Gieson, who settled in New Amsterdam prior to 1660, and later made his home in New Jersey, where many of the name now live.

A majority of the early members of the family were agriculturists, and our subject's grandfather, Reynier Van Gieson, followed that occupation all his life. He married Sarah Kent, daughter of Jacob Kent, who entered the Colonial army as a volunteer at the opening of the Revolutionary war, and served until peace was declared. Ira Van Gieson, the Doctor's father, was reared upon a farm, but engaged in business as a manufacturer, being one of the original members of the Newark (N. J.) Lime & Cement Company. His wife, Sarah Thompson, was a native of New Jersey, and a daughter of Thomas J. Thompson. Both parents died at their home in Newark, N. J. Of their five children, the Doctor was the eldest. Another son, Ransford E. Van Gieson, M. D., of Brooklyn, N. Y., was a surgeon in the navy during the war of the Rebellion, and has a son, Ira Van Gieson, M. D., who is a member of the staff of instructors in the New York College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York City, and chief of the Commission on Pathology of Insanity for the State of New York.

The subject of our sketch was born January 13, 1830, in West Bloomfield, Essex Co., N. J., and at four years of age was taken by his parents to Newark, N. J., where he grew to manhood. Love of study was a marked characteristic even in youth, but previous to entering college he taught school and clerked in a grocery for a time. He took a course in the University of New York, graduating in 1849, and in 1852 he completed his preparation for the ministry in the Theological Seminary of the Reformed Church, located in New Brunswick. He took charge of the Reformed Church at Catskill, N. Y., in the same year, and was ordained as its pastor in 1853. In 1855 he accepted a call to the First Reformed Church in Brooklyn, where he remained until 1859. For the six years following he was stationed at Claverack, Columbia Co., N. Y., and in 1865 a call was accepted from the Church of Greenpoint (Brooklyn), his ministrations there being continued until September, 1867, when he assumed the pastorate of the First Church of Poughkeepsie, one of the principal congregations in the city. This society was organized in 1716, being the oldest in Dutchess county.

Dr. Van Gieson has added to his cares as a pastor much literary work, chiefly on theological lines, and the value of his effort has been recognized without as well as within the Church. In 1872 he received the degree of D. D., from Rutgers College, and in 1873 he was president of the Synod. Among his books are a history of the Poughkeepsie Church, published in 1892, an address on the "Type of Doctrine of the Reformed Church," published in 1876, as one of the Centennial publications, and a history of the Ratification of the Constitution of the United States by the State of New York, published in 1895. He has urged effectively the erection of a monument in Poughkeepsie, to commemorate that important historical event, and this will undoubtedly be done by the Daughters of the Revolution, who have taken the project in hand.

On July 9, 1857, Dr. Van Gieson was married in Brooklyn, N. Y., to his first wife, Miss Anna Skillman, daughter of John Skillman, a well-known resident of the "City of Churches," and a descendant of the first white child born on Long Island. Of the three children of this union one died in infancy. The others are: Mrs. D. Crosby Foster, of Poughkeepsie; and Mrs. Cecil W. H. Jones, of Bermuda. The mother died February 22, 1865, and December 11, 1878, the Doctor formed a second union, with Miss Maria Swift, who is still living. Hale and hearty in appearance, Dr. Van Gieson bears his years lightly, his tall form being full of the vigor which comes from outdoor exercise, while his kindly, pleasant face has a youthful look in contrast with his snow-white hair. As a citizen he has always taken keen interest in public affairs. Early in life he was a pronounced opponent of slavery, and he has been a member of the Republican party since its organization. In all matters that pertain to the progress of the city where he has made his home, his influence is a recognized power for good.

GEORGE W. INGRAHAM, an attorney at law of Amenia, Dutchess county, is descended from Timothy and Sarah (Cowell) Ingraham, who were residents of Boston, and later lived at Bristol, R. I. John Ingraham, their fourth son, was born December 8, 1701, and was married December 12, 1723, to Miss Mary Fry. Jeremiah Ingraham, their fourth child, was born December 8, 1731, married Rebecca Monroe, a cousin of President James Monroe, and died at an advanced age in the faith of the Episcopal Church. Thomas Ingraham, the third son of Jeremiah, was born November 8, 1773, and in 1792 wedded Margaret Wardwell. They were the parents of our subject. George Ingraham, an uncle, was the first of the family to locate in Dutchess county, coming from Bristol, R. I., to Amenia in 1785.

In 1795 the parents of our subject became residents of Dutchess county, arriving in Amenia on the 3d of July, that year, with their two children. They had made the journey from Bristol by water to Poughkeepsie, then overland to Amenia. Here the father engaged in farming until his death, and was also a stockholder in the woolen-mill at Leedsville, Dutchess county, during the war of 1812. He was a Federalist in politics, and a conspicuous character in the Methodist Episcopal Church. For years he held the office of commissioner of highways, and was also overseer of the poor. He died May 12, 1841, and his faithful wife was called to her final rest April 30, 1855. In their family were eleven children: Mary, Samuel, Nathaniel, Allen, Hannah, Thomas Swan, Abigail, Josiah, John, George W. and Sally Ann, all of whom are now deceased with the exception of our subject, and his brother John, of Poughkeepsie.

George Whitfield Ingraham was born November 25, 1811, in the town of Amenia, where his boyhood days were passed. His literary education was received in the district schools and by one winter's attendance at a select school. At the age of seventeen years he began reading law under the direction of Robert Wilkinson, of Poughkeepsie, but did not apply for a diploma until the close of the Civil war. For twenty years he served as justice of the peace, five terms in succession, and his wise rulings ever showed thought and deliberation. His practice has been mostly confined to real-estate law, and he has also engaged in surveying and engineering, helping to lay out the New York & Harlem railroad. He has ever taken a commendable interest in the cause of education, and has been inspector and commissioner of schools.

On October 22, 1834, at Sharon, Conn., Mr. Ingraham was united in marriage with Miss Electa Hunt, a daughter of Rev. Aaron Hunt, and they became the parents of four children, as follows: Sarah J., who married Samuel R. Free, of Willimantic, Conn.; Aaron Hunt, who during the dark days of the Rebellion enlisted in the 48th N. Y. S. V., was killed while leading a charge at Cold Harbor, June 1, 1864, and his body was there interred; Phebe H. is the next in order of birth; and George Irving (deceased), who had married Fannie B. Payne, and had one daughter, Margery Starr. Mr. Ingraham has been called upon to mourn the loss of his excellent wife, who died October 10, 1889. Our subject cast his first vote in support of the Whig party, and since its dissolution has been an ardent Republican; in religious faith he is a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which for the long period of forty years he has served as clerk, and for many years was trustee, steward and class leader. He is the originator of the law in the State of New York which gives a married woman the right to hold real and personal property independent of her husband, which took him eight years to get passed; but he never gave up until his object was accomplished.

At the age of twenty-five years he conceived the idea that the changes of the weather, including sunshine and clouds, winds and storms, could be reduced to a science, and at once began to evolve a theory. After close study for many years he decided that his theory was correct, and then made known his conclusions to some of his friends and neighbors. One of those men is now living in the City of New York. This company ridiculed his position. Nothing daunted, he put his ideas with his observations in a letter and sent the same to Washington, D. C., in charge of the then member of Congress from his district. That formed the nucleus of the present Government weather bureau.

Mr. Ingraham has always made his home upon his farm in the town of Amenia, and is widely and favorably known throughout the community, being held in the highest regard by all with whom he has come in contact.

CHARLES W. H. ARNOLD. Among the leading lights of the legal fraternity of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, is Charles W. H. Arnold, who was born in New York City May 5, 1860. Though born in the city his boyhood was passed on the farms in the towns of Hyde Park and Milan, in Dutchess county, and here in the district schools he received his common-school education. To an active mind the law furnished many attractions, as it is a study never completed, but whose scope is ever widening and changing. Our subject, when just out of the school room, followed various pursuits, but, when twenty, determined to enter the legal profession, and, accordingly, entered the office of J. S. Van Cleef, as a student, and in December, 1883, was admitted to the bar. He has made a specialty of corporation law, and holds the office of attorney for the Poughkeepsie National Bank (in which he is also one of the directors); is attorney for the Fallkill Knitting Company, of which he is also treasurer and general manager, and attorney for the New Paltz and Wallkill Valley R. R. In 1894 he was a member of the Constitutional Convention.

On October 11, 1892, Mr. Arnold was married to Miss Alice Schouten, daughter of Richard A. Schouten, and two interesting children have come to brighten their home, namely: Richard Henry and Alice Margaret. Socially Mr. Arnold is a member of Triune Lodge, Masonic order, Knights of Pythias, and also of the Dutchess Club of Poughkeepsie, and he is at present president of the Staatsburgh Fire Company. Religiously he is an active worker in St. Margaret's Episcopal Church at Staatsburgh, in which he is vestryman, and is serving as clerk of the vestry.

Henry Arnold, father of our subject, was a native of Saxony, Germany, and came to this country at the age of fourteen. In Schoharie county, N. Y., he was married to Margaret Hemstreet, and the following children were born to them: Elda, who married Q. F. Shafford, of the town of Red Hook, Dutchess county; Charles W. H., our subject; Florence, who married Frederick Wheaton, of Yonkers, N. Y.; George and Henry. The father of this family was river superintendent of the National Ice Company.

WALTER D. O. K. STRONG, M. D. Despite the salubrious air and other advantages of this favored region, its inhabitants have occasional need for the care of a physician. Among the ablest of the practitioners who minister to the many ills that flesh is heir to, even under the best conditions, is Dr. Strong, of Fishkill Landing, Dutchess county, whose history is well worthy of a permanent record among those of the leading workers in professional and other lines.

Dr. Strong was born August 10, 1823, at Owasco, Cayuga Co., N. Y., and is remotely of English descent, his ancestors having crossed the Atlantic at a very early date. His great-grandfather, Asher Strong, had his home in youth in eastern New York, but later settled at Cooperstown, Otsego county. Isaac Strong, the grandfather of our subject, moved to Owasco, Cayuga county, about the year 1800, and engaged in farming and the hotel business. He married Miss Elizabeth Waterman, of Cooperstown, and had two daughters and one son: Walter, the youngest of the trio; Nancy, the eldest, married Thaddeus Thompson, a wool dresser and the owner of a mill; Elizabeth married E. Clark, a cabinet maker.

Walter Strong, the father of our subject, was born at Cooperstown, but when one year old was taken by his parents to Cayuga county, where he grew to manhood, and naturally became familiar with the details of hotel management. For a time he followed the business; but, choosing the independence of agricultural life, he located later upon a large farm. In 1833 he traded this for one of 400 acres in Crawford county, Penn., where he spent about fifteen years, and then made an exchange for a hotel and a farm of 100 acres at Jefferson, Ohio. He died in 1862, and his wife, Sarah (De Voe), passed away in 1878. She was of French descent, and was born in the southeastern part of New York, the daughter of Hon. Elijah De Voe, who was elected to the Legislature in 1819, and again in 1825. Walter and Sarah Strong had eight children: Elijah, the eldest, is a prominent resident of Plymouth, Ohio, and has been mayor of the town, and has also served for years as justice of the peace; Malvina, deceased, was the wife of S. C. Stratton, of Linesville, Penn., a tanner and currier; W. D. O. K. is our subject; Sarah E. married Horatio Shattuck, who was a soldier in the Civil war, and is now deceased; Edwin T. is a farmer at Jefferson, Ohio; Isaac M., who died in 1888, was first a merchant and later a banker at Bancroft, Mich.; Cornelia M., an artist of note and the painter of the "Electrical Commission" (which was purchased for $7,000, and is now in the Capitol at Washington, D. C.), married Samuel Fassett, a photographer, and resides in Washington; Nancy J. married John A. Harvey, of Ashtabula, Ohio.

Dr. Strong's boyhood was spent at his native place, where he received his elementary education from his grandfather, who was a teacher. At nineteen he began a business career as a clerk in a store, but after three years he engaged in teaching, and gave all his spare time to the study of medicine. Desiring further literary education, he attended school at Kingsville, Ohio, taking an academic course, and later studied at Auburn, N. Y. He then taught for a few months, and in 1846 he entered the office of Dr. Benjamin De Voe, an uncle, to prepare for entrance to the medical department of Buffalo University, from which he was graduated April 19, 1849. For one year he practiced with his uncle, and then, in 1850, located at Sennett, Cayuga Co., N. Y., being accompanied to this place by his bride, Miss Maria Rosa, daughter of Jacob Rosa, formerly of Hurley, Ulster Co., N. Y. Five years were spent at Sennett in successful practice, Dr. Strong serving also as superintendent of the local schools for two terms. In 1856 he returned to his old home at Owasco, and during the winters of 1856 and '57 he attended a course of lectures upon homeopathy in Philadelphia. Resuming his practice at home, he continued until 1870, when he moved to Milford, Del., and followed his profession for ten years. Since 1880 he has been established at Fishkill Landing, where he enjoys a large and lucrative practice, his abilities, developed by wide experience, gaining the confidence of the community to a marked degree.

The Doctor is a firm adherent of the Republican party, and is interested, as every intelligent citizen should be, in the various progressive movements of the time. His only son now living, Edwin E., holds a responsible position in the First National Bank of Fishkill Landing, with which he has been connected for thirteen years. An elder son, Jacob R., began practice as a physician in the same town, but his death in 1892 cut short a most promising career.

ROOSEVELT. The first of the name to come to this country was Claas Martenson Van Roosevelt, who emigrated from Holland to New York in 1647.

The various members of the family held prominent positions in New York, and Isaac Roosevelt was one of the first senators from that city; one of the framers of the first constitution of the State of New York, when the Constitutional Convention sat at Poughkeepsie; one of the founders and president of the New York Hospital; the bank of New York, and various charitable institutions.

James Roosevelt, son of Isaac Roosevelt, settled at Mount Hope, a country place near Poughkeepsie, and his descendants have had homes in the neighborhood of Poughkeepsie and Hyde Park ever since.

The present JAMES ROOSEVELT of Poughkeepsie and Hyde Park, Dutchess county, was born at New York City, and has interested himself in railways, etc; was one of the Government Commissioners for the World's Fair held at Chicago in 1893; is vice president of the Delaware & Hudson Canal Co.; and holds various positions of trust.

HENRY PEARCE, M. D., a leading physician and surgeon of Pawling, Dutchess county, is one of the best known practitioners of that locality. As a surgeon he has won an enviable reputation, and his practice extends over a wide radius, including the northern portion of Putnam county. His family is one of the oldest in the town of Pawling, his great-grandfather, Col. William Pearce, of Revolutionary fame, having come from Rhode Island during the Colonial period. He must have been acquainted with Gen. Washington, as the latter had his headquarters for some time at the foot of Quaker Hill. Col. Pearce was a farmer by occupation, and owned a tract of land west of the village of Pawling, now occupied by Charles Hoag. This has been in the possession of the family for more than a hundred years. By his first wife Col. Pearce had four children: Henry, Benoni, Roxana and Mary. Roxana married Mr. Howland, and went to Canada, and became the mother of Sir William Howland. Mary also married. Col. Pearce had two sons, William and John, by a second marriage.

Henry Pearce, our subject's grandfather, was also a farmer, and lived about three miles north of Pawling. He married Rebecca Birdsell, and reared a family of five children, of whom our subject's father, Benoni Pearce, was the eldest. (2) Nathaniel spent his life at the old homestead, and his excellent natural abilities made him a leader in the community, where for many years he held the office of assessor. He married Julia Ferris, but had no children. (3) Roxana married Henry Stark, and lived in Penn Yan, N. Y. (4) Amy married Jaleel Billings Stark, a leading merchant of Pawling. (5) Rebecca married Daniel Shove, and lived at Wellsburg, New York.

Benoni Pearce was born in 1808, and followed farming at Pawling until 1851, when he moved to a farm of 200 acres at Penn Yan, where he spent the remainder of his days, his death occurring there in 1895. Although he was never an office holder, he took a keen interest in political questions, being a Whig in early life and afterward a Republican. He was a devout Methodist, and for many years was an official in the Church. His first wife was Mary Ann Stark, a daughter of Benoni Stark, and after her death, in 1853, he married her sister, Rachel. By his first marriage he had seven children, of whom the Doctor is the eldest. The others were Lillius H., wife of A. J. Brown, of Yates county, N. Y.; Jeremiah S., sheriff of Dutchess county; James S., who lives in Pawling, N. Y.; Charles W., who lives in New York City; Edwin M. (deceased); and Elizabeth M., who married John Gelder, a farmer and grape grower of Yates county.

Dr. Pearce was born in Pawling, March 1, 1833, and received his academic education there and in the schools of Yates county. In 1853 he entered the Medical Department of the University of Michigan, and was graduated with the degree of M. D. in 1857. He began his professional career at Ulysses, Potter Co., Penn., but after two years there he came to Pawling to practice. In 1862 he entered the army as assistant surgeon of the 150th N. Y. V. I., with C. M. Campbell. During the march to Lookout Mountain his horse fell, and the Doctor was so injured that his left leg had to be amputated above the knee; although he was obliged to resign his former position in the regiment, he remained in the department until the close of the war. He spent three years practicing at Carmel, Putnam county, but finally settled at Pawling, where he has now been successfully engaged in practice for nearly thirty years, his business covering a larger territory than that of any other physician in that locality. He is also the senior partner in the firm of Dr. H. Pearce & Co., the leading druggists of Pawling.

The Doctor has been three times married. His first wife was Sarah Hall, of Pawling. His second wife, Augusta M. (Stark), daughter of J. W. Stark, died in 1878, leaving one son, George Stark Pearce, now a successful physician at Dover Plains; a daughter, Bessie, died at the age of four years. In 1888 Dr. Pearce married his third wife, Julia (Travis), of Carmel, Putnam county. The Doctor is an ardent Republican, and, like all of his family, is very patriotic and public-spirited. He is a member of C. W. Campbell Post, G. A. R., and also of the medical societies of Putnam and Dutchess counties.

MON. JOHN H. KETCHAM. Dutchess county has possessed and possesses many prominent citizens; but in all their number can be found no one more truly representative, more widely or actively awake to the interests of the community at large, than the subject of this article.

A native of the county, Mr. Ketcham was born December 21, 1832, in Dover, and is a representative of one of the oldest families in eastern New York, being the second son and child of John M. and Eliza A. Ketcham, of Dover. His education was received in part at Suffield, Conn., in part at Worcester, Mass., where he was graduated in 1851. At the conclusion of his studies, and on his return to his native town, he, in partnership with his older brother, William S., commenced farming, and the conducting of an extensive marble business, which they successfully continued several years. During this period his fellow citizens, justly recognizing his ability, which was developed in an active business life, soon called upon him to represent his township on the board of supervisors, and he served two terms, after which he was then sent to the Assembly for two terms, from which he passed into the State Senate—his entire career in each of these responsibilities proving him to be a man worthy to represent his constituents.

J. W. Ketcham

In 1861, at the breaking out of the war of the Rebellion, Mr. Ketcham was appointed, by Gov. Morgan, a member of the war committee for Dutchess and Columbia counties, and later was commissioned to raise a regiment, which he did with characteristic zeal and energy, rapidly filling out his quota with picked men of Dutchess county, representing for the most part the best and most intelligent families. His regiment, the 150th N. Y. V. I., proceeded first to Baltimore, afterward participating in the battle of Gettysburg, where it suffered severely. After recruiting his regiment, and filling up its sadly depleted ranks, Col. Ketcham moved his command southwest, joining Sherman, and was with him in the memorable "March to the Sea." While on duty on Argyle Island, near the mouth of the Savannah river, our subject received a wound, from the effects of which he has never fully recovered. At Atlanta, for meritorious conduct, he was promoted to the rank of brigadier-general by brevet, afterward to brigadier-general, and subsequently to major-general by brevet. While with his command in Georgia, he was nominated for member of Congress from his District, and was elected by a large majority. He has since served eleven terms in that office, on each occasion being nominated by acclamation, and receiving the support of the people of his District, irrespective of party, his majorities being unprecedented in that county. At the termination of his twelfth term he was tendered a unanimous renomination, but owing to impaired health he respectfully declined further service.

The great secret of Gen. Ketcham's popularity has always been his untiring and unremitting efforts to promote the interests of his constituents, irrespective of party. During the interval of three years when he was not in Congress, the General was appointed, by President Grant, a commissioner of the District of Columbia, ex-Gov. Dennison, of Ohio, and Hon. H. T. Blow, of Missouri (since deceased), being his associates, in which incumbency he served with his usual energy and fidelity for a period of nearly three years. About the time of his retirement from the office of District Commissioner, in 1877, he received letters from a large number of the leading citizens of the District expressing regret at his resignation, and testifying to the ability, industry and thoughtful consideration manifested by him in the faithful discharge of his onerous duties.

On February 4, 1858, Gen. John H. Ketcham was united in marriage with Miss Augusta A. Belden, daughter of William H. and Sarah Belden, of Amenia, Dutchess county, who were among the earliest and representative families of the county. Four children were born of this marriage, of whom, two sons, Henry and Charles, and one daughter, Ethel, are living.

Gen. Ketcham is a man of warm impulses, always ready to help a friend or do a kind act for a fellow being, and is known and recognized as the poor man's friend. His native State honors him, and with good reason, for he is one of her best products—a manly, noble man in all the relations of life, one who in his remarkable public career has maintained himself with dignity, propriety and honor.

COL. JAMES VANDER BURGH. Among those who left the shores of the Old World for those of the New, and settled very early in the vicinity of Poughkeepsie, was a family of Vander Burghs, directly from Holland, and it is to James Vander Burgh, one of the descendants of these early settlers, that this sketch more especially refers. Not only was he destined to be named among the noted men of Dutchess county, but he proved to be one of the country's most sturdy patriots and defenders. Born in Poughkeepsie, September 4, 1729, we know little or nothing about him until his marriage to Margaret Noxon, in September, 1853, and at this time they lived near the little hamlet of Poughquag. Seven children were born to them, and we read in Vander Burgh's diary, thirteen years later, these words: "1776, August ye 9 day my wife departed this life. Between the our of 3 and 4 in the morning. Beaing the 8 day from ye time of her beaing taken sick." The following year he married Helena Clark, and of this union eleven children were born, among whom were Federal Vander Burgh, a noted homeopathic physician, who died in Rhinebeck in 1868; Gabriel Ludlow (named after one of the first vestrymen of Trinity Church, New York), who married Margaret Akin, of Quaker Hill; and a daughter, Paulina, who married Judge Albro Akin, of the same place. The latter had three children: (1) Albert J., born August 14, 1803, still living, aged ninety-three, married Jane Williams, of New York City (no children). (2) Almira Vander Burgh married (first) to Joshua Leavitt Jones, and had two children; married (second) to John Akin Tibbits (no children). (3) Helen Maria married to John W. Taylor, and has two children.

A brief genealogical record of the branch of the Akin family related to the Vander Burghs is as follows: (I) John Akin, born in Scotland in 1663, emigrated to America about 1680, and settled in Dartmouth, Mass. There in 1687 he married (first) Mary Briggs, who was born in Portsmouth, R. I., August 9, 1671, a daughter of Thomas and Mary (Fisher) Briggs. Children of this union: (II) David, Judith, Deborah, Timothy, Mary, Hannah, Thomas, Elizabeth and James. The mother of these died, and for his second wife John Akin married Hannah Sherman, who bore him six children. (I) John Akin died June 13, 1746.

(II) David Akin, the eldest son of (I) John Akin, was born September 19, 1689, in Dartmouth, Mass., and was there married in 1711, to Sarah Allen, also a native of that locality, and by her had the following named children: (III) John, Mary, Elisha, Josiah, Abigail, Sarah, Hannah, James, David and Jonathan. In 1741 the father of this family moved to Quaker Hill (formerly called Oblong), where he died in 1779.

(III) John Akin, eldest son of (II) David, was born September 15, 1718, at Portsmouth, R. I., and January 29, 1742, married Margaret Hicks, of Portsmouth, R. I., by which union children as follows were born: Anna, Mary, Abigail and (IV) John. The father of these died April 7, 1779, the mother in October, 1803.

(IV) John, the only son of (III) John, was born November 11, 1753, at Quaker Hill, and December 27, 1775, was married at Pawling, N. Y., to Molly Ferris, who was born April 20, 1759, a daughter of Reed Ferris, of Pawling. Children as follows were born to them: (V) Albro, Sarah, Margaret, Ann, Daniel and Amanda. Of these (V) Albro married (first) Paulina Vander Burgh, of Beekman (three children); (second) married Sarah Merritt (no children); and married (third) Jemima Jacacks (seven children). Their son William H. Akin married (first) Martha A. Taber (two children); married (second) Sarah Miller (no children). Albro Akin, son of William H. Akin, married Emma Reed (two children), and their son, Albert J. Akin, Jr., was born November 12, 1882.

A brief genealogical record of the branch of the Ferris or Ferriss (anciently written Ferrass) family related, as above, to the Akin family, is as follows:

(I) John Ferriss, a native of Leicestershire, England, a holder of land in several counties of England, emigrated with his family to Fairfield, Conn. (there are records showing that the Ferriss family were in America in 1650), and afterward, about 1654, removed to New York State. He is said to have been one of five brothers who emigrated to this country with their families, one of whom, Jeffry, located first, in 1635, in Massachusetts, later, in 1660, settling in Fairfield, Conn. Another brother, Benjamin, settled in Massachusetts in 1640. (I) John Ferriss died in New York State in 1715.

(II) Samuel, son of (I) John, came from Reading, England, about 1658, it is supposed, and was one of the first settlers of Groton, Mass., whence he afterward moved to Charlestown, Mass. He married Jerisha Reed, and had one son, (III) Zachariah.

(III) Zachariah was born, it is supposed, at Pequenoek (now Bridgeport), Conn., and was a Freeman in 1676. In September, 1698 or 1699, he was married to Sarah Reed, of Stratford, Conn. About the year 1710 they moved to New Milford, Conn., and their daughter, Sarah, was the first female white child born there. The children born to (III) Zachariah and Sarah (Reed) Ferriss were as follows: David, (IV) Benjamin, Hannah, John, Zachariah, Sarah Ann, Deborah and Joseph. From (III) Zachariah are descended numerous persons of that name in different parts of the United States.

(IV) Benjamin Ferriss was born November 10, 1708; in 1728 married Elizabeth Beecher, and in 1730 they moved to Oblong (now Quaker Hill). Their children were Zebulon, (V) Reed, Susannah, Phebe, Lillias, Benjamin, Gilbert and Edmund.

(V) Reed Ferriss was born August 15, 1730, at New Milford, and died at Pawling, N. Y., in March, 1804. He married Anne Tripp, and they lived in Pawling. Their house was occupied by Washington when the American troops were quartered on a hill near by. The children born to Reed and Anne (Tripp) Ferriss were: Edmund, Benjamin, Lydia, (VI) Molly, James, Warren, Pitt, Morris, Anne and Seneca.

(VI) Molly Ferriss was born April 20, 1759, and married December 27, 1775, to John Akin, of Quaker Hill. She died October 30, 1851, aged ninety-two years. They had children: (VII) Albro, Sarah, Margaret, Ann, Daniel and Amanda.

(VII) Albro Akin was born March 6, 1778, and was married three times, as above related in the Akin family record.

James Vander Burgh, the subject proper of this review, is supposed to have been a son of John and Magdalen Vander Burgh, of Poughkeepsie. From a deed in the county clerk's office of said place, he is given land in Dutchess county, in 1752, when his father died. His mother and ten children are also mentioned in the deed. One of the daughters, Magdalen, named for her mother, married Clear Everitt. He it was, no doubt, who built the historic "Clear Everitt House," still standing on the main street in Poughkeepsie, and now known as "Washington Hotel." This house, evidently an hostelry, was the meeting place of the leading men of the Revolution, Governor Clinton, Lafayette and Washington being among its guests. Everitt was at one time sheriff of the county.

From James Vander Burgh are descended many of that name, as well as others, who are scattered in various parts of the United States. One of his descendants, Edgar H. Vander Burgh, of Lithgow, Dutchess county, recently said in a letter to Dr. David W. Vander Burgh, of Fall River, Mass.: "I had heard much through Judge Coffin of Colonel Vander Burgh, of his residence and of his entertainment of Washington in the time of the Revolution, that he (Washington) frequently stopped there over night on his way from Fishkill to Danbury on horseback. He used to stop by the road side near Colonel Vander Burgh's, and with the bridle reins over his shoulder draw water from a well sweep and drink. I had such a reverence for this history that I went to Beekman with Judge Coffin, and found the very well, and the timbers of the old mansion laid on the wall. We took pieces of it and some nails with which it was made, and have them as sacred relics." Another of his great-grandchildren remembers, when very young, being taken by an old colored woman, formerly a slave in Colonel Vander Burgh's family, to see the old house in ruins. The woman told her that there was where General Washington used to visit, and that she remembered seeing him. James Vander Burgh was commissioned lieutenant-colonel on October 17, 1775, and was made colonel March 10, 1778.

James H. Smith's history of Dutchess county says: "A short distance northeast of the hamlet of Poughquag lived, during the Revolution, Col. James Vander Burgh, an officer of some prominence in that struggle," and from the same source we learn that he was appointed assessor of the town of Beekman in 1772, and, in 1775, supervisor, which office he held until 1779. This history also says: "In the New York Provincial Congress and Convention from 1775 to 1779, inclusive, when a State government was formed, Dutchess was represented by men of mark, and among them is the name of Colonel James Vander Burgh." From Lossing's Field Book of the Revolution we glean this bit of knowledge, which is taken from Washington's diary: "May 18, 1781. Set out this day for an interview at Weathersfield with Count de Rochambeau and Admiral Barras. Reached Morgan's tavern, forty-three miles from Fishkill Landing, after dining at Colonel Vander Burgh's." A few days later, during one of Washington's visits, a child was born, and in Vander Burgh's diary it says: "May ye 24, 1781, on Thursday, about eleven o'clock at night, my wife was delivered of her fifth son; we call his name George Washington. God send him his blessing." So the little son was evidently named after their honored guest. Col. Vander Burgh died in Beekman, and was buried there in the sixty-fourth year of his age. One of his descendants, Miss H. Pauline Taylor, of Quaker Hill, has a copy of his epitaph, his will and his diary, all very quaint and interesting.

Of his large family of eighteen children only one died before the parents, and that he was able to support his large family and give each daughter five hundred pounds, and to his sons either money or a prosperous farm, we learn from a copy of his will, so that his life stood out successfully from a financial point of view. But that is not all. Col. Vander Burgh was a man who closely watched and studied public affairs, he was eminently patriotic, and was honored and trusted in civil life as he had been on the field, a Christian patriot and soldier, to duty ever true, to his posterity his memory is a rich inheritance. May they emulate his virtues.

SMITEN (more generally known as S. VINCENT) TRIPP, one of Dutchess county's most successful business men, was born in the town of Clinton, Dutchess Co., N. Y., August 31, 1822, being one of a family of eight children, of whom there is only one surviving member, Mrs. Susan Weed, of Clinton Corners.

Smiten Tripp, his father, who was also a native of Dutchess county, during his early years was engaged at the carpenter's trade, and later purchased the farm where he spent the balance of his life. On November 20, 1806, he married Miss Margaret Wickes, in what is now known as the Cheesman house, which was built by her father, Jacob Wickes, in 1800. Her mother was a Miss Nancy Carle.

S. Vincent Tripp's maternal grandfather, Jacob Wickes, lived during the Revolutionary war on the Creek road. He was surprised one night by the English, and after a severe struggle he assumed insensibility, and was left for dead. One of the bullets fired is still to be seen imbedded in the wall of the room of the conflict. Vincent was the name of our subject's paternal grandmother, she being Miss Hannah Vincent.

In 1848 Mr. Tripp was united in marriage with Miss Catherine Losee, daughter of William Losee, of Dover. She was a woman beloved by all who knew her, always liberal in her charities, and it was greatly by her encouragement and good judgment that Mr. Tripp made his business career so successful. Two children were born to them, a daughter, Priscilla, and a son, Alfred Noxon, the former of whom died at four years of age.

In 1854 Mr. Tripp left the homestead, and removed to New York City, where he engaged in the carting business for the firm of Earle & Co. About two years later he located in Cohoes, Albany county, where he entered the grocery and feed business, with David Bedell. The partnership was discontinued after some three years, and Mr. Tripp removed to the city of Rochester, from which time he was always engaged in the grain business. Toward the close of the Civil war the sudden decline in grain nearly ruined him, he losing over thirty thousand dollars within a few days. Wheat declined one dollar per bushel, corn seventy cents and oats fifty cents. Oats he had been offered one dollar and six cents per bushel he sold for fifty-five cents, and wheat that he had been offered two dollars and sixty cents he sold for one dollar and fifty cents per bushel. Still he did not lose courage, but, backed by his banking house, he looked for his money where he had lost it, and in 1865 returned to New York and engaged in the grain business, until 1867, at Twenty-second street and East river, with A. P. Clark, under the firm name of Tripp & Clark. During 1867 and 1868 he was associated with Jacob Bogart at Thirty-fifth street and East river. From the fall of 1868 until November 1, 1875, Mr. Tripp continued in partnership with George E. Ketcham, at Twenty-second street and North river. In the meantime he had built the "Tripp Elevator" at Thirty-fourth street and North river, which he entered November 1, 1875, with George Rogers and Alexander Bonnell as partners; on November 1, 1879, a new partnership was formed under the firm name of S. V. Tripp & Co., composed of Mr. Tripp, his cousin, Capt. I. C. Wickes, and Alexander Bonnell. Mr. Bonnell retired from the firm November 1, 1881, and since that time the grain business at Thirty-fourth street and North river has remained under the firm name of S. V. Tripp & Co., with only Capt. I. C. Wickes as his partner, until Mr. Tripp's death September 22, 1895. The business continued until May 1, 1896, when Capt. Wickes bought Mr. Tripp's interest in the business.

Mr. Tripp was engaged in many other enterprises. He was a director of the Home Bank of New York, and a member of thirty years' standing of the Produce Exchange. Through all his prosperity and reverses, he never lost courage and energy, but his great success was the Grain-elevator business at Thirty-fourth street and North river, where he made a large fortune; and the business was unequalled by any of the twelve firms engaged in grain business in New York and Brooklyn. In 1886 he removed to Poughkeepsie, and purchased the attractive residence on South Hamilton street.

Mr. Tripp was twice married. His first wife died in 1890, and three years later he married Mrs. Jennie Farrar, daughter of

S. W. Tripp

Thomas Milligan, a marble dealer of Berkshire county, Mass. Rev. F. B. Wheeler officiated at the funeral services of Mr. Tripp September 25, 1895, which were largely attended. Among those present were the officers of The Poughkeepsie National Bank, of which he was vice-president; four of his business partners; a committee of ten from the Produce Exchange; and twenty-three employes from The Elevator who had been in the services of the deceased from ten to twenty-seven years. The interment was in the Poughkeepsie Rural Cemetery. The following resolutions in handsome binding were presented to Alfred N. Tripp:

Whereas the members of the New York Produce Exchange have learned with deep sorrow of the death of S. Vincent Tripp, for many years a member of this Exchange,

Resolved, That in the death of Mr. Tripp the Exchange has lost a valued member, who by his long career as an upright and public-spirited merchant has won the respect and esteem of his fellow members and endeared himself to all his associates;

Resolved, That we extend to his family our sincere sympathy in their great loss, and that a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to them by the Secretary;

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to his memory the President appoint a committee to attend his funeral.

The son, ALFRED N. TRIPP, after leaving business college was for ten or more years associated with his father in the grain business in the office and as superintendent of the elevating department. He was held in great esteem and affection by the employes, who were visibly affected on learning of his decease. In 1888 he married Miss Carrie Eliza Butler, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Egbert C. Butler, of Clinton, Dutchess county. After the family removed to Poughkeepsie he assisted his father in his private business, and was a director of the Poughkeepsie National Bank. He died December 27, 1895, and is survived by Mrs. Tripp and a little daughter, Katherine Grace. The funeral services, conducted by Revs. W. Bancroft Hill and Edward G. Rawson, assisted by a quartette rendering "Lead Kindly Light" and "Thy Will Be Done," were most beautiful, while Mr. Tripp, looked as though asleep among the many flowers he so greatly loved. Among those present were the directors of the Poughkeepsie National Bank and a large delegation from The Elevator. The interment was in the Poughkeepsie Rural Cemetery. The carriers were the same who bore to their last resting place the father and mother of Mr. Tripp.

BENJAMIN HOPKINS. To have held for forty-two consecutive years the office of justice of the peace among intelligent, discerning and independent people, is of itself convincing evidence of the possession of mental ability of a rare order, combined with the moral qualities which inspire and firmly retain public esteem and confidence. Since 1854 the subject of this sketch has presided over the lower tribunal, aptly termed the "People's Court," in the town of East Fishkill, Dutchess county, and when one reflects upon the lawless and unsettled conditions which prevailed here in the earlier days, the force of character, the courage—moral and physical—and above all the tact, necessary for the faithful, and effective discharge of his duties seems notable indeed.

Justice Hopkins comes of an honored ancestry, the first of the line crossing the ocean from England with the first settlers in Massachusetts. It is supposed that Edward Hopkins came over in the "Mayflower." Stephen Hopkins, one of the patriots who signed the Declaration of Independence, was a brother of Benjamin's great-grandfather. The branch of the family to which our subject belongs settled near White Plains, in the town of North Castle, N. Y., in Colonial times, and his grandfather, Benjamin Hopkins, removed to the town of Fishkill, Dutchess county, during the Revolutionary war. He was a native of Rhode Island, and prior to his marriage sailed a vessel along the coast, being engaged in freighting and trading. He married Sarah Palmer, about which time his property was destroyed by the British, and in 1779 he came to Dutchess county, as already noted, where he bought a tract of four hundred acres of land, and where he passed the rest of his life.

John Hopkins, the father of our subject, was born in the town of Fishkill September 6, 1779, one of a family of eight children. He early became familiar with agricultural pursuits upon the home farm, and continued to follow that occupation as a lifework. In 1819 he was united in marriage with Miss Mary Brill, a daughter of John and Hannah (Cornell) Brill, natives of Dutchess county. Her father was of Holland descent. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. John Hopkins located upon the farm now owned by our subject, and there reared their four children: Benjamin, our subject; Gilbert P., who was a merchant of Carthage Landing, Dutchess county, and was killed on a boat in 1846; Solomon P., who was a freight agent in early life, and later engaged in the cattle business in Chicago; and Sarah P., married to S. B. Knox, of Carthage Landing. The father belonged to the Society of Friends, while the mother was a member of the Reformed Dutch Church, and both were earnest, conscientious Christians. In politics he was a Whig, and in his town efficiently served as justice of the peace and overseer of the poor.

Benjamin Hopkins, the subject of this sketch, was born April 18, 1820, in the house which is still his home, and until he was sixteen years of age was never absent from the home farm. His early educational advantages were good, and he took a complete course at the old Dutchess County Academy, Poughkeepsie, which has since been replaced by the Poughkeepsie High School. In 1849 the town of East Fishkill was carved out of the town of Fishkill, and in the following year Mr. Hopkins was elected a member of the board of supervisors, to which office he has been re-elected at intervals for ten terms. Since his first election as justice of the peace he has been re-nominated on the Democratic ticket at the expiration of each term, and his re-election has never been seriously opposed. His present term will not expire until 1901. It is a fact of which he may well be proud that he has never had a case reversed in the upper courts, his decisions being based upon that exact and impartial justice which, when once pointed out, commends itself to every honest man as sound law. So popular is he that one year (1859) he was elected supervisor on the Republican ticket by 200 majority, while, as justice of the peace on the Democratic ticket, he won by a majority of sixty. In 1862 he was appointed deputy collector of Internal Revenue for the towns of East Fishkill, Pawling and Dover, and served three years. He has twice been appointed justice of sessions, and since the passage of the first free-school act of 1847 he has been trustee of the Stormville school district. In early life he was a Whig, but after the defeat of Gen. Scott in 1852 he became a Democrat, and has supported that party ever since. During the Civil war he was active in raising recruits to suppress the Rebellion.

As a business man he has been successful in various callings—farming, clerking, auctioneering and school teaching. In 1842 he began merchandising at Low Point, Dutchess county, but the following year returned to the old homestead, purchasing the interests of the other heirs, and has since engaged in its care and cultivation. He has 290 acres of rich and productive land, on which he has mainly carried on general farming.

On December 6, 1844, Mr. Hopkins was married to Eliza Montfort, a native of the town of Beekman, Dutchess county, and a daughter of Peter and Cornelia (Flagler) Montfort, both of whom belonged to old families of the county. Five children were born of this union: Cornelia, who married John Taber, of Dover, Dutchess county; Phœbe, who died unmarried; Sarah, the wife of William H. Ogden, of Kansas City, Mo.; Lodo V., wife of John Ogden, also of Kansas City; and John G., who is engaged in business at the Exchange Building at Chicago. The wife and mother was called to her final rest in October, 1859. Mr. Hopkins afterward married his present wife, who bore the maiden name of Margaret Lasher. She is a native of Columbia county, N. Y., and a daughter of Jacob Lasher. Seven children have been born to this union: Charles, a promising young lawyer, now of Poughkeepsie; and Benjamin, Mary, Harry W., Bertha M., and George and Edith M. (twins), all at home. Mr. Hopkins is one of the most highly respected and prominent men of his community, always faithfully discharging every trust reposed in him, and has the confidence and esteem of all with whom he has come in contact.

J STERLING BIRD, M. D., a prominent member of the medical profession of Dutchess county, with residence at Hyde Park, was born August 29, 1836, at Winchester, Conn. He is descended from an old Connecticut family, whose founder in America, Thomas Bird, a native of England, located at Hartford about 1644, some ten years after its settlement, and became one of the small freeholders in the place. His son James was the father of John Bird, who was born in 1695, and the son of the latter, Ebenezer Bird, was born in 1739. The next in direct line is David Bird, whose birth occurred in Bethlehem, Conn., in 1776. About 1797 he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Church, by whom he had the following children: Harmon, Joshua, Susan, David (the father of our subject), Lucy, Nancy, Anna, John, Sterling, Frederick and Betsy.

David Bird, Jr., was also a native of Bethlehem, Conn., born March 11, 1804, and was reared upon his father's farm. On reaching manhood he engaged in the manufacture of woolen goods on a small scale, at Winchester, and became one of the successful and prosperous men of his community. He married Eunice Phelps, daughter of Wilcox Phelps, of Norfolk, Conn., and they became the parents of two children: Sarah and J. Sterling (subject of this review). In religious belief the father was a Congregationalist, taking a prominent part in the work of that Church, in which he served as deacon. He was actively interested in political affairs, an unfaltering Abolitionist, and was elected to the State Legislature on the Whig ticket. His death occurred in 1863, that of his wife in 1882.

J. Sterling Bird was educated at Wilbraham, Mass., taking nearly the entire course, and completed his literary training at the age of twenty-two. About 1860 he took up the study of medicine, first entering the Berkshire Medical College, Pittsfield, Mass., which he attended for one term, in the following year entering the College of Physicians & Surgeons, New York City, where he graduated in 1863. He then took some special courses, though it was his intention to engage in general practice. During his four-months' vacation he was at the United States Military Hospital at Newark, N. J. After his graduation he was for a year and a half on the medical staff of the Bellevue Hospital, New York City, and in that way secured much practical knowledge. On April 3, 1865, he arrived in Hyde Park, where he immediately opened an office, and, with the exception of four months in his second year, has uninterruptedly been engaged in practice there. The Doctor is now one of the oldest practitioners in the locality, has been remarkably successful in his treatment of cases, and not only does he rank high among his professional brethren, but is one of the leading and substantial citizens of the town.

Dr. Bird was married, in 1871, to Alice E. Jones, of Hyde Park, daughter of Rev. J. W. Jones, a Baptist minister, and to them were born two children: John Sterling, at home; and Alice E., who died when about a year old. Although the Doctor is a stalwart Republican, he has taken no active part in political affairs; but he is a public-spirited citizen, at all times willing to aid in promoting the welfare of his adopted county. He has served as health officer, and is a prominent member of the Dutchess County Medical Society. An earnest, Christian gentleman, he is connected with the Reformed Dutch Church of Hyde Park, in which he has served as one of the officials. Though of a retiring disposition, the Doctor has gained many warm friends in his locality, and by all he is held in the highest regard.

MENRY A. HOLMES, a prominent business man of Pawling, Dutchess county, is the treasurer of the Pawling Savings Bank, and the sole proprietor of one of the oldest and most substantial business enterprises of that vicinity, the firm having been founded by the well-known pioneer merchant, J. W. Stark.

Mr. Holmes can trace his descent from two patriots of Revolutionary times, one being his great-grandfather, John Holmes. His paternal ancestors were among the early settlers of Westchester county, N. Y., the family homestead being at Pound Ridge, where our subject's grandfather, John Holmes, was born during the Revolutionary war. He followed farming there until he was about fifty years old when he came to the town of Pawling, Dutchess county, accompanied by his son Samuel, our subject's father, who was born at Pound Ridge in 1808, and at the time of the removal was about eighteen years old. Samuel Holmes remained with his father, who was a farmer by occupation, until 1836, when he went to New York City, and was for twelve years engaged in the trunk business, in which he was but moderately successful. He was married in 1834, to Hannah L. Peck, daughter of Henry and Betsey (Dean) Peck, granddaughter in the maternal line of Elijah Dean, an officer in the Revolutionary war. Of their three children, the subject of this sketch was the eldest; Caroline L. married J. C. Merritt, of Putnam county, and died in 1868; and James G. died at the age of twenty-two. The mother died in 1854, and the father, soon afterward, returned to Dutchess county and bought a farm southwest of the village of Pawling. He met with success as a farmer, and was accounted a man of good business judgment. In later years he was extensively engaged in the business of furnishing lumber and ties for the Harlem railroad. Although not a politician he was always a Democrat in principle, and took an interest in all measures for local improvements. He was reared a Presbyterian, and contributed generously to that Church until his death in 1885.

Henry A. Holmes first saw the light at Patterson, Putnam county, February 13, 1836. His education was obtained in Public School No. 4, Rivington street, New York, and at Mr. Benedict's select school at Patterson, these advantages and his subsequent reading giving him a good store of knowledge. On entering business life he spent one year as a clerk in a retail feed store in New York, and a year and a half in clerking for his uncle, R. J. Dean, of Patterson. He then went home and worked upon the farm for a year, when he formed a partnership with his uncle in the lumber and feed business under the firm name of Dean & Holmes. After three years he sold his interest to Mr. Dean, and February 1, 1865, he bought a one-third interest in the general mercantile store of J. W. Stark & Co., the firm consisting of Mr. Stark, William J. Merwin and Mr. Holmes. In 1877, Mr. Stark withdrew and the firm became Merwin & Holmes, and so continued until the death of Mr. Merwin in 1892, when Mr. Holmes purchased his interest. This business, now one of the largest in the southeastern part of the county, had its origin in a small store opened by Mr. Stark in 1848, near the railroad at Pawling, and with the exception of a few years which Mr. Stark spent in New Milford it has been continued ever since. In addition to this enterprise, Mr. Holmes has given much attention to the affairs of the Pawling Savings Bank, which was organized under the act of May 7, 1870, the charter being accepted September 10, 1890. This is one of the most carefully managed banking institutions in that locality, J. I. Wanzer being the president. Mr. Holmes is one of the trustees, and succeeded Mr. Merwin as treasurer, the office having been held by him from the first. In all his enterprises, Mr. Holmes has displayed conservative judgment, combined with energetic execution of plans once decided upon, and to these qualities his success may be attributed. In politics he is a Republican, and on all national issues he has voted for the candidates of that party at every election, since his first ballot was given for Abraham Lincoln, but in local affairs he is independent. He has held the office of commissioner of highways for one term.

In 1867, Mr. Holmes was united in matrimony with Ruth A. Shove, a native of the town of Pawling. Her father, Daniel Shove, a carpenter by trade, was born in Dover, but for many years was a resident of Pawling, and now lives at Wellsboro, Penn. Three sons were born of this marriage, and their education has been carefully conducted at Bisbee's Military School at Riverview. George S. is now assisting his father in the store; Frederick W. has just completed his course at school; and Henry A., Jr., is still a student. The family attend the Methodist Church, and Mr. Holmes is a generous supporter of its work.

ROBERT K. TUTHILL, M. D., of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, is of English ancestry. His great-grandfather, Samuel Tuthill, came from England, and settled on Long Island; but after a time removed to Orange county, N. Y., where he remained the rest of his life. Our subject's father, whose name was also Samuel, was likewise a member of the medical profession, and for many years was a leading practitioner in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., to which place he came in 1848.

Dr. Robert K. Tuthill was born in Newburgh, N. Y., January 18, 1835. Early in life he showed an inclination to follow in the footsteps of his father, and was thoroughly educated, with the view of making the practice of medicine and surgery his life work, graduating at the New York Medical College in 1859. After receiving his degree, he began his professional career in Poughkeepsie, and was engaged in active practice there, at the breaking out of the Rebellion, in 1861. With characteristic patriotism, he offered his services to his country, and was appointed assistant surgeon of the Twentieth N. Y. S. M. For faithfulness in the discharge of his duties in this capacity he was in April, 1863, promoted to the position of regimental surgeon of the 145th Infantry, and in June of the same year was made brigade surgeon of the First Brigade, First Division, Twelfth Corps. Early in 1864, he was appointed surgeon-in-chief of Division. He had charge of the Fredericksburg hospital in 1862, was in all the chief battles of the "army of the Potomac," and also did duty in the "army of the Cumberland."

and ties of the Hageron railroad. Although not a politician he was always a Democrat in principle, and took no interest in all matters of local and departmental. He was raised a Presbyterian, and contributed generously to this Church until his death in 1885.

Henry A. Holmes first saw the light at Putnam in Putnam county, February 12, 1836. His education was obtained in Public School No. 4, Kingston street, New York, and at Mr. Benedict's school at Patterson. His advancement and his subsequent teaching speaking him a good name of knowledge. On returning home he first worked on his farm, and a year later a school in working. He was married to J. Linné of Putnam. His first wife having died several years she was by a year, when he married a partner with her name in the London and had in accordance the formation of "Holmes & Holmes." After three years he sold his interest to Mr. Davis, and, consequently, since he bought a one third interest in the general partnership of Mr. J. Linné of Putnam, the first partner of Mr. Holmes, and Mr. Holmes, in 1861, the first partner with him from that time. He is a member of the firm of Mr. Merwin in 1861, when Mr. Holmes purchased his interest. This business is one of the largest in the southeastern part of the county, had its origin in a small store opened by Mr. Smith, through the railroad of Putnam, and with the exception of a few years, which Mr. Holmes spent in New York, it has been continued ever since. As a member of the partnership, Mr. Holmes has done much attention to the affairs of the Putnam Savings Bank, which was organized under the act of May 7, 1860, the charter being assumed September 10, 1860. This is one of the most carefully managed banking institutions in this locality, J. I. Water being the president. Mr. Holmes is one of the trustees, and succeeded Mr. Merwin in this position, the same having been held by him from the first. In all his enterprises, Mr. Holmes has displayed common sense, judgment, combined with energetic execution of plans once decided upon, and to these qualities his success may be attributed. In politics he is a Republican, and on all national issues he has voted for the candidates of that party at every election, since his first ballot was given for Abraham Lincoln, but in local affairs he is independent. the office of commissioner of highways for one term.

His only, Mr. Holmes was united in matrimony with Miss A. Shove, a native of the town of Putnam. Her father, Daniel Shove, a carpenter by trade, was born in Dover, Mass. for many years was a resident of Putnam, and now lives at Wellborn, Penn. Three sons were born of the marriage, and their education has been carefully conducted at Bishop's Primary School at Kiverview. George is now attending in a lady in the store; Fred and W. have just completed his course at school, and Henry J., Jr., is still a student. The family attend the Methodist Church, and Mr. Holmes is a generous supporter of its work.

ROBERT K. TUTHILL, M. D., of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, is of English ancestry. His great-grandfather, Samuel Tuttle, came from England, and settled on Long Island, but after a time removed to Orange county, N. Y., where he remained the rest of his life. Our subject's father, whose name was also Samuel, was likewise a member of the medical profession, and for many years was a practicing practitioner in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., to which place he came in 1848.

Dr. Robert K. Tuttle was born in Newburgh, N. Y., January 18, 1835. Early in life he showed an inclination to follow in the footsteps of his father, and was thoroughly educated with the view of making the practice of medicine and surgery his life work, graduating in the New York Medical College in 1856. After receiving his degree, he began his professional career in Poughkeepsie, and was engaged in active practice there, at the breaking out of the Rebellion, in 1861. again resumed private practice in Poughkeepsie, and was a member of the Surgical Staff of St. Barnabas Hospital, from the time it was organized, in 1870, until it was closed, in 1887. He was then selected by the Founders of Vassar Brothers' Hospital on its opening, in 1887, to be one of its surgeons, which position he is still filling. He is considered a skillful surgeon, his experience while serving his country being of great advantage to him. He has served three times as health officer of Poughkeepsie; for two terms in succession was president of the Dutchess County Medical Society, and has been a permanent member of the New York State Medical Society since 1880. He also belongs to Hamilton Post No. 20, G. A. R., Poughkeepsie, and is a member of the Loyal Legion of America. Dr. Tuthill is also a Knight Templar. Politically, he is a stanch Republican, but has never run for an elective office. In the year 1864 he married a Poughkeepsie lady, and has one daughter.

Constant, untiring work in his profession has made periods of rest and recuperation a necessity to him, and these he has found in quite extensive travel in this and other countries. Twice, accompanied by his family, he has spent several months abroad visiting the principal places and nearly all of the capitals of Great Britain and of the Continent. And while he was there gaining physical strength, he also embraced the opportunity of visiting many of the hospitals and attending clinics in the Old World, thus seeking new methods and better knowledge for his great work at home. His residence is at No. 313 Mill street, where he has a capacious office, an extensive and well-selected medical and general library and a beautiful home. He is a member of the First Reformed Church, and has hosts of friends, who believe in him, because he has proved himself a true and sincere man and a conscientious, faithful and vigilant physician.

REV. FRANCIS BROWN WHEELER, D. D., who has been for more than half a century a minister of the Gospel, and for thirty-six years the honored pastor of the First Presbyterian Church at Poughkeepsie, is descended from several families whose names are conspicuous in the early history of this country.

The ancestors of the Wheeler line came from Wales about 1650, and settled at Dunbarton, N. H. William Wheeler, our subject's great-grandfather, was born in 1728, probably in Salem, N. H., and died March 1, 1804. His home was at Dunbarton, where he was a prominent citizen in his day. He served through the French and Indian war, and throughout the Revolutionary war, being mustered into service for the latter struggle by Gen. Washington. He took part in the battle of Bunker Hill under Gen. Stark. In the earlier war he was a member of the N. H. Rangers at Fort Ticonderoga, in 1755, commanded by Capt. Robert Rogers, and was captured by the Indians, but escaped by his wit and agility as they were about to tomahawk him. His wife, Sarah —, was born in 1735, and died March 15, 1803. Their son William, Jr., was also a soldier in the Revolutionary war, taking part in the battles of Bennington, Vt., and White Plains, New York.

Their son, Daniel Wheeler, the grandfather of our subject, was born in Salem, N. H., in 1763, and died in Warner, N. H., in 1840. He suffered imprisonment at one time for refusing to pay the ministerial tax at Dunbarton. He married Polly Davis, who was born in Amesbury, Mass., in 1772, and died in Warner, N. H., in 1862. She was a lineal descendant of Hannah Dustan, of historical fame.

Hosea Wheeler, our subject's father, was born March 8, 1791, at Dunbarton, N. H., and died January 27, 1823, at Eastport, Maine. He was a Baptist minister, and for many years lived at Newburyport, Mass. He married Sarah Wines, born August 12, 1788, the daughter of Rev. Abijah Wines, an eminent clergyman, and the first professor of theology in the Theological Seminary at Bangor, Maine. Her grandfather, Hon. Benjamin Giles, was prominent in our Colonial history, the chairman of the Committee of Safety at Newport, N. H., and a member of the State Provincial Congress. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler the following children were born: Elizabeth, Sarah A., Francis Brown, Sarah and Mary.

Dr. Francis B. Wheeler, whose long service in the Christian ministry has so well sustained the honor of this distinguished ancestry, was born at North Adams, Mass., September 9, 1818, and in 1842 was graduated from the University of Vermont with a number of classmates who have since attained high standing in diplomatic and judicial affairs; among them were ex-Vice-President Wheeler, Hon. John Kasson, Hon. Robert S. Hale and Hon. E. J. Hamilton. His grandfather, father and four uncles had been clergymen, and from boyhood he had been filled with the desire to follow in their footsteps. After studying at Andover Theological Seminary, and with Rev. J. W. Ward, an eminent theologian of Massachusetts, he was ordained and installed as pastor of the Congregational Church at Jericho Centre, Vt., January 22, 1845. During his five-years' pastorate there he was for two years superintendent of the common schools in Chittenden county, Vt. On May 29, 1850, he became pastor of the Congregational Church at Brandon, Vt., and while there was appointed secretary of the Vermont Sabbath School Union, and also one of the examining committee of the University of Vermont. He left Brandon September 7, 1854, and removed to Saco, Maine, where he assumed charge of the First Congregational Church December 6, 1854. His work there was attended with marvelous success, the great revival of 1857-58 being unprecedented in the history of the State. For three months meetings were held every day, at which the pastor officiated, preaching from house to house, and many prominent professional and business men with their families were brought into the Church. The vigor of the climate there endangered the health of his family, and Dr. Wheeler was compelled to relinquish this beloved charge and accept a call from the First Presbyterian Church at Poughkeepsie, where he was installed May 12, 1859. It is interesting to note that whenever he has left a charge the congregations were reluctant to sever their relations, protesting by unanimous and affectionate remonstrance against his removal. During his pastorate in Poughkeepsie the Church has grown and prospered until it is now one of the largest in the city.

One of the secrets of his success is the absence of cant and stock phrases so often found in pulpit oratory. He is simple and practical in his statements of truth, and bases his appeals to conscience and the sense of duty upon reason, calmly leaving the results to appear in time as convictions gradually dawn upon the hearer. He is faithful, also, in the discharge of the arduous duty of pastoral visitation, which may be another secret of his helpfulness and influence. He belongs to the Calvinistic school, but his sermons are never dogmatic in tone or controversial in manner, dealing rather with the practical problems of spiritual progress. Many valuable treatises from his pen have appeared in the religious and secular press, and he is the author of several Church hymns. He is an interesting and forcible speaker upon general subjects, and has made special addresses on various occasions. Dr. Wheeler is a member of the Massachusetts Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, and of the New York Society of Colonial Wars. Many honors have been bestowed upon him, his Alma Mater conferring the degree of A. M. in 1845, and from Hamilton College he received the honorary degree of S. T. D. in 1868. In 1888 the University of Vermont conferred upon him the same degree. In 1878 President Hayes appointed him a member of the Board of Visitors at West Point Military Academy.

Dr. Wheeler has been married three times, first on September 16, 1843, at Williston, Vt., to Charlotte A. Parmalee, daughter of Rev. Simeon Parmalee, D. D., for many years a leading clergyman of the Congregational Church in Vermont. She died March 1, 1853, leaving no children, and October 26, 1854. Dr. Wheeler was married to Eliza Dana, daughter of Hon. A. G. Dana, M. D., LL. D., of Brandon, Vt. Her mother, Eliza Fuller, was a lineal descendant of Samuel Fuller, who came over in the "Mayflower." She died September 1, 1865, leaving three daughters: Winifred Dana (now Mrs. Joseph B. Bisbee), Emma G. and Harriet Wickes. On October 25, 1876, Dr. Wheeler married his present wife, Charlotte P. Wickes, daughter of Rev. Thomas S. Wickes, and his wife, Julia Penniman, who is a direct descendant of Gov. Bradford, of "Mayflower" fame. One daughter was born of this union, Julia Wickes Wheeler, born March 27, 1878.

On January 23, 1895, a notable anniversary was held in Poughkeepsie in honor of Dr. Wheeler's fifty years of ministerial labor. Denominational lines were broken down, and representatives of all creeds joined in honoring a career in which the love for and faith in the Master whom all aim to follow has been so abundantly shown. In the afternoon a reception was held in the church, followed by a collation which assumed the aspect of a family Thanksgiving Dinner. Rev. Father Nilan, of St. Peter's Catholic Church, was among the after-dinner speakers, and said that in eighteen years of his life in Poughkeepsie he has come to look upon Dr. Wheeler as a friend. They had talked together and fought together—not very bitterly to be sure—and it was evidence of progress that one of their discussions had been about doctrines which in former times caused men to burn each other, yet they had not lost their mutual love and respect. Other speakers were Rev. Dr. Van Gieson, of Poughkeepsie, and Mr. William W. Smith, who spoke for the trustees; there were present also Rev. Dr. D. J. McMillan, secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions; Rev. Dr. T. Ralston Smith, Stated Clerk of the Synod of New York; Rev. Duncan C. Niven and wife, of Highland; Rev. Edgar Beckwith and wife, of Pleasant Valley; Rev. James Otis Denniston, of Cooperstown; Rev. C. H. Snedeker; Rev. Wayland Spaulding; Rev. Dr. Strobbridge; Rev. Robert Farrier; Rev. Fields Hermance; Rev. William Bancroft Hill; and Mr. Cartland, representing the Society of Friends. In the evening a large public meeting was held, addressed by Dr. McMillan and Dr. Smith, which closed with the singing of an original hymn by Rev. John McNaughton, D. D. Letters were read from friends in all parts of the Union, many testifying gratefully to the worth and effectiveness of Dr. Wheeler's labors, one coming from a successful pastor in Ohio, who had been influenced by him to leave the carpenter's bench for the ministry.

A remarkable fact in Dr. Wheeler's life is that in his half-century of work he has never been kept from ministerial duty by sickness more than nine days. This he attributes to a good constitution, strengthened by the simple healthful life of his early years upon the farm, with plenty of work, relieved by wholesome diversions.

On Sabbath morning, September 22, 1895, owing to the weight of increasing years, Rev. Dr. Wheeler presented his resignation, as pastor of the Church to which he had so faithfully ministered for thirty-six years. He was made Pastor-Emeritus; but as his successor was not chosen, up to the time of his death, but a few months later, Dr. Wheeler remained to the end the pastor of the Church. Very suddenly came the summons for him to enter into life everlasting. "On the 27th of December, 1895, the Angel of Death entered into the household of a beloved disciple, the Rev. Dr. F. B. Wheeler. Scarcely had the air ceased to vibrate with the joyous Christmas song of the angelic host, when he who has walked in white for thirty-six years through the streets of the city of Poughkeepsie, an epistle known and read of all men, passed into his dismantled home with a scholar's love and care for his books, to arrange for their removal to a new habitation. Soon after, the angel, at first unrecognized, touched him; there was a brief season of helplessness, in which it was given his family to gather around him, a quiet child-like sleep, and then the angel took his hand and led him through the group of loving and sorrowing ones, and in a moment his oft-repeated text was verified, and his eyes beheld 'the King in His beauty.'

"A man of wonderful poise, of encompassing catholic spirit, of broad patriotic views, commanding the respect and love of all classes and conditions of men, he so walked with God in the presence of all the people, that those who knew him feel they will never look upon his like again, while all feel the whole city is impoverished because this gentle spirit is not, for his Lord has taken him."

JOAQUIM MARILL, M. D., a prominent physician of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, was born at Havana, Cuba, December 21, 1841, son of Joaquim Marill and Eugenia Alvarez, the former of whom was a wealthy planter and sugar grower.

Our subject was educated at his native place, graduating from the University of Havana in 1860, and then went to Paris in order to study medicine. In July, 1861, he came to Philadelphia, and in October of the same year he joined the 137th Regiment, P. V. I., as surgeon, and was sent to the front. At the second battle of Bull Run he was taken prisoner, and was confined in Libby prison until September 24, 1864, when he was exchanged. On reporting for duty, he was ordered to Sickelboro Hospital, at Alexandria, Va., where he remained until receiving his discharge from the service in July, 1865. Returning to Havana, he in 1866, before the Rebellion, joined the Spanish army as surgeon, remaining until 1870. In that year, on account of his political views being in sympathy with his countrymen, he came back to the United States, and began the practice of his profession at Highland, Ulster county, in 1874 removing to Poughkeepsie, where he has practiced ever since, with the exception of eight months he spent in Vera Cruz during the yellow-fever epidemic of 1886, during which period he was commodore-surgeon of the Alexandria fleet. After his return to Poughkeepsie he resumed his practice, and has met with remarkable success.

In 1874 Mr. Marill was married, at Highland, N. Y., to Miss Amanda W. Caire, a daughter of Louis Caire, and they have three children: Minnie, Maria and Pilar. The Doctor is an active member of the K. of P., American Legion of Honor, Knights of Honor, and of the United Friends, while politically, he is a staunch supporter of the Republican party.

Our subject's father, who was a wealthy planter and broker, was descended from an old titled family, known until his death as the Marquez and Count of Palestine. Our subject's mother, Eugenia Alvarez, was a close descendant of the house of Alva and Alvarez, one of the older Spanish titles, dating back to the sixteenth century, in the reign of Philip II.

ISAAC PLATT came of pioneer ancestry in Dutchess county, all of the name in this country tracing their descent from the same source. Eliphalet Platt, his grandfather, came to Dutchess county at an early date, and settled northeast of the site of Poughkeepsie, where he followed agricultural pursuits. His death occurred in Dutchess county, and his remains were buried at Pleasant Valley. He married Hannah Causten, and reared a family of children, among whom was a son Joseph, our subject's father, who also engaged in farming. He wielded great influence in his locality, in a quiet way, and was a leader in political and religious affairs. He and his wife, Hannah Barnes, had three children: Isaac, Joseph Causten, and Catharine, who died in girlhood.

Isaac Platt was born in 1803, in Albany county, N. Y., where his parents made their home for a short time, but the greater part of his early life was spent in the town of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county. He attended school there, and as a young man became a member of a debating club which met in a little school house near his home, and had no small influence upon his education and his subsequent career. One of its members, Horatio Potter, afterward became bishop of

New York; another, Alonzo Potter, was bishop of Pennsylvania, and another, John Kennedy, became prominent in the M. E. Church. These young men were then apprentices in the printing office and book store kept by Paraclete Potter, publisher of the Poughkeepsie Journal, and being warm friends of Mr. Platt, influenced him to enter the same employment. He served an apprenticeship as a printer, and then began teaching school. About the year 1824 the Democratic party was in need of a new organ in Poughkeepsie, and Isaac Platt and William Sands were employed to publish it under the firm name of Sands & Platt. In accordance with this arrangement the Poughkeepsie Telegraph was started, the first issue appearing May 5, 1824. This afterward became the News-Telegraph, and is still the Democratic organ of the county.

During the political discussions of 1828 all the papers in the city favored Andrew Jackson, leaving the Whigs with no mouthpiece, and to meet this need the Dutchess Intelligencer was started. It failed, however, and was purchased by Isaac Platt and Frederick Parsons, who continued it; but the returns were so small that Mr. Parsons decided to abandon it. Mr. Platt wished to keep on, and offered Mr. Parsons $7.00 per week to remain as his assistant. The offer was accepted, Mr. Parsons regarding this munificent sum as better than a share in doubtful profits, and gave up his interest as a partner. In spite of discouragements the paper began to prosper under Mr. Platt's management. In 1833 it was consolidated with the Dutchess Republican, which had been in existence for some time. The new name—The Intelligencer and Republican—was changed during the following year to The Eagle. In 1843 Mr. Platt bought out his partner, Thomas S. Ranney, who went to India under the auspices of the Baptist Church, and in 1844 the Eagle was united with the Journal, William Schram joining Mr. Platt in the new firm of Platt & Schram. The daily issue was started December 4, 1860. Mr. Platt was a fearless champion of the right as he saw it, and the Eagle denounced the fugitive slave law during Fillmore's administration, although Mr. Platt was holding office at the time as postmaster of Poughkeepsie, having been appointed by President Taylor. He was the chairman of the boundary commission that established the line between New York and Connecticut in 1860, and during the Civil war he served as provost marshal of the Congressional district, making the first draft. In local affairs he always took a keen interest; he was a warm friend of the public-school system, and as a member of the board of education helped to introduce many reforms in the city schools. He was a pioneer advocate of a railroad along the river from New York City to Albany, and wrote a series of articles in the interests of that project, which were published in a New York paper, signing himself "Civil Engineer." All phases of progress commanded his sympathy, and he was a leader in social life and in religious work as a member of the Episcopal Church. He died June 5, 1872, leaving a widow, Mrs. Harriet (Bowne) Platt, and five children: John I., James Bowne, Edmund Pendleton, Henry Barnes (now a resident of New York City) and Harriet Bowne. Mrs. Platt, to whom he was married in 1836, was born in 1804, and died in 1892, aged eighty-eight years. She was a daughter of Obadiah Bowne, a well-known citizen of Dutchess county.

HON. JOHN I. PLATT, editor of the Poughkeepsie Eagle, is a man whose work in the development of this section has won for him a place among our leading citizens, and the following history, in its brief resumé of his useful career, furnishes an example which is well worthy of emulation.

Mr. Platt is a native of Poughkeepsie, born June 29, 1839 (his father, Isaac Platt, being referred to in the preceding sketch). He obtained an education in the schools of his native place, and as a young man learned the printer's trade in his father's office, being advanced later to responsible positions in the office of publication. On April 1, 1865, he purchased Mr. Schram's interest, and became a partner in the conduct of the paper with his father, the firm being Isaac Platt & Son. In 1869 James B. Platt, another son, took an interest in the concern, and at the death of Isaac Platt the two brothers continued the business, the firm of Platt & Platt being founded. The Eagle is still published under this firm name, though in 1893 our subject's son, Edmund Platt, became a member of it. The plant was moved to its present quarters in 1867. At the time the Daily Eagle was started, Mr. Platt was telegraph editor, and during the war he held this position, taking charge of what was then the most important news. In 1865 he became manager, and since 1872 he has been the editor-in-chief.

Political questions interested Mr. Platt from an early age, and as soon as he attained his majority he entered into active work as a supporter of Republican principles, stumping the county for Abraham Lincoln, and making eight or ten speeches. He is a talented speaker, and his services have been called into requisition in each succeeding Presidential campaign. In 1865 the city of Poughkeepsie was organized in four independent departments, causing great irregularities in administration, and a new charter being desired a committee of twelve was appointed to secure it. Mr. Platt, as a member of this body, drew up the charter as it was presented to the Legislature and passed. In 1895 he was among the committee chosen to revise the charter; but as the amendments did not pass, it was again remodeled, and in 1896 received legislative sanction. Mr. Platt served three years on the water board, being its president for the year succeeding the completion of the works, and he did much to shape the action of the board on a business basis. In 1886, '87 and '88 he was a member of the State Assembly, but declined to run for another term. He served on the committee on public education, and for two years was chairman thereof. For three years he served on the committee on appropriations, and during his last year he was chairman of the committee on revision, each bill, before its third reading, being sent to this committee for correction. Mr. Platt did much effective work while in the legislature, serving ably and faithfully his constituency and the interests of the State at large. From April, 1891, to April, 1895, he was postmaster of Poughkeepsie, and for eleven years he was one of the board of managers of the Hudson River State Hospital, having been appointed by Gov. Cornell.

Mr. Platt is connected with several business enterprises. He has been a member of the Poughkeepsie Board of Trade since its organization, has served three years as president, and is now vice-president. He was one of the incorporators of the Poughkeepsie City Railway Co. (horse-power), and was president for one year. His earnest advocacy of a bridge across the Hudson at Poughkeepsie was a notable service to that section, and the enterprise will always reflect honor upon him as the original projector and active promoter. He assisted H. G. Eastman (then a member of the legislature) and P. P. Dickinson, in securing the charter authorizing its erection, and did much to raise the money needed. Mr. Platt visited Boston, Philadelphia, and other cities in his effort to interest capitalists and railroad men, and through A. L. Dennis, then a director of the Pennsylvania railroad, secured a large subscription from the directors of that company toward the project. The panic of 1873 interfered with this arrangement, however, and some time elapsed before the matter was revived with a promise of success. The American Bridge Co. undertook it, but failed after the work was begun, and again the enterprise was halted. In 1886 a new construction company, composed mainly of Philadelphia capitalists, took hold of it and carried it to completion. In 1887 Mr. Platt secured an extension of the charter, after a bitter struggle in the legislature, and then, acting upon the well-proven principle that "if you want a thing done well you should do it yourself," he started the construction of the connecting railroad on the west, making contracts and grading several miles on his own responsibility, before the work was turned over to the company. Mr. Platt is president and treasurer of the Chazy (N. Y.) Marble Lime Co., which manufactures about thirty-three tons of lime per day.

The oratorical gifts which have made Mr. Platt's services sought for in political campaigns are valued in other fields, and he was chosen to deliver an address on July 26, 1888, at the celebration of the centennial of the Ratification of the Constitution of the United States by the State of New York.

On June 3, 1862, Mr. Platt was united in marriage with Miss Susan F. Sherwood, of Montgomery, Orange Co., N. Y., daughter of Benjamin C. and Abbie A. (Strong) Sherwood. Seven children have brightened their home, of whom one died in infancy; Edmund is his father's partner; Eliza S. married George L. Hubbell, of Garden City, L. I.; Sarah S. is the wife of G. Arthur Hadsell, of Plainville, Conn.; and Isaac, Francis W. and Edith M. are at home.

Active as Mr. Platt has been in business and political lines, religious and philanthropic work has found in him a generous helper, while socially he and his family hold a high place. For many years he has been a member of the Presbyterian Church, and he was one of the founders of the Y. M. C. A., of Poughkeepsie, and served as its president for a term. He has been a delegate to numerous State and National conventions of the associations, and was secretary of the international convention at Washington, D. C. At the State convention held at Lockport, N. Y., he was the president. He was also first chairman of the State Executive Committee, and served in that capacity for several years.

EDMUND P. PLATT, member of the well-known leading dry-goods firm of Luckey, Platt & Co., Poughkeepsie, and one of the successful and representative citizens of the county, is a native of Poughkeepsie, born December 2, 1843, to Isaac and Harriet (Bowne) Platt.

Our subject received his education at the Dutchess County Academy, Poughkeepsie, and at the age of sixteen commenced clerking for W. S. & W. H. Crosby, a well-known dry-goods firm of the city, with whom he remained several years, or until they sold out to J. N. & G. W. Candee, Mr. Platt then continuing with the latter, in the same store, until 1869. On March 22, of that year, he formed a partnership with C. P. Luckey, under the firm name of Luckey & Platt, which later was changed to Luckey, Platt & Co., by the association of S. L. De Garmo into the business. In 1896 Mr. Luckey died, and Messrs. Platt and De Garmo purchased the deceased's interest, still, however, retaining the old firm name. The business, which was comparatively small at first, has steadily grown until it is to-day the largest in the county, in the dry-goods line. The premises at first occupied by the store were at No. 328 Main street, whence, in August, 1874, it was removed to the present site No. 332 Main street; since occupying which, the firm have found it necessary to enlarge the store from time to time, as business increased, the last addition being made in 1890, and it now occupies the entire building, Nos. 332, 334 and 336 Main street.

In 1870 Edmund P. Platt was united in marriage with Miss Mary Emily Bartlett, daughter of Charles and Emily (Vedder) Bartlett, of Poughkeepsie, Mr. Bartlett being the founder and owner of the Poughkeepsie Collegiate School on College Hill, which has since been merged into Riverview Academy. To Mr. and Mrs. Platt have been born four children, to wit: Emily, Miriam, Howard and Alletta. Mr. and Mrs. Platt are members of the First Presbyterian Church of Poughkeepsie.

Edmund P. Platt

sie, in which he is an elder, and of the Sunday-school of which he has been superintendent for eighteen years; has also held several other offices in connection with the Church and Sunday-school in the county and State. In the Young Men's Christian Association he has been very active, holding office as president, treasurer or director for more than twenty years. For the past eighteen years Mr. Platt has been the chairman of the New York State Executive Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association. He is also actively engaged as an officer or director in many missionary and benevolent enterprises both at home and in foreign lands. He is one of the trustees of the new "Rescue Mission" of Poughkeepsie, and chairman of its executive and building committees. In his political preferences he has always been a staunch Republican, and at the same time is an earnest advocate of the Temperance cause.

All in all, Mr. Platt has proved himself to be one of the most useful men in the community, being assisted in all his works of philanthropy by his amiable wife, who is also very active in works of charity. Personally, Mr. Platt is a gentleman of sterling integrity, interested in everything that is for the good of the community and the best interests of mankind. His friendships are of that lasting nature which close only with the final summons.

JOHN CALHOUN OTIS, M. D., is without doubt one of the best known and most successful physicians of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, and to any one familiar with the high character of the fraternity in that city this will at once convey an idea of merit far beyond the ordinary.

Dr. Otis is a native of Dutchess county, having been born in the town of Stanford, January 4, 1847. He is descended from an old English family, and from James Otis, of Boston, a noted personage in the early days. The Doctor's grandfather, Henry Otis, was born in Massachusetts, and passed the greater portion of his active business life as a contractor in Boston, where he died in 1812. He had two sons and seven daughters, none of whom are now living.

Hon. John H. Otis, our subject's father, was born in 1809 at New Brunswick, N. J., where the family resided for a short time. He learned the carriage maker's trade, and at eighteen years of age went to Charleston, S. C., to engage in business in the firm of Otis & Roulane. In 1846 he disposed of his interest and came to Dutchess county, where he purchased about 700 acres of land in the town of Stanford, three miles from Bangall. This he sold in 1855, and then moved to Poughkeepsie, where for some time he was interested with E. B. Osborne in the Telegraph, now merged into the News Press. For many years he was a director of the Merchants Bank, and at the time of his death was the oldest member of the board. He was a man of strong character and positive views, an Old-line Democrat in politics, and an active participant in the movements of his time. During the Nullification troubles of 1832 he was a member of a company of "Northern Volunteers" in Charleston, S. C., and he served in Florida during the Seminole war, as a sergeant under Andrew Jackson. When the Civil war broke out, he supported the Union cause, and raised the first company of soldiers sent from Dutchess county—Company E, 30th N. Y. V. I. He had expected to go to the front as their captain, but gave way to Capt Harrison Holliday, who was killed in the service. This regiment saw some hard fighting, and made an honorable record. Later Mr. Otis was offered the colonelcy of the 150th Reg. N. Y. V. I., but declined it; he went to the front, however, in 1863 as captain of Company K, 16th Heavy Artillery, their first engagement being at Yorktown. His health failed after about nine months' service in the field, and he returned home.

As a citizen he possessed great popularity and influence. While in the town of Stanford he served seven terms as supervisor, and during the war he once came within seven votes of being elected mayor of Poughkeepsie, then a Republican stronghold. For several years he served on the board of health and the board of education, and in 1852-3 he was elected to the State Senate, but after one term of two years he declined a re-nomination on account of ill health. He was an active member of St. Paul's Church, and for twenty years held the office of vestryman. In 1842, while on a visit to the North for the summer, he met and married Miss Ann B. Buckman, a member of a prominent family of Dutchess county, daughter of Seneca Buckman, and granddaughter of Dr. Amasa Buckman, of the town of Stanford, a graduate of Oxford University, England. She died in Poughkeepsie, in 1860, at the age of thirty-seven, from pneumonia, leaving two children: (1) Mary, wife of Dr. W. R. Case, of Poughkeepsie, and (2) Dr. J. C. Otis, of this sketch. The father passed away in July, 1887, aged seventy-eight years.

Dr. John C. Otis was about eight years old when his parents moved to Poughkeepsie, where, in the Dutchess Academy, and in John R. Leslie's school his education was mainly acquired. In 1863 and 1864 he served in the quartermaster's department at Milwaukee, Wis. For a time he attended the University of Vermont, and then, in 1865, he began his professional studies in Harts Village, with Dr. Case. In March, 1868, he was graduated from the New York Homeopathic College, and in June of that year he completed the medical course at the University of Vermont (Allopathic), having carried on the work of both schools at the same time. Then came the perplexing question of a location, and after six months at Erie, Penn., and two years at Millbrook, Dutchess county, he finally settled at Poughkeepsie, beginning his practice there January 1, 1872, with Dr. Hall, an old practitioner. Two years later Dr. Otis established an independent office, and in 1878 he associated with him Dr. Taylor Lansing, who died in 1883. Dr. Otis then continued alone until 1884, when he asked Dr. Case to come to Poughkeepsie as his partner, the firm dissolving in 1888. In 1892 Dr. Otis again took a partner, Dr. John H. Otis, his son, with whom he is still sharing his large and lucrative business. Dr. Otis has a general practice, but gives especial attention to the diseases of children. On settling at Poughkeepsie, he for two years occupied the house in which Dr. Van Gieson now resides, but since 1874 he has made his home at the pleasant residence in Cannon street. His wife, to whom he was married October 6, 1870, in Millbrook, was formerly Miss Katherine Haviland. Her father, Barclay Haviland, a well-known citizen, is still living at the age of eighty-four. Her mother, Susan (Tredway), was a daughter of Dr. Alfred Tredway, and granddaughter of Philip Hart, in whose honor Harts Village was named. The Doctor and his wife have had two children: Dr. John H. Otis, mentioned above, and a daughter, Annie S., who died when ten years old.

Dr. Otis is a member of the Dutchess County Homeopathic Medical Society, and was its president for twelve years. He also belongs to the New York State Medical Society, and for a number of years he was surgeon of the old Twenty-first Militia, which was disbanded when the Nineteenth Separate Company was organized. Notwithstanding his activity in professional lines he is connected with several business enterprises, and is the president of the Delamater Carriage Company of Poughkeepsie, a director of the Farmers & Manufacturers Bank, and a trustee of the Poughkeepsie Cemetery Association. Politically, he is a Democrat; for ten years past he has served as a member of the board of health, and for seven years was vice-president of that body. Socially, he is connected with the Amrita and Dutchess Clubs, the K. of P., and several beneficiary orders. He is a leading member of Christ's Church, in which he is a vestryman, and also one of the trustees of St. Barnabus Fund, disbursing the income of the fund in behalf of the committee.

CHARLES E. BOWNE, a leading merchant of Poughkeepsie, and founder of the well-known firm of C. E. Bowne & Son, is a representative of one of the prominent families of Dutchess county.

His ancestors were early settlers at Flushing, Long Island. His grandfather, Gershom Bowne, was born there, and about the year 1776 he and two brothers left the old home to seek their fortunes elsewhere, one settling in New York City, and one in Westchester county, while Gershom located in the town of Fishkill, Dutchess county. He married Nancy Bowne, and to their union were born five children: Mary, Elizabeth, Gershom, Samuel and James.

Gershom Bowne (2), our subject's father, was born in the town of Fishkill, and passed his entire life there, receiving his education in the local schools, later engaging in farming. He was a leader in his locality, holding many public offices, and his sound judgment and upright character made him the chosen advisor of a large circle of acquaintances. He was a prominent member of the Presbyterian Church at Brinkerville, Dutchess Co., N. Y. He married Elizabeth Hasbrouck, of Fishkill, and had three children: Charles E., our subject; and Francis Hasbrouck and Ann Elizabeth (both deceased).

Charles E. Bowne was born at the old homestead June 19, 1818. His father dying five years later, the family became scattered, and at the age of seven our subject went to

Chas. E. Bowne

Poughkeepsie to live with his uncle, James Bowne, who was then a member of the firm of Conklin & Bowne, dealers in merchandise. After acquiring a good education in the schools of the city, and in a boarding school at Whitesboro, near Utica, from which he was graduated in 1832, Mr. Bowne entered his uncle's store as a clerk, and there remained some time after the change in the firm to Bowne & Trowbridge. In order to perfect his knowledge of the business, he went to New York and served two years in the wholesale house of T. B. & J. Odell, No. 207 Pearl street. In 1844, at the strong solicitation of the firm, he returned to Poughkeepsie and became his uncle's partner, Mr. Trowbridge retiring. The partnership then formed under the name of J. Bowne & Co. lasted thirty-five years, when the senior member withdrew, and Mr. Bowne continued the business under his own name. About five years ago the firm became Bowne, Valentine & Bowne, the last named being Frederick Bowne, a son of our subject. Mr. Valentine has since retired from the business, and Mr. Bowne intends to give less of his personal attention to it in the future, as a stroke of paralysis, in the spring of 1895, warned him to release himself from care, although his recovery has been rapid. Fortunately the business is in capable hands, his son being a worthy successor. Mr. Bowne has been in business on Main street for more than fifty years, and has seen many changes, his early associates and competitors there having all passed away, their places being filled by another generation.

On December 23, 1846, at Staten Island, Mr. Bowne married Miss Mary Haggerty, and of this union five children were born: Emma, who married J. A. Platt, of Providence, R. I.; Charles S., a prominent druggist at Poughkeepsie; Henry Haggerty, a leading attorney at Jacksonville, Fla.; Frank, a commercial traveler; and Frederick, junior member of the firm of C. E. Bowne & Son. On February 27, 1896, the mother of this family passed from earth at the age of sixty-six years, after almost half a century of married life.

FREDERICK BOWNE, junior member of the firm of C. E. Bowne & Son, of Poughkeepsie, and one of the most capable and enterprising young business men of Dutchess county, was born in the city of Poughkeepsie, April 14, 1862.

He was educated in his native place, and after graduating from the high school he took a responsible position in the office of a large jewelry factory at Providence, R. I., where he remained three years. In 1887 he returned to Poughkeepsie and entered his father's store as clerk, in 1890 becoming a partner. Owing to the ill health of his father, the business has devolved mainly upon him of late, and his prudent and energetic management gives promise of the continued success of this long-established house. It is the only store in the city which is devoted strictly to the carpet business, and the firm is in advance of all competitors in that line, holding the bulk of the trade.

Mr. Bowne is an ardent supporter of the doctrines of the Republican party, and is a leader among the younger men in his locality. In social life he holds a prominent place, is a member of the Order of Elks, Knights of Pythias, and was one of the founders of the Poughkeepsie Bicycle Club, of which he is now president.

CASPER L. ODELL, a prominent attorney of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, and a representative of an ancient and honored family, was born in the town of Beekman, Dutchess Co., N. Y., December 16, 1850.

Mr. Odell's genealogical tree affords an interesting study, the line reaching back to Saluart, father of the first Count of Flanders. The family name is variously spelled in the old records—Odell, Woodhull, Wodhull, etc. His descent may be traced by two lines to Edward II of England, and also reaches back to Alfred the Great, and to Charles the Bold of France, and the family was related by marriage to William the Conqueror, and to Catherine Parr, Queen of Henry VIII. The biography of Joseph E. Odell, a brother of our subject, contains additional information as to the remote history, which, it is alleged, dates back to Priam, King of Troy. The following record, dating back to 795 A. D. is correct beyond question, being founded upon documentary evidence:

Generation I—Saluart, who married Mac-larne Eringarde. II—Prince Dijon, first Count of Flanders. III—Lideric Le Buc, founder of the family of Foresters. IV—Ingleram. V—Baldwin I, called Audacer and Bras le Fer, who married Judith, daughter of Charles the Bold, of France. VI—Baldwin II, the Bold, married Aelfthry, daughter of Alfred, King of England. VII—Arnulf, who married Adelia, daughter of the Count of Vermandois. VIII—Baldwin IV. IX—Baldwin V, Le Debonair. XI—Walter Flandrensis, the last Count and the first Wodhull or Odell. XII—Simon De-Wodhull, who married Sibill. XIII—Walter de Wodhull, who married Roesia. XIV—Walter de Wodhull. XV.—Saher Wodhull, who married Joan or Alice Whelton. XVI—Walter de Wodhull, who married Helewys Seneschalle. XVII—John de Wodhull, Baron, who married Agnes Pinkeney. XVIII—Thomas de Wodhull, Baron, who married Hawise de Praers. XIX—John de Wodhull, Baron, who married Isabella ——. XX—Nicholas Wodhull, Baron, who married Margaret Foxcote. XXI—Thomas Wodhull, Baron, who married Elizabeth Chetwood. XXII—Thomas Wodhull, Baron, who married Isabella Trussell, daughter of Sir William Trussell. XXIII—John Wodhull, Baron, whose wife was Joan, daughter of Henry Eastwell. XXIV—Fulk Wodhull, Baron, who married Ann Newenham. XXV—Nicholas Wodhull, Baron, sheriff of Northumberland county, who married Elizabeth Parr, daughter of Baron William Parr of Horton. XXVI—Fulk Wodhull of Thenford, whose wife was Alice Colles of Leigh. XXVII—Nicholas Wodhull of Thenford, who married Barbara Hobby of Hales. XXVIII—William Odell, born at Odell, near London, who emigrated to America, and in 1639 was at Concord, Mass. He removed to Fairfield, Conn., about 1644, where his will, disposing of £447, was probated June 12, 1676. He had three children: William, John and Rebecca (Mrs. Samuel Moorehouse).

XXIX—William Odell, who was born about 1634, and died about 1700, was one of the first settlers at Rye, N. Y., where he owned a large estate. In 1681 he appears on the Fairfield records as owning 362 acres there, and in 1684 he deeded some land at Rye to a "son Samuel living in the same county." Another deed appears in 1697, as resident of Rye, and October 2, 1668, he signed a petition there as William Woodhull. Savage mentions him as "William, of Greenwich, Conn., in 1681, aged forty-seven." He married a daughter of Richard Voles, of Fairfield, a freeholder and representative in the Colonial government in 1665-68-69. They had eight children: John,

Samuel, Isaac, Jonathan, Michael, Hachalia, Stephen and Sarah.

XXX—Isaac, of Eastchester, N. Y., signed the oath of allegiance to King William at White Plains, in 1699. He married Anne Tompkins, and she joined in a deed of lands at Rye in 1705. They had three children: William, Tompkins and Joshua.

XXXI—Joshua married Sarah Jones, and had three children: Joshua, Joseph and John. XXXII—Joshua married Mary Vincent, and had nine children: John, Joseph, Abraham, Daniel, James, Joshua, Sarah, Abigail and Isaac. XXXIII—John, of Dutchess county, was born January 5, 1762, and died January 26, 1853. He married Esther Crawford, and had eight children: Peter, Daniel, James, Elizabeth, Abigail, Charlotte, William and Ann. XXXIV—Daniel was born in Clinton township, Dutchess county, April 15, 1805, and died October 22, 1875. He was a farmer; he married Malinda LeRoy, and had four children: Eliphalet P., of Rowland; John D., of Salt Point; Joseph E., of Poughkeepsie, and Casper L., our subject.

The thirty-fifth generation of this remarkable family are all worthy representatives, intelligent, progressive and prosperous. Casper L. Odell attended during boyhood the public schools of Hyde Park, where the family moved when he was only five years old. He entered Union College at Schenectady, but while in the sophomore year his father died, and he was obliged to leave his studies and solve in a practical way the problem of self-support. For a year he was a clerk in the law office of Smith and Jackson, at Schenectady, N. Y., and the next year taught school at Scotia. In 1876 he came to Poughkeepsie and studied law with J. S. Van Cleef and William M. Lee, and was admitted in 1879. For some time he continued with Mr. Lee, and then clerked in the county clerk's office under William A. Fanning and Wilson B. Sheldon. He is an influential worker in the Republican party, and has never been defeated at an election. He was chosen supervisor of the Third ward in 18—, serving two terms, justice of the peace in 1886, and city recorder in November, 1894. In 1885 he opened an office and began the practice of his profession, in which he has been unusually successful.

On December 16, 1879, he was married, at Lawyersville, Schoharie county, to Katharine T. Davis, born December 16, 1854, daughter of Rev. William P. Davis. Their children, the thirty-sixth generation of the ancient line, are LeRoy L., born October 6, 1880; Joseph D., May 22, 1882; Lawrence C., January 31, 1885; Ralph M., December 31, 1887; Freeman Dewitt, March 11, 1890; and William D., March 22, 1893.

Mr. Odell is a member of the K. of P., Poughkeepsie Lodge No. 43, and of the F. & A. M., Triune Lodge No. 782, Poughkeepsie Chapter No. 172, R. A. M., King Solomon's Council No. 31, R. & S. M., Poughkeepsie Commandery No. 43, K. T., Mecca Temple No. 1, A. A. O. N. M. S., and Poughkeepsie Lodge B. P. O. E.

ALLISON BUTTS, a well-known member of the Dutchess County Bar, is especially distinguished for his knowledge and skill in real-estate law and the different questions involved in trusts. He is descended from one of the old pioneer families of New England. The first American ancestor, Thomas Butts, came from Norfolk, England, May 18, 1660, and settled at Little Compton, R. I., which was then a part of the Plymouth Colony. He married, and had three sons and one daughter. One of the sons, Moses, who was born July 30, 1673, married, and had seven children, among whom was a son John, born August 31, 1707.

John Butts married Alice Wodell, October 26, 1727, and with his family came to Dutchess county, locating on the "Little Nine Partners Patent," in the town of Washington, where he purchased a farm of 200 acres from Isaac Thorn. The original deed, dated October 4, 1748, is now in the possession of J. Dewitt Butts, of Rochester, N. Y. John Butts died about 1797, leaving a large estate, which was distributed in accordance with his Will, probated in the office of the Surrogate of Dutchess County, July 25, 1797. He had nine children, of whom one, Moses, had died about 1780, leaving two young children, Daniel and Hannah. Daniel Butts, our subject's great-grandfather, was born in 1768, and died in 1817. He married Isabella Gardner, and about 1790 moved to a farm in the town of Stanford, Dutchess county, where he built a large and substantial mansion, which is still standing. Daniel and Isabella Butts had eleven children, the eldest being Moses (our subject's grandfather), who was born December 16, 1786, and, like most of this family, passed his life in agricultural pursuits. He was married, March 22, 1806, to Mary Waltermire, of the town of Stanford, and his death occurred in the same township, June 4, 1851. He had eight children: David W., William, Hiram, Angeline, Daniel, Walter, Alfred, and George F., the father of our subject.

The late George F. Butts was born December 13, 1823, in the town of Stanford, Dutchess county, and had his home throughout his life near Cold Spring, in that town. On December 16, 1851, he married his first wife, Eliza D. Case, by whom he had three sons: Allison, our subject, born October 2, 1852; Charles H., born February 5, 1855, now married and living on the old homestead; and Elias N., born August 10, 1865, now in the Department of the Interior at Washington, D. C. By a second wife, Cornelia Alling, there were no children; she is still living at the homestead, where the father died, September 3, 1893.

Allison Butts spent his boyhood upon the farm occupied by his father. He was educated in the common schools and academies of Dutchess county, and at twenty began teaching, but continued for a short time only. On January 1, 1874, he came to Poughkeepsie as a clerk for Andrew C. Warren, then county clerk, and soon afterward was appointed deputy county clerk, which office he held through both Republican and Democratic administrations, until January 1, 1881, when he resigned. He had in the meantime read law and been admitted to the bar, and the large circle of friends gained during his long term in the county clerk's office made his entrance upon his chosen profession a most promising venture. He immediately began a general practice at Poughkeepsie, and has been intimately associated with the law firm of Hackett & Williams, occupying offices in connection with them. His business is an extensive one, trusts and real-estate practice being now the leading features. He is often appointed by the courts to administer trusts, and has frequently served as executor and attorney for large estates. While he has conducted many important cases, his office practice comprises the larger portion of his work, and in his specialties he is recognized as an authority by his fellow lawyers as well as the laity.

His genial manners make him popular with all classes. In municipal affairs he is active and influential. Politically, he is a staunch Democrat. He served two terms as police commissioner of the city of Poughkeepsie, and from 1887 to 1890 was a member of the board of education. In July, 1890, he was appointed by the board of managers of the Hudson River State Hospital to the office of treasurer of that institution, which office he now holds, and he has discharged the duties with characteristic fidelity.

Mr. Butts was married December 14, 1876, to his first wife, Miss Phebe D. Mosher, of the town of Stanford, Dutchess county. She died December 15, 1882, leaving one son, Ralph F., born April 6, 1878, who is now a student in the Sophomore class at Harvard College. Mr. Butts' second wife, Miss Arrie E. Mosher, to whom he was married September 16, 1885, was cousin to his first. There are three children by this union: Norman C., born August 8, 1888; Allison, Jr., born April 26, 1890, and Wilbur Kingsley, born September 7, 1895. Mr. Butts resides in a handsome home on Academy street, Poughkeepsie, erected in 1895.

JUDGE D. W. GUERNSEY, for twelve years past the judge of the County Court of Dutchess County, is one of the most distinguished members of the legal fraternity in this locality. He is descended from an old and honored pioneer family, one of the early settlers being John Guernsey, his great-great-grandfather, who was born in 1709 in Connecticut, either at New Milford or Woodbury. He had a son, John Guernsey (2), born in Amenia in October, 1734, who had a son, Ezekial H. Guernsey, born in the same town April 19, 1775, who had a son, Stephen G. Guernsey, the Judge's father, who was born September 8, 1798, in the town of Stanford.

Judge D. W. Guernsey entered upon his earthly career March 27, 1834, in the town of Stanford, and his early education was obtained in the district schools of that neighborhood, with one year at Rose Hill Academy at Newburg, under Rev. Baynard R. Hall. On leaving school, at the age of seventeen, he taught for two years in Dutchess county, and then began the study of law with George W. Houghton, of Buffalo, N. Y., who was a judge in the superior court, and a member of the legal firm of Houghton & Clark. The choice of Buffalo as the place for study was influenced by the fact that many relatives lived there, and a cousin, Guernsey Sackett, was also pursuing a course in law. In March, 1856, our subject passed his examination, was admitted to the bar, and in 1857 he and his cousin went to Leavenworth, Kans., and engaged in practice. At that time Gen. Sherman and Gen. Ewing were practicing law there. The Kansas-Nebraska bill was an exceedingly live issue, and as the Judge was a Democrat he met with opposition from many people, but, notwithstanding, he had a good business, consisting mainly of cases before the land commissioners, involving questions of title. He argued cases before E. O. Perrin, Shannon and Matthews, of the Interior Department. As the time drew near when the opposing forces of the Union appealed to arms to settle their differences, the place became uncomfortable for a man of the Judge's political views, so in January, 1861, he returned east. During that year he was managing clerk for Ira O. Miller, of New York City, and in the spring of 1862 he enlisted as a private in Company D, 47th N. Y. V. I., which was recruited in Stanford and Pine Plains. The 47th made a part of the 10th and later the 18th Corps, and was assigned to the army of the James. The Judge took part in many engagements, and was at the siege of Fort Wagner, at Morris Island under Gilmore, the siege of Petersburg, and the mine explosion, Drury's Bluff, Chapin's farm, Chester Station, Cold Harbor, Florida, Fort Fisher, Wilmington, Bentonville, and Raleigh, serving until mustered out at Washington. At Cold Harbor, his corps, the 18th, lost three thousand men in two hours. The Judge was promoted to the rank of commissary-sergeant, Col. Allen giving him his commission, and later was made second lieutenant, his commission being given by Col. Fenton, then promoted to first lieutenant, and finally to captain, Gov. Seymour being the giver of the last commission.

On his return in 1865, Judge Guernsey began the practice of his profession at Poughkeepsie as a general practitioner, and has continued it successfully ever since. In November, 1893, he was elected judge of the county court for six years, and in 1889 was re-elected for another term. Some time ago he was appointed by the supreme court to act as commissioner for the City of New York, in the matter of the appraisement of the value of lands taken by that city.

Sam. W. Guernsey

The Judge has always maintained his home in the town of Stanford. In June, 1870, he was married to Miss Emily Millard, daughter of Seneca Millard, a well-known resident of Dutchess county, and they have an interesting family of seven children: Eleanor G., at home; William, a student at Wesleyan University; Lydia, studying at Vassar College; and Daniel W., Millard, H. Newport and Ruth are all at home. In matters of religion the family incline to the Baptist faith.

Judge Guernsey has shown his public spirit in many ways, being always ready to encourage a forward movement. He is a member of the F. & A. M., of Poughkeepsie, and also belongs to the Sons of Temperance, Division No. 9.

WILLIAM A. BLISS, M. D., who was for many years a leading physician and surgeon in Brooklyn, N. Y., is now living in well-earned leisure at his beautiful country seat on Spy Hill, near Fishkill-on-Hudson, Dutchess county, his residence commanding a charming view of the river with the bay and the city of Newburg.

The Doctor is a descendant of a family which has long been distinguished for nobility of character and devotion to principle, and is of the tenth generation in direct descent from one of the heroic Non-conformists of England who upheld their faith in the face of the fiercest persecution. His genealogy is of great interest, his earliest known ancestor being Thomas Bliss, of Belstone parish, Devonshire, England. It is recorded of him that he was a wealthy land owner, and belonged to the class which was stigmatized as Puritans, on account of the purity and simplicity of their forms of worship. He was persecuted by the civil and religious authorities under the direction of Archbishop Laud, and was maltreated, impoverished, imprisoned, and finally ruined in health (as well as in finances) by the many indignities and hardships forced upon him by the intolerant Church party in power. He was born about 1550 or 1560, and died about 1635 or 1640.

Second Generation: Jonathan Bliss, son of Thomas Bliss, was born at Belstone about 1575 or 1580, and like his father he was doomed to bitter persecution on account of his non-conformity and opposition to the iniquitous practices that had assumed control not only of the government, but also of the con-sciences of the people; he was subjected to heavy fines, much ill-treatment, and a long imprisonment, during which he contracted a fever from which he never recovered. His death occurred about 1635 or 1636. He married, but his wife's name is not known.

Third Generation: Thomas Bliss, of Rehoboth, Mass., son of Jonathan, was born at Belstone, England, and on the death of his father in 1636, he emigrated to America, landing at Boston, whence he removed to Braintree, Mass., thence to Hartford, Conn., and from there back to Weymouth, near Braintree, from which place he removed in 1643 with many others, and commenced a new settlement, which they called Rehoboth. He died there in June, 1649.

Fourth Generation: Jonathan Bliss, son of Thomas and Mistress Ide (or Hyde), was born in England about 1625, was married about 1648 to Miriam Harmon, and died about the beginning of the year 1687. He followed the occupation of a blacksmith at Rehoboth.

Fifth Generation: Samuel, of Rehoboth, Mass. (son of Jonathan Bliss and Miriam Harmon of Rehoboth), was born at Rehoboth June 24, 1660, and married April 15, 1686, to Mary Kendrick, who died February 8, 1705-6. He died August 28, 1720. They had nine children.

Sixth Generation: Abraham Bliss, son of Samuel and Mary Bliss, was born October 28, 1697, at Rehoboth, and on July 11, 1728, married Sarah Ormsbee, of the same place. He died in 1787. Twelve children were born of this marriage.

Seventh Generation: Abraham Bliss, Jr., our subject's great-grandfather, was born April 10, 1735, in Rehoboth, Mass., and was a lieutenant in the Revolutionary army. He married Miss Polly Scudder, and had four children: Abraham, John, Samuel, Polly.

Eighth Generation: Samuel Bliss, of Schodack, N. Y., farmer, son of Abraham Bliss, Jr., and Polly Scudder, was born in Schodack, August 19, 1771, and died December 14, 1846. He married Elizabeth Pembroke, who was born in Schodack August 26, 1774, and died there April 16, 1852 or '53. They had ten children: Polly, Rebecca, Abraham, Betsey and Anna (twins), Sandford, John S., Sally, Clarissa and Christina.

Ninth Generation: John S. Bliss, of Sand Lake, Rennselaer Co., N. Y., son of Samuel Bliss and Elizabeth Pembroke, and father of our subject, was born in Schodack, N. Y., May 3, 1809. He was married January 11, 1831, to Polly Hunt, born at Sand Lake January 11, 1810; she died at Sand Lake January 8, 1863. He was a farmer at Sand Lake, and died at North Nassau, N. Y., September 15, 1873.

In the Tenth Generation of this line there were six children: (1) William Anson, born at Schodack March 14, 1833, died May 15, 1835; (2) Sophronia F., born in Schodack February 17, 1836, died July 17, 1880; (3) Larissa C., born in Summit, N. Y., March 26, 1838, was married March 17, 1869, to George G. Merrifield, a farmer at Nassau, N. Y., who died August 24, 1895; (4) William A., our subject, was born at Nassau May 5, 1841; (5) Mary Frances, born at the same town May 21, 1846, died April 20, 1895 (she was married September 14, 1874, to Edward T. Norton, of Greenbush, N. Y., a timekeeper on the B. & A. R.). (6) Solon F., born at Sand Lake September 7, 1849, was graduated from Albany Medical College in 1873, and after spending two years at Tung-Chou, near Chee Foo, China, as a medical missionary, returned to this country, took up his practice at No. 646 Herkimer street, Brooklyn, N. Y., and died here July 24, 1896. He never married.

William A. Bliss was educated at Sand Lake, attending the common schools for some years, and later taking a full course at the Sand Lake Academy. He then entered Albany Medical College, and while there he had the good fortune to secure a position in the office of Dr. Alden March, in his day the greatest surgeon of northern New York. On graduating, in 1866, the Doctor began his professional career in Brooklyn, and continued for twenty-eight years, building up a large practice, from which he retired in 1892, removing to Matteawan, and two years later he built his present residence, which can hardly be surpassed for beauty of situation. His wife, to whom he was married March 28, 1866, was formerly Miss Jennie Jaques, of Albany, N. Y. She was born in the village of Nassau, N. Y., June 3, 1848, daughter of Edward and Emily (Lewis) Jaques, and she is now the only surviving member of her immediate family, as are the Doctor and his sister Larissa and her daughter (Frances) the only surviving members of their immediate family. In politics Dr. Bliss is a Republican, but his arduous professional labors have prevented him from taking an active part in public affairs.

Genealogy of Mrs. Jennie Jaques Bliss, beginning with Henry Pawling (First Generation), said to have been an officer in the British army. He had a grant of five thousand acres of land in Philadelphia, Penn., from William Penn before he emigrated to America. He was about having a patent of Pawling's purchase, now Staatsburgh, Dutchess Co., N. Y., when he died. This patent was afterward made to his widow and children. He settled in Ulster county, and died in Marbletown about 1692, leaving a widow and seven children living, one other having died. His will dated January 26, 1691 (1692 new style), and proved March 26, 1695. His widow was living as late as 1745. Henry Pawling married, in Kingston, N. Y., Neeltje Roosa, daughter of Albert Heymanse Roosa. Children: Jane, married Jan Coh, Kingston; Wyntie, married John Brodhead; John, baptized 1681; James, baptized 1683, died young; Albert, married Catherine Beekman, widow of John Rutsen, and died in 1745; Anne, baptized 1687, married Tjerck DeWitt, Kingston; Henry, married Jacomyntie Kunst; Mary, baptized 1692, married Thomas Van Keuren, Marbletown.

Second Generation: Henry Pawling, Jr., lived in Ulster county, N. Y., until about 1720, when he removed to Philadelphia, Penn., to lands granted to his late father. His brother John also removed to the same place. Henry Pawling, Jr., married, in Kingston, Jacomyntie, daughter of Cornelius Barents Kunst and Jacomyntie Sleight. They had children baptized in Kingston: Henry, 1714; Sara, 1716; Elizabeth, 1719; and others born in Pennsylvania, as follows: Levi, afterward of Marbletown, colonel in the army of the Revolution; John (Major), afterward of Staatsburgh; and doubtless others.

Third Generation: Major John Pawling married (first) Neeltje Van Keuren (a cousin), daughter of Thomas Van Keuren and Mary Pawling. Children: Henry, baptized November 30, 1755; Cornelius, baptized January 27, 1758; John, baptized October 24, 1760; Mary, baptized November 11, 1764. Major Pawling married (second) Maria, daughter of Jacob Van Deusen and Alida Ostrander. Children: Levi married (first) Gertrude Knickerbocker, (second) Hannah Griffin; Jesse married Leah Radcliff; Jacob married Martha Russell; Eleanor married Peter Brown; Rachel married Christopher Hughes; Alida married Peter Ostrom; Elizabeth married William Stouten-burgh; Jacomyntie married Wait Jaques (grandfather of Mrs. Jennie J. Bliss); Catharine married Jacob Conklin; and Rebecca married Frederick S. Uhl.

“Major John Pawling was an officer in the French and Indian war, also in the Revolutionary war, and was a leading man in his day. His remains lie in the cemetery of the Reformed Dutch Church in the village of Rhinebeck, N. Y.” [From Smith’s History.] “In 1761 he built the stone house on the post road, now owned by the heirs of Edwin Berg. It bears the inscription of J. P. N. P. July 4, 1761. He took an active part in the Revolution and was personally acquainted with Washington and many of the prominent men of the time.” [From History of Rhinebeck.] This stone house is on the post road between Staatsburgh and Rhinebeck, still standing in nearly its original condition, beautifully located with fine river views. This was Jemima Pawling’s (grandmother of Mrs. Jennie J. Bliss) birth-place.

“Levi Pawling, brother of Major John Pawling, was a delegate from Marbletown, Ulster county, to the provincial convention held in the City of New York, April 20, 1775, to elect delegates to the Second Continental Congress of the Colonies, and on October 25, 1775, was commissioned colonel of the Third Regiment of Ulster county militia, which had an excellent record in the war. His son, Col. Albert Pawling, born in Dutchess county in 1749, was the first mayor of Troy, and first sheriff of Rensselaer county. He died November 10, 1837, and was buried in Mount Ida Cemetery, near the banks of the Poestenkill.” [Here follows the inscription on the monument]:

Albert Pawling joined the Revolutionary army as second lieutenant June, 1775; in 1776 he received the commission of brigade major, and in 1779 that of lieutenant-colonel. He took a conspicuous part in the assault on Quebec, at the taking of St. John’s, at the Battle of White Plains and Monmouth. He was the first sheriff of Rensselaer county, and the first mayor of the city of Troy. In 1831 he united himself to the Second Presbyterian Church, laid his honors at the feet of Jesus, gave up his earthly in hope of an heavenly inheritance. Col. Albert Pawling died November 10, 1837, aged eighty-seven years.

Fourth Generation: Jacomyntie (Jemima) Pawling (grandmother of Mrs. Jennie J. Bliss), daughter of Major John Pawling and Maria Van Deusen Pawling, was born in Staatsburgh, Dutchess Co., N. Y., March 12, 1782, and died at Nassau, Rensselaer Co., N. Y., March 22, 1867. She married December 18, 1803, Wait Jaques, a farmer, born at Groton, New London Co., Conn., April 27, 1762, and died at Nassau, November 27, 1857. He was of Huguenot descent. They lived in Rhinebeck, Dutchess county, many years, where four children were born to them: William, born December 4, 1804, died October 26, 1871; Edward, born December 12, 1809, died November 4, 1811; Edward (father of Mrs. Jennie J. Bliss), born June 12, 1813, died February 19, 1886; Janet Montgomery, born November 9, 1817, died February 27, 1839.

Fifth Generation: Edward Jaques, son of Wait Jaques and Jacomyntie (Jemima) Pawling, was born in Rhinebeck, Dutchess county, N. Y., June 12, 1813. He was married January 2, 1840, to Emily Lewis, born September 22, 1820, in Schodack, N. Y., daughter of Jacob Lewis (who was of Holland descent) and Abigail Hughson. For some twenty years he was a merchant in Nassau, N. Y., and ten years in Albany, N. Y., passing his later years in Brooklyn, N. Y., where he died February 19, 1886, and his wife on June 21, 1888. They had five children: Janet Montgomery, born October 4, 1840, died October 30, 1861; Edward Pawling, born September 10, 1842, died May 9, 1873; Irving Phillip, born March 6, 1844, died July 2, 1863; Jennie (wife of Dr. W. A. Bliss), born June 3, 1848; and Willie Wait, born February 8, 1860, died January 18, 1869.

Sixth Generation: Edward Pawling Jaques, first lieutenant of Company E, 169th Regiment N. Y. V. I., served through the Rebellion, was wounded and captured May 10, 1864, in the battle at Chester Station, near Richmond, and confined in Libby Prison a short time. After the close of the war he settled in Albany, N. Y., and married, February 28, 1867, Laura D. Bingham, daughter of Anson and Laura McClellan Bingham. She died November 15, 1867, and he died May 9, 1873. Irving Phillip Jaques (brother of Edward) was sergeant-major in the 111th Regiment, N. Y. V. I., and was killed July 2, 1863, at Gettysburg.

BURTON GILBERT (deceased) was born in Warren, Conn., in 1802, and received his education there. The Gilberts were of English stock, and Ezra, the grandfather, was one of the earliest settlers of Warren. Capt. Samuel Gilbert, the subject’s father, was a manufacturer of iron, but failed in business when his son was a mere boy, leaving him penniless.

Thrown upon the world at the early age of sixteen, with every discouraging influence around him, our subject soon manifested those traits of industry, perseverance, and true Yankee pluck, which attracted the attention of business men, convincing them that he had within him the promise of a future. He made himself wanted, which is the first element of success in a young man. From the humble position of a boy, hired into a merchant's family to do common chores, he soon found himself behind the counter as clerk; and ere long the height of his ambition was realized, as he often remarked in after life, when he caught the first sight of the sign over the store door of "Hartwell & Gilbert." He continued in the mercantile business almost uninterruptedly to the close of life, carrying to the end that same energy, industry and decision of character so early manifested in the boy. He died in 1882, aged eighty years. A short sketch, written by a friend shortly after his death, illustrates his life and character:

"The death of Mr. Gilbert removes one of the most familiar landmarks, known to our citizens. For more than half a century he had been engaged in active business, and pursued it with untiring energy, and with marked success. Few men in business life have apparently loved their vocation more than he, or left a more honorable record of a busy and active career. He was of genial temperament, and always had a pleasant and cordial greeting to extend to all his friends. For these he will long be affectionately remembered in this and other communities. He had a wide circle of acquaintances, extending over western Connecticut, Hartford county, etc. He was also well-known to many merchants in New York, and distinguished for his high commercial standing and credit. He cheerfully bore his share of taxation for civil and religious purposes. He was a member of the Congregational Church of Warren, and was its principal supporter. He was three times married: In 1833 he married Maria Carter, of Warren. Their daughter Maria (now deceased) married Frederick Whittlesey, of New Britain, Conn. His second wife was Maria Stone, of New Preston, Conn. They had four children: Two are now living—Laura, who married George S. Humphrey, of New Preston, Conn., and Lester H. Gilbert, who now lives in Colorado. In 1848 he married Thalia M. Miles, of New Milford, Conn., whose ancestors were prominent among the original settlers of that town. Their daughter Emma married Henry R. Hoyt, of Poughkeepsie, New York.

"This brief sketch of the life of this, in many ways remarkable man, if more extended, might give many an object lesson for the young men of the present day."

AARON INNIS. Prominent among the business men of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, stands this gentleman, whose entire life has been closely identified with the history of the city, while his name is inseparably connected with its financial records. For many years he was president of the city railroads, and president of the City Bank of Poughkeepsie for a number of years. He is possessed of keen discrimination and sound judgment, and his executive ability and excellent management brought to these concerns a high degree of success.

Mr. Innis comes of a family that has long been prominent in the affairs of the city of Poughkeepsie. The original ancestor, James Innis, a native of Scotland, was brought to America in 1737, by his mother and sisters, who located at Little Britain, Orange Co., N. Y., where he was educated by George and James Clinton. He married Miss Sybil Ross, of Morristown, N. J., and they became residents of Newburg, Orange county, in 1780. Ten children were born to them: James, who during the Revolutionary war participated in the battle of Monmouth, and died unmarried; Jane, who became the wife of William Irwin, and removed to Ohio; Keziah, who married James Owen; Mrs. Lydia Hanmore; Peter, who died unmarried; Benjamin, who wedded Margaret Denton; Elsie, wife of Thomas Aldrich; Aaron, the grandfather of our subject; Sarah, who became the wife of Anthony Preslor; and William, who married Eliza Warring. Grandfather Innis was a native of Orange county, where he followed farming, and by his marriage with Martha Smith, he had a large family of children, among whom was Aaron.

Aaron Innis, the father of our subject, was born in Ulster county, N. Y., and was united in marriage with Miss Martha Smith, daughter of Eliphalet Smith (who was of English extraction), and a leading farmer of Ulster county. After their marriage this worthy couple located at Poughkeepsie, where Mr. Innis engaged in the freighting business, running at first a sloop from there to New York City, and later a steamboat named "Emerald." He continued this business up to the time of his death in 1838. Politically he cast his ballot in support of the Whig party, and in religious faith both he and his wife were faithful members of the Reformed Dutch Church.

Aaron Innis, whose name introduces this sketch, was born in Poughkeepsie, January 23, 1834, and he is the youngest in a family of eight children. In the public schools of that city he began his education, and was graduated at College Hill, on the completion of the course. He entered upon his business career as general manager of the firm of Gifford, Sherman & Co., owners of a large dye-wood factory, and is still connected with that business, which has proved very profitable.

On May 15, 1856, Mr. Innis was united in marriage with Miss Catherine Reynolds, a sister of William T. Reynolds, of Poughkeepsie, and to them were born four children: William R., connected with Studebaker & Co., of New York City, where he makes his home, and also has an interest in the dye-wood business of Poughkeepsie; Catherine, the wife of John F. O'Rourke, a civil engineer, of New York City; Adele, married to Edmund Platt, a son of the Hon. John I. Platt; and Caroline, who died at the age of six years.

The several business concerns which have been under the management of Mr. Innis attest his eminent and pronounced ability as a financier, and he is equally prominent in social life. Whether in public or private life his integrity is above question, and his honor above reproach. Poughkeepsie owes much to him and numbers him among her valued citizens, and he is one of the leading Freemasons in the city. He is an earnest supporter of the Republican party, and has been a member of the board of supervisors; for the past nine years he has been a member of the board of health of the city of Poughkeepsie; became the vice-president under the administration of Mayor Arnold, and reappointed vice-president under Mayor Hull.

GEORGE W. CHASE, the able and popular cashier of the National Bank of Pawling, Dutchess county, has been in continuous service in that institution for thirty-eight years, a record probably unequalled by any contemporaneous bank officer in the county. His well-proven ability and integrity, and his untiring devotion to any work to which he applies himself, have received the ample recognition of his fellow townsmen who have many times shown their confidence and esteem by choosing him for some of the most important positions in their gift, both in business and political life.

The Chase family is of English origin, and the founder of the branch of which our subject is an honored member, was Isaac Chase, who settled at Cape Cod at an early period. His son Obadiah had eleven children, who settled chiefly in New York State, where many of their descendants still live. The eldest son, Isaac, lived in Tompkins county; Alvin in Dutchess county; Elmer and Ezra in Tompkins county; John and Jesse in Westchester county; Daniel went to Michigan; Huldah married Edmond Hopkins, and lived in Tompkins county; Lydia married Judah Baker, of the same county; Mary married Absalom Colwell, and settled in Rensselaer county; and Catherine married Absalom Caldwell, also of Rensselaer county.

Alvin Chase, our subject's grandfather, was born in 1778, and by his first wife, Ruth Cole, he had twelve children: Cyrus, a merchant at Croton Falls; Naomi, who married a Mr. Beardsley, of Kent, Conn.; Darius, our subject's father; Susan, the wife of Joseph Smith, of Carmel, Putnam county; Lyman, who was a farmer in Iowa, where he reared a large family, of whom some were bankers and some ministers, and all held prominent position in the community; Sarah, the wife of Daniel Brown, of Republic, Ohio; Henry, who lived in Erie county, Ohio, near Castalia; Hiram, who settled in Garden Grove, Iowa, and left descendant there; Cynthia, the wife of Gilbert Knapp, a wealthy and prominent citizen of Erie county, Ohio, residing near Castalia; Mary, the wife of Stephen Hawley, of Connecticut; Frank, a farmer of Erie county, Ohio; and John, a farmer of Kent, Conn., where his son is a successful merchant. For his second wife Alvin Chase wedded Martha Dingee, by whom he had three children: Alvin, a hotel keeper of Patterson and Brewster, N. Y.; Hannah, who married Moses Peck, a farmer of Patterson, N. Y.; and Elmer, a farmer of the town of Pawling.

Darius Chase, the father of our subject, was born November 1, 1807, and during his early years was a farmer, first in Putnam county, and later in the town of Pawling, Dutchess county, where he settled in 1841. In 1853 he entered the employ of the Harlem Railroad Company, as station agent at Pawling, and held the position some twenty-seven years, when he resigned on account of ill health. He is still living, and in spite of his eighty-nine years is in the full possession of his faculties. He has always been one of the substantial citizens of the town, and a successful business man, being noted for his good judgment. In politics he has been a steadfast Democrat, and he has held the offices of town clerk, collector of taxes, and commissioner of highways. At one time he was a captain in the State militia, and by this well-earned title he is still addressed by his old friends. In early manhood he was married to Miss Phœbe Smith, who after many years of wedded life passed away in 1892, in her eighty-first year. Her father, Judge Edward Smith, was one of the leading citizens of Putnam county in his day, a judge of the county court, and a member of the State Assembly. Our subject is one of seven children: Clara, the eldest; Emily, who married Egbert M. Toffey, of Pawling; Ruth; Susan, the wife of Squire R. Barrett, formerly of Sing Sing, later of New York City; Elizabeth, who married Jerry S. Pearce, sheriff of Dutchess county; and Adelaide, who married James S. Pearce.

George W. Chase was born in the town of Kent, Putnam county, July 1, 1840, and received his education in the district schools of Pawling, Dutchess county, these somewhat limited advantages giving him a foundation for his subsequent reading by which he has acquired for himself a wide range of knowledge. At the age of fifteen he engaged in clerking, and spent about three years in this work with Orwin Theall and J. W. Stark. His promptness and close application to business attracted the attention of J. W. Bowdish, then cashier of the National Bank of Pawling, and he secured him a position in the bank as messenger, office boy and assistant bookkeeper. At this time the institution, which was organized in 1849, was a State bank, with Albert J. Akin as its president. In 1865 it became a National bank, and in the same year Mr. Chase was appointed assistant cashier, his election to the office of cashier following in 1872. He is interested in many other enterprises, being treasurer of the Eastern Building and Loan Association; treasurer of the Harlem Valley Agricultural Association; secretary and treasurer of the Pawling Cemetery Association; secretary, treasurer and director of the Mizzentop Hotel Co.; treasurer of the Akin Hall Library Association; vice-president of the Pawling & Beekman Turnpike Co.; one of the original incorporators of the Pawling Savings Bank; and president of the Society for the Detection of Horse Thieves. He has always been a firm Republican, and has taken much interest in town and county politics. In 1882 he was appointed county treasurer by the board of supervisors, in place of Seneca V. Halloway, and in the fall of the same year was elected to the office, receiving all but fifteen votes in his own town. He was the only Republican candidate elected that year, and his popularity was again demonstrated by his re-election in 1885. He is a member of Dover Lodge, F. & A. M., and of the Baptist Church, of which he is treasurer. In 1885, he was married to Miss Emma M. Chapman, a daughter of Richard Chapman, a prominent resident of Pawling, and they have had three children: Cornelia T., George W. and Theodore F., the latter of whom died at about the age of seven months.

ALLAN BARRINGER HENDRICKS, the efficient bookkeeper of the First National Bank of Red Hook, Dutchess county, is a descendant of one of the leading families of this region. Lawrence Hendricks, his great-grandfather, came from Rhinebeck to settle upon a farm in Red Hook, in 1802, bringing with him a family of four children: Samuel H., Jacob L., Johannes and Elizabeth.

Jacob L. Hendricks, our subject's grandfather, was born May 13, 1773, and followed farming as an occupation. He married Miss Anna Moore, a native of Red Hook, born May 4, 1770, and reared a family of four children, whose names with dates of birth are as follows: Lawrence Edmund, July 12, 1809; Magdalene, October 19, 1811; Jeremiah, November 2, 1813; and Philip, January 29, 1816. The mother of this family died April 17, 1825, the father on May 24, same year.

Jeremiah Hendricks, our subject's father, attended the district schools of his day, and for a time was employed in a store as clerk. In 1831 he engaged in the manufacture of tobacco in partnership with Albert Near, the firm changing later to Hendricks & Wells, then to J. Hendricks & Co., then to J. & P. Hendricks & Co., the members at that time being Jeremiah and Philip Hendricks, and R. L. Massoneau. He was also the owner of a flour-mill at Red Hook, and was interested in various other lines of business. He was married July 18, 1837, to Miss Eliza C. Barringer, of Red Hook, by whom he had three children: Allan B., born November 11, 1839; Hattie E., August 24, 1841; and Robert J., July 27, 1843. After many years as a successful manufacturer, Jeremiah Hendricks retired to spend his last days in leisure, and died May 30, 1875; his widow is still living.

Allan B. Hendricks availed himself of the educational advantages of his native place, and later attended the Charlotteville Seminary. After leaving school he entered his father's mill as bookkeeper, but left this position in 1861, to engage in the freighting business at Barrytown. Six years later he and his brother Robert took charge of the flouring-mill at Red Hook, the partnership lasting one year, after which he continued in the business alone until 1880. After a short period of leisure Mr. Hendricks was tendered the position of bookkeeper in the First National Bank, which he accepted, and has filled same with marked ability, commanding the entire confidence and esteem of the stockholders and the public generally.

On June 1, 1864, Mr. Hendricks married Miss Anna Rodgers, of Albany, and has had four children: (1) Louise Rodgers, born July 3, 1865, was married October 8, 1890, to Frank B. Shook, and has one child Eleanor Varnum Shook, born July 21, 1891. (2) Laurence Hutton, born June 8, 1867, was married September 21, 1889, to Miss Jennie H. Wilson, and has two children: Marian Wilson Hendricks, born July 19, 1893, and Laurence Hutton Hendricks, Jr., March 16, 1897. (3) Anna R. and (4) Allan B. (twins), born January 28, 1874, are still at home. Mr. Hendricks has been superintendent of St. Paul's Lutheran Sabbath-school continuously for thirty years.

NEHEMIAH HALSTED (deceased). As a merchant in Clinton Corners and Stan-fordville, Dutchess county, during nearly a quarter of a century, the subject of this sketch became well known and highly esteemed throughout that section, and although his later years were spent in retirement, his death, which occurred March 20, 1873, caused sincere grief and a keen sense of loss among a wide circle of acquaintances.

He was a native of the town of Clinton, Dutchess county, and his father, Richard Halsted, a member of the Society of Friends, and who was born in Dutchess county, of English ancestry, followed farming in the town of Clinton all his life. He married Hannah Griffin, and reared a family of nine children: Benjamin, Stephen, Richard, Joseph, Jonathan, Nehemiah, Mary, Anna and Hannah.

Mr. Halsted grew to manhood at his father's farm, and in 1836 was united in marriage with Miss Julia Sharpsteen, a native of the town of Washington, and a descendant of an old Dutch family, the name having been originally Von Sharpstein. The early generations of her family were Presbyterians in religion. Her grandfather, Peter Sharpsteen, was a farmer in the town of Washington and was probably born there. Her father, William Sharpsteen, was born, resided and died in that town. He married Sarah Lawrence, a native of Long Island, whose father, an Englishman, was a descendant of Sir Robert Laurens (now spelled Lawrence), of Lancashire, England, who accompanied Richard Cour de Lion in his expedition to Palestine. In the siege of St. Jean d' Acre, in 1191, he was the first to plant the Banner of the Cross on the battlements of the town, for which he received the honor of Knighthood from King Richard; also, at the same time, the coat of arms. In the year 1635 William Lawrence came over in the ship "Planter," under the care of Gov. Clark, appointed, by the Queen, Governor of Long Island. The Lawrences intermarried with the Washingtons, and the coat of arms may be seen at Mount Vernon.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. William Sharpsteen located in the town of Washington, where he carried on a store for many years; but in later life he retired to a farm in the same town. In politics he was a Republican, for years he was justice of the peace, and town supervisor, and was justly regarded as a representative citizen. He died in 1878, aged ninety-three years. He had six children: Clark Lawrence was a member of the firm of Arold & Constable, in New York City, and lived abroad, in Paris; George G. was a dealer in trotting horses in the town of Washington; James and William H. were in business in the South; Julia, married Mr. Halsted; and Deborah married Louis Hutchens.

Mr. and Mrs. Halsted began their married life at Clinton Corners, where Mr. Halsted conducted a store for about three years, when he moved to Stanfordville and carried on his business some twenty years. He then retired to a small farm in the town of Washington, to pass his remaining days. His wife and seven children survive him. Virginia married Isaac W. Sherrill, a well-known resident of Poughkeepsie; Ella, Ida and Belle are at home; Irving is a farmer in the town of Clinton; Willis is an express agent in New York City; and Frank conducts the "Dutchess Restaurant" at Poughkeepsie. Mr. Halsted always took an ardent interest in the success of the Republican party, and was ready to encourage any worthy enterprise in his locality. In religious faith he was a Quaker, and his quiet, unassuming manners and upright life gave a consistent and effective illustration of the doctrines which he cherished.

HEZEKIAH ROGERS COFFIN, one of the oldest pioneers of Dutchess county, was born in Mechanic, town of Washington, April 23, 1807. He remained on his father's farm (with the exception of one year, which he spent with Samuel Thorne) until his marriage March 22, 1832, to Miss Myra Barlow, who was born in the town of Amenia, October 29, 1811.

In 1833 Mr. and Mrs. Coffin moved to a farm situated where the county house now stands, where they remained one year, and then came to their present farm, sixty-four years ago, and where both are still living, sound in mind and body and capable of enjoying life to the fullest extent. The following children were born to them: Robert, who is engaged in business at Brooklyn; Lucy, who became the wife of Newton B. Holbrook, formerly a merchant of the town of Washington, but now deceased; Cora, who married Homer Fitch, a farmer in Washington town; Magdalene, unmarried; Zaide, who died at the age of seventeen, and Lilian, deceased at the age of eight.

Mr. Coffin has a farm of 135 acres, and still does general farming. He has always been a Democrat, voting in 1828 for Jackson, and ever since regularly supporting the ticket of his party. He takes an active interest in politics, and has been justice of the peace for thirty years, but resigned the office when he reached the age of seventy years. He has been called to sit on the bench at Poughkeepsie many times, and has often been appointed foreman of the grand jury. Although past eighty-eight years he talks, acts and thinks like a patriot, and stands like a sturdy oak in the forest of humanity. He well remembers the transportation of the cannon, and the men marching through the town on their way to defend the New York harbor against the British in 1812. The younger generation looks up to him with wonder and admiration. Our subject has contributed to the local paper (Millbrook Round Table) articles on the reminiscences of early days, which were highly appreciated. His wife has been a faithful, loving helpmate through many years of joys and sorrows.

Robert Coffin, father of our subject, was born at Little Rest, town of Washington, October 2, 1778, and died November 28, 1842. He was apprenticed to James Willitts to learn the tanner's and shoemaker's trade, and after serving his time, he, with his brother-in-law, Peter Kipp, bought out the business, which they continued in partnership for a year, when our subject bought out Peter, and kept at it alone until 1814. He then bought a farm of 180 acres, and lived there until his death. He married Miss Magdalene Bentley, a granddaughter of Col. James Van Deberg, of Beekman, with whom Washington and LaFayette often stopped. She was born in the town of Beekman December 26, 1782, and died August 30, 1866. Her father was Taber Bentley, a farmer in the town of Beekman. To our subject's parents were born the following children: Jane Ann, who married Caleb Morgan, a merchant of Poughkeepsie; Alexander H. was a farmer and merchant in Unionvale; Hezekiah R. is our subject; Charles was a farmer in Unionvale; Sarah became the wife of Henry M. Swift, also a farmer of Unionvale; Eliza married George B. Caldwell, a merchant; Owen T. was surrogate of Westchester county for many years, and now lives in Peekskill; he is a graduate of Union College; George is in the real-estate business in California; Henry was a farmer and a railroad man, and owned much property (he is deceased); Robert G. is a farmer at South Millbrook. Mr. Coffin was a

Henkiah R. Coffin

Democrat, and represented the county in the Legislature. He was a prominent man, and settled many estates. Religiously, he was of the Quaker faith.

Abishai Coffin, our subject's grandfather, was born in Nantucket, where he grew up, and later went to sea in a whaler, wintering three seasons in Greenland. He married Sarah Long, a native of Nantucket, in 1774, and shortly after came to Dutchess county and settled on a tract of land in the town of Washington. Their children were: Sarah married Peter Kipp, a farmer living near Hudson; Tristram owned a farm of about 300 acres in the town of Washington; Lois died unmarried; Robert was the father of our subject; Jememiah married John Rider, a farmer in Ulster county. Mr. Coffin died on his farm in 1819. He was a Hicksite Quaker, and overseer of the poor. His father's name was Tristram. The family is of English extraction.

Thomas Barlow, father of Mrs. Coffin, was born at Cape Cod, and was a son of Moses Barlow, a native of the same place. Thomas married Miss Lucy Alerton, and the following children were born: Sally married a Mr. Crosby, of Massachusetts, and is deceased; Jenett also became the wife of a Mr. Crosby, and is deceased; Thomas is deceased; Aurelia married Barlow Nye, and is still living; Catherine married Edward Mills, of Connecticut, and is deceased; Mary became the wife of a Mr. Bartow, of Brooklyn, and is living; B. Franklin is a farmer in the town of Amenia. Mr. Barlow died in 1852, and his wife in 1860. They were both members of the Presbyterian Church, and took an active interest in the work.

Elisha Barlow, brother of Thomas, was one of those who helped to frame the constitution of the State.

JAMES F. GOODELL, M. D. Among those who devote their time and energies to the practice of medicine, and have gained a leading place in the ranks of the profession is this gentleman, who is located at Rhinebeck, Dutchess county. He is a native of Rockville, Conn., born May 16, 1849, and traces his ancestry back to Robert Goodell, who was one of the Puritans from the east of England who settled at Salem, Mass., in 1634. From him in direct line to the Doctor is Zachariah, Thomas (1), Thomas (2), Titus, Thomas

(3) and Francis. After his marriage to Miss Rhoda Grant, Titus Goodell located in New Hampshire, where he owned property; but when the colonies resolved to throw off the yoke of British rule he took up arms, joining the Continental army, and was killed at the battle of Stillwater. He had left his family with his father-in-law in Ellington, Conn., and as he never came back the farm descended to his children. It became the property of Francis Goodell, father of our subject, and has now been in the family since 1776.

The father was a man of unusual natural ability, and possessed a mind stored with results of wide reading and extensive observation of men and affairs. He married Sophia Louisa Burpee, and to them were born the following children: William, who was a member of the Union army during the Civil war, and was killed at the battle of Gettysburg; Ellen, wife of Charles Ames; James F., subject of this review; Edwin Burpee, a lawyer of New York City; Thomas Dwight, who studied in Athens and in the East, and is now professor of Greek in Yale University; and Mary Evelyn, wife of W. H. Trippett, of New Jersey. The father passed away September 16, 1896, at a ripe old age, as he was born May 29, 1813; his wife died March 4, 1897. In early life he voted the Whig ticket, while in later years he was a strong Republican; was public-spirited and enterprising, and one of the prominent citizens of his locality. A faithful member of the Congregational Church, he always took an active part in its work, and at the time of his death was serving as deacon.

In the public schools of Rockville and Ellington, Conn., our subject began his literary education, and for one year was a student in Cornell University. When about twenty years of age he began teaching, being principal of the Union School at Unionville, Conn., for two years, and was successful in that line of work. In 1877 he matriculated at the New York Homeopathic Medical College, from which he graduated two years later, but has ever kept up his investigations, and is now one of the most able general practitioners in Dutchess county. Immediately after graduation he began practice in New York City, remaining there until 1881, when he opened an office in Millbrook, Dutchess county. In 1887, he went to Mont Clair, N. J., but in February, 1889, returned to Dutchess county, this time locating at Rhinebeck, where he has since successfully prosecuted his profession. He has built up a large and lucrative practice, but has that true love for his work, without which there can be no success.

In 1885 Dr. Goodell was married to Miss Fanny Tripp, of Millbrook, Dutchess county. The Doctor is inclined to be independent in political matters, but usually votes with the Democracy. He holds membership with the Episcopal Church, of which he is now serving as warden, and wherever he goes he not only wins friends, but has the happy faculty of being able to retain them.

FRANK ENO, a well-known and successful lawyer of Pine Plains, Dutchess county, was born in 1845, in that village, in the house he is now occupying. The family is of English origin, and the name is sometimes spelled Enos.

The first of the name to come to this country was James Eno (1), who, in 1648, located in Windsor, Conn., married Hannah Bidwell the same year, and had one son, James (2), who was born in 1651, fought in the King Philip's war, and had his home in Windsor. He married Abigail Bissel in 1678, and died in the "Swamp fight," 1714. Their second son, William (1), wedded Mary North. The next couple in direct descent was William (2) and Lillias (Hicks) Eno, the former of whom was born in Simsbury, Conn., about 1726, and inherited a valuable farm from his father, William (1). William (2) and his wife had a son, Stephen, who was the grandfather of our subject. He was born at Simsbury, Conn., October 4, 1764, and was the first of the family to come to Dutchess county, locating at Amenia. Later he removed to Pine Plains, there building the office which is now occupied by his grandson, Frank Eno, and which has always been used as a law office. He remained at home until ten years of age, being taught to read by his father, and never attended school more than two months during his entire life. At that time he went to live with an aunt at Egremont, Mass., where he remained for about five years. He had formed a great desire for study, and not having the opportunity to go to school, he taught himself, slowly acquiring a knowledge of arithmetic and writing. For a short time he worked at several places after leaving his aunt's, and then entered the army at New Haven, Conn. Learning the shoemaker's trade, he worked at that occupation at Salisbury, that State, for six months, and later was employed by a Mr. Sanders until he reached his majority.

At that time Stephen Eno began teaching, while his vacations were spent in study. After following that profession for about six years, he began looking about him for some other employment, and began the study of law in the office of Philip Spencer, Jr., of Amenia, where he had been engaged in teaching. For a while he taught school and practiced law at the same time. After following his profession in the towns of Amenia, Stanford and North-east, Dutchess county, he purchased a house and lot in Pine Plains for $650, paying two-thirds of the amount down, and the remainder in one year. He was a man of fine attainments, and became one of the most able lawyers of his time in the county. His death occurred in Pine Plains, in 1854, at the advanced age of ninety years. He continued to wear knee trousers and his hair in a queue up to the time of his death. He was twice married, his first union being with Mary Denton, by whom he had three children: Henry, who went to California, and there became a judge; William, the father of our subject, and Edward, who became a resident of Springfield, Ill. His second wife bore the maiden name of Olive Shores, and to them was born a son, Rufus.

On April 21, 1800, William (3) Eno was born, and, like his father, he was largely self-educated. In the office of the latter he studied law, was admitted to practice in 1823, and for forty years he was one of the prominent and leading members of the Dutchess County Bar, having a large and lucrative practice. In 1836 he was elected a member of the Legislature on the Democratic ticket, and for two terms served as district attorney when the office was filled by appointment of the supreme court justices. Soon after the adoption of the constitution of 1848 he was mentioned as judge of the supreme court; but, being fond of agricultural pursuits, he retired, spending the remainder of his life at Pine Plains, within two miles of his landed estate. He was a contemporary of Henry Swift, Charles Johnson, Stephen Cleveland, Seward Barcolo, Morton Swift, Elias Cole, R. D. Davis, John V. A. Lyle, John Armstrong and D. V. N. Radcliff, and was second to none of them in point of ability and extent of his practice. He was a man of great natural ability, and became exceedingly prominent throughout the county. He always supported the Democratic party, and attended the Presbyterian Church. He died November 17, 1874. He was married to Eliza A. Stewart, daughter of William Stewart, of Pine Plains, and to them were born four children: William Stewart, who was one of the ablest lawyers of Dutchess county, is now president of the Bunnell & Eno Investment Co., of Philadelphia, Penn.; Henry W., who died December 14, 1884; Mary, now the wife of Matthew Ellis, who is also connected with the Bunnell & Eno Investment Co., Philadelphia; and Frank, the subject proper of this review. The mother's death occurred April 10, 1882.

Frank Eno was educated at College Hill, under Mr. Bisbee, where he took the four-years' course. After leaving school he began the study of law in his father's office, and was admitted to the bar May 13, 1868, since which time he has successfully engaged in general practice in the surrogate court, and has had much to do in the settlement of estates. He has one of the finest law libraries in the county, accumulated through three generations, and has ever been a thorough student of his profession, possessing many of the traits that distinguished his father and grandfather as sound advocates and able lawyers. Mr. Eno is also interested in agriculture, having a fine farm of between 500 and 600 acres, whereon he has an excellent herd of Jersey cattle. He had "Signal Queen" at the World's Fair, and took a medal in the grand contest for cheese. On June 15, 1881, Mr. Eno married Miss Rachel Rudd, daughter of Charles Rudd, of Gallatin, Columbia Co., N. Y., and of this union have been born five children: William Rudd, Charles, Fanny, Mary and Rachel.

In political campaigns, Mr. Eno has long been a potent factor in the support of Democratic principles, and during President Cleveland's second term he was appointed postmaster at Pine Plains. He has always taken a deep interest in educational matters, is president of the Seymour Smith Academy, and established the Pine Plains Free Library. With Stissing Lodge No. 615, F. & A. M., he holds membership, of which for fifteen years he has been master, and also belongs to the Chapter and Commandery in Poughkeepsie. He and his wife attend the Methodist Church. Socially, he is deservedly popular, as he is affable and courteous in manner, and possesses the essential qualification to success in public life, that of making friends readily and of strengthening the ties of all friendships as time advances.

WILLIAM AUGUSTUS DAVIES (deceased) was born in Poughkeepsie, May 10, 1808. His great-great-grandfather, John Davis, of Kington Parish, Hereford, England, was of a distinguished Welsh family deriving an unbroken descent from the famous Cymric Efell, Lord of Elwys Eyle, who lived A. D. 1200, son of Madocap Meredith, Prince of Powys Fadoc, sixth in descent from the heir of Merwyn, King of Powis, third son of Rodic Maur.

John Davies came to America in 1735, and settled in Litchfield county, Conn., where he purchased large tracts of land, and where his name is still held in honored remembrance for his good works, especially for his generous gifts toward the support of his mother Church of England, then struggling for existence in the Colonies. He was the grandfather of Rev. Thomas Davies, missionary of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, who was ordained to the priesthood by the Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. Secker, in Lambeth Chapel August 23, 1761. The ministry of Rev. Thomas Davies, though brief, was exceedingly useful. He had charge of several parishes in Connecticut, among them St. Michael's Church, Litchfield, of which his grandfather was the founder. He died in 1766 at the early age of twenty-nine, leaving two children—a son and a daughter, the former being William Davies, who settled in Poughkeepsie early in the present century. William Augustus Davies was the youngest of William Davies's seven children, and was born in his father's house at the foot of Main street, where he lived (except during the time he was at school and at Trinity College, Hartford, Conn.) until 1842. He devoted himself to the management of his property in Dutchess and Ulster counties, of which he and his brother, Thomas L. Davies, inherited several thousand acres from their father; and was one of the original Board of Directors of the Farmers' and Manufacturers' National Bank of Poughkeepsie, remaining on the board till his death, and holding the office of president from 1843 until 1892.

He was a faithful communicant of the Church of which his grandfather was a priest, and for many years represented his parish in the conventions of the Diocese of New York, and was several times a deputy to the general convention as a delegate from that Diocese. His greatest work among his many works for the Church, was the building, entirely at his own expense, of the Church of the Holy Comforter, which stands at the corner of Main street and Davies place, and is one of the younger Upjohn's best designs. In the noble work it has done and is still doing, it is a worthy monument of his generosity and benevolence.

In 1842 he married Miss Sarah Van Wageningen (daughter of Herbert Van Wagenen), who died in 1858, leaving no children. It was in her memory that the Church of the Holy Comforter was built. In 1861 he married Miss Frances Mary Barritt, daughter of Josiah Barritt. To them were born two sons, William and Augustus, the first of whom died in infancy.

Only those who knew Mr. Davies intimately could fully appreciate the beauty of his character, which was remarkable from his earliest childhood for the same generosity, unselfishness and simplicity which distinguished him through life. It can be said with truth that he never intentionally hurt anybody, either by word or deed, but was ever thoughtful and considerate, courteous and pitiful, honoring all men. He died on the sixth of August, 1896, in the eighty-ninth year of his age.

BARCLAY HAVILAND, a well-known citizen of Millbrook, Dutchess county, was born in the town of Dover, December 18, 1812. The first of the name to come to this country was either William or Benjamin Haviland, who emigrated from England and settled on Long Island at an early day in the history of the Colonies. From him in direct descent was his son Benjamin Haviland, who was born on Long Island; his son, Benjamin (2), was born in 1698; his son, Isaac Haviland, was born in August, 1751, in Westchester county, N. Y.; his son, Eleazer, was born May 27, 1777, in New Fairfield, Conn.; his son, Barclay, is the subject of this sketch.

Benjamin Haviland, our subject's great-grandfather, married Charlotte Park, the daughter of a French Huguenot. They settled in Westchester county, where they owned a farm of 400 acres, and there reared a family of thirteen children.

Isaac Haviland, our subject's grandfather, grew to manhood in his native county, and after his marriage to Anna Howland, removed to Fairfield county, Conn., where he owned and carried on a farm of 800 acres of land, and was well-to-do. Eleazer, the eldest of his five children, was married in 1798 to Abigail Hiller, daughter of Nathan Hiller, a farmer in the town of Dover. Like his ancestors, Eleazar Haviland, was a tiller of the soil, which occupation he followed throughout his life. For many years he was a minister in the Hicksite branch of the Society of Friends, and made frequent journeys to the different States and to Canada in that capacity, which journeys were made either on horseback or in a carriage. He died December 27, 1863; his wife passed away March 4, 1848. Five children were born to this worthy couple, only two of whom lived to maturity: Isaac E., the elder of the two, removed to Long Island in 1828, and became a prominent resident of Queens county, where he died in 1885; our subject is the younger.

Barclay Haviland grew to manhood on his father's farm at Chestnut Ridge, and at Mechanic, town of Washington, where the family moved in 1826. He was educated at the Nine Partners Boarding School at Mechanic, and later at the Jacob Willets private school. On June 11, 1845, he was married to Susan Hart Tredway, daughter of Dr. Alfred Tredway, of the town of Washington. They made their first home on the farm at Mechanic, remaining in that place until 1855, when they purchased the homestead of Mrs. Haviland's grandfather, Philip Hart, at Hart's Village, where they have since resided. Five children were born to them, three of whom are living: Katharine A. married Dr. John C. Otis, of Poughkeepsie; Isaac E. is a resident of Toledo, Ohio; and Caroline E. resides with her parents.

Mr. Haviland is a Democrat, and has been justice of the peace two terms. He was present at the meeting which organized the Dutchess County Agricultural Society, in 1841, and of this society he was treasurer for a number of years. Long one of the leading citizens of Dutchess county, his upright life and sterling qualities make him respected and esteemed by all who come in contact with him. He is a prominent member of the Society of

Barclay Harri lanes

Friends, and is always ready to assist in works of benevolence.

Elijah Tredway, the grandfather of Mrs. Haviland, was born in Connecticut, and from him the genealogy is traced to Nathaniel Tredway, born in Sudbury, England, in 1637. Dr. Alfred Tredway, his son (and the father of Mrs. Haviland), in his day a well-known physician, merchant and land owner of the town of Washington, was born in 1782, and died in 1826. He married Catherine Hart, who was born in what is now Millbrook, but at that time was known as Hart's Village, being so named for her father, Philip Hart, who was then the owner of nearly all the land in that locality. Philip Hart was the youngest son of Richard Hart, and was born January 12, 1749, in Little Compton, Rhode Island, and came to Dutchess county in 1767, where on December 18, 1774, he was married to Susanna Akin, daughter of Benjamin Akin. He was a prominent business man in his locality, being engaged in the manufacture of cloth. His death occurred August 31, 1837.

Benjamin Akin came to Dutchess county, between 1762 and 1765, from Rhode Island; the family is of Scotch extraction, and his father, "Squire Benjamin Akin," was born in Scotland in 1663, became a leading citizen and represented his district in public matters. He was appointed chairman of a committee which was formed in 1774 to oppose English taxation.

JAMES H. DUDLEY (deceased) was a native of Dutchess county, born in the town of Stanford, July 14, 1817, and was descended from worthy New England ancestry.

The founder of the family in America was William Dudley, a native of England, where he was married, August 24, 1636, to Jane Lutman, and on coming to America in the spring of 1639 located at Guilford, Conn., on a tract of 1000 acres of land, which he and his neighbors bought of the Indians, and which was divided among them. They gave the town the name of Guilford, and there Mr. Dudley followed farming. He was one of the prominent men of the community, and died there March 16, 1684. In his family were four children: William, Joseph, Ruth and Deborah. Of these, Joseph Dudley was born in that locality in 1643, and on reaching man's estate he followed coopering in Guilford, where he died June 3, 1712. He married Ann Robinson, and the reared a family of nine children, namely: Joseph, Benjamin, Caleb, Joshua, Miles, William, Mary, Mercy and Anna.

Miles Dudley, the next in a direct line to our subject, was born at Guilford, Conn., December 17, 1676. He married Rachel Strong, by whom he had nine children: Miles, Timothy (1), Timothy (2), Stephen, Selah, Beriah, Rachel, Mercy and John. The father of this family was a blacksmith by trade, and followed that occupation until his death, August 10, 1753. His son, John Dudley, was born at Guilford, October 16, 1721, and there passed his early life. He was united in marriage with Tryphena Stone, and to them were born eleven children: Timothy (1), William (1), Tryphena (1), Ruth, John, Tryphena (2), William (2), Polly, Lois, James and Timothy (2). With his family the grandfather removed to Berkshire county, Mass., where he purchased a large tract of land on the day the battle of Lexington was fought, and became one of the best farmers and most prominent citizens of the county. He died there in 1808.

James Dudley, the father of our subject, was born November 19, 1772, in Guilford, Conn., and was a child of three years when taken by his parents to Massachusetts, where he married Miss Lydia Leete, a descendant of the first governor of Connecticut Colony. Her father was born on Leete's Island, in Connecticut, January 16, 1746, and wedded Lydia Leete, by whom he had eleven children: John, Lydia, Amie, Lois, Eber, Olive, Mina, Orrit (1), Orrit (2), Harvey and Eli. In April, 1793, he moved to Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and in the town of Stanford, Dutchess county, purchased a farm, where he spent his remaining days, dying in 1822. His father, Rowland Leete, was born at Guilford, Conn., in 1708, and by his marriage with Mercy Dudley had eleven children: Timothy, Ruth, Anna, Sarah (1), John, Asahel, Hannah, Sarah (2), Abner, Miles and Rachel. William Leete, the father of Rowland Leete, was born March 24, 1671, and by his marriage with Hannah Stone had seven children: Anna, Elizabeth, Margery, Rowland, William, Jordan and Solomon. He was a son of Andrew Leete, who was born in 1643, and wedded Elizabeth Jordan, by whom he had six children: William, Caleb, Samuel, Dorothy, Abigail and Mercy. The father of Andrew Leete was William Leete, who emigrated from England in 1639, on the vessel on which our subject's paternal ancestors came to these shores. He was joined in wedlock with Anna Rogers, and to them were born nine children: John, Andrew, William, Caleb, Gratiana, Perigrine, Joshua, Anna and Abigail. Both the Leete and the Dudley families were members of the Congregational Church, and leading citizens in the localities where they made their homes.

After their marriage, the parents of our subject remained for some time in Massachusetts, but later became residents of the town of Stanford, Dutchess Co., N. Y. Four children were born to them: Chester L., who was born July 4, 1806, and became a farmer of Ulster county, removing to Memphis, Mich., in 1855, where he died June 24, 1879; George A. (1), who died in infancy; George A. (2), who was born in 1810, and became a banker of Ellenville, Ulster Co., N. Y., where he died March 3, 1886; and James H., subject of this sketch. The father's death occurred January 26, 1835, that of the mother on August 22, 1842.

On the farm, in the town of Stanford, James H. Dudley spent his boyhood until fifteen years of age, when he went to Ulster county, and in 1835 he located in Poughkeepsie, where for three years he worked for others at the carpenter's trade. He then carried on that business for himself until 1853, during which time he erected many houses which are still standing. In that year he began dealing in lumber and coal, continuing the same for sixteen years, at the expiration of which time he bought the Poughkeepsie Foundry, and continued its operation until 1880, when he laid aside business cares.

On January 4, 1842, he married Miss Charlotte Wiltsie, who was born in the town of Lagrange, Dutchess county, May 29, 1819, and died at Poughkeepsie, September 4, 1895; she was of Holland extraction. Her father, John C. Wiltsie, was a prominent farmer and justice of the peace of that locality. Four children were born of this union, of whom, Guilford, a hardware merchant of Poughkeepsie, is the only one now living; the others were Lavinia, Jeromus W. and Lydia L.

In Mr. Dudley the Republican party found an earnest supporter, and he served his fellow citizens as supervisor for several terms, was alms house commissioner one term, and one of the original trustees of the Old Ladies Home.

For half a century he was a member of the Poughkeepsie Lyceum, was actively identified with the Temperance cause, and was one of the leading and influential men of the city. Both he and his wife were consistent members of the Congregational Church, of which he was clerk some forty-four years, and trustee for many years. He was called from earth June 30, 1896.

JOHAN H. COTTER, M. D., a prominent physician of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, whose success in general practice has brought him speedy recognition as a professional worker, has given, with his struggle with adverse circumstances in early life, a proof of the truth of the old saying—"Where there's a will, there's a way."

He is a descendant of an old Irish family and the ancient freehold known as the "Mt. Katharine" farm, situated in the parish of Water Grass Hill, County Cork, Ireland, has been in the possession of his forefathers continuously for many generations, and is still owned and occupied by a branch of the family. James Cotter, the Doctor's grandfather, passed his life there as a farmer, and was also interested in a weaving-mill. He was a thrifty, prosperous man, of unassuming manners never taking any part in public affairs, and like his ancestors and descendants was a devout Catholic. He and his wife reared a family of six sons: John, Patrick, James, William, Garrett and Cornelius. James came to America and settled in New Orleans, and served in the Confederate army as a member of the Engineer corps.

John Cotter, our subject's father, was born in the old home in December, 1805, and was married in 1840 to Mary Haggerty, a native of the same county. He was a farmer by occupation, and for a short time was engaged in business as a miller; but in 1850 he left his native land owing to some trouble with the English government over the question of gathering tithes. Naturally he turned to America as a place of refuge, and on coming to this country settled in Pleasant Valley, Dutchess county, where for many years he worked as a farm laborer; but gradually he accumulated a fund of money which enabled him to purchase, in 1870, a farm in the town of Clinton, Dutchess county. His wife died there in 1872, and there his own remaining years were spent, his death occurring in 1878. He was a member of the Roman Catholic Church of Rhinecliff parish. He had received fair educational advantages in youth, and in later years he kept well posted upon the topics of the day, taking especial interest in political questions and in the success of the Democratic party, although he was never an active worker in the organization. The Doctor was the fifth in a family of nine children. Of the others, Hannah (Mrs. Patrick Coffey), died in 1877; James lives at Clinton Corners; Lawrence is a resident of Rock City; Mary married John Flemming; Catherine died in infancy; William lives in Dover, N. J.; Cornelius is a farmer in Schultsville, and Nora Frances married John O'Neil.

Dr. Cotter was born in the town of Pleasant Valley, April 6, 1851, and owing to his father's reduced circumstances he was obliged to make his own way from the age of twelve years, when he began working for John Van-Wagenen, of East Park, with whom he remained five years, attending school in the winter and occasionally finding a chance to go during the summer term. He was employed as a farm hand until the age of twenty-three; but his great desire for knowledge, and determination to make the most of every opportunity, never failed him. In 1868 and '69 he attended Dutchess County Academy under Prof. Pelnam, but was compelled to give up his studies one month before graduation, and return to his labors upon the farm. In 1874 he began his medical studies with Dr. Denny, and later continued them with Dr. Hoyt. After a preliminary course of reading he entered the Albany Medical College, a branch of Union University, and his vacations were also devoted to study in the office of his preceptor. On February 3, 1878, his long toil was rewarded by the bestowal of the degree of M. D., and he immediately began practicing at Mt. Ross, Dutchess county, where he remained until August, 1880, when he moved to Jackson Corners and continued his professional work. In May, 1894, his nephew succeeded him there, and he moved to Poughkeepsie, where he has built up a flourishing practice.

In August, 1880, the Doctor married Miss Mary Smith, of Gallatin, Columbia Co., N. Y., by whom he had two children: John Isaac, born in August, 1881, and William Henry, born in June, 1885, and died in August of the same year. The mother passed away in July, 1885, and in February, 1888, the Doctor formed a second matrimonial union, this time with Miss Mary Frances Calvey, of Gallatin. They have had two children: Lawrence, born in September, 1891, and Mary Alice, born in February, 1893. The Doctor is a well-informed man on general questions as well as on his special line of work, and he is interested in politics as a firm upholder of Democratic principles. He was health officer for Milan and Gallatin for several years, and at present is postmaster at Jackson Corners. He is a member of St. Peter's Roman Catholic Church, and of the Catholic Benevolent League; he also belongs to the Order of Elks, and is a member of the Knights of St. George.

CYRENUS P. DORLAND, surrogate of Dutchess county, and a prominent lawyer of Poughkeepsie, was born February 28, 1848.

The first of the Dorland family to locate in Dutchess county was Enoch, of Holland descent, who came from Long Island and bought a farm in the town of Lagrange. He had four children, viz.: Gilbert Dorland, who married Jennie Hegeman, of Lagrange; Dorcas, who married George Congdon; Anna, who married Treadwell Townsend; and Phebe, who married Joseph Irish. Gilbert Dorland, who was the grandfather of our subject, left the following children: Enoch Dorland, who belonged to the Society of Friends, and who for a long time conducted the Nine Partners School at Mechanic, in the town of Washington, in this county; Gilbert, who carried on agricultural pursuits in Dutchess county; John, a farmer of Columbia county; Cynthia, who married Nemiah Place, who for many years was postmaster at Fishkill Landing; James, who was a lawyer, and who, during the greater part of his life, lived in the South; Adrian, who in early life followed farming; Dorcas, who married Moses Alley, an agriculturist; Abby, who married John Tripp, a farmer; Peter, the father of our subject, is next in order of birth; Zachariah, who was for many years a school teacher, and is now a commercial traveler; Philip, a Quaker preacher; and Phebe, who married John Nelson, a farmer. The father of this family followed farming exclusively as a life vocation, and in religious faith he was an Orthodox Friend.

Peter Dorland, the father of our subject, was born at Fishkill Plains, in the year 1815; was reared upon a farm, and in his younger days taught school in his home neighborhood. He married Catherine E. Miller, who was born in the town of Lagrange, March 8, 1821, a daughter of John and Margaret Miller, farming people of the same town; the former was of Holland lineage, and a native of Westchester county; the latter was a native of Fishkill, Dutchess county. Shortly after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Peter Dorland removed to Matteawan, Dutchess county, and he there taught school for some time. He then moved to Poughkeepsie, where he taught school a short time, also studied law, and then returned to Matteawan, finished his studies and was admitted to the bar. He served several terms as justice of the peace of that town. In the fall of 1859 he was elected, by the Republican party, surrogate of the county, when he again moved back to Poughkeepsie, where he lived until 1890, having been honored by his party with the nomination and election for the third time. He held the office for the long term of fourteen years. He and his wife were earnest workers in the Methodist Episcopal Church. Six children were born to them as follows: Emma, who never married; Lettie M., who is now deceased; John M., an attorney at Poughkeepsie; Cyrenus P., our subject, and Myron and Kate, both of whom are dead.

Cyrenus P., the fourth in order of birth of the family, spent his early life at Fishkill Landing, where he attended the district school. After his parents removed to Poughkeepsie he attended the public school some time, and then entered the Dutchess County Academy, where he pursued his studies for three years. At the age of seventeen he went to New York City, and was employed for some time in the wholesale cloth house of S. Hutchinson & Co.; then returned home and went into an office with his father, who was then surrogate.

Mr. Dorland studied law, and was admitted to the bar in 1875. He has always been a leading Republican, and in 1879 was elected by that party a justice of the city, in which capacity he served seven years, having been elected the second time. In 1886 he was nominated and elected recorder of the city, and after serving his term was nominated and elected surrogate of the county, serving the term of six years. In 1896 he was again nominated and elected by the same party, by a very large majority, leading the whole ticket by a very handsome vote, and is at present holding the office. He has discharged its responsible duties with ability and faithfulness, and to the satisfaction of the people, and has now the reputation of a man of integrity and high principle.

In 1872 Mr. Dorland was united in marriage with Miss Kate S. Cary, who was born in Poughkeepsie, and whose father, Gilbert Cary, was for many years engaged in the freighting business in that city. Three children were born to them: Leslie C., Clarence (deceased) and Mary W. Mr. Dorland and his family attended the Washington Street Methodist Church. He is a public-spirited man, and is interested in all matters pertaining to the public welfare.

CAPT. JAMES E. MUNGER, a leading business man of Fishkill-on-Hudson, Dutchess county, a wholesale and retail dealer in lumber and building materials, also well known as a contractor and builder, is a native of New York City, born January 29, 1838, the son of James E. and Julia A. (Albee) Munger.

The public schools of his native city afforded him excellent opportunities for an education, and at sixteen he began to learn the milling trade, at White Lake, N. Y., with John T. Linson. The business was not congenial, but he completed his apprenticeship of three years, and then learned the carpenter's trade, and engaged in contracting and building on his own account at Fishkill, N. Y. With the exception of three years during the Civil war, he has followed this ever since, in connection with other enterprises. For eight years of the time he owned a schooner, of which he took charge as captain, carrying freight on the Hudson river, and Long Island Sound, and for the last twelve years he has been engaged in the lumber trade at Fishkill-on-Hudson, having purchased the business of Andrew Barnes. His office is on Main street, while his yard is on Elm street, in rear of the "Holland House," where he has a large covered yard well stored with all kinds of builders' materials.

Capt. Munger is extremely popular throughout this locality, where his family has long been well and favorably known, his father having been a native of Dutchess county. As a leading worker in the Republican party, the Captain has been tendered nominations for the best offices in the county; but he does not care to go too deeply into politics. He has, however, served for many years as trustee of the village of Fishkill-on-Hudson; since the spring of 1892 has been township supervisor, being re-elected every year; in 1896 was chosen for a term of two years, and is at present chairman of the board. His war record is an honorable one. He enlisted in August, 1862, in the 128th N. Y. V. I., and was promoted to the rank of commissary sergeant, and was also acting quartermaster for eight months in the absence of S. H. Mase. Although his position would have excused him from active service on the field, he voluntarily took part in every battle in which his regiment engaged. He rose from a sick bed to join in the fight at Port Hudson, was in the engagement at Pearl River, and served all through the Red River campaign, while later he was in the battles of Winchester, Fisher's Hill and Cedar Creek. At the latter, when the enemy had all but surrounded the Federal forces, Capt. Munger made a dash to secure the commissary and quartermaster records; but before he could reach the tent a shell exploded, overturning the tent and scattering its contents in all directions. While gathering up some of the important papers and placing them in his haversack, another shell exploded near him, a piece striking the straps of the haversack and tearing it out of his hand. Even at that moment, with the death-dealing shells flying and bursting all around him, his sense of humor did not desert him, for he turned to his comrades and exclaimed, while holding up the remnants of the haversack: "Look at that, boys; pretty hot, ain't it?" He was at all times the life of his regiment, full of fun and ambition, as well as courage, and with his violin he cheered many a despondent and homesick comrade. He remained in the army until the close of the war, and was mustered out in July, 1865. He is a member of several fraternal orders: Riverview Lodge No. 560, I. O. O. F.; Melzingale Lodge No. 304, K. of P.; Beacon Lodge No. 283, F. & A. M.; Howland Post No. 48, G. A. R.; and is an honorary member of the Lewis Tompkins Hose Company.

JAMES HERVEY COOK, of Fishkill-on-the-Hudson, Dutchess county, is a prominent member of the legal fraternity. He is one of the busiest of men, devoted to his profession, and we found him reluctant to give any account of himself, telling us he had not come to the golden middle life with a feeling that he wanted in any way to become his own eulogist. He thought by such a time a man or woman became known to those around them, and to those with whom they had been brought into personal friendships. But he consented to give a little outline, saying that as it was the wish of the publishers of this enterprising book to have the life stories in brief of many for useful reference, it might be misconstrued were he to decline to relate something of the way along which he had come, when he had so much to be thankful for.

He told us that he was a native of Johnsonburg, Warren Co., N. J., a few miles from the birthplace of Benjamin Lundy, the very first of all the great leaders in emancipating the slave, of whom Horace Greeley gives a full sketch in the first volume of his history of the war of the Rebellion. It is in the midst of a picturesque region, there being a succession of hills richly cultivated, extending from the Allamuchy Mountain, on the east, to the Blue Mountain range, on the west, and in full view some ten miles away, is Delaware Water-Gap, which has been for a long time a fashionable resort, being surrounded by wild and charming scenery. Johnsonburg had an early significance, and was known as Log Gaol, being the county seat of Sussex down to 1745, and taking its name from the old log house that served jail purposes. Sussex was divided in 1824, and that part became the upper portion of Warren county, named in honor of the patriot who fell at Bunker Hill, and rightly, as the majority in those two counties were active in battling for freedom in the Revolution.

Mr. Cook is of Pilgrim ancestry. His great-grandfather, Elisha Cooke, migrated from the old town of Plymouth, in Massachusetts, about the year 1745, having the dauntless spirit of those fathers of New England, locating at first at Mendham, near Morristown. The oldest tombstone in the old Presbyterian churchyard there is that of Daniel Cooke, who was most likely a relative. A little later, in 1748, Elisha Cooke became one of the first settlers around Johnsonburg, N. J., and purchased some five hundred acres of land, which has been largely occupied by his numerous descendants. He was of sturdy intellect, inflexible in the religious faith of his fathers, and he loved to tell of their virtues. He was the fourth in direct descent from Francis Cooke, who came with Bradford and Brewster in the "Mayflower," and was one of that historic company who went with them for conscience sake to Holland, where he married a French Protestant, a Walloon, a people that had suffered from so-called religious persecutions. He was one of the most respected members of that heroic band. He felled trees in their first winter alongside of Miles Standish; his house was among the first seven that were built, and was next to that of Edward Winslow, afterward Governor; as a surveyor of highways he was associated with Winslow and Bradford. It is said that he did much to advance the growth of the colony, and was one of the most thrifty of the settlers. He was on intimate terms with those leading families, his children marrying into them. One son married a daughter of Richard Warren, as did also the father of the famous Capt. Church, and another son, in direct line with our Mr. Cook, married Damaris Hopkins, whose father was the ancestor of Stephen Hopkins, Governor of Rhode Island, and a signer of the Declaration of Independence. A daughter married a Capt. Thompson. Grandsons were with Capt. Church in the King Philips war, and their families, being connected, were brought near to him, and were conspicuous when the chieftain fell, one of them ordering the friendly Indian at his side to fire the fatal shot, his own flint missing fire.

Mr. Cook's birth was in a farm home, upon one of the estates of his grandfather, James Cooke, the honored head of a large family, with the strict religious views of his New England ancestry, and who had been from the first establishment of the Presbyterian Church a revered elder. His oldest son, Frederick S., the father of him whom we are sketching, was of an unusually good and clear understanding, intelligent, of the strictest integrity, and could not be otherwise than religious. Living a quiet life, he was only known fully by those immediately around him. He thought the letter "e" in the Cooke name superfluous, and dropped its use, as others of the family have done. Edward Cooke, the great English lawyer, was of this family, and struck out one "o" (as we are told by his biographer) to please his second wife. In the earlier days there was no regularity in spelling, and in that way many family names have undergone changes in spelling. Mr. Cook's father died in 1867, much respected by all who knew him.

His grave is in the family burial plot at Succasunna, N. J., in the old churchyard of the Presbyterian Church. Among other tombs, there is that of Mahlon Dickerson, who was Governor, United States Senator, and Secretary of the Navy in Jackson's administration.

Mr. Cook speaks with great affection of his mother, as being a woman of very superior mould, and as directing her children with her wise counsel. She was endowed with the finest qualities of a Christian mind and heart, and was always an inspiration to them. She died a few years ago deeply mourned. Her father was Gershom Bartow, a leading man in northwestern New Jersey, and a lineal descendant of Francois Barteau, a Huguenot, who came with other Huguenots to Long Island. Her mother was an Ogden, a name conspicuous for ability and patriotism in the annals of the State. A noble brother, who did patriotic service in the Civil war, died in 1894. Two sisters, who have his warm affection, are in the old homestead.

Mr. Cook was taught in his home and in the neighboring schools in early boyhood. He speaks of his first teachers as being good instructors, and says that he had a love for study. His thirst for learning led him to seek it in every way, and the home had often late study hours. During his boyhood his father moved to the site of Ledgewood, a mountain-encircled plain, near Schooley's Mountain, and a few miles to the southwest are the famous Schooley's Mountain Springs. The Morris canal runs along the farm, and near by is one of its locks, and a short distance off are two of the famous inclined planes. About three miles to the northwest is the romantic Lake Hopatcong, visited for its great natural beauty. Upon the farm is a deposit of valuable Infusorial Earth, which has attracted the attention of learned scientists, and is regarded as being in quality equal to the best German beds, in which he is interested.

It was there that Mr. Cook grew to manhood. The public schools were good, and he says that he owes much to one of those teachers who had a large acquaintance with literature, aside from instructing well in mathematics and introducing them to the study of Latin. He was a superior elocutionist, and his pupils became good readers and declaimers, being taught to read effectively the best literary productions. He took great pains to have them practice in composition and debating, and Mr. Cook says he has never known better readers and declaimers than there were in that country school. They were made familiar with the writings of the best authors. Not in the neighboring academy did he have better teaching. But he tells most proudly of his later Principal in the Chester Institute, William Rankin, as being one of the finest scholars he ever knew. Of rich natural endowments, indeed great, he was richer in his scholastic attainments, being a rare linguist, a scientist and a historian, with the Master's degree from Yale. He was a born teacher, and many went out from his school into advanced college classes. There Mr. Cook read both Latin and Greek, and made himself familiar with the classic authors. He admires Virgil, Horace and Cicero greatly, and frequently pores over them, and studies the pages of Homer and Demosthenes. That Principal was his most intimate friend, and gave him every encouragement. Another close friend was a teacher in that school, who loved to argue as well as did Goldsmith's schoolmaster, and who became a leading legislator in New Hampshire. With him he had many friendly contentions in debate.

Mr. Cook was early interested in politics, and listened with deep and even passionate interest to political discussions. He would go far and near to listen to eloquent speakers, and heard the foremost orators. In political meetings he would frequently take part in speaking, and would report speeches for his party paper, to which he was an occasional contributor. Those political contests were warm, just preceding the Civil war, and at the Institute, and later, he firmly planted himself on the side of the old flag, and offered to give his services in the great struggle. His brother enlisted, and he could not go, but the whole family contributed largely from their means to give aid. About that time he began reading law, under the direction of Jacob Vanatta, a leading lawyer at Morristown, an eloquent advocate, and afterward one of New Jersey's ablest attorney generals. In the fall of 1865 he entered the Law Department of the University of Albany, graduating in November, 1866. Two of those professors were Ira Harris, then United States Senator, and Amasa J. Parker, both distinguished jurists. Judge Parker was a staunch friend. Among those classmates were a number who have risen to distinction, William McKinley, now President, being the most widely known. Mr. Cook was a member of two classes, which numbered many talented young men, and was chosen President of the Saturday Evening Congress, a society for general debate, numbering the foremost of those ambitious law students, although a majority differed from him in politics.

After graduating at the Law School, Mr. Cook was urged to spend the winter of 1866 and 1867 at Dover, N. J., to attend to the law practice of a prominent lawyer, who had just been elected to the Legislature, and who insisted on his remaining with him as a partner; but having resolved to locate along the Hudson, Mr. Cook settled in May, 1867, at Fishkill-on-the-Hudson, where he has since been actively engaged in all the courts. He is widely known in the profession. He is both counsellor and advocate, and has had many cases of more or less importance, in which he has met with a marked success. He has always been painstaking and laborious in obtaining fully the facts from his clients, and has been untiring in his efforts to look up the law, with a determination to state his cases in clear arguments to judge and jury.

Mr. Cook has been deeply interested in the duties of a citizen, and is pronounced in his political views, being attached firmly to the principles of the Democratic party, which he has never failed to urge in public speech; but he has never allowed political questions to be discussed in his office, believing that those who differ from him politically should not be annoyed by fruitless discussions, when business should have undivided attention; with that reasonable tolerance for the opinions of others they have shown a like generosity and the result has been that he has as many clients in the opposite party as in his own. He has never held public office, feeling it is better for a lawyer to give himself wholly to his professional duties. To gratify a number in his party, he was a candidate, in 1886, for the Legislature, when he made a strong canvass against great odds; but was not elected. At that time he had a warm letter from George William Curtis, approving of his independent course. Mr. Curtis mentioned him very honorably afterward in an editorial in "Harper's Weekly," commending him to the whole country. He has not clung to his party when he has been satisfied that the candidate was unfit for office, and he was a delegate to the famous Syracuse Convention, when independents met in opposition to leading men among their former political friends, from whom they differed in regard to political action growing out of the contest which resulted in seating Senator Osborne after the miscount in Dutchess county. Mr. Cook at once disapproved of that course in a public letter, widely published, and also, as to the later candidacy of Maynard for Judge of the Court of Appeals, who became involved in that controversy, and who was overwhelmingly defeated. In 1896 Mr. Cook was again a candidate for the Assembly, with no hope of success, being among those in his party who would not support the majority in his party, on account of the financial question, and the un-democratic platform, as he terms it, and independently gave aid to the Republican candidate for President, as Mr. Cook did directly for patriotic motives.

Mr. Cook has always been interested in historical matters, especially those relating to our Colonial and Constitutional history, has corresponded with leading historical scholars, and given many historical addresses and papers before public assemblies. He is now first vice-President of the Historical Society of Newburgh Bay and the Highland, is a member (or fellow) of the American Geographical Society, and has been connected with other societies. He has been an occasional contributor to the press. In his own town he has never failed to take an active and decided part in public matters. At one time he was a village trustee, and for several years was President of the Board of Education, and sought most earnestly to have the course of study enlarged, that it might compare favorably with the best public-school instruction in the State, and furnish those children, who could not attend academies and colleges with opportunities to become good scholars, if so inclined. An improvement in that direction is now seen. He is also an officer of the Reformed Church, with which he has long been connected.

Mr. Cook was married, soon after coming to Fishkill, to an estimable young lady in New Jersey, whom he had known from boyhood. Her father was a bank president, and his brother, himself and two sons were State Senators. She died some twenty years ago, leaving a son, Pierre Frederic Cook, who graduated at Princeton in 1892. He was afterward a student in the New York Law School, and under his father's direction and advice read law in the office of the late Governor Bedle of Jersey City. He has been admitted to the bar, and has before him very good professional prospects.

ELMER DANIEL GILDERSLEEVE, a leading merchant of Poughkeepsie, was born in the town of Clinton, Dutchess county, July 11, 1846, son of Smith J. and Rachel (Alger) Gildersleeve, and is of Scottish descent.

Henry Gildersleeve, the grandfather of our subject, was born February 13, 1765, at Hempstead, L. I., and after his marriage with Eunice Smith (who was born April 16, 1766) he settled on a farm in the town of Clinton, Dutchess county. In politics he was a Whig, in religious faith a Quaker. His family comprised eight children, whose names and dates of birth are as follows: Elizabeth, September 5, 1788; Mary, October 5, 1790; Phœbe, January 28, 1793; Sarah, September 30, 1795; Henry, October 16, 1797; Ruth, August 27, 1800; Jane, November 29, 1805; and Smith J., August 21, 1809. Of these, Phœbe married a Mr. Gurney, a farmer of Saratoga county, N. Y.; Sarah became the wife of Edward White, a farmer in the town of Chatham, Columbia county; Henry became a farmer in the town of Hillsdale, Columbia county; Ruth married Leonard Sackett, a farmer of Dutchess county; and Jane married and went west, where she died.

Smith J. Gildersleeve, the youngest in the above-named family, and the father of our subject, was born August 21, 1809, in the town of Clinton, Dutchess county, and was reared on his father's farm. He married Miss Rachel Alger, who was born in the town of Stanford, Dutchess county, daughter of Daniel Alger (born July 26, 1773) and his wife Hannah (born March 5, 1782). Mr. Alger in religious faith was a Universalist, by occupation a hatter. Four children were born to him and his wife, their names and dates of birth being as follows: Ann, April 11, 1804; Stephen, March 5, 1807; Belinda, June 13, 1810; and Rachel, February 16, 1816. To Mr. and Mrs. Smith J. Gildersleeve were born five children, as follows: (1) Belinda, born in 1838, married Robert Halstead, a farmer in the town of Clinton, and died in 1865; (2) Henry C., born in 1840, died in infancy; (3) Henry A., born August 1, 1840, resides in New York

Oliver D. Gildersleeve

City, and is a judge of the supreme court, being the youngest man ever elected to that office in the city [See sketch of him elsewhere]; (4) Frank Van Buren, born in 1842, is a physician in New York City. (These two brothers, Henry A. and Frank Van B., served in the Civil war, and took part in many of the important battles, including that of Gettysburg, Henry returning with the rank of major); and (5) Elmer Daniel, the subject proper of this memoir, born July 11, 1846.

Smith J. Gildersleeve followed farming most of his life. He was a member of the Republican party, but sympathized strongly with the Prohibitionists as he was an ardent advocate of temperance. At one time there was a combined effort of the "Washingtonians" (as the temperance people were called) to put their men into office, and Mr. Gildersleeve being one of the leaders was instrumental in electing their ticket. During the campaign he delivered a number of lectures on the subject of temperance at which he would sing, and his sweet notes were so effective that many signed the pledge under the influence of his music. In matters of religion he was a Quaker by birth, but having married outside the Society he was "disowned," and afterward became a prominent member of the Christian denomination at Stanfordville, during which time he was a member of the building committee of a new church erected at Schultsville, within one mile of his birthplace—the only church in that locality. After coming to Poughkeepsie he joined the M. E. Church; but all along he faithfully held to the faith of his fathers, attending the Friends meetings during the later years of his life. He died in 1881, in Brooklyn, N. Y.; his wife had passed away in 1864.

Elmer D. Gildersleeve, whose name introduces this sketch, spent his boyhood days on the home farm in Clinton, where he attended the district school, finishing his education at the Claverack Institute, in Columbia county. In 1866 he came to Poughkeepsie, and was employed as a clerk in the general store of Trowbridge & Co., remaining with them for a year. He was next employed in the shoe store of Charles Eastmead for a year, at the end of which time he went into the shoe business with his father at No. 361 Main street. This they carried on for a year when they sold out to D. J. Heaton, our subject taking the management of the business for him, and remaining in charge of it for twelve years. In 1886, Mr.

Gildersleeve formed a partnership with Benson Van Vliet under the firm name of E. D. Gildersleeve & Co., and they are still carrying on the shoe business at No. 314 Main street, where they have the largest and finest establishment of the kind between New York and Albany.

Mr. Gildersleeve is a prominent member of the Society of Friends, or Quakers, in which he was made a minister June 22, 1879. He has preached many sermons, and is always in request at funeral services, and in many ways takes an active interest in religious matters. He is a member of the Representative Meeting of the New York yearly meeting of Friends, which is the legislative body of the Church, and one of the oldest members of the Evangelistic Committee, which has charge of the Evangelistic work of the Church. He is also a member of the Y. M. C. A., of Poughkeepsie, of which he was vice-president for four years, and one of the board of directors for twelve years. He has devoted much time and labor to this cause, for which he has a deep affection; and in all good works he can always be relied on for substantial aid and sympathy, devoting as he does a great deal of time to visiting the sick and afflicted, and especially the aged and infirm. In business circles he holds high rank as a man of undoubted integrity, excellent judgment and progressive spirit, and has a large circle of warm personal friends. He is a member of the Board of Trade, also of the Retail Merchants Association, and believes in enterprise and progress. On September 1, 1869, Mr. Gildersleeve was married to Miss Phœbe Haviland, who was born at Clinton Corners, Dutchess county, and eight children have been born to them, namely: (1) Frank (deceased); (2) Alexander Haviland, engaged in manufacturing business; (3) William Davenport, an invalid, the result of service in the U. S. Regular Army, being one of the youngest of the United States pensioners (he resides with his parents); (4) Virginia Crocheron, a graduate of the Poughkeepsie High School, class of '95, at present devoting herself to the profession of voice culture (she has a soprano voice of great compass, sweetness and expression, and takes rank as one of the leading vocalists of the county; she is at present serving her second year as soloist of Christ Church, Poughkeepsie); (5) Elmer Daniel, Jr., a young man of much promise, who is now preparing for college in a Friends institute at Westtown, Penn., near Philadelphia; (6) Henry Alger (deceased); (7) Edith Haviland; and (8) Roger Morton. Mrs. Gildersleeve, one of the most highly educated women of the county, and a great reader, is possessed of superior mental caliber and conversational powers to a marked degree; and withal is a most devoted wife and mother, her first thought being of her children and the welfare of her family. In earlier life she possessed more than ordinary efficiency as an elocutionist, having completed a course in that art at Cook's Institute, Poughkeepsie.

Isaac Haviland, the grandfather of Mrs. Gildersleeve, married Miss Lydia Weaver, and shortly afterward settled on a farm at Quaker Hill, Dutchess county. They had nine children: Joseph, Daniel P., Isaac, Alexander Y., Jacob, Abraham, Charlotte, Sarah and Lydia Ann. The Havilands are of French-Huguenot stock, and possess a family crest; but the family in America are all members of the Society of Friends. Daniel, the second son of this family, married Lilius Aiken.

Alexander Y. Haviland, father of Mrs. Gildersleeve, was born August 25, 1814, at Quaker Hill, Dutchess county, and was reared to manhood on the home farm, and on August 8, 1844, he married Judith M. Griffen, who was born January 11, 1814, in Westchester county, N. Y., a daughter of Daniel Griffen (born in 1790, in the same county), and Phœbe Davenport Griffen. They settled on a farm at North Castle, where they reared a family of nine children: Mary D., Judith M. (mother of Mrs. Gildersleeve), Abigail, Esther H., Elihu, William D., Jacob, Catherine E. and Lydia S. About 1824, Daniel Griffen removed to Clinton Corners with his family, and spent the remainder of his life on a farm at that place. He died August 26, 1858, and his wife, on June 11, 1874. The Griffen family is of English and Welsh descent, and the great-great-grandfather, Elihu Griffen, was born in Westchester county, N. Y. After their marriage Alexander Haviland and his wife located on a farm at Clinton Corners, where two children were born to them: Lydia P., who died September 23, 1860, at the age of fifteen years; and Phœbe, wife of our subject. Mr. Haviland followed farming until his death, which took place May 29, 1853, after which his wife disposed of the property and removed to Poughkeepsie, where her daughter was educated and subsequently married. The mother is still living at the good old age of eighty-three years, and she and her brother Jacob, of Clinton Corners, are the only two survivors of this Griffen family.

COL. HENRY ALGER GILDERSLEEVE was born in Dutchess county, N. Y., August 1, 1840. His early life was spent on his father's farm and in attendance at the district school. When fifteen years of age he attended boarding school, and from that time up to the breaking out of the Civil war was either at school or engaged in teaching, that he might acquire funds with which to pursue his studies. He recruited for the 150th Regiment, N. Y. S. V. Infantry, and was mustered in as captain of Company C, October 11, 1862. He served with his regiment in the Middle Department, under Gen. Wool, and subsequently in the Army of the Potomac, in which, with his regiment, he participated in the battle of Gettysburg and in the subsequent campaigns in Maryland and Virginia.

After several months of special duty, Capt. Gildersleeve, in June, 1864, rejoined his regiment at Kenesaw Mountain, where it was attached to the First Division of the Twentieth Army Corps of the Army of the Cumberland, at that time commanded by Maj.-Gen. Hooker, and forming a part of the command of Gen. Sherman, then engaged in fighting its way to Atlanta. He served in Sherman's army until the close of the war, participating in numerous battles and skirmishes, and making the famous march with Sherman to the sea. He was made provost marshal of the First Division of the Twentieth Army Corps, on the staff of Gen. Williams, of Michigan. His duties as provost marshal were delicate, responsible and arduous. They were discharged, however, in a manner which met the approval of his superior. He was promoted to the rank of major of his regiment, and brevetted lieutenant-colonel U. S. V., by President Lincoln, "for gallant and meritorious service in the campaigns of Georgia and the Carolinas." When mustered out of service, in June, 1865, he chose the law as his profession, and in the autumn of that year entered the Columbia College Law School. Prof. Theodore W. Dwight, then at the head of the Law School, in a letter written to the Army of the Cumberland, referring to Col. Gildersleeve, who had become famous as a rifleman, through the successful achievements in Great Britain and Ireland, in 1875, of the American rifle team, of which he was captain, used the following language: "In Col. Gildersleeve I feel an especial interest, as I had the honor of giving him by personal attention his introduction to the science of law, and could have predicted the precision of his rifle from the accuracy and steadiness of his aim while going through his legal drill."

Col. Gildersleeve was admitted to the bar in 1866, and from that time until his elevation to the bench, in 1875, he was a hard-working and successful lawyer in the City of New York. The duties of his profession did not wean him entirely from his fondness for military life. In 1870 he was unanimously chosen lieutenant-colonel of the 12th Regiment, N. G. S. N. Y., and took a keen interest in his military duties, and in promoting the success of the regiment. He subsequently became assistant adjutant general and chief of staff in the First Division of the National Guard of the State of New York, with the rank of colonel, which position he held for more than twelve years. He was honored with the appointment, by Governor Dix, of General Inspector of Rifle Practice, and was once elected colonel of the Ninth Regiment, both of which high positions he declined in order that he might remain at the head of the staff of the First Division. In civil life he attracted considerable favorable comment as a lecturer and as an agreeable, forcible and interesting speaker. In 1875 he was elected judge of the Court of General Sessions of the City of New York, and for fourteen years sat upon the bench of that court, disposing of an immense number of criminal cases of every kind and description. He always tempered justice with mercy, and his record as a criminal judge is excellent. He is now in his fourth year of service on the civil bench, as judge of the Superior Court of the City of New York, and has upward of eleven years of service still before him. Under the new amendments to the constitution he will become judge of the Supreme Court, January 1, 1896.

Judge Gildersleeve is now (November, 1894) in the prime of life, blessed with perfect health and iron constitution. With a past so varied and eventful, he has still many years of usefulness before him. He is a tall, strong and heavily-built man, of dignified and rather reserved bearing, but with manners of unvarying courtesy and kindness. He still finds some time in which to indulge his fondness for outdoor sports, and is frequently seen at athletic games. A tramp over the hills, or through the swamps, wherever game can be found, with dog and gun, is his favorite pastime. While he has no longer the skill with the rifle that he possessed in earlier years, he is still a master with the shotgun. The frequent allusions to the fame which he acquired as a rifleman, to which he is called upon to listen, always afford him much pleasure. It was truly said by a prominent editorial writer that though Judge Gildersleeve might live to write some of the best judicial opinions reported, they would drop into insignificance when compared with his fame as a rifleman. A prominent man, who had been a political opponent of Judge Gildersleeve, once said of him that his principal characteristics were his evenness of temper, his kindness of heart and his fidelity to his friends. [From Report of the Annual Reunion and Dinner of the Old Guard Association of the Twelfth Regiment N. G. S. N. Y., April 21, 1894.]

LEWIS BAKER (deceased). Perhaps no man was ever known better, or known for a longer term of years in one community than was Lewis Baker, late of the town of Beekman, Dutchess county. Born in that town June 4, 1792, he grew to manhood there, and at the age of twenty-one years married Sarah Allen, daughter of a farmer of the town of Pawling, and began farming for himself by purchasing forty-eight acres of land, where he and his wife lived, in the same house, for over fifty years.

With a debt of $1,250.00 this energetic young man started, having good health and the aid of a loving wife, to clear himself of this incumbrance through his own hard toil. Always honest, sober, reliable and industrious, and with the success which surely accompanies a disposition like his, he not only paid for his first farm, but eventually purchased adjoining farms until he had a solid body of 400 acres of choice farming land, which was all paid for, well stocked and in good condition. Every acre was paid for without aid from outside source of any nature, but from the fruits of hard, honest labor as a farmer, having never made a dollar from speculation in his life. Although he lived far beyond the allotted limits of man's life, his clear, bright, honest eye was undimmed, and his wonted expression of self-reliance was never lost. At the age of ninety-three years he could take his "section" after the reaper, and bind seventy sheaves of rye in one hour—as he did in the season of 1885; or he could walk a distance of five or ten miles as quickly as most men who were but half his age.

Notwithstanding the lack of early educational advantages, he could write a letter which for style and correctness would be envied by many who have all the advantages of modern schools, and his sterling worth and good judgment are clearly shown by the high esteem in which he was held by the neighbors, among whom he had lived all his life, and by the evidence that the people of his town called upon him to serve them as justice of the peace consecutively for over a quarter of a century. He was their steadfast friend, advisor and counsellor in every emergency. As the Farm Journal, in its June issue, 1886, says: "He has a record of which any man may be proud, and we are proud to show his likeness to all our one million readers."

He had five sons, one of whom died young, and another, William, who died in 1885 in Illinois, where he had become a prosperous farmer; the other three, Alexander A., Cyrus and Nicholas, are still alive, and for old men are remarkably hale and hearty, which goes to show the healthy methods which our old friend instilled in the minds of his children. Alexander A. is a resident of Poughkeepsie, and until late years has followed the vocation of farming, and now at over eighty years of age is still vigorous and alert. Nicholas is an attorney located in the state of Connecticut, and Cyrus is a resident of Highland Falls, Orange county, this State.

The death of his loving wife, after fifty-five years of wedded life, made Mr. Baker's home seem desolate, and he subsequently divided his property among his children, and spent the remainder of his life with them alternately.

Mr. Baker's ancestors are said, on good authority, to have come from England in the "Mayflower," and settled in New England, but his father was a resident of the old town of Beekman.

Mr. Baker belonged to the sect of Friends, and his Quaker views were exemplified in his daily life. He was a man who never used vile language, was at all times kind and thoughtful for others, always a strong advocate for justice and peace between man and man. Honest in every relation, his word was as good anywhere as a bond. He was, indeed, a man whose memory should be honored, and this world would be better had it more of a like character. He died at the city of Poughkeepsie January 12, 1894, at the remarkable age of 102 years, and was buried in Rural Cemetery, leaving three of his children, many grandchildren and many great-grandchildren to mourn the loss of a father and good and wise counselor. Among the descendants who mourned his loss is his grandson and namesake, LEWIS BAKER, the well-known attorney and counselor of Poughkeepsie.

WILLIAM THACHER REYNOLDS, senior member of the well-known firm of Reynolds & Cramer, Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, is a descendant in the ninth generation of one of the earliest settlers of Rhode Island—William Reynolds, who was a signer of the original Providence compact in 1637, and who there is every reason to think was an offshoot of the manorial family of Reignoldes of Suffolk.

This pioneer had a son, James, who was a resident of Kingston, R. I., where he died in 1700. He and his wife, Deborah, had a son, Francis, of Kingston, who was born October 22, 1633, and died in 1722. He married Elizabeth, daughter of James and Elizabeth (Anthony) Greene, and granddaughter of John Greene, M. D., of Salisbury, Wiltshire, England, whose father was Richard Greene, Esq., of Bowridge Hall, Gillingham, Dorsetshire, England. They had a son, Peter, a resident of North Kingston, who had a son, John, born in 1721, and died there in October, 1804. He married Anne, daughter of William and Apne (Stone) Utter, and widow of Benjamin Greene. Their son, William, of North Kingston, who was born July 19, 1753, died October 4, 1841. He married Easter Reynolds, his second cousin, through John, James and Francis. He was commissioned ensign of the First company of North Kingston in June, 1775, and performed about two years' active service during the Revolutionary war, for which he was pensioned in 1832. His son, James, our subject's grandfather, born in North Kingston, R. I., April 7, 1777, moved to Poughkeepsie about 1800, and followed the occupation of ship carpenter until he established a store at Upper Landing, which formed the nucleus of the extensive business now conducted by our subject. He was a leading citizen of his time, and was instrumental in a great degree in the early development of the city, then a mere village. A Quaker in religious faith, he displayed strong moral qualities joined to perfect liberality as to doctrinal points. His strictly temperate habits have been followed by all his descendants without exception, and the family have been noted for the qualities which constitute good citizenship, although they have never taken any active part in politics. He was married February 22, 1803, to Elizabeth Winans, daughter of James and Joanna (De-Graff) Winans, and granddaughter of James and Sarah Winans, of Pine Plains, and John De Graff, of Poughkeepsie, who was a descendant in the third generation of Jean and Mary (Lawrence) le Comte, of Harlem, 1674, de Graaff being a Dutch corruption of the French le Comte.

Their son, William Winans Reynolds, our subject's father, received his education in Poughkeepsie, and at an early age engaged in his father's business, to which he and his brother James succeeded. A man of well-trained intellect, great energy and sound business judgment, he developed the trade of the house extensively, making it the leading one of its line along the river. From 1840 to 1872 the business was the embodiment of his own ideas and abilities, owing to his brother's ill health and distaste for commercial life. He was an active and prominent member of the Washington Street M. E. Church, serving many years on the board of trustees, to which his brother also belonged. Mr. Reynolds was married September 10, 1833, to Phebe Amanda Thacher (daughter of Rev. William Thacher, who was descended from Colonel and Hon. John Thacher, of Yarmouth, Mass., who served in King Philip's war, and was for many years a member of the Governor's council. Rev. William Thacher's maternal grandfather was Thomas Fitch, Governor and Chief Justice of Connecticut), by whom he had six children: Martha T. (Mrs. William D. Murphy), Catherine R. (Mrs. Aaron Innis), Mary Louisa (the widow of Walter C. Allen), William T. (our subject), Hannah M., and Clarence James (now a partner of the firm of Reynolds & Cramer).

The subject of our sketch was born in Poughkeepsie, December 20, 1838, was educated in the public schools there, and has always been identified with the interests of the city. At the age of sixteen he began working in his father's wholesale store, taking a place "at the foot of the ladder," and working up by degrees until he had familiarized himself with every branch of the business. He has inherited the excellent qualities which made his father and grandfather useful and honored citizens, and he has well maintained the credit of the Reynolds name in religious, social and commercial life.

On July 6, 1864, William T. Reynolds was married to Miss Louise Smith, and they have two children: Harris Smith Reynolds, born May 19, 1865, also a member of the firm of Reynolds & Cramer, and May Louise Reynolds, born July 5, 1873. Our subject being a conservative Republican, has never taken an active part in politics, but is possessed of strong convictions, and great courage and independence in supporting any cause he believes to be right. He holds many important positions of honor and trust in the community, to wit: President of the board of trustees of the Washington Street M. E. Church; president of the Vassar Brothers Home for Aged Men; trustee of the Old Ladies Home; trustee of the Poughkeepsie Rural Cemetery; director of the Fallkill National Bank and the Poughkeepsie Savings Bank.

WALTER C. HULL, well-known in Dutchess and surrounding counties as a prominent and highly popular attorney at law, with offices at No. 52 Market street, Poughkeepsie, is a native of that city, born July 4, 1857.

Mr. Hull was educated in part at private schools in Poughkeepsie, afterward attending McGill University, Montreal, Canada, and Harvard, his law studies being completed in Columbia College Law School, from which latter institution he graduated in 1880. Such a thorough education would naturally combine to accelerate the development of his character, and the furtherance of his future prospects. Since 1880 he has resided and practiced his profession in Poughkeepsie, his specialty being real-estate law and surrogate practice, though he has taken some general practice. During the years 1893-94 he was associated with Ira Shafer, of New York, but with this exception he has had no office partner.

George D. Hull, father of our subject, was born February 6, 1821. In 1850 he married

Miss Mary E. Cluett, who was connected with the Adams family, of Boston, and children as follows were born to them: Louise M. and Walter C. The father died in 1886, the mother in 1883.

Walter C. Hull was married, in 1882, to Adele M. Fonda, who died April 5, 1893, leaving two children: Crosby Livingston, and Carlton, born in 1885 and 1890 respectively. Mr. Hull, socially, is a member of the Amrita and Dutchess Clubs, of the Veteran Firemen's Association, Poughkeepsie Gun Club, and of the Royal Arcanum. In politics he is a Republican, and has served on the Civil Service Commission of Poughkeepsie. He is one of the most prosperous attorneys in his native city, and his fame as an erudite and accomplished scholar, a ripe lawyer and a close student of political economy is not confined to Poughkeepsie and Dutchess county, but extends throughout the entire State.

CHARLES A. HOPKINS, an able young attorney of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., has made unusually rapid advancement in his profession, his success in difficult cases having already won for him an enviable standing. He is a native of Dutchess county, and was born in Stormville October 20, 1864, the son of Benjamin Hopkins, Esq., a well-known and highly-respected citizen of that place, whose biography appears elsewhere.

Our subject attended the common schools of his native town until the age of seventeen, when he entered the employ of Thomas O'Donnell, a contractor in the construction of the New York & New England railroad, as time-keeper; was with him several months in the summer of 1881, and in the following winter entered the Eastman National Business College at Poughkeepsie, graduating May 2, 1882. On the 31st of the same month he entered the law office of Hackett & Williams, and was a student there until he passed the examination for admission to the bar at the General Term at Brooklyn, in September, 1885, about one month before he became of age. After his admission to the bar he remained with Hackett & Williams as managing clerk under salary until January 1, 1889, when he commenced active practice of law at Poughkeepsie for himself at No. 4 Garden street, corner of Main, and he has continued in practice at that place to date. Mr. Hopkins has a general practice, and is attorney for several estates. Some time ago he brought an action to compel the Poughkeepsie Bridge Co. to open up the bridge for foot passengers, in compliance with the act creating the company, and defining its powers and duties. This was one of his most notable cases. For five or six years he has been attorney for the State Game and Fish Protection Commission for the Third District of the State of New York. Mr. Hopkins was elected Justice of the Peace for the City of Poughkeepsie in November, 1890, his term expiring January 1, 1895; his decisions in this office were never reversed. Mr. Hopkins is a Democrat in politics, and has always taken quite an active interest in his party. In 1894 he was the candidate for City Recorder, and ran about 300 ahead of his ticket; but, as it was the year of the Republican tidal wave, he was not elected.

In 1895 he was candidate for the Assembly in the Second Assembly District of Dutchess county, and again ran ahead of his ticket. Socially, he is a member of the K. of P., Triumph Lodge No. 165, and of the Dutchess Social Club. He was married October 18, 1888, to Mary Eno Stewart, daughter of Walter Stewart, a leading farmer in Clinton, Dutchess county, and by this union there are two sons: Frank Stewart, born August 18, 1889, and Ralph Adriance, born January 31, 1892.

The Hopkins family is of English origin, and the head of the American branch came over on the "Mayflower." They were Hicksite Quakers in religious faith. Benjamin Hopkins, our subject's great-grandfather, was a native of Rhode Island, and in early life was engaged in the coasting trade; but after his marriage to Sarah Palmer and the destruction of his property by the British, which happened soon afterward, he came to Dutchess county in 1779, and bought 400 acres of land in the town of East Fishkill, where he passed his remaining years as a farmer. He had eight children, among whom was John Hopkins, our subject's grandfather, who was born at the old farm September 6, 1779, and also became a farmer. In 1819 he married Miss Mary Brill, daughter of John and Hannah (Cornell) Brill, both natives of Dutchess county. Four children were born of this union: Benjamin, Gilbert P., Solomon P., and Sarah P. (Mrs. S. B. Knox). John Hopkins was prominent as a Whig, and served the public interests with great credit in several town offices. He was a Friend, but his wife was a member of the Reformed Dutch Church, and both proved the sincerity of their faith by their devoted Christian lives.

Benjamin Hopkins, our subject's father, remained at home until the age of sixteen, when he entered school at Poughkeepsie. After four years of study, he engaged in teaching, and also traveled extensively in the State. In 1842 he went into mercantile business at Low Point, Dutchess county, but in the following year he became the owner of the old homestead, purchasing the interests of the other heirs. He has 290 acres of excellent land, and has been mainly engaged in general farming, but he now makes a specialty of the dairy business. On December 6, 1844, he married Miss Eliza Montfort, a native of Beekman township, Dutchess county, by whom he had five children: Cornelia (Mrs. John Taber), of Dover township, Dutchess county; Phœbe, deceased, who never married; Sarah (Mrs. William H. Ogden), of Kansas City, Mo.; Loda V. (Mrs. John Ogden), of the same city; and John G., a business man of Chicago. The mother of the family died October, 1859, and subsequently Mr. Hopkins married Miss Margaret Lasher, a native of Columbia county, N. Y., and daughter of Jacob Lasher. Seven children were born of this union: Charles A. (our subject), Benjamin, Mary, Harry W., Bertha M., and George and Edith M. (twins). Benjamin Hopkins is a successful auctioneer, and has followed the business for thirty years in addition to his other pursuits. In politics he was a Whig in early years, and later a Democrat, and he has repeatedly held the highest official positions in his township, his faithful discharge of every duty deepening his esteem and confidence of the people.

WILLIAM JAMES CONKLIN, M. D., of Fishkill, Dutchess county, is one of the most prominent members of the medical fraternity of this section, more than a quarter of a century having been given by him to the successful practice of this noble calling.

The Conklin family has been long known in the vicinity of Cornwall, N. Y., the Doctor's grandfather, David Conklin, having been a leading resident there for many years. Before the days of railroads, David Conklin removed to Elmira, N. Y., where he spent his last days. The late Dr. Peter Elting Conklin, our subject's father, who was born in 1809, followed his profession at Cornwall for thirty years, and had an extensive practice. He married Miss Sarah M. Slater (whose ancestor in the country was one of the "Mayflower's" passengers), a native of Poughkeepsie, born in 1808, and had six children, of whom three died in childhood; the eldest, Cornelia P., married Henry B. Breed, of Cornwall; and Sarah Louise resides in New York City. Both parents are deceased, the father dying August 17, 1867, and the mother on April 3, 1886.

Dr. Conklin was born at Cornwall, N. Y., January 28, 1846, and after attending the public schools there for some time spent three years in the Cornwall Collegiate Institute, and two years in Madison (now Colgate) University, at Hamilton, N. Y. He then took a course in the Eastman Business College at Poughkeepsie, and followed mercantile pursuits for a time; but in 1867 he began the study of medicine, and in 1870 was graduated from the medical Department of the University of the City of New York. On March 17, 1870, he opened his office in the village of Fishkill, where he has built up a large practice. For five years he was health officer of the town, and for six years was one of the coroners of the county. His standing among his professional brethren is high; he has been a member of the Dutchess County Medical Society for twenty-five years, and a permanent member of the State Medical Society for ten years.

He is actively interested also in local affairs of a non-professional nature, and at present is a director of the First National Bank of Fishkill Landing, and a trustee of the Fishkill Savings Institute. His sympathies are always on the side of progress, and he is an earnest supporter of the free-school system, is now, and has been for fourteen consecutive years, a member of the board of education of Fishkill, and for a time its president. He is a member of Beacon Lodge No. 283, F. & A. M., and of Hudson River Lodge No. 57, K. of P. On May 27, 1875, the Doctor was united in marriage with Miss Barbra E. B. Walcott, daughter of Halsey F. and Jane H. (Bogardus) Walcott, prominent residents of Fishkill, of whom further mention will be made. Three children were born to them, of whom one died in childhood; William E. is now a student in Cornell University, at Ithaca, N. Y.; and Clarence J. is attending school at Cazenovia Seminary, Cazenovia, New York.

Halsey F. Walcott is a well-known business man of Fishkill—one of the oldest now actively engaged in commercial life in Dutchess county. His well-preserved energies and ripened judgment make him a valued adviser, and aside from the management of his hardware store he is interested in some of the most important enterprises in his town. He was born May 1, 1817, at Cumberland, R. I., the old home of his family. His grandfather, Dr. Jabez Walcott, was a leading physician and surgeon of his day in that locality, and his son, Abijah Walcott (father of Halsey F. Walcott), passed an honored life there, dying at the age of sixty-seven. He married Miss Sophia Smith, daughter of Rev. Jonathan Smith, a soldier in the Revolutionary army, and a pastor of the Baptist Church, who preached for sixty years, his life being prolonged to the old age of ninety-four years. Halsey F. was the eldest of four children, the others being: Angeline, the wife of Rev. T. W. Clark, a Baptist minister, and a chaplain in the army during the Civil war, now residing in Boston; and William and Sophia, both now deceased.

Halsey F. Walcott attended the public schools of Rhode Island and Massachusetts. In 1846 he married Miss Jane Bogardus, whose father, the late Joseph Bogardus, owned and conducted the "Union Hotel" at Fishkill, which was destroyed by fire in 1872, and after his death, which occurred February 3, 1859, Mr. Walcott continued the business until 1863. He then sold the hotel, and after four years of retirement from business life, purchased the hardware store of Charles Owen, which he has ever since conducted. He was a director of the First National Bank of Fishkill, and trustee of the Savings Bank at Fishkill, and has been a trustee of the Fishkill Cemetery Association for years, and is now its president. As a progressive citizen, he has taken great interest in educational matters, serving as a member of the board of education for a number of years, and for part of the time as its president. In politics he is a Republican; he was town clerk for two years, justice of the peace some twenty years, postmaster for four years, and has held many minor offices, such as town auditor, etc. He is the oldest member of Beacon Lodge, F. & A. M., with which he united forty-one years ago, and he formerly belonged to the I. O. O. F.

Mrs. Walcott's father was a direct descendant of Everardus Bogardus, the first clergyman in the New Netherlands. Her mother, whose maiden name was Barbra Moffat, of Paterson, N. J., was born in Glasgow, Scotland, the granddaughter of Lady Barbra Gilmore. Of the two children that have blessed the home of Mr. and Mrs. Walcott, one died in youth, and the other, Barbra Etta, is now the wife of Dr. W. J. Conklin, of Fishkill.

WALTER FERRIS TABER, the subject of this sketch, is descended from ancestry antedating the settlement of this country as shown by the family Coat of Arms, whose motto "Virtue alone ennobles" carried the stamp of character.

The Tabers were among the early settlers in the Massachusetts Colony, and Thomas Taber (great-grandfather of our subject), born in New Bedford, Mass., in 1732, and his wife, Annetheresa, came on horseback from Rhode Island to Dutchess county, in 1760, and located upon a grant of land of 500 acres obtained from King George III, on Quaker Hill in the town of Pawling, a tract known as the "Oblong." They had two sons, William and Jeremiah (and several daughters), the latter son remaining upon the farm during his life. [For a more extended account see sketch of Geo. K. Taber.] He married Delilah Russell, a native of the town of Dover, and had six children: Russell, a farmer in Dover; Thomas, a farmer, first in Dutchess county and later in Broome county; John, who died in childhood; William, our subject's father; Harriet, who married Jonathan Akin, a farmer in Pawling; and Eliza, who married Joseph Carpenter, a farmer in Westchester county.

William Taber, our subject's father, was born at the old homestead December 10, 1796, and always resided there until his death in 1863. He was a Democrat, and a birthright member of the Society of Friends. He married Eliza Sherman, a native of Quaker Hill, born March 19, 1803, and died February 5, 1841, a daughter of Abiel Sherman (one of the stalwart family of nine sons that averaged six feet in height, and were the terror of the Tories in the Revolutionary war), whose ancestry traces back on the same lines with Gen. T. W. Sherman and Senator John Sherman of Ohio. He was a prominent man, and member of the State Legislature. Four children were born of this union: Eliza, who died in infancy;

Walter L. Laker

William H., who now owns and occupies the old farm; Walter F., the subject of this sketch; and George A., who died at the age of six years. The father died in 1863, the mother on February 20, 1840.

Walter F. Taber was born October 29, 1830, and attended the schools of his native town until he was fourteen years of age, after which he attended boarding schools during the winter terms for five successive years in Washington, Dutchess county, and in Sherman and Warren, in Connecticut, afterward teaching, one winter, a public school, and having charge of the Willets Boarding School in Washington, Dutchess county, for one winter. Having a natural taste for mechanics, while remaining upon his father's farm, he made and repaired many farm implements, and after using one of the first mowing machines that was invented, which was driven by one wheel, he saw the necessity for improvement, and after much study and trial devised the first mowing machine that was ever placed upon two driving wheels and having a hinged cutter bar that could be raised or lowered by a lever while riding the machine. The model of said machine is in the Patent Office at Washington. This was when Mr. Taber was but nineteen years of age. Like many other inventors, he failed to secure the benefits of his invention, but it made him an efficient agent for the well-known Buckeye mower, which he sold for sixteen years after leaving his father's farm, which he did at the age of twenty-four years to engage in mercantile business with his brother, William H. Taber, at Pawling Station, where he resided for about sixteen years.

On February 16, 1859, Walter F. Taber was married to Miss Mary Emma Arnold, daughter of Dr. Benjamin F. Arnold, a prominent physician of Pawling and a descendant of one of the pioneer settlers, the family being, like the Tabers, of English origin. One son was born of this union, Franklin A. Taber, who is engaged with his father in his present business.

Mr. Taber has been a member of the Society of Friends for many years; is treasurer of the Society, and was superintendent of the Sabbath-school for a number of years. Politically he was formerly a Democrat, but for several years past has been an advocate of prohibition and working with that party, and is a candidate for both State and Congressional honors.

On June 27, 1870, Mr. Taber moved from Pawling to his present residence, which he had previously purchased, one of the old landmarks, formerly known as the Judge Sweet place, now known as "Lakeview Fruit Farm," a short distance outside the limits of the city of Poughkeepsie, where he has since resided. For nearly twenty years he has been devoting his attention to the cultivation of all kinds of fruits, making a specialty of small fruits, and sparing no labor or expense in preparing the soil and producing fruits of high quality that should find ready sale in both home and distant markets. He is an authority upon his specialty, and a contributor to the horticultural papers. He has given addresses on fruit culture at many of the State Farmers Institutes, and at the annual meeting of the Western New York Horticultural Society in Rochester in February, 1895, of which Society he is a member. He is also one of the promoters of the Eastern New York Horticultural Society, and its present vice-president. For nine years he has been connected with the Dutchess County Farmers Club, and its president for most of that time. With a desire to contribute something to help mankind, he is ever trying some experiment or making some improvement whereby to arrive at the most successful results and contribute to the general good by freely giving of such knowledge as he may have acquired in his particular line of horticulture.

ISAAC HAVILAND (deceased). The subject of this sketch was born in the town of Washington, Dutchess county, February 28, 1812, and was the son of Isaac and Lydia (Weaver) Haviland. After marrying, Isaac Haviland, Sr., settled on a farm on Quaker Hill, Dutchess county, where he followed farming and reared the following children: Isaac our subject; Joseph, a farmer in Washington town; Daniel, who was a farmer and minister; Jacob, who was a farmer in the town of Poughkeepsie; Abram, who farmed in Pawling; Charlotte, married to Alfred Moore, a farmer and Hicksite (Quaker) minister; Sarah, who died unmarried; Lydia A., who became the wife of John Martin, a farmer, and Alexander, who was a farmer at Clinton Corners. Mr. Haviland was an Orthodox Quaker, and died on Quaker Hill.

Our subject was reared on the farm, and attended the district school, later continuing his studies at the Providence school. In 1835 he married Miss Maria Ann Swift, who was born in the town of Washington, June 6, 1815. Lemuel Swift, her father, was the twin brother of Zebulon Swift, whose sketch appears in that of Isaac Swift. Our subject and wife went to live on the farm where Mr. Davidson now resides, near South Millbrook. It was in an uncultivated state, and during Mr. Haviland's residence of thirty years he much improved it. He and his wife moved to S. Millbrook and lived a retired life there for about twenty years and then came to Millbrook, where he died March 31, 1894, aged eighty-two years. No children were born to our subject and his wife. In politics he was a Democrat. He was a member of the Orthodox Friends Church, was benevolent and greatly respected, and died a Christian, with a prayer on his lips. Mrs. Haviland is still a member of the Friends Church, in which she is an elder.

SMITH L. DE GARMO, member of the well-known dry-goods firm of Luckey, Platt & Co., Poughkeepsie, is worthy of prominent mention in the pages of this volume.

The family is of French origin, and were among the early settlers of the country. The first of whom we have definite mention was Rowland De Garmo (grandfather of our subject), who was born November 29, 1785, and died June 6, 1838. By occupation he was a tanner, carrying on business near New Paltz, Ulster Co., N. Y. He married Phebe Sutton, born March 12, 1791, and died February 24, 1875. Their children were David S., Elias, William Henry, Mary, Eliza and Daniel.

David S. De Garmo (father of our subject) was born March 6, 1813, and in early life was a tanner. On November 1, 1838, he married Phebe H. Lawrence, and turned farmer, purchasing a farm near Highland. In 1851 they removed to Hibernia, Dutchess county, remaining there till 1866, when Mr. De Garmo built a new house in Salt Point, where he passed the remainder of his days, dying of paralysis of the throat May 29, 1875. His wife survived him until October, 1894, when she, too, passed away at the age of eighty-two, after five years of much physical suffering, made as comfortable as possible in the care of her only daughter, Mrs. William E. Smith, in one of the most attractive of the beautiful and far-famed homes of Millbrook, provided by her son, the subject of this sketch.

Capt. Jonathan Lawrence, the maternal great-grandfather, served as a captain in the Revolutionary war, and a monument to his memory stands in an old family burying ground at Esopus, Ulster county. Thomas, his son, was a Quaker preacher.

Smith L. De Garmo was born October 10, 1842, on the farm above mentioned, at Highland, and as will be seen was nine years old when his parents moved to Dutchess county. His education was received in part at the common schools, partly at the New Paltz Academy, and later at a private school kept by Rev. Sherman Hoyt, a Presbyterian minister. In November, 1868, Mr. De Garmo came to Poughkeepsie as clerk in the furnishing-goods store of Thomas A. Lawrence. In the following spring he entered the service of William H. Broas, and got his first experience in handling dry goods. Here he found a congenial occupation, and his marked ability brought him, in the spring of 1870, to the notice of Messrs. Luckey and Platt, who were then doing a moderate but successful dry-goods business. It was early manifest to his employers that they had secured a valuable factor, and he was rapidly promoted. He proved a perfect genius in salesmanship, and tireless in his efforts. He enjoyed a very large acquaintance, and by his rare magnetism attracted them as customers. Just before his admission to the firm, Mr. Luckey said to one from whom we get a part of our data for this article: "We have been paying Mr. De Garmo probably the largest salary received by any clerk on the street, and we are satisfied that he fully earns it by the new business alone which he brings to us." Such merit had its natural reward, and February 1, 1872, he became a partner in the concern. When the time came for Mr. De Garmo to show his capacity as a buyer, he was found equal to the occasion, and became conspicuous in the market as having in a large degree the courage, caution and knowledge of men, methods and conditions necessary to the successful buyer. The business of the firm grew rapidly and steadily, until it became, probably, the largest of its kind in any place of the size in this country, and in many respects may be considered the model dry-goods concern in this section of the State. They were among the first in their line to introduce the profit-sharing plan with employees.

Smith & DeLanning

In the year 1894 Mr. De Garmo bought the Taggart place, containing the largest and most beautifully appointed grounds in the city, where he has since made his home. Socially, he is a member of the F. & A. M. Lodge, No. 266, in Poughkeepsie. In politics he is a Republican.

JOHN P. ADRIANCE (deceased). Among the men whose enterprise and sound judgment have developed the industries, and extended the commerce, of the city of Poughkeepsie, the subject of this sketch held a prominent place. The family name is derived from the given name of a remote ancestor, Adriaen Reyersz, son of Reyer Elberts, of Utrecht, Holland, whose wife was the mother by a former husband of Goosen Gerritse van Schaick, ancestor of the Albany van Schaicks.

Their son, Adriaen Reyersz, came to America in 1646, and settled at Flatbush, L. I. He was married July 29, 1659, to Anna, daughter of Martin Schenck, a name of celebrity in Holland. One of their children, Elbert, born in 1663, settled in Flushing, and was married in 1689 to Catalina, daughter of Rem. Vanderheek, the ancestor of the Remsens. They had three children, Rem, Elbert and Anneke, with whom the use of the present surname began. Rem married Sarah, daughter of George Brinckerhoff, and died in 1730 at the age of forty. His sons were Elbert, born in 1715; George, 1716; Abraham, 1720; Isaac, 1722; Jacob, 1727, and Rem, 1729; of whom, George, Abraham and Isaac settled in Dutchess county. Abraham Adriaanse married Femmetje Van Kleef; their son Abraham Adriance, born in 1766, married Anna Storm; their son John Adriance, our subject's father, born in 1795, married Sarah Ely Harris. Their home was in Poughkeepsie, where he was among the leading business men of his day, and one of the first manufacturers of harvesting machinery.

John P. Adriance was born March 4, 1825, and after acquiring such education as the schools of the city afforded at that time he spent three years and a half as clerk in the hardware store of Storm & Uhl. He then went to New York City, and took a similar position with Walsh & Mallory, remaining until 1845, when the firm placed him in charge of their store in Manchester, N. H. He eventually succeeded to the business there; but in 1852 he returned to New York and went into the wholesale hardware trade with a brother-in-law, Samuel R. Platt, and Samuel W. Sears, under the firm name of Sears, Adriance & Platt. About this time he became interested in some experiments which his father was making with the Forbush mower, and seeing the possibilities opening up in this branch of manufacturing he decided to engage in it. In 1854 the firm purchased the patents of the Manny mower for the New England States, and began making the machines at Worcester, Mass., the business there being conducted under the name of Mr. Adriance. The enterprise was not wholly successful, but in 1857, at a great field trial of mowers and reapers held at Syracuse, N. Y., under the auspices of the United States Agricultural Society, Mr. Adriance became impressed with the merits of a mower patented by Aultman & Miller, of Canton, Ohio, which received the first premium. Notwithstanding the opposition of his partners to further ventures in that line, he succeeded in overcoming their objections, and after acquiring the patent rights, he began the manufacture of a new machine in Worcester, Mass., giving it the name "Buckeye," because of its Ohio origin. In 1859 the factory was transferred to the old "Red Mills" at Poughkeepsie; but the business increased so rapidly as to necessitate the building of more commodious quarters, in 1864, on the banks of the Hudson, extensive additions and improvements having since been made from time to time. In 1863 the firm of Sears, Adriance & Platt was dissolved, Mr. Sears retaining the hardware business, and a new firm for the manufacture of mowers and reapers was formed, consisting of John P. Adriance, Samuel R. Platt and Isaac S. Platt, and known as Adriance, Platt & Co., under which name it was incorporated in 1882 as a stock company, with the following officers: John P. Adriance, president; S. R. Platt, vice-president; and I. S. Platt, treasurer. Mr. Adriance continued his connection with the business until his death, which occurred June 18, 1891.

Although his time and energy were so largely spent in forwarding his business interests, Mr. Adriance was much more than a business man, taking keen interest in all that concerned the welfare of his fellows, and he took a prominent part in the promotion of many worthy enterprises which might have failed but for his ready and substantial help. He never held any public office except that of alderman for one year, but was repeatedly urged to accept the nomination for mayor, his election being considered certain if he consented to become a candidate. But, unwilling as he was to hold any public office, he was warmly interested in political affairs, and was a recognized leader in the local Republican organization. Possessing pleasing address, his courtesy readily won friends whom his sterling virtues retained. He was married in 1848, to Mary J. R. Platt, who died December 24, 1895. One daughter and five sons—three of whom are connected with the corporation of Adriance, Platt & Co.—survive him.

JOHN ERSKINE ADRIANCE, the second son, was born in New York City, December 23, 1853, and received his education at the Poughkeepsie Military Institute, the Churchill School at Sing Sing, and Riverview Military Academy. In 1871 he entered the arena of business, and is now vice-president of the Adriance, Platt & Co. On April 27, 1882, he was married to Miss Mary Hasbrouck, of Poughkeepsie, and they have two daughters: Jane Hardenbergh and Marguerite Platt.

FERDINAND R. BAIN, a prominent real-estate dealer, of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, is among the youngest of the enterprising and successful business men of his city. He was born in Chatham, N. Y., May 3, 1861, the third son of Milton and Charlotte (Nash) Bain, the others being Francis M., proprietor of the "Palatine Hotel" at Newburgh, N. Y., and Horatio N., proprietor of the "Nelson House," Poughkeepsie.

At the age of sixteen our subject left school to assist his brother Horatio N. in the "Poughkeepsie Hotel," and has ever since been engaged in business, but he has supplemented his early educational acquirements by reading on a wide range of subjects. His first instructor was Miss Wood, a private teacher from the Lebanon Academy, and he later attended the school of George N. Perry, at Dover Plains, also Bishop's select school for boys, No. 50 Academy street, Poughkeepsie. In 1885, after eight years of hotel work, he embarked in the real-estate and insurance business, and has built up one of the most extensive enterprises of its kind in the city, having platted and opened up several important additions, among them Bain avenue, Taylor avenue, a portion of N. Hamilton street, the Dean property, and Livingston Manor. He has also been influential in securing new pavements in various parts of the city.

Mr. Bain has been largely interested in street railways, and for some time was a member of the syndicate which owned the Poughkeepsie City Street R. R. Selling out his stock, however, he afterward bought a one-half interest, and in 1892 was elected president of the road. Under his management and upon his suggestion, the Vassar College and Driving Park line, and the Wappinger Falls line have been added to the system, and made electric roads. He is vice-president and active manager of the West Coast Steam Line, running from Port Tampa to St. Petersburg. The latter was anything but a paying business when he took charge, but he has placed it on a profitable basis. He is a director of the Farmers' and Manufacturers' Bank, and Poughkeepsie Gas Co., a member of the Board of Trade, and has interested himself in several new manufacturing concerns, to bring them to Poughkeepsie. As secretary of the Dutchess County Agricultural Society, he was successful in raising an incumbrance of $9,500, and he helped to incorporate the organization in 1894; also was instrumental in securing its meeting in Poughkeepsie in 1890. His career has been an honorable one, and his investments have so far invariably proved successful. Some of his enterprises give employment to large numbers of men.

In 1885 Mr. Bain married Hattie I. Kenworthy, a daughter of Richard Kenworthy, who was at one time sheriff of Dutchess county, and treasurer of the Hudson River State Hospital. Three children were born to this union: Ethel M., Mary K. and Kathleen. Mr. Bain and his wife are prominent members of the Second Reformed Church. He takes an active interest in the work of the Republican party; was elected supervisor from the Fourth ward in 1888, and alderman in 1890 and 1891; and at present is city assessor. Socially, he is a member of Triune Lodge, F. & A. M.; Knights of Pythias, and of the Amrita, Bicycle, Driving and Dutchess Clubs.

GAIUS C. BOLIN, a talented and enterprising young lawyer of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, was born in that city September 10, 1864.

F. R. Bain

Abraham Bolin, his father, is a native of Dutchess county, born at South Dover, February 10, 1830. He lived upon a farm until he was twenty-five years old, having begun to make his way in the world at the early age of seven. In 1855 he moved to Poughkeepsie, where he married Alice Ann Lawrence, an educated and refined woman of unusual mental ability and foresight. She was also a native of Dutchess county, as were her mother and grandmother before her. Her father having died during her childhood, leaving his widow with a large family of children, some kind friends in New York City took the bright little girl into their home and gave her an excellent education and training.

Abraham Bolin is an intelligent and successful business man, and has conducted at different times a meat market, a grocery store and a produce commission business, and has also engaged in selling live stock. In every enterprise his wife has been an indispensable helper and adviser. They have had thirteen children whose careful and thorough education has been their main object, and their willing self-sacrifice is already receiving a reward in the satisfaction of seeing them fitted for useful and honorable stations in life. The names of their children living are: Mrs. Alvaretta Deyo, George W., Gaius C. (the subject of this sketch), Livingsworth W., Paul C., Rev. Mrs. Blanche Bolin Croke, and Miss Osafora Stradella Bolin; of these Paul C. Bolin is an advanced student of the piano, and an instructor on that instrument at the National Conservatory of Music, New York City. For more than thirty-five years they have lived at their present residence on North Clinton street.

Gaius C. Bolin attended the public schools of Poughkeepsie during his boyhood, and after graduating from the high school in 1883, he took a two-years course at Prof. John R. Leslie's select classical school, then conducted on Academy street, Poughkeepsie. In the fall of 1885 he entered the freshman class of Williams College, Williamstown, Mass., and was graduated from that institution in June, 1889, being the first colored man graduated by this historic old college. For a year after leaving college he assisted his father in the produce commission business, and on September 15, 1890, he entered the law office of Fr ed. E. Ackerman, Esq., of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., as a student. He was admitted to the bar at the General Term of the Supreme Court, held in Brooklyn, N. Y., and presided over by Hon. Joseph F. Barnard, December 15, 1892, but remained in Mr. Ackerman's employ, extending his knowledge of legal principles and gaining experience in their practical application. On May 23, 1895, he opened an office of his own at Nos. 46-48 Market street. His watchful devotion to the interests of his clients, as well as his upright fair dealing, has won the confidence of the public, and he has enjoyed a greater measure of success than falls to the lot of some practitioners who have no connection with an established business.

A dutiful and affectionate son, he never fails to give credit for his success to the advice, encouragement and Christian example of his father and mother, and the influence of a home where love abounds.

GEORGE B. CHAPMAN, M. D., was born May 20, 1849, in the town of Dover, Dutchess county, and received his academic education there and in Phillips Academy at Exeter, N. H. He afterward entered Bellevue Hospital Medical College for two years, then attended the Medical Department of Yale College for one year, graduating from the latter in 1875. He began his professional career in Amenia Union, N. Y., and remained there for thirteen years, building up a large practice. In 1888, on account of the overwork and exposure incident to his profession, his health gave out, and he was obliged to give up active practice, and spend the two following winters in Virginia, and the summers in Minnesota and Dakota. While in the West he became much interested in real-estate investments, was one of the organizers, and the first president of the Webutuck Investment Co. of Duluth, Minn., and a director in the Amenia and Sharon Land Co. of North Dakota.

In 1890 he located at Dover Plains, and became interested in the invention of Charles E. Buckley, since known as the Buckley Watering Device, an automatic arrangement for securing a plentiful supply of fresh water to cattle and horses while confined in the stable, a patent being secured in 1891. The importance of this invention, both from an economic and humanitarian standpoint, was soon appreciated by all intelligent and progressive stock-breeders and dairymen, and the system is now in general use throughout the country. Dr. Chapman has made many improvements on the original idea, and is now actively engaged in the manufacture and sale of the Device, having bought out Mr. Buckley's interest in 1892.

Dr. Chapman is actively interested in local affairs, and is a member of the Masonic fraternity. In 1874, he married Miss Martha Root (daughter of Oliver and Mary Root, of Kent, Conn.), who died in February, 1876, leaving no children. In September, 1877, he married Sarah Hitchcock, daughter of Homer and Rebecca Hitchcock, belonging to an old and well-known family of Amenia, N. Y. One child blessed this union, Rebecca, born July 3, 1878.

Israel Chapman, our subject's great-grandfather, was born at Bethlehem, Conn., and reared a family of sons, among whom was William Chapman, the grandfather of our subject. He was educated at his native place, and early in life followed the carpenter's trade, but later moved to South Dover, Dutchess county, and conducted a hotel and general store. His wife was Miss Rachel Cherrytree, and their seven children all lived to maturity. They were Israel, who never married; Homer, who married (first) Ann Howard, and (second) Helen Thompson; Reuben Wooster married Marilla Ward; Lyman married Deborah Sherman; Alfred, our subject's father, in 1831 married Adaline Mabbett; Maria became the wife of Charles Thomas; and Betsey became the wife of William Tabor.

Alfred Chapman was born in South Dover, Dutchess county, December 11, 1807, and after receiving a common-school education learned the carpenter's trade, and engaged in the business of contracting and building, in which he was successful, the high order of his work bringing him custom from an extended territory.

Dr. Chapman is the fifth in a family of seven children: (1) Ann E., born in 1832, was married in 1854 to William Tabor, a farmer. They have had eleven children: John and Louisa are unmarried; Florence married Frank Van Auken; Jennie married William Sebring; Frank and Harriet are still unmarried; and Mary is the wife of Everett Travis; the other children died in infancy. (2) Benjamin F. was born in 1835, educated at Michigan University and the Albany Law School. On graduating in 1860 from the latter institution, he began the practice of law at Dover, but his death in 1870 cut short a promising career. He married Miss Helen Reed, and left one son, David B. R. Chapman, who graduated from Columbia College, and is now in the coal business in New York City. (3) Mary J. was born in 1836, and in 1865 married Nicholas Ryan, now residing in Brewster, N. Y. She died in 1867, leaving two children: Minnie, living in Petersburg, Va., and George B., now living in Clove Valley, N. Y. (4) Sarah M., born in 1839, married Peter T. Young, a live-stock dealer in Norfolk and Petersburg, Va. They have two children, Hattie C., born in 1876, and Homer T., born in 1884. (5) Our subject. (6) William and (7) Walter died in infancy.

JOHAN VAN WYCK (deceased). The family name of the subject of this sketch has been held in high esteem, both in Holland, the ancient home of the family, and in this country, where many of its representatives have held positions of usefulness and honor.

Dr. Van Wyck, our subject's grandfather, a native of Dutchess county, owned a large tract of land in the town of Fishkill, which he cultivated, in addition to his extensive labors as a medical practitioner. His son, Gen. John B. Van Wyck, our subject's father, was an officer in the war of 1812. He married Susan Schenk, by whom he had nine children: Alfred, a farmer in Fishkill; John, our subject; Johanna, who married Mr. Holmes, a merchant in New York City; Mary, the wife of Edward Remsen, also a merchant in New York City; Catherine; Susan, who married O. Holmes; Cornelia; Jane, the second wife of Mr. Holmes; and William.

John Van Wyck, our subject, was born in the town of Poughkeepsie, and was educated at the Dutchess County Academy. On leaving school he went to New York City, and engaged in the wholesale dry-goods business. He married Miss Sarah Mesier, a native of New York City, born in 1810. Her father, Peter A. Mesier, was a native of New England, and became a bank stationer in New York City. He was a Whig in politics, and he and his family were members of the Episcopal Church. His wife was Catherine Mesier, a first cousin, and they reared a family of five children: Mary; Sarah (Mrs. Van Wyck); Peter, a merchant in New York; Jane; and Margaret, who married James Clonny, an artist in New York. The Mesiers are of French Huguenot ancestry, and their coat of arms bears the appropriate motto, "Tiens a la Foi,"—Hold to thy faith. The Van Wyck family also possesses a coat of arms, the nearest description of which in the absence of any work on heraldry, is as follows: Arms—A cross or, in each quarter two tassels, arg., inverted, crossed; over all an escutcheon charged with a cart-wheel, proper. Crest—A crown, arg. (in English heraldry this would be a ducal crown). Supporters—Two gryphons (or griffins), sal., regardant, each supporting a banner, the dexter banner charged with a cross, as on the shield; the sinister banner charged with a cart-wheel, as on the escutcheon.

Shortly after their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Van Wyck settled upon a farm near Manchester, and, in 1835, moved to the present homestead near New Hamburg, a beautiful estate overlooking the Hudson river. Here they built an elegant residence, which has been for sixty years one of the most charming homes of this vicinity. Eight children were born to them: Kate, Mesier (deceased), Sarah, Henry, John, Mary, William, and Edmund (deceased), who was a physician at Wappingers Falls. Mr. Van Wyck died September 18, 1878, but his widow is still living, blessed with unusual vigor, both physical and mental, and surrounded by her children who are all at home. The family has been identified with the Episcopal Church of Wappingers Falls for more than half a century, and is well-known in the most exclusive circles of Poughkeepsie society.

WILLIAM LOUIS DE LACY, a well-known attorney of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., is recognized as the leading pension lawyer of that city. He was himself a soldier in the Civil war, enlisting as a boy of sixteen years, August 13, 1861, and serving until mustered out October 11, 1865, and his own experiences on the battle fields and in the prisons of the South have doubtless turned his attention to the disabilities that the hardships of that long struggle have brought upon the brave "boys in blue," and certainly his record as a soldier must have done much to gain for him the confidence of his large circle of clients.

His family is of ancient lineage, and, it is thought, originated in Lassy, Normandy, and was transplanted to England at the time of the Conquest. The progenitor of the American branch, William Lacy, came from the Isle of Wight at an early period, and settled in Bucks county, Penn., where many of his descendants still live. The family is one of the oldest and most substantial in that region, and its members have usually been engaged in agriculture. The first record concerning the family is that of a marriage which occurred in 1718 in the Quaker Church at Wrightstown, Bucks Co., Penn. Brigadier-General John De Lacy, of Revolutionary fame, was a member of this family. William De Lacy had a son William, who had a son William, who had a son William, our subject's grandfather. There were five brothers of that generation, and while William remained at the old home, one went to Michigan, one to Mississippi, one to Ohio, and the other settled west of the Mississippi. William married Miss Mary Chidester, and had three daughters—Mary, Ann and Jane—and six sons—Israel, the owner of the Trenton Pottery at Trenton, N. J.; Joseph, a confectioner; Lafayette and Napoleon Bonaparte, who were on the police force in Philadelphia; John P., our subject's father; and Aaron, a lumberman of Pike county, Penn. John P. De Lacy was born at the old homestead January 27, 1814, and became a prominent citizen there, noted for his sterling qualities of character. By trade he was a carpenter, and he was active in local politics as a Jacksonian Democrat, although he never sought or held office. He was a birthright Quaker. His wife, Caroline Cartier, was a native of Bucks county, Penn., and a daughter of Jacob Cartier, who was born in Leipsic, Saxony. Six children were born to them: Hester, who married Richard Parsons, of Bucks county, Penn.; Harriet, deceased; William L., our subject; Jacob Alfred, a resident of Lambertville, N. J.; John Franklin, a mining prospector in the West; and Charles Henry, a seaman. The father died October 8, 1878, but the mother is still living, and at the age of seventy-six has not a gray hair in her head.

Mr. De Lacy was born at New Hope, Penn., July 10, 1845. His opportunities for an education were meagre, his early years having been spent mainly upon the Lehigh canal. He worked for one year in the office of the People's Beacon, at Lambertville, N. J., employed by Clark Pierson for a time, and he gained some knowledge of reading, both in script and print, but at the age of sixteen, when he was required to sign the pay roll, on his enlistment, he could only make his mark. He soon learned to write, however, and the next time his signature was wanted he was prepared to write it.

He was a member of Company C, 4th N. J. Inf., 1st N. J. Brigade, of which Gen. Phil Kearny was the original commander. He took part in many important engagements, being at West Point, Va., May 7, 1862; at White House Landing; at Mechanicsville, twice; and at Gaines' Hill, June 27, 1862, on the second day of the Seven-Days' fight, near Richmond. Here he was wounded and captured with the bulk of his regiment, and, after being confined in Libby Prison for some time, was sent to Belle Isle with the first detachment of one hundred prisoners, who were compelled to put up the first tent on the island, intended for prison purposes; he spent about seven weeks there, and on being exchanged, August 12, 1862, rejoined his regiment at Harrison's Landing. Then followed the Second Battle of Bull Run, and the engagements at Crampton Gap, or South Mountain, September 14; Antietam, September 17, and Fredericksburg, December 12, 1862. He was detailed for train guard duty after this, and his next battle was at Rappahannock Station, in October, 1863, followed by that of Mine Run, November 26, after which the regiment went into winter quarters until May, 1864, when Grant took command. In the battle of the Wilderness Mr. De Lacy was seriously wounded, and, as he could not take his place in the field again, he remained in the hospital at Newark, N. J., until he was mustered out, October 11, 1865. On his return to the life of a civilian, he spent eight months in the Pennington Theological Seminary, and this may be said to be the only real schooling that he ever had. He left this institution, reluctantly, to enter business life, taking a place as clerk for James E. Goll, an insurance agent at Newark, N. J.; later he went into a market on Pacific street. In October, 1866, he went to Poughkeepsie with a physician, and, being left penniless, he worked for some time in the offices of the Press and Eagle. On September 1, 1873, he bought the Amenia Times, in partnership with William Wiley, the firm being at first De Lacy & Wiley, and afterward De Lacy & Walsh. Mr. De Lacy edited the paper until 1877, when he sold out to Mr. Walsh, and during this time he was twice elected justice of the peace, and once appointed to that office to fill a vacancy. He had also been studying law in private, and after a further course with Cyrus Swan, of Poughkeepsie, he was admitted to the bar in September, 1879, and has since been in active practice, making a specialty of pension claims.

In politics he has always been a Democrat, and formerly he was quite active in party work. He served two terms as police commissioner under Mayors Rowley and Arnold. Since December, 1872, he has been a member of the I. O. O. F., Fallkill Lodge No. 297, and he belongs to the Order of Chosen Friends, Dutchess Council No. 50; the Queen City Assembly Royal Society of Good Fellows, No. 124, and is an honorary member of Phoenix Hose Company. He is also a member of Hamilton Post No. 20, G. A. R., in which he takes great interest, and has been a delegate to the National Encampments at San Francisco, Denver, St. Louis, Indianapolis, Boston, Washington and Baltimore. In 1892 he was senior vice-commander of the Department of New York.

On March 30, 1868, Mr. De Lacy married Weltha A. Wiley, daughter of Clark Wiley, a prominent resident of Poughkeepsie. They have two sons: George W., an architect and draughtsman, and Charles, who is a clerk in the office with his father.

SHERIDAN SHOOK. The spirit of self-help is the source of all genuine worth in the individual, and is the means of bringing to man success when he has no advantages of wealth or influence to aid him. It illustrates in no uncertain manner what is possible to accomplish when perseverance and determination form the keynote to a man's life. Depending on his own resources, looking for no outside aid or support, Mr. Shook has secured a handsome property, although he started out in life with naught save a pair of willing hands and a determination to succeed.

Our subject is a native of Dutchess county, born February 19, 1828, in the town of Red Hook, and is a son of George Shook. He received his education at Piermont Academy, and at the early age of fourteen years went to New York City, "to make his fortune," in which he certainly succeeded. For ten years he clerked for John Boyce, a dealer in butter and cheese, at the expiration of which time he and Henry N. Morgan took charge of the business. Mr. Boyce having retired. At the opening of the war of the Rebellion, our subject was appointed treasurer of the "Relief Fund," which had been raised in the city to meet the needs of the families of those who had gone to the front. In 1861 he was appointed by President Lincoln to the position of Internal Revenue Collector, which position he held seven years, and about the same time he was elected to the board of supervisors of New York City. In 1865, at an outlay of $40,000, he fitted up "Gilmores Garden," in New York, which he conducted for two years. In 1871 he built the Union Square Theatre, corner of 14th street and Broadway, and for several years conducted same, under the able management of A. M. Palmer. Mr. Shook was also engaged in the brewery business, at New York, under the firm name of Shook & Everhard, and was also proprietor of the "Morton House," one of the leading hotels of New York, which he carried on until 1895.

Mr. Shook has been twice married, his second union being on December 21, 1881, with Miss Ellen M. Gillespie, a native of Albany county, N. Y., born at Greenbush, in 1846, a daughter of Charles Gillespie, of Albany, N. Y. She is a member of the Lutheran Church. Mr. Shook in his political preferences is a Republican. He is the father of four children: Louise Week (Mrs. H. A. Hoffman); Sheridan Shook, Jr., of New York; Lillie; and one that died in early youth. He still has business interests in New York and Red Hook, but is not personally engaged therein. He has a fine farm and beautiful residence situated about four miles from his birthplace. No more genial man can be found than Mr. Shook, and he and his estimable wife have many friends to whom their hospitality is ever extended. They hold a high position in social circles, having the esteem and respect of all who know them.

DAVID A. KNAPP, M. D., an eminent physician and surgeon of Dutchess county, has for many years successfully engaged in the practice of medicine in the town of Unionvale. In his profession he takes a genuine and devoted interest, making a study of "the ills that flesh is heir to," and is one of the most capable and conscientious men in his profession.

His father, Isaac Knapp, also a medical practitioner, was a native of Greenwich, Conn., where he obtained his literary education, and later began the study of medicine, graduating at the New York Medical Institute in 1795. He commenced the practice of his chosen profession in New Fairfield, near Danbury, Conn., and also conducted a select school. In religious belief he was a Presbyterian. He married Miss Amy Brush, a daughter of Squire Brush, a prosperous farmer of New Fairfield, and they became the parents of eight children, one of whom died in infancy, the others being as follows:

(1) Theresa Knapp was born in the town of New Fairfield, Fairfield Co., Conn., and secured a common-school education. She married Hubbel Platt, but had no children.

(2) Isaac Knapp, also a native of New Fairfield town, engaged in teaching after the completion of his own education, and also followed farming. During the old training days he held the commission of captain in the militia. He married Miss Maranda Hall, and they had one son—Smith, now deceased, who was born in Connecticut, and for a time was engaged in the real-estate business. He was twice married, the first time to a Miss Briggs, by whom he had two children, Lula and George F.; later he wedded a Miss Taylor, and they had three children.

(3) Enoch Knapp was born and educated in Connecticut, and also taught school. During the training days he served as major. He married Rachel Barnum, of New Fairfield, Conn., and to them were born seven children: Almira, who married Daniel Wood, a farmer of Redding Ridge, Fairfield Co., Conn., and has five children; Sarah, who married Waite Brush, a farmer of Rome, N. Y., and has three children; Mary, who died in infancy; Charlotte, an artist by profession, who is now studying in France and other parts of the Old World; Isaac S., an agriculturist, who married Lula Dayton; Mary, who wedded a Mr. Clegett, and has a son, Clifton; and Fred, a farmer, who married a Miss Howe.

(4) Sarah Knapp, who was born in the town of New Fairfield, married Ephraim Leach, a farmer, and they had three sons: David (now deceased), a machinist, who married a Miss Bennett; Isaac, an engineer; and Henry O., who married a Miss Roberts, of Peekskill, N. Y., and has six children: Fannie, Hannah, Mabel, Myra, Clara and Theresa.

(5) Ezra Knapp (deceased) was born in the town of New Fairfield, received a common-school education, and followed the pursuit of farming. He married Miss Rachel Meade, of Greenwich, Conn.; they had no children.

(6) Dr. David A. Knapp, of this review, is next in order of birth, and like the other members of the family, was born in the town of New Fairfield, Fairfield Co., Conn. He attended the district schools near his home, and later pursued his studies in a select school of that township, in the Danbury Academy and in the Middletown Academy. For two years he was then a student at Yale College, New Haven, Conn., prior to which he engaged in teaching for a time. At the age of twenty-two years he entered the University of New York, graduating from the medical department in the spring of 1845. He soon after began practice in the town of Unionvale, Dutchess county, where he has since made his home and has met with excellent results along his chosen line of endeavor. He is one of the prominent as well as original members of the Dutchess County Medical Society. In social circle he also holds a leading position, and has been called upon to serve in a number of township offices.

In 1846 the Doctor was united in marriage with Miss Rebecca Vincent, who was born in 1827, and is the daughter of Jonathan G. and Loretta (Williams) Vincent, prosperous farming people of the town of Unionvale. Two sons bless their union: (1) David Vincent, born in 1863, was educated at Wilbraham, Mass., and Hackettstown, N. J., and also studied medicine. He married Miss Anna Dean, daughter of Cromaline Dean, of the town of Lagrange, Dutchess county, and they had one child that died in infancy. The wife and mother is also now deceased. (2) Ezra V. M., the Doctor's younger son, was born in the town of Unionvale, February 14, 1875. He also attended school at Wilbraham, Mass., and the High School at Meriden, Conn., later taking a course at the Eastman Business College, Poughkeepsie. He is now carrying on farming with his father. In 1895 he took a trip to the Pacific coast, remaining there six months.

(7) Euphemia Knapp, the youngest child of Isaac and Amy (Brush) Knapp, married William H. Morse, an agriculturist of Massachusetts; they had no children.

Gilbert Vincent, the grandfather of Mrs. Dr. Knapp, was a native of the town of Unionvale, and married Miss Phœbe Vail. In their family were twelve children, namely: Isaac, who married Martha Duncan; Absalom, who married Hannah Duncan; Jonathan G., the father of Mrs. Knapp; Thomas, who married Eliza Arnold; Richard, who married Helen Fowler; Margaret, who married John T. Potter; Betsy, who married Jonathan Husted; Rebecca and Levina, who never married; Michael, who married a Miss Carey; Phœbe A., who married Morris Germond; and Hepsobeth, who married Edward Wheeler.

Jonathan C. Vincent was born in the town of Unionvale, and was united in marriage with Miss Loretta Williams, daughter of Squire Williams, a surveyor, of the same township. Seven children were born to them, as follows: (1) Elizabeth married Reuben L. Coe, and had six children. (2) Rebecca is the wife of Dr. Knapp, subject of this sketch. (3) John, ex-county clerk, married Rhoda Butler, and had four children—Ella, who married Obed Vincent; Minnie, who married Charles Andrews; Walter; and Elisha B. (4) Gilbert married Kate Uhl, by whom he had a son, Ralph, who married Hannah T. Underhill; for his second wife Gilbert wedded Eliza Ham, and they have a daughter, Loretta. (5) Lewis never married. (6) Michael married Estella O'Neil, and has five children—Nellie, Minnie, Jonathan, Thomas and Rebecca. (7) Mary A. wedded Orin Able, and has two children—Elanita, who married Oscar Shaffer; and Claude O. L.

JAMES G. PORTEOUS, M. D. (deceased).
In the romantic annals of Scottish history, and made immortal in the romances of Sir Walter Scott, is the name of Porteous, ever linked in the struggles for freedom, and worthy a place at the side of a Forbes, or a Mar, following under the leadership of the matchless Wallace, or Bruce. In direct line of descent from Capt. Porteous, famous in the "Porteous mob" at Edinburgh, comes Andrew Porteous, a native of that city, born in 1815 or 1816, a son of Andrew Porteous, Sr.; he emigrated to this country in 1837 or '38, and helped to lay out Jersey City. He later went to Essex county, New York, and worked in the mines as a civil engineer, afterward going to Glens Falls where he engaged in the cement business, and thence to Luzerne where he followed agricultural pursuits. He married Jane Blair, also of an ancient Scotch family, and they became the parents of eight children, as follows: James G., Helen, Mary, Jane, Charles, Maggie, Annie and Scott, only two of whom—Jane and Scott—are yet living.

James G. Porteous, whose name opens this review, was born at Moriah, Essex Co., N. Y., January 3, 1839. While in Essex county his educational training was under the guidance of a private tutor, and his academic education was received at Glens Falls. In 1861 he entered the medical department of Harvard College, graduating in 1865. During the four years he was enrolled as a student at Harvard, he was absent two years in the army. Prompted by the same spirit that animated the breasts of his ancestors he offered his services to his country, to do his part that no star might be missed from the field of blue. He enlisted as first assistant surgeon of the 118th N. Y. V. I., and later was promoted to surgeon of the 46th N. Y. V. I., where he served during the balance of the war. After being mustered out he returned to college and passed "perfect" in all of his examinations. In 1865 he began practice at Luzerne, in Warren Co., N. Y., and for fifteen years he successfully followed his chosen calling—to which his large sympathies so well adapted him—there; but May 1, 1880, he bought out the practice of Dr. Carter, of Poughkeepsie, and removed to that city, greatly to the regret of his patients at Luzerne. His career as a physician in Poughkeepsie was one of remarkable success, and he remained there until his death, one of the best known physicians in this part of the State.

In 1865 Dr. Porteous was married to Miss Sarah F. Wilbur, daughter of Samuel and Sarah Wilbur, of Boston, Mass., and three children were the result of this union: Effie; Flora, who became the wife of Allen H. Craft, of New York City; and Lizzie, who married Dr. E. E. Hicks, of Brooklyn, N. Y. Socially, the Doctor was a member of the Mystic Shrine, Knights Templar, and of the Loyal Legion and the G. A. R., and was also a member of the Dutchess Club. In religious belief he and his wife were faithful attendants of the Episcopal Church. The Doctor was very strong in his political views, and was an active and influential worker in the ranks of the Republican party. Though for seven years supervisor of Luzerne, and a member of the Assembly in 1873, he could in no way be regarded as an office seeker. His interest was only what every public-spirited and patriotic citizen's should be—"to promote the general welfare"—and in this our subject did not fail to do his duty, for he was in the fore of any movement that tended toward the advancement of the community. He was one of those typical self-made men, whose struggles with adverse circumstances broadened the mind, and his natural kind-hearted and unselfish nature, together with his sincere regard for his brother man, made him a man among men, a friend to humanity. His heart responded to every call, and he could laugh with them that laughed, and mourn with them that mourned. No appeal to his aid was ever made in vain, and though he ranked among the foremost of his profession in Poughkeepsie, no home was too humble for him to enter if thereby he could relieve the suffering of mind and body of some unfortunate fellow-being. In proof of the high regard in which he was held, his patients have collected quite a sum of money for the purpose of erecting a monument over his grave, that there might be in chiseled marble a fitting testimonial of the life and character of one of nature's noblemen.

JOHAN J. BROOKS (deceased) was born in Haverstraw, N. Y., April 1, 1821, and was the son of Capt. William Brooks, a native of Stony Point, New York.

John Brooks was a farmer by occupation, and was a prosperous man. He married a Miss Cooney, and their children were: Oliver, Brewster and Samuel (deceased); Nathaniel, a blacksmith by trade, living at Stony Point, N. Y.; John, William, Lavinia, and Mary, the latter now living in Marlborough.

William, or "Capt. Billy," as he was generally known, by trade a ship builder, spent his entire life in Haverstraw, where he was well-known and highly esteemed. He was a man of unusual ability, and was prominent in all affairs of the county. He was a brave soldier in the war of 1812, and a captain in the State militia, whence he obtained his title. He was a Democrat and a leading man in political circles, as well as in the Methodist Church to which he and his wife belonged. He was married in the summer of 1817 to Miss Nancy DeGroot, whose father was a large land owner at Tompkin's Cove. Eight children were born of this union, as follows: William D. is a prominent citizen of Rochester, now retired from business; John J. comes next; Oliver has resided in Detroit, Mich., for a number of years; Walter was a sailor, and was lost at sea; Sampson, a builder, lives at Hyde Park; Edward is in the carriage business in Syracuse, N. Y.; Sybil died July 3, 1890, unmarried; and Jane M. married Hewlett Baker, a prominent builder in New York City. The father of this family died at Haverstraw in the summer of 1846; the mother passed away in Poughkeepsie, in November, 1881.

John J. Brooks was reared to manhood in Rockland county, obtaining only a common-school education, but being possessed of much natural ability and a retentive memory he became a well-informed man. He was very fond of reading, and was one of the best mathematicians in his locality. He was a good business man, thorough in everything he undertook, and became a leader in all public enterprises as a Republican.

Mr. Brooks was apprenticed when quite young to learn the carriage-trimming business, and worked for two or three years in Rahway, N. J., and New York City, then when he was nineteen years old he bought his time, and later started a shop of his own on the corner of Broadway and Walker street, New York. After moving to Poughkeepsie he started on the corner of Crannell and Main streets, soon afterward opening a factory at Nos. 424-426-428, on Main street, which he carried on until about 1870. His first partner in business was Marshall, and, later, Thomas Wyatt. This factory employed from eighteen to twenty men, and was the largest in the county. In 1870, in company with A. T. Kear, Mr. Brooks went into the livery business, which he carried on until 1876, when he retired from active work. In 1880 he was elected chief of police, Poughkeepsie's first chief, which important position he held for nine years. He was also at one time alderman for the Third ward, and again for the Fifth ward, performing the duties connected with this office to the entire satisfaction of his constituents. He was supervisor one term, also a member of the excise board, and always held a prominent place among the public-spirited men of the city of Poughkeepsie, being a born leader and full of enterprise. Religiously, he was a member of the Congregational Church, and was ever ready to assist in any good work. In his death, which occurred July 17, 1891, the community lost one of its best citizens, and his family a tender, loving husband and father.

Mr. Brooks was married June 18, 1845, to Elsie A. Hermance, daughter of John Hermance, who was a shoemaker by trade and a great temperance advocate. Four children were born of this marriage: Herman and Charlie, both of whom died young; Norman J.; and Emma C., who married Charles A. Van De Water, of Poughkeepsie, and their children are Irving B., Elsie May and Lena M.

Norman J. Brooks, only surviving son of our subject, was educated in the public schools of Poughkeepsie, and in Dutchess County Academy. When fourteen years of age he left school and went into the dry-goods store of William Broas, for a time. He then was in his father's office for awhile, after which he learned the wagon-maker's trade, and subsequently engaged in the livery business for two years. In 1874 he was employed as clerk in the New York post office, where he remained two and a half years. For several years after this he was in no particular business. In 1877 or 1878 he was appointed, by B. Platt Carpenter, as a clerk in the Custom House, which position he held for eight years. After this he became salesman in the clothing house of M. Schwartz, where he remained four or five years, and then went into the grocery business, the firm name being Brooks & Van De Water. In 1895 he bought out his partner, and at present is conducting the store himself. He has been successful in this enterprise, and is looked upon as an able business man.

Mr. Brooks was married September 25, 1872, to Hilah A. Burger, daughter of W. C. Burger, of Ulster county, and four children have been born to them: Lulu S. (deceased when six months old), Arthur N., Clarence J. and Elmer Frank. Mr. Brooks is a Republican, and has at times taken quite an active part in politics, although he has never been willing to accept office; he attends the services of the Congregational Church. A public-spirited citizen, he is interested in any movement looking to the growth and welfare of his community.

ROBERT G. COFFIN, the subject of this sketch, was born in the town of Washington, on what is now called the Altamon stock farm, February 12, 1823. His father was Robert Coffin, of whom see a biography in the sketch of Hezekiah R. Coffin.

Our subject spent his boyhood on the farm attending the Nine Partners Boarding School, and later the Dutchess County Academy. After finishing his education he resumed his life on the farm of his parents where he resided until 1887, when he sold the place and bought his present property in South Millbrook.

On April 9, 1851, Mr. Coffin was united in marriage with Miss Eliza Sackett, who was born in the town of Washington, a daughter of Artemas E. Sackett, a farmer in that town. The Sackett family was an old one of the town of Stanford, where the father of Artemas E. was born. Nine children were born to our subject and his wife, namely: Kate died young; Ida L. married Dr. J. O. Pingry; Clarence died at an early age; Laura married Beverly W. Howard, a farmer in the town of Washington; Edwin married Miss Elizabeth Tomlinson, and is a farmer in Stanford; Robert married Miss Elnora Lattin, and lives in Mamaroneck, N. Y.; Artemas S. married Julia Lattin, and is a merchant at Oak Summit; Helen M. became the wife of Dr. D. H. MacKenzie, a practicing physician at Mabbettsville; John L. married Miss Emily Crossman, and lives in Washington. Mrs. Coffin died November 28, 1894.

Mr. Coffin is a Democrat, and has been quite a prominent man in his community. He was instrumental in building the church in South Millbrook; was also an active promoter of the building of the Newburg, Dutchess & Columbia R. R. He was the first bona fide subscriber to its stock; was one of its first directors, and is still one, having served as such about thirty years. He suggested calling meetings along the entire line, at which he and others addressed the people in favor of its construction, which efforts resulted in an almost unanimous subscription to its stock. After much more hard work the road was completed, and its benefits secured to the people. Millbrook was now a fine church, a railroad, and has developed into a beautiful little village. Mr. Coffin is greatly admired for his public spirit, and possesses the esteem and respect of all who know him.

GUY CARLETON BAYLEY, M. D., of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, second son of Richard and Mary (Dietz) Bayley, grandson of Dr. Guy Carleton Bayley, and great-grandson of Dr. Richard Bayley, was born at Poughkeepsie, October 16, 1850.

Our subject was educated at the Dutchess County Academy, and in Mr. Churchill's school at Sing Sing, N. Y. In 1867 he entered Dr. Jacob Bockee's office as a student of medicine, and, in 1869, the office of Dr. Henry B. Sands, New York City, by whose advice he took three courses of lectures at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, in the City of New York, where he graduated in 1872. In the same year he commenced the practice of his profession at Poughkeepsie, where he was appointed visiting physician at St. Barnabas Hospital, and physician-in-charge of the Orphan Home and Home for the Friendless. In 1884 Dr. Bayley accepted an appointment on the visiting surgical staff of the Womans Hospital of the State of New York, New York City, and associated himself in business with Dr. Nathan Bozeman, in that city. In 1887 Dr. Bayley was appointed resident medical officer of, and visiting surgeon to, Vassar Brothers Hospital at Poughkeepsie, and was given charge of the details of the organizing and carrying on the work of the splendidly-equipped and richly-endowed institution. Dr. Bayley is an original member of the New York State Medical Association, of the American Medical Association, and of the New York State Medical Society.

In 1875 the Doctor married Angelica Crosby Wyckoff, who died in 1876; for his second wife he, in 1885, married Ellen Lorraine Bulkeley, of New York City.

LAWRENCE C. RAPALJE, a retired agriculturist and business man of the town of East Fishkill, Dutchess county, has been for many years a leading citizen of that locality, his varied interests identifying him with many of the most important progressive measures there.

In his veins there flows the blood of several of the oldest families of the county, members of which have distinguished themselves in the past by their devotion to principle, and by their work in public lines. On the paternal side, the first ancestor came from Holland about 1623, and located near Newtown, Long Island, where some of his descendants still live. Martin Rapalje, our subject's grandfather, was a farmer there throughout his life. He married Miss Mary Lawrence, daughter of Col. William Lawrence, and a member of one of the most prominent families in New York.

They reared a family of children, among whom was Daniel L., our subject's father.

Daniel L. Rapalje was born in January, 1800, spent his early years at the old homestead, and then engaged in the wholesale dry-goods business in New York City, where he passed the remainder of his life, dying in June, 1850. He was a Democrat in politics. His wife, Phœbe Cortelyou, born in April, 1800, in Long Island, was a daughter of Peter Cortelyou, and is also deceased. The Cortelyou family is of French-Huguenot stock, and the first of the American branch came from France during the religious persecutions. He made the first map of New York City.

Lawrence C. Rapalje was born in New York City, August 26, 1826, the elder of the two sons of his parents; the younger, Adrian, died at the age of twenty-one. The schools of the city afforded excellent educational advantages, of which Mr. Rapalje availed himself, and at an early age he began to familiarize himself with business methods by clerking in his father's store. In 1843 he went to the town of East Fishkill to reside, and October 10, 1855, he was married there to Miss Anna Horton, a native of the town. Her family is of English extraction, and her father, Maj. Coert Horton, was a native of Dutchess county, and a well-known farmer and merchant. Mr. Rapalje settled upon a farm of 250 acres, which he purchased in 1857, and has ever since resided there; it is now within the widening limits of Hopewell Junction. Here four children were born to them: John, who was formerly the superintendent of a railroad in the West, is now a civil engineer in West Virginia, and interested in the development of coal lands; Lawrence, Jr., who is a farmer at the homestead; Adrian, a civil engineer; and Anna, the wife of Charles Underhill, the agent for the railroads running into Hopewell Junction. The mother of this little family passed from life December 30, 1895.

Mr. Rapalje has not only given much attention to agriculture, but he has been a worker in finance as a director and vice-president of the First National Bank of Fishkill (now defunct), and he has also taken an active part in railroading, having been a director and organizer of the Dutchess and Columbia railroad, and a director of the Poughkeepsie Bridge Co. He is now a member of the board of directors of the Dutchess Mutual Life Insurance Co. In local politics he is influential, and has been a favorite candidate on the Democratic ticket. In 1861 he was elected supervisor, in which office he has served eight years, and was justice of the peace for nearly thirty years. A born leader, he has taken a prominent place among his associates and co-laborers in every line of effort. The Rapalje family adopted the faith of the Reformed Dutch Church at a very early period, and to this Mr. Rapalje also adheres.

LEWIS E. WOOD, of the well-known firm of Wood Brothers, leading nurserymen and florists in the village of Fishkill, Dutchess county, N. Y., has shown rare skill and ability in his calling, having been chosen at the age of twenty to superintend the extensive greenhouses of Burrow & Wood (who established the business in 1866), the predecessors of the present firm. Hereditary influences have doubtless played a part in his success, as he may be said to belong to a family of gardeners, his father, uncle and two brothers having engaged in the same business.

Mr. Wood is a great-grandson of Isaac Wood, and a grandson of Joseph W. Wood, who was married three times, first to Mariam Odel (mother of Joseph J. Wood, our subject's father). Joseph J. Wood was born May 4, 1828, and in early manhood began his work in the nursery business in the employ of John Burrow, with whom he remained about sixteen years. He then married Rebecca J. Vernol, who was born February 20, 1835, a daughter of Epenetus and Ann (La Due) Vernol, and five children were born of this marriage: Lewis E., Eugene V., Annie J., Isaac J. and Howard E. The parents are still living at Fishkill. After his marriage the father took charge of the Rapalje estate, where he remained some eighteen years. In 1874 he bought an equal interest in the nursery business of Burrow & Wood, the junior member of the firm being his brother, Isaac C. Wood. On September 6, 1876, the two brothers purchased Mr. Burrow's interest, and continued under the firm name of I. C. Wood & Bro., the partnership lasting until July 1, 1889, when our subject and his brothers, Eugene V. and Isaac J., bought the entire property and business. They have about fifty acres of land under cultivation, with some forty greenhouses which they have remodeled from time to time since they took possession.

Lewis E. Wood was born at Fishkill, November 20, 1856, and was educated in the Union Free School. He attended school steadily, winters and summers, until he was eighteen years old, when he entered the employ of Burrow & Wood, and after two years of work in the greenhouses he was placed in charge. This responsible position he held up to the time that he and his brothers bought the business, with the exception of two years (1879 and 1880) when he conducted a branch of the business at Newburg.

On October 21, 1877, Mr. Wood married Miss Ada Jackson, daughter of Orry and Cornelia (Pink) Jackson, former residents of Milan, Dutchess county, and has three children: Eugene Wesley, Frederick Morgan and Florence Emily. Mr. Wood emphatically endorses the principles of the Republican party, but is not an active political worker.

VER PLANCK. The first member of this family, of whom a definite account has been preserved, was Abraham Ver Planck, who often called himself Abraham Isaacse (or saacsen), meaning thereby that he was the son of Isaac. The exact date of his arrival in America is not known, some authorities claiming that he came previous to his marriage, which took place about 1635, and others indicating that he accompanied Governor Kieft in 1630. His name appears frequently in the records of the early Dutch settlers, notably in connection with the purchase of large tracts of land.

This Abraham Ver Planck married Maria Tinge Ross, and by her had a son, Gulian, born January 1, 1637, who married Hendrika Vessels; their son, Samuel, born December 6, 1668, married Ariantje Bayard; their son Gulian, born May 31, 1698, married Mary Crommelin; their son, Samuel, born September 19, 1739, married Judith Crommelin; and their son, Daniel C., born March 19, 1762, married Elizabeth Johnson. These latter were the great-grandparents of Robert Newlin Verplanck, the subject proper of this biography.

Gulian Crommelin, son of Daniel C. and Elizabeth (Johnson) Ver Planck, and grandfather of Robert Newlin, was born August 6, 1786, in New York. His mother died when he was three years old, and his father having married again, he was brought up by his grandmother, Judith Crommelin. At the age of eleven years he entered Columbia College, and graduated in the class of 1801. Not long after he studied law, was admitted to the bar in 1807, and at once took up the practice. As his leaning, however, was rather to literature and politics, he devoted himself to them, abandoning the practice of law. In 1811 he married Eliza Fenno, and in 1816 they took a trip to Europe, where, in Paris, Mrs. Verplanck died in 1817. He subsequently visited Holland, England, Scotland, etc., returning to New York in 1818. After this he took part in the political life of the day, and contributed several articles to its literature, as well as on various other subjects, all his efforts in that line exhibiting considerable ability. He was, also, a lover of art, and made a collection of several good paintings and engravings. In 1825 he was sent to Congress as a representative from New York City, there remaining through four successive terms, and from 1837 to 1841 he sat in the Senate of the State of New York. He then undertook what may be considered the crowning work of his literary efforts—the editing of Shakespeare's plays and poems—which occupied him three years. He died March 18, 1870, at his town residence in New York, in his eighty-fourth year, and was buried in the cemetery of Trinity Church, Fishkill Village, Dutchess county. His children were William Samuel (mentioned below), and Gulian, born April 29, 1815, died November 19, 1845.

William Samuel, father of Robert Newlin Ver Planck, was born in New York City, October 15, 1812. After graduating at Columbia College in 1832, he commenced studying law, and in due course was admitted to the bar; but he practiced only a short time, turning his attention to agricultural pursuits, and taking charge first of the Mount Gulian farm, and afterward of his father's farms on the Fishkill Plains. On November 17, 1837, he married Anna Biddle, third daughter of Robert and Mary (Brown) Newlin, and eight children were born to them, as follows: (1) Eliza Fenno, born September 16, 1838, married Benjamin Richards, of New York, where they live; (2) Mary Newlin, born October 18, 1840, married Samuel W. Johnson, who died in 1881 (she is now living in New York); (3) Robert Newlin, a sketch of whom appears presently; (4) Daniel Crommelin, born April 13, 1845, died April 8, 1854; (5) Anna, born November 27, 1846, married Samuel H. Clapp, who died in 1891

(she is now living in Albany, N. Y.); (6) Jeanette, born March 7, 1849, married Theodore M. Etting, of Philadelphia, where they are now living; (7) Gelyna, born January 23, 1852, married Brig.-Gen. Louis Fitzgerald, of New York, where they are now living; and (8) William Edward, born April 8, 1856, married Virginia Eliza Darby, and they live at Mount Gulian, Fishkill-on-Hudson. The father of this family died December 23, 1885, and is buried by the side of the mother (who died May 31, 1883), in the Rural Cemetery, Fishkill. He inherited his father's love of reading, and had a very retentive memory; was a good farmer and a successful one; a thorough sportsman and an excellent shot. At the time of his death he was president of the Savings Bank, and vice-president of the First National Bank.

ROBERT NEWLIN VER PLANCK was born November 18, 1842, at the family homestead one and one-half miles north of Fishkill-on-Hudson. This old house was built in 1730 or '40 by Gulian Ver Planck, the grandson of the Gulian Ver Planck, who by royal charter obtained from the Indians one-third of the famous Rombout Patent, the first tract of land granted within the limits of Dutchess county. It embraced the present towns of Fishkill, East Fishkill, and Wappinger, the western part of Lagrange, and nine thousand acres within the southern limits of the town of Poughkeepsie. February 8, 1682, Gulian Ver Planck and Francis Rombout obtained a license to purchase this tract from the Aborigines, the grant making the issue of a patent conditional upon a prior settlement with them, and the requirements being met the deed was delivered, and on the 14th day of August, 1683, was recorded among the State papers at Albany. The Ver-Planck homestead was one of the principal landmarks in this section in the early days, and one of the important events which the walls of the historic mansion have witnessed was the organization of the Society of the Cincinnati, May 13, 1783, when Baron Steuben, inspector-general of the Continental army, occupied the house for his headquarters, the army being then at Newburg. [See Irving's "Life of Washington," Vol. IV, Page 392, et seq.]

Our subject was prepared for Harvard College by Otis Bisbee, of Poughkeepsie, and was graduated from that institution in 1863, at the age of twenty-one years. He immediately joined the Twenty-second Regiment

N. Y. State Militia, then stationed at Carlisle, Penn., and on the return of the regiment went to Washington. On September 15, 1863, he was made second lieutenant of U. S. Volunteers, by Gen. Silas Casey's examining board. He served as provost marshal of the Third Division, Eighteenth Army Corps, Army of the James, and participated in all the battles that were fought on the north side of the river. In the winter of 1864-65 he was made aid-de-camp to Brig.-Gen. Truman Seymour, Third Division, Sixth Army Corps, Army of the Potomac, and received brevet for gallant and meritorious services on April 2, 1865, when the line was broken in front of Petersburg. He was mustered out as captain June 21, 1865. On his return from the army he engaged in refining petroleum in Jersey City, continuing in this business from September, 1865, till the spring of 1871, when he sold out to the Standard Oil Company, and took charge of his father's lands, comprising seven farms in East Fishkill.

On February 24, 1876, Mr. Ver Planck was married to Katharine Brinckerhoff, daughter of Matthew Van Benschoten and Mary (Franklin) Brinckerhoff, and they have five children, viz.: Gulian Cromelin, Judith Cromelin, Mary Brinckerhoff, William Samuel and Robert St. Clair.

DAVID E. ACKERT, a leading merchant of Rhinebeck, Dutchess county, the senior partner of the well-known firm of Ackert & Son, is a descendant of one of the old Holland-Dutch families of the county, his great-grandfather, George Ackert, having been the owner of a farm three miles south of Rhinebeck. This property has been in the possession of the family from that time to this, and is at present held by George Ackert. George Ackert (2), our subject's grandfather, who was born about 1780, was a farmer also, and his son, William G. Ackert, born about 1809, was engaged in the same occupation early in life. His later years were spent in Rhinebeck in the employ of W. S. Cowles & Co., dealers in dry goods, groceries, boots and shoes, farm implements and other commodities. He was never active in political or religious movements, and his life passed uneventfully in the careful performance of his duties. He died in 1876, and his wife, Permelia Ackert, daughter of George Ackert, passed away about 1880.

D. E. AKA

David E. Ackert, their only son, was born September 20, 1832, in the town of Rhinebeck, and received his early education in the public schools of his native place. At the age of fifteen he became an errand boy for W. S. Cowles & Co., and was soon promoted to a clerkship, which he held until his purchase of the business in 1868. For the last twenty-seven years he has successfully conducted this store, one of the largest in the town dealing in dry goods, groceries and crockery. It is seldom that one finds such a record of fifty years of continuous effort in one enterprise. Of late years his son, Ernest Cowles Ackert, has been a partner in the firm.

In September, 1853, Mr. Ackert married Miss Mary Worden, of Rhinebeck, who died in 1883, leaving two children—the son mentioned above and a daughter, Emma K., the wife of Charles E. Worden, of Saratoga, New York.

Mr. Ackert is a prominent member of the M. E. Church, with which he united thirty years ago, and is a constant and devout student of the Bible. He has been a Church trustee for many years, and has served as president of the board. He upholds the principles of the Republican party, but is not a political worker, although as a good citizen he is always ready to respond to any call to duty, and has been president of the village for four years, and chief of the Fire Department for five years. He is a member of the fraternal order of Odd Fellows.

CHARLES D. SHERWOOD, a leading agriculturist of the town of Fishkill, Dutchess county, is one of the younger workers in local affairs—religious, political, and social.

On the paternal side of the house, he is of English descent, his ancestors coming to this country some time during the seventeenth century and locating in Connecticut. He is of the eighth generation in descent from Thomas Sherwood and Alice Seabrook, his wife, whose son, Matthew, married Mary Fitch, and had a son, Samuel, who married Rebecca Burr. Their son Thomas married Anne Burr, and was the father of Joseph, who was born in Greenfield Hill, Conn., January 15, 1754. He served for some time as corporal and was commissioned, by Gov. Jonathan Trumbull, a lieutenant in the Twelfth Company of the Fourth Regiment, of Connecticut Militia, May 20, 1780. As corporal he served during the Revolution in the force detailed to reinforce Gen. Putnam, on the Hudson, during Burgoyne's expedition, and as lieutenant in the defense of the Connecticut coast. [Evidence found in "Connecticut Men in the Revolution;" pp. 520, 521, 576.] Mrs. John I. Platt, of Poughkeepsie, has this commission in her possession. He married Sarah Bradley, and died in Chester, N. Y., January 22, 1838. His son Samuel settled in East Fishkill, and married Ruth Du Bois. They had nine children; the youngest, Isaac, born March 25, 1826, married Mary Du Bois, June 24, 1851, and had one son.

The Du Bois family, from whom Mr. Sherwood's mother descended, is of French-Huguenot origin, and one of the oldest in the State. The first of that name who emigrated to the New World was Jacques Du Bois, who was born in Leyden, France, and married Pierromie Bentyn, of the same place. They reared a family of eight children: Marie, Jacques, Marie, Jean, Anne, Jehan, Pierre and Christian.

Pierre Du Bois came with the family to America in 1675, and located at Esopus, Ulster Co., N. Y., but spent most of his early life in Kingston, where he married Jeannetje Burhans, October 12, 1697. In 1707 they came to Dutchess county, locating in the town of Fishkill, about three and one-half miles east of the village of that name. Here he secured a tract of land, and lived with his family. His eldest son was born in Kingston, the other children after he had moved to Dutchess county. They were as follows: Petronella (1), Johannes (1), Jacobus, Christiaan, Jonathan, Peter, Abraham, Johannes (2), Helen, Elizabeth and Petronella (2). The fourth child, Christiaan Du Bois, married Nelltje Van Vliet, and they became the parents of three children: Jannetje, Elizabeth and Christian. The last named was born June 13, 1746, and was married in 1768 to Helena Van Voorhis, by whom he had seven children: Henry, Abraham, Garret, John, Elizabeth, Catherine and Coert.

Garret Du Bois, the fourth son, was the great-grandfather of our subject. He married Hannah Cooper, and located upon a farm near Johnsville (now the town of East Fishkill), where they reared their family of three children: Maria, who married Peter S. Montfort, father of Peter V. W. Montfort, of the town of Wappinger, Dutchess county; Eliza, who married Peter Fowler, a farmer of Orange county, N. Y.; and Charles Lewis Du Bois.

Charles L. Du Bois was born in 1799, on the home farm in the town of East Fishkill, where he grew to manhood, and married Catherine Hasbrouck, who was born in the same township, in 1800. Her father, Tunis Hasbrouck, belonged to the same family as those of the name in Ulster county, N. Y. After their marriage they lived on the farm near Johnsville, where were born their four children: Jane Eliza, who married Augustus Bartow, now a resident of Hackensack, N. J.; Mary, wife of Isaac Sherwood; Garret, who married Mary Ida Van Wyck; and Hasbrouck, a clergyman of the Reformed Dutch Church in New York City, who married Kate Schuyler Anderson. Throughout life the father carried on farming, and he died in January, 1878, while his wife survived him about two years. She was a sincere member of the Reformed Dutch Church.

Charles D. Sherwood, son of Isaac and Mary Du Bois Sherwood, was born September 18, 1854, in the town of East Fishkill, where his father lived for many years. He was educated in the schools of his native town, Newburg, and New Brunswick, N. J. Failing health obliged him to abandon his preparations for a collegiate education, and he afterward engaged in farming at the present homestead near Brinckerhoff, his father having moved there some time before. In 1883 he married Anne R. Cotheal, daughter of Isaac E. Cotheal and Catherine Elizabeth (Rapalje). Mr. Sherwood is a trustee of the Fishkill Rural Cemetery, and trustee and treasurer of the Rombout Cemetery at Brinckerhoff. He is a member of the First Reformed Church at Fishkill, and one of its Consistory.

Mrs. Sherwood is of the Seventh Generation in descent from Jarvis Jansen de Rapalje, one of the proscribed Huguenots from "Rochelle in France," who was the common ancestor of all the American families of this name. He came to this country with other colonists in 1623, in the "Unity," a ship of the West India Company, and settled at Fort Orange (now Albany), where he remained three years. In 1626 he removed to New Amsterdam, and resided there till after the birth of his youngest child. On June 16, 1637, he bought from the Indians a tract of land computed at 335 acres, called Rennegaconck, now included within the city of Brooklyn and comprehending the lands occupied by the U. S. Marine Hospital. Here Mr. Rapalje finally located, and spent the remainder of his life. He was a leading citizen, acting a prominent part in the public affairs of the colony, and serving in the magistracy of Brooklyn. He died soon after the close of the Dutch administration, his widow, Catalyntie, daughter of Joris Trico, surviving him many years. She was born in Paris, and died September 11, 1689, aged eighty-four. The original family record preserved in the library of the New York Historical Society gives the names and dates of birth of their children as follows: Sarah, June 9, 1625, married first to Hans Hansse Bergen and then to Teunis Gysberts Bogart; Marritie, born March 11, 1627, married Michael Van dervoort; Jannetie, born August 18, 1629, married Rem Vanderbeek; Judith, born July 5, 1635, married Pieter Van Nest; Jan, born August 28, 1639, was killed by Indians; Catalyntie, born March 28, 1641, married Jeromias Westerhout; Jerominus, born June 27, 1643; Annetie, born February 8, 1646, married (first) Martin Reyerse, and (second) Joos Fransz; Elizabeth, born March 28, 1648, married Dirck Hooglandt; and Daniel, born December 29, 1650.

Second Generation: Jerominus Rapalje became a man of some prominence, a justice of the peace, and deacon of the Brooklyn Church. He married Anna, daughter of Teunis Denys, and had nine children, born as follows: Joris, November 5, 1668; Teunis, May 5, 1671; Jan, December 14, 1673; Femmetie, October 5, 1676, married Jan Benne Jacob, June 25, 1679; Jerominus, born March 31, 1682; Catalina, born March 25, 1683, married Peter Dumond, of Raritan, N. J.; Sarah, November, 1687, married Hans Berge and Cornelius, born October 21, 1690.

Third Generation: Jan Rapalje, son of Jerominus, married Annetie, daughter of Coe Van Voorhees, and was a farmer on a portion of the family estate, in Brooklyn. They had three children: George, Jeromus, John.

Fourth Generation: Jeromus Rapalje, son of Jan, inherited a farm at Flushing, where he died in 1754. He was twice married, and had six children: John, Richard, Stephen, Arida, Elizabeth.

Fifth Generation: John Rapalje, son of Jeromus, was born in 1722, and died in Jamaica, at about the age of fifty years.

was twice married, and by his first wife Elizabeth, daughter of Abram Brinkerhoff, had five children: Catherine, who married Teunis Brinkerhoff; Jeromus; Abraham Brinkerhoff; Aletta, who married James Debevoise; Richard. The sons settled at Fishkill, N. Y., where their descendants remain.

Sixth Generation: Richard Rapalje, son of John, was thrice married, and had eleven children.

Seventh Generation: Catharine Elizabeth Rapalje, daughter of Richard, married Isaac E. Cotheal, of New York City, son of Henry and Phebe (Berrian Warner) Cotheal. They had three children: Elizabeth M., the wife of Dr. Howell White; Anne Rapalje, married to Charles D. Sherwood; and Catharine Elizabeth, unmarried.

On the paternal side Mrs. Sherwood is descended from William Cotheal, whose father was a practicing physician and surgeon. He came from France and located first in Connecticut, afterward going to the City of New York, and from there to the town of Woodbridge, Middlesex county, New Jersey.

William Cotheal married Charlotte Dove, and they had nine children; the youngest, Isaac, married Elizabeth Evans, and had two sons, Henry and David. Henry married Phebe Berrian Warner, and had six sons and four daughters. The youngest son, Isaac, married Catharine Elizabeth Rapalje, and had three daughters.

DANIEL M. SHEEDY, M. D., one of the successful physicians and surgeons of the city of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, is a native of Norwalk, Conn., where his parents, Michael and Johanna (Haulon) Sheedy, were married. The father, who was born in Killybegny, Ireland, was a stock farmer by occupation, and he and his wife are both living. In their family were the following children: Daniel (deceased); Mary (deceased wife of Dr.weeney, of Newburgh, N. Y.); Mary Catherine, a Sister of Charity; Kate, wife of Lawrence Maguire; Thomas John (deceased), who was a stock farmer; Dr. B. D. Sheedy, of Bridgeport, Conn.; Daniel M., subject of this sketch, and Fannie, wife of Dr. Thomas Tyrne, of Union Hill, New Jersey.

Our subject attended the public schools of Norwalk, Conn., from which he was graduated in 1885. He then began the study of medicine with his brother, Dr. B. D. Sheedy, at Northampton, Mass., after which he entered the New York University, graduating from the medical department with the class of 1888. He has also taken special courses under Prof. Loomis, on the heart and lungs; under Prof. Harry P. Loomis, on pathology; under Prof. Whitouse, on chemistry; and under Prof. Wright, on surgery. After his graduation he was admitted to the Massachusetts Medical Society, and also holds membership with the Dutchess County Medical Society. At the present time (spring of 1897), he is taking special studies at the Post-graduate Hospital, New York City.

On August 6, 1888, Dr. Sheedy arrived in Poughkeepsie, where he established an office at his present place of business, and has built up a large and lucrative practice. He is an extremely busy and successful practitioner, and stands high among his professional brethren. In 1890 he made a trip to Europe, which was mostly for pleasure, though he gave some time to study. In his religious views the Doctor is a Roman Catholic, belonging to St. Mary's Church, Poughkeepsie. On April 28, 1897, he was married to Miss Agnes Kelly, a graduate of Lyndon Hall, 1896, the only daughter of Timothy G. Kelly, a successful business man of Poughkeepsie, New York.

ANNA C. HOWLAND, M. D., who is successfully engaged in the practice of medicine in Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, is a native of the Pine Tree State, born in the town of Hallowell, Kennebec county, where she spent her girlhood, and in the public schools and seminaries of that county acquired an excellent education. Her father, Henry Cole, who was born at Vassalboro, was a well-educated man, a county squire and a representative to the State Legislature of Maine. He engaged in teaching many years, then in the manufacture of blocks for stamping oil cloth. He is now deceased, and his widow is making her home with her daughter, our subject. She bore the maiden name of Esther Pope, and is the daughter of Elijah Pope, a native of Portland, Maine, and an architect and ship carpenter by occupation. Our subject is the eldest of three children, and the only survivor, her two sisters, Sarah and Mary, being now deceased.

While attending the Quakers' yearly meeting school at Providence, R. I., Anna Cole met William H. Howland, who was there attending school, and afterward became his wife, their wedding being celebrated at Hallowell, Maine, in 1855. At that time he was engaged in teaching at Nine Partners Boarding School, near Millbrook, Dutchess Co., N. Y., where they removed, and there lived for about six years. Giving up that profession, Mr. Howland began business at Highland, Ulster Co., N. Y., where they remained for four years, coming, in 1865, to Poughkeepsie. The following year the wife entered the New York Medical College for women, from which she graduated two years later. As Mr. Howland died in 1869, she at once began practice in order to educate her four children: Edward Cole, who is now the Washington correspondent of the New York Press; Katherine Flint, who makes her home with her mother; Henry Cole, on the editorial staff of the Mail and Express; and Anna Inman, wife of William Channing Russel, Jr., city editor of the Philadelphia Record, whose father was vice-president of Cornell University.

In 1868 Dr. Howland entered upon her career as a physician in Poughkeepsie, where she remained until 1886, when she removed to Philadelphia, Penn., practicing there as an examining physician for five years. In December, 1891, however, she returned to Poughkeepsie, where she has since continued to follow her chosen profession, and has secured a large and lucrative practice. She belongs to the Homeopathic school, and in connection with her extensive office practice conducts a private hospital at her residence. For many years she has been secretary of the Dutchess County Homeopathic Medical Society, and is also a prominent member of the Homeopathic State Medical Society. The place she has won in the medical profession is accorded her in recognition of her skill and ability, and the place which she occupies in the social world is due to her many noble traits of character, and the love and confidence which she always inspires. She is a conscientious and earnest Christian, a faithful member of Christ Church.

GEORGE MORGAN was born July 16, 1816, at Chatham, Columbia county, N. Y. His father, William Morgan, a farmer and clothier from Hartford, Conn., had removed, in 1819, to Salisbury, in the same State, where the early years of George Morgan's life were passed, working on the farm in summer, and improving the few months of schooling during the winter time.

The history of American manhood points unerringly to the fact that while an education thus obtained is usually meager, it is nevertheless valuable; for while he who obtains it may lack the exquisite polish which much learning is supposed to give, yet he is often better equipped in the true elements of knowledge than are they who enjoy large opportunities, but are devoid of the industry which the absence of wealth enlivens.

At the age of seventeen the subject of this notice, with the money earned by him at hard work under summer sun and wintry blasts, paid his tuition and board for three months' attendance at Wilbraham Academy, Mass.; and at the end of this time, by sawing wood and doing various other odd items of work, he actually paid his way for another term.

What a commentary we find here on the possibilities which surround the young men and women of this, the greatest and grandest government on earth, where it is decreed that individual merit only is the standard of personal distinction. The corner stone of the American Republic is squared and cemented with the declaration that all are equal, and that there is no royal road to learning, honor, or success.

His school days ended, Mr. Morgan came to Pine Plains, Dutchess Co., N. Y., and entered upon a clerkship in a country store, receiving for his services the munificent sum of forty cents per day. But perseverance and economy overcome all obstacles in the road to success, and at the age of thirty years he had accumulated $20,000. He married his first wife at about this time, and engaged in business in New York City, only to realize the loss of nearly the whole of his fortune. About the year 1846 he removed to Columbia county, where he purchased a farm and again went to work. In 1848 he was elected a justice of the peace, holding the office for a term of years. In 1857 he leased the Dakin ore mine, in Dutchess county, for which he paid a heavy rent, and afterward bought the property. Soon afterward he sold the mine to C. S. Maltby, of New Haven, Conn., for $100,000.

In November, 1864, he removed to the city of Poughkeepsie, where he invested $40,000 in government bonds. Then came the real-estate wave, and he was carried along with it, the prices running high. He purchased the "Morgan House" and the College Hill property, for which latter he paid $33,500. He also bought the Swift farm. In looking over his farm he discovered several natural springs, and concluded by excavating the ground and damming it a lake could be formed, and to-day "Morgan lake," situated in the suburbs furnishes the city with pure spring water ice. It might appropriately be styled a sparkling monument to his memory.

On September 21, 1879, the earthly life of Senator George Morgan was brought to a close. To-day he sleeps among his kindred in the cemetery at Pine Plains, in the county of his adoption, and for whose material interests he had so nobly contended; his memory cherished by a grateful people whose pride is centered in his manliness, honesty, courage and fidelity.

In 1869 Mr. Morgan was chosen by the people as mayor of the city of Poughkeepsie, being the first Democrat ever called to that position; and at the general election in November of that year he was elected a member of the New York State Senate from the Eleventh District, including Dutchess county, defeating his Republican opponent, Jonathan Rider, by a majority of 187. The same district two years before had elected a Republican by over 700 majority.

At about this time is to be recorded one of the grandest achievements in the life of George Morgan. The question of locating the Hudson River Hospital for the Insane was to be decided. The representative men of the counties of Orange, Ulster and Columbia were leaving no stone unturned" to secure the site for their respective counties. The Dutchess county board of supervisors was in session, and Mayor Morgan was anxious that they should offer inducements for the State officers to locate the building in his county. Finally a proper sum was agreed upon, but at the evening session it was voted down by one majority. The next day Senator Morgan and others worked hard to change the vote, and at 6:00 p. m. the question once more came before the board, and was carried by one majority. There was no time to lose. The State commissioners were to meet at Newburgh, Orange county, that very night to settle the matter of location. With a party of friends Mr. Morgan drove through a blinding snow storm, and at 11:45 P. M. they walked into the commissioners' room at "Orange Hotel." The offer of the other counties had already been made, and Mr. Morgan stepped forward and presented Dutchess county's offer, and the location was awarded to Dutchess. For the success of the enterprise George Morgan never received the full credit to which he was entitled. But for his prompt and energetic action the splendid building would not to-day grace the eminence on the eastern banks of the Hudson just beyond the northerly boundaries of the City of Poughkeepsie.

CHARLES W. ARRAS (deceased) was among the more prominent and enterprising business men of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, who were of alien birth. Like others of his countrymen, he brought to the New World the habits of economy and frugality, which are inherent characteristics of his native land, and the exercise of which, accompanied by industry and good management, brought him success in his business.

Mr. Arras was born at Hessen-Darmstadt, Germany, November 9, 1841, and was the eldest in the family of nine children of Peter Arras, a linen weaver in the Fatherland, who came to America and located in New York City. In his native land our subject learned the baker's trade, and on coming to the United States when eleven years of age he followed that trade in New York City until about 1866, at which time he located at Poughkeepsie. For about four years he worked for George Goepfert in a bakery, and then bought out his employer, successfully conducting the business until his death, which occurred November 14, 1885.

On October 7, 1866, Mr. Arras was married to Miss Emma A. Bieber, who was born in New York City, in 1846, and is a daughter of John Bieber, a native of Bavaria, Germany. In his native land her father had learned stone cutting, but after his arrival in New York City he took up the shoemaker's trade, which he followed there until 1851, when he came to Poughkeepsie and carried on the same occupation until he was called from this life, April 29, 1872. He had married Miss Anna Mary Smidt, who was also born in Germany, September 8, 1821, and they became the parents of five children, namely: Emma A. (now Mrs.

Arras); Barbara, wife of John Haupt, a baker doing business on Union street, Poughkeepsie; Eliza, wife of George Bayers, a bookkeeper of the same city; Mary E., wife of John Bayer, a cigar-maker; and Fred S., a saloon-keeper, of Poughkeepsie. Six children were born to our subject and his wife, two of whom died in infancy. Frederick S., William H., Albert C. and Carl W. are still with their mother, who, since her husband's death, has successfully carried on the business, and displays tact and energy in the management of her affairs.

In religious matters Mr. Arras belonged to the German Lutheran Church, and socially he was a leading member of the Germania Society. He was one of the representative business men of the city, wide-awake and energetic, who dealt squarely and liberally with his patrons, and merited the confidence of the community.

ISAAC L. VARIAN, a well-known citizen of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, where he has resided since 1879, is conducting one of the leading meat markets of the city. For a period of about ten years he carried on business at Nos. 9, 11 and 13 Garden street; for three years afterward he was at No. 299 Main street; thence removing to No. 357 on the same street, where he has since been located. He makes weekly trips to New York City in order to take advantage of the markets, and now has one of the largest establishments of the kind in Poughkeepsie, keeping all kinds of meat, as well as fish and game, and he has secured a large and lucrative trade.

Mr. Varian was born in New York, August 14, 1852, of which city his father, James Varian, was also a native. Isaac Varian, his paternal grandfather, was born in Holland, and on coming with his two brothers to the New World, located in New York City, where he was married, and reared his family of children, named respectively: Dorcas, Michael, Hannah, Jane, and James, father of Isaac L. In politics he was an unswerving Democrat, and he was a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

James Varian was reared and educated in New York City, where he also learned the butchering business, which he followed all his life. He married Angeline Stephenson, a native of Connecticut, and they became the parents of thirteen children, as follows: James; William H., a farmer of Yonkers, N. Y.; Gilbert and Jacob (both deceased); Carman, a mason by trade; Harriet, wife of Frederick W. Denton, who is in the United States service; George, a carpenter of Kingsbridge, N. Y.; Francis L., who is also engaged in carpentering there; Hiram B., a painter at Woodlawn, N. Y.; Charles A. (deceased); Isaac L., subject of this sketch; Eugene, a carpenter of Kingsbridge; and Angeline, who married Howard Carlough, formerly a grocer of Kingsbridge (both now deceased). The father died in Kingsbridge, July 16, 1867; the widowed mother is a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to which her husband also belonged, and in politics his support was given the Republican party.

The subject of this narrative remained at home with his parents, who during his boyhood and youth lived most of the time at Kingsbridge, N. Y., where he attended the city schools, completing his education at Inwood, Queens Co., N. Y. When his school days were over he began learning the carpenter's trade, which he followed for three years, and then took up butchering. Shortly after this he entered into a co-partnership with his brother Charles in the butcher business, a connection that lasted some four years. He then came to Poughkeepsie, where he has since conducted a market with most excellent success, and as a loyal citizen he feels it a duty as well as a privilege to aid in all matters of public interest.

On November 8, 1881, Mr. Varian was married to Miss Clara Marshall, a native of Poughkeepsie, and a daughter of DeWitt C. and Harriet G. Marshall. For several years her father was cashier of the Rhinebeck National Bank. Four children grace this union: Bessie E., Eleanor F., Harry B. and Ruth B. Mr. and Mrs. Varian attend the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in social circles they occupy a prominent position. In politics Mr. Varian is a firm supporter of the Republican party; he holds membership with the Masonic fraternity and the Royal Arcanum.

JOSEPH H. STORM, a representative and prominent citizen of the town of Beekman, Dutchess county, was born March 25, 1842, in the town of East Fishkill, and sprung from a good old Holland family, which was established on the shores of this country at a very early day in its history. Derick Storm was the first to set foot on American soil, landing here in 1662 and making a location on Long Island. He wedded Maria Picters, by whom he had four children: Goris, Peter, David and Maria. The birth of the eldest, Goris Storm, occurred either on Long Island or before the emigration of his parents. He married Engletie Van Lyck, and they located at Brooklyn, where their two sons were born—Derick in 1695, and Thomas in 1697.

Thomas Storm purchased land of Col. Phillips, in the manor of Phillipsburg, Tarrytown, N. Y. He had nine children: Thomas, Jacob, Garret, Goris, Abraham, John, Isaac, Catherine and Engletie. When well advanced in years he came to Dutchess county, where he bought about 406 acres of land on the north side of the Fishkill, 204 acres of which he gave to his son Goris, and the remaining 202 to Abraham. The latter received the land which his father had secured by a second purchase, with the exception of ten acres on the south side of the Fishkill. To Isaac he gave his possessions in Tarrytown, where his birth occurred, but he traded these with his brother Abraham, and came to Dutchess county, where he was married and reared a family of several children, among whom was Abraham, the grandfather of our subject.

Abraham Storm was born in the town of East Fishkill, in 1771, and he married Sarah Vincent, of the town of Beekman. They located upon the homestead, and there reared their five children: Isaac was an attorney in early life, but later turned his attention to the tobacco business, and retired at the age of fifty with a capital of a million and a half; William was a farmer in the town of Lagrange, Dutchess county; John V. is the father of our subject; Charlotte first wedded D. E. Remson, and, after his death, married Joseph Genung, both of whom were farmers; and Elizabeth became the wife of John Humphrey.

John V. Storm was born on the home farm in the town of East Fishkill in 1800, and there passed his boyhood and youth. He married Jeannette E. Woolley, a native of Beekman town, and a daughter of William and Hester (Pell) Woolley, farming people. Her ancestors were English, John Woolley having come from England and located on Long Island. His son Joseph, who was born in 1740, was the grandfather of Mrs. Storm. He engaged in the fur business with the Astors, and at his death left a large estate. After their marriage the parents of our subject continued to live upon the old Storm homestead, where their seven children were born: Abraham, Joseph, William J., Frances, Elizabeth, Cornelia and Helen. During his active life the father always followed agricultural pursuits, but is at present living retired in the village of Fishkill. His faithful wife passed away June 22, 1886. He is a Democrat in political sentiment, and has been called upon to fill a number of official positions, being supervisor of East Fishkill township several terms, and also justice of the peace. The Storm family have mostly been members of the Reformed Dutch Church, while the Woolleys were Episcopalians.

The early life of Joseph H. Storm, subject of this review, was passed in the usual uneventful manner of most farmer boys, upon the old homestead where his ancestors had long resided, and in the district schools obtained his early education. Later he attended an academy, after which he took a business course in the Eastman Business College, Poughkeepsie, and then returned to the farm where he remained until his marriage, September 4, 1867, to Miss Sophia D. Sheldon, daughter of Wilson B. Sheldon, a prominent agriculturist of the town of Beekman, and they began their domestic life upon the farm in the same township which is still their home. To them two children have been born: Wilson B., who is engaged in business with W. J. Storm; and Jeannette, wife of Frederick Ryer, Jr., of Mount Vernon, New York.

Upon his valuable farm of 120 acres Mr. Storm is engaged in general farming, with good success. Being a popular and influential citizen, he has been called upon to serve in several positions of honor and trust, representing his district in the State Legislature in 1885 and 1886, and holding the office of supervisor of Beekman town in 1879 and 1880. He is an ardent supporter of the Republican party, and by Secretary Rusk was appointed appraiser of the Bureau of Annual Industry, which position he capably filled for two years. He has been vice-president of the Dutchess County Agricultural Society many years; vice-president (and also president pro tem) of the New York State Agricultural Society for some time; and at Chicago was elected vice-president of the Farmers National Congress of New York. Socially he affiliates with the Masonic fraternity. Upright and honorable in all the relations of life, Mr. Storm holds an enviable position in the estimation of his fellow-citizens, no man in Dutchess county being held in higher regard.

DANIEL WASHBURN. In every agricultural community there will fortunately be found men whose progressive management serves to demonstrate the value of the judicious application of modern scientific principles to the ancient business of farming, and to this worthy class belongs the subject of this sketch, who is a successful agriculturist of the town of Pawling, Dutchess county.

Mr. Washburn is a native of the county, born in the town of Beekman, November 29, 1850, and his education was obtained in the common schools near his home. At an early age he engaged in agricultural pursuits, which he has followed ever since with unusually satisfactory results. At present he rents the Slocum farm of 286 acres, also rents the William Luddington farm of 176 acres, upon which he employs many assistants. He devotes his time to the raising of general crops, but has made a success of tobacco culture, and is an expert in all its branches, as well as in the more common details of farming. His business cares do not prevent him from taking an active interest in public movements, and although until a few years ago he was an ardent supporter of the principles of the Democratic party he is now one of the leading Prohibitionists of his town. He has held the office of excise commissioner; belongs to Patterson Lodge No. 173, I. O. O. F., Pawling, and is a member of Christ Church, Quaker Hill. His first wife, Miss Sarah E. Roe, was a daughter of Daniel and Maria Roe, prominent among the farmers of the town of Dover. The present Mrs. Washburn was formerly Miss Edith Ette, who was born in 1856, in New Milford, Conn., and was educated in New Fairfield, Conn. Of the three children of our subject by his first wife, Ella, born January 9, 1874, married George Ette, a farmer of Patterson, and has had one daughter, Serena; Serena, born February 1, 1876, married Charles Lutz, a farmer of the town of Pawling, and has had one child, Ethel; and Fannie B., born May 18, 1879, is at home.

The Washburn family has been prominent in Putnam county, N. Y., from early times, and Samuel Washburn, our subject's grandfather, was born and reared there, becoming a farmer by occupation. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. He and his wife, Phebe (Baker), reared a family of six children: Jonathan, who married Naomi Dykeman; Levi, who remained single; Absolom, who died in boyhood; Zebulum, our subject's father; Eliza, who never married; and Mrs. Hannah Robinson.

Zebulum Washburn was born in Carmel, Putnam county, in 1804, and his education was acquired there in the district schools. He was a well-known farmer, and was prominent in local affairs as a Democrat; but, although he held a number of minor town offices, he never aspired to political distinction. His death occurred in 1862. He married Miss Serena Luddington, daughter of Joseph Luddington (a leading blacksmith of Pawling) and his wife, Susan (Ferris). Our subject was the fourth in a family of seven children. Of the others (1) Susan never married. (2) George H. was born in the town of Beekman in 1840, was educated in the schools there, and in 1860 enlisted in Company E, 19th N. Y. V. I., being the first man from the town of Beekman to respond to the call for troops. He served three years and then re-enlisted, and, his regiment having moved on, he was transferred to the 128th N. Y. V. I. He met his death at the battle of Shenandoah. (3) Samuel was born and reared in the town of Beekman, and followed farming there. He married (first) Miss Hattie Gregory, and had three children—William, Walter and Louis; for his second wife he married Miss Carrie Mosier, and has had one daughter—Ella. (5) William S. was born at the old homestead in 1853, and after attending the schools of Beekman engaged in business, and is now foreman for William B. Wheeler, taking charge of the Latta estates. He married Miss Lizzie Lutz, daughter of Henry Lutz, a well-known gardener of the town of Pawling, and has had three children—William, Leo and Fredie. (6) Anna A., born in 1856, married Horace Orton, a farmer of the town of Dover, and has had four children—Sarah, Minnie, George and Herbert; of these, Sarah married William White, also a farmer of Dover, and they have one child, Jennie. (7) Jane died in infancy.

LUDWIG PETILLON (deceased) was one of the best known citizens of the county, of later years as a wealthy, retired business man residing on a charming estate two miles from the city of Poughkeepsie. He came of German origin, and his grandfather, Isaac Petillon, who was a farmer in Bavaria, was a soldier in the German army during the Napoleonic wars. He reared a family of children, among whom was a son, Jacob, our subject's father, who was born December 23, 1813, in Bavaria, grew to manhood there, and learned the butcher's trade.

At the age of twenty Jacob Petillon sailed for America, landing in New York July 4, 1833. Coming to Poughkeepsie, he found employment at his trade, and with characteristic enterprise and good management he made his way to success, continuing in the same business throughout his life. He was a Republican in politics, and took a keen interest in the questions of the day. He married Catherine Hey, also a native of Bavaria, born March 28, 1811, and had four children: Caroline C., the wife of Charles Kirchner, a well-known resident of Poughkeepsie; John Jacob, who was born January 16, 1840, and at the time of his death, May 22, 1884, was a successful business man of Poughkeepsie; John, now a resident of that city; and Ludwig, our subject. The father of this family died July 11, 1861, the mother surviving him until January 7, 1885. Both were devout members of the German Lutheran Church, to which their children also belonged.

Ludwig Petillon was born in Poughkeepsie, September 20, 1845, and was educated in the public schools of that city. He was only fourteen years old when the death of his father compelled him to become a "bread winner," and he and his brother, John Jacob, conducted their father's business from that time with marked success. At first they had a wholesale trade, but later they engaged in a retail business with Charles Kirchner, continuing until 1889, when Mr. Petillon retired from the active management.

On April 7, 1874, Mr. Petillon was married to Miss Catherine Steitz, a native of Poughkeepsie, and a daughter of Philip and Catherine Steitz, well-known citizens of German birth. They had no children. On his retirement from business Mr. Petillon purchased from W. S. Johnson a beautiful farm of eighty acres near the city on the electric line, which he improved with winding paths and drives, and a residence which compares well with those of the neighboring wealthy New Yorkers. He was an intelligent, progressive man, highly esteemed among all classes, and was a generous supporter of local improvements. In politics, he was a Republican, and he and his wife were prominent adherents of the Lutheran Church, to which they contribute liberally. Mr. Petillon died February 21, 1896.

JOHAN HACKETT, of the well and favorably known law firm of Hackett & Williams, of the city of Poughkeepsie, which enjoys an enviable reputation throughout the Valley of the Hudson, for the success each member has met with in the handling of the extensive legal business that for years has been entrusted to their care, is a native of Ireland, born on the farm of his father, near Clonmell, June 8, 1845.

His father, John Hackett, with his family, came to America in 1852, and located in Hyde Park, Dutchess Co., N. Y., where John Hackett was reared, and where he was given the benefit of the public schools of the village; he also attended the Eastman Business College, and was graduated therefrom in 1863. Not content with the idea of being an accountant through life, young Hackett determined on a professional career, and began the study of law, pursuing his studies in the office and under the direction of Chester Brundage, at Poughkeepsie. He was admitted to the bar in 1866, and at once settled in the practice of his profession in the city of his adoption, and where he was reared and educated. In 1873 he was made assistant district attorney under James L. Williams, and served as such until the close of Mr. Williams' term of office. In 1884 he was the Democratic nominee for the same office, and was elected over George Esselstyn, the Republican candidate; on the expiration of his term of office he was again the nominee for district attorney, and was re-elected over his competitor, W. R. Wooden, by a large majority. He very ably and successfully performed the duty devolving upon him as a public official, in a position of so much responsibility, and both socially and professionally became widely and favorably known. In 1876 he formed a partnership with James L. Williams (under whom he had served as assistant district attorney), which partnership continues to exist. They have an extensive and lucrative practice, and are men of high standing and position in the community in which they have so long resided. The firm is recognized as one of the strongest in that section of the country.

On April 10, 1880, Mr. Hackett was married to Miss Hattie V. Mulford, daughter of Hon. David H. Mulford, of Hyde Park, who was one of the representatives from Dutchess county in the Legislature in 1870-71, and to their marriage the following children have come: John M. and Henry T., both of whom are now attending the Bisbee Military School, at Poughkeepsie. Mr. Hackett and family reside at Hyde Park.

JAMES COLLINGWOOD (deceased) was born in Wigan, England, March 19, 1814, and came to America at the time of the first cholera epidemic, being then eighteen years old. He came directly to the city of Newburg, where he worked at the shoemaker's trade for a few years, and then moved to Fishkill, Dutchess county, where he engaged in the shoe trade, and built several houses. From Fishkill he went to a farm near West Park, Ulster county, and there engaged in farming.

Mr. Collingwood came to Poughkeepsie and started in the lumber business, buying a residence on the river a short distance from the city. He was first married at Newburg to Hannah Frost, who died in Poughkeepsie during the second year of the cholera scourge in New York, leaving four children: Jennie S., who married G. W. Millard, and is now deceased; William A. and James H., both also deceased; and Eugenia Elizabeth, who married E. B. Taylor, and is now deceased. After the death of his first wife, our subject married Miss Mary E. Clark, a daughter of George Clark, who was born in Poughkeepsie. Of this marriage five children were born, namely: (1) Sarah, who married Charles A. Brooks; (2) John G., who married Josepha Chichester, and they have two children—John C. and Fannie M.; (3) George married Mary E. Carey; (4) Fannie married G. W. Millard, and is deceased; and (5) Edwin James married Cora L. Schickle, a daughter of John Schickel, of Poughkeepsie.

Our subject's parents were William and Jane Collingwood, the former of whom started out for himself at the age of eighteen years. He was a self-made man, and became one of the largest coal and lumber dealers along the Hudson river. He was very highly spoken of in Poughkeepsie, and his career was an example of thrift and energy to others. He built the opera house and the block in front of it, in Poughkeepsie, as a private enterprise. His death occurred May 16, 1874.

EDWARD CRUMMEY (deceased). To intellectual gifts and training which fitted the subject of this sketch to take rank among the leaders of the legal profession, there was added the ardent heart of a reformer, and a steadfast faith in human nature that made him an inspiration for good in every life that came in contact with his own. His sympathy and help have lifted more than one degraded drunkard to renewed self-respect and determination, while his influence among his associates brought to the various temperance organizations large numbers of able and cultured workers who in their turn have carried on the noble work.

Mr. Crummey was born in New York City in August, 1827, and after the early death of his parents, James and Sarah Crummey, he was brought at the age of fifteen to live in the family of Smiten Vincent Tripp, near Clinton Corners, Dutchess Co., N. Y. He attended the district school there for some years, and pursued a higher course of study in the school on College Hill, then conducted by Charles Bartlett, Bisbee and Warring. He taught at Stanford and Schultsville, and then went to California in 1849, and engaged in gold mining with the late Hon. A. P. K. Safford, then a prominent resident there, and later on Governor of Arizona. They were successful, and Mr. Crummey returned home with the means to carry out a cherished wish to become a lawyer. He prepared for the bar at Prof. Fowler's Law School, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and at Poland, Ohio, in 1856, was admitted to practice, and he at once opened an office in the city of Poughkeepsie, where for nearly forty years he carried on his professional work. In 1857, when a County Board of Excise was appointed under the new law, Mr. Crummey became clerk and attorney for that body, serving with marked ability for several years. At the time that the 150th Regiment N. Y. Volunteers was raised in Dutchess county, Mr. Crummey opened a recruiting office in Poughkeepsie, and succeeded in raising an entire company; but as he had no liking for military life he never asked for the commission as captain to which he was entitled, but gave it to the late U. S. Capt. Platt Thom.

In 1865 he became interested in the temperance cause, and united with the Sons of Temperance, his zeal and influence bringing large accessions to the organization. He was also instrumental in founding a Father Matthew Society in Poughkeepsie, and in starting a series of public meetings in the court house and in Old Pine Hall, which aroused and maintained for several years wide-spread interest in the total-abstinence movement. To Mr. Crummey, more than to any other one person, the success of these several enterprises was due. He was a fine extemporaneous speaker, and an able and dignified presiding officer. In the Sons of Temperance he seven times held the office of Grand Worthy Patriarch of Eastern New York, and later was made Most Worthy Patriarch of the United States and Canada. In the formation of the Prohibition party he gave it his allegiance. He was always a ready friend to any man, no matter how low and degraded, who attempted to reform, and he gave freely of both time and money to secure them employment, and to establish them in an honorable mode of life. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity.

On November 10, 1857, Mr. Crummey was married in the town of Stanford to Miss Geraldine B. Arnold, a descendant of a pioneer family; her great-grandfather, Ahab Arnold, her grandfather, Welcome Arnold, and her father, Archibald H. R. Arnold, were all prominent residents there. Two sons were born of this union, SAFFORD ARNOLD and Edward Daly, both of whom, with their mother, survive the beloved father and husband, who passed beyond the gates that separate the seen from the unseen, July 20, 1894. Surely he "hath done what he could."

GEORGE HUNTINGTON, M. D. The life of a country physician, who labors day and night through all seasons for the alleviation of human suffering, lacks the spectacular features which bring some men, in far less useful callings, into public prominence, but no one will deny or even question the superior value of the work done by the unassuming medical practitioner.

Dr. Huntington is a descendant of an old New England family, and several of his ancestors were physicians of note. Simon Huntington, the head of this branch of the family, came from England with three sons soon after the settlement by the Pilgrim Fathers. Our subject's great-grandfather and grandfather were natives of Norwich, Conn., but the latter, Dr. Abel Huntington, moved to East Hampton, L. I., when a young man, and began the practice of medicine. He was a leader among his associates, and served two terms in Congress under Jackson's administration. His wife was Miss Frances Lee, daughter of Col. Lee, of Lyme, Conn., and they had four children: Marrietta, the wife of Dr. David Gardiner; Cornelia, a well-known writer of prose and poetry; Abbie L.; and George Lee Huntington, our subject's father, who also became an able and successful physician. He passed his youth at East Hampton, and studied medicine with his father for some time, continuing his course later with Dr. Valentine Mott, of New York City. He took charge of his father's practice when the latter was elected to Congress, and then for some time followed his profession in Brooklyn, N. Y., where he married Miss Mary Hoogland, a member of an old Knickerbocker family. Soon afterward he resumed his practice at East Hampton, continuing until his death in 1884. Of his four children the eldest, Benjamin H., is president of the Dime Savings Bank of Brooklyn. (2) Abel Huntington, M. D., is medical director of the New York Life Insurance Co., of New York City, and Mary E., now a resident of Brooklyn, is the widow of the late Frederick Bridge, who was engaged in trade with China and Japan, and who for several years was a resident in those countries.

George Huntington, the third child of this family, was born in East Hampton, April 9, 1850, and received his literary education mainly at Clinton Academy, at that place, studying the classics under the tuition of John Wallace. In the fall of 1868 he began the study of medicine with his father as preceptor, and later attended three courses of lectures at the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York City, graduating in 1871. In the following year he located in Pomeroy, Ohio, but after a few months returned home and united with his father in practice, remaining there until 1874, when he established himself at Lagrangeville, Dutchess county. There he has met with the appreciation which his thorough mastery of his profession deserves.

In 1874 the Doctor married Miss Mary E. Heckard, daughter of Judge Martin Heckard, of Pomeroy, Ohio, a well-known mining engineer, and for some years the judge of the probate court there. Six children were born of this marriage: Katharine, Charles Gardiner, Abel (deceased), Elizabeth, Edwin Horton and Eleanor. The Doctor holds a high place in the esteem of his professional brethren, as well as with the public generally. He is a member of the Medical Society of Dutchess county, and was its president in 1887-88; in April, 1894, he was made an honorary member of the Brooklyn Society for the study of Neurology. He also belongs to the Audubon Society of New York City, and he achieved world-wide recognition as a scientific observer by a paper on "Chorea," read before the Meigs and Mason Academy of Medicine, in 1872, and published in the "Medical and Surgical Reporter." This paper describes a peculiar form of hereditary chorea existing in Long Island, N. Y., which has since attracted much attention both at home and abroad, and which has been designated "Huntington's Chorea." We quote the following from an article by William Osler, M. D., professor of medicine in John Hopkins University, Baltimore. "Twenty years have passed since Huntington, in a postscript to an everyday sort of article on chorea minor, sketched most graphically, in three or four paragraphs, the characters of a chronic and hereditary form which he, his father and grandfather had observed in Long Island. In the whole range of descriptive nosology there is not, to my knowledge, an instance in which a disease has been so accurately and fully delineated in so few words. No details were given: the original cases were not (nor have they been) described, but to Huntington's account of the symptomatology no essential fact has been added." In 1897 Dr. Huntington was made one of the auxiliary staff of the new General Hospital at Fishkill-on-Hudson.

LEWIS FREDERICK STREIT (deceased), a former well-known carriage manufacturer of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, was born at Guilderland, Albany Co., N. Y., December 2, 1816.

Frederick Streit, the great-grandfather of our subject, born in 1709, came from Bavaria, and settled at a place called Keskatomi Nijse, northwest of Catskill, N. Y., owned a farm on land bought by Henry Beekman of the Indians about 1700; he afterward sold this farm and purchased one at Rhinebeck, N. Y., where he passed the rest of his days, dying February 8, 1781, aged seventy-two years. He married Catharine Mowel (Moul) from the west side of the river, who was born in 1702, and died February 23, 1785, at Rhinebeck. They had eight children: Christina, born February 27, 1740, married Caspar Ham; Elizabeth died in 1740; Anna, born May 26, 1734, died May 27, 1740; Mariah, born March 8, 1742; Frederick, born March 8, 1742, died May 21, 1800; Lodowick, born April 12, 1745; Catharine married Frederick Ham; and Anna married John Ackert.

Frederick Streit, the grandfather of Lewis Frederick, was born March 8, 1742, and died May 21, 1800. He settled at Guilderland, N. Y.; married (first) Catharine Bennèr, February 7, 1762, daughter of Henrich and Catharine (Boetzer) Benner (they had one daughter, Catharine, born August 9, 1768); and (second) Elizabeth Rauh, and to the latter marriage were born four children: Hannah, born November 14, 1770, died August 23, 1776; Mary, born July 14, 1773, died August 16, 1776; John, born November 2, 1775, died August 21, 1776; and Lodowick, born December 26, 1777, died July 9, 1783. For his third wife Frederick Streit married on February 18, 1782, Catharine Moore, born June 8, 1752, at Red Hook, N. Y., died March 16, 1843, the only daughter of Phillip Hendricksen (born December 28, 1713) and Engel (Dederick) Moore; they had four children: Frederick, born May 2, 1780; Phillip, born September 21, 1783, died July 4, 1800, married Elizabeth Cramer; Lodowick, born February 26, 1785, went to Canada; Hannah, born May 14, 1789, died February 3, 1833, married John M. Rowe, November 5, 1809.

Phillip Streit, the father of our subject, born September 21, 1783, died July 4, 1867, at Rhinebeck, N. Y., married November 6, 1803, to Elizabeth Cramer, born August 24, 1784, died November 25, 1861, daughter of John Nicholas and Elizabeth (Tipple) Cramer, the former born January 22, 1743, died October 18, 1806, and the latter born in 1752. They had five children: Caroline Catharine, born September 9, 1804, at Rhinebeck, married (first) Lemuel Savage, of Granville, N. Y., November 30, 1802, and (second) Seth Morehouse; Anna Maria, born December 20, 1807, at Guilderland, married George Lamoree, of Staatsburg, died September 20, 1895; Jane Elizabeth, born January 3, 1811, married Seth Morehouse, died January 4, 1862; Lewis Frederick, born December 2, 1816, died March 1, 1891; Margaret Ellen, born November 27, 1821, married David Henry Schryver, of Rhinebeck, New York.

Lewis P. Shurt

There is a legend in the Cramer family that the great-grandfather of Elizabeth Cramer was one of the Princes of a small division of Germany. They lived in a castle supposed to have been at Baden-Baden; her grandfather married a daughter of a family with whom his father was at feuds, and they were consequently disowned by both families. John Nicholas, father of Elizabeth, was one of three sons born in Baden in 1743. It is said the children went to their grandfather's castle gate, and repeated the Lord's Prayer, according to an old German custom for restoring peace, but it was unavailing, so the father, his wife and three sons sailed for America. The passage was very long (three months) and stormy; the father died and was buried in the deep, and the children were sold, according to the prevailing custom of that time, to pay expenses; the wife married again in Virginia. Two sons, John N. and another brother, Jacob or Wendel, settled in Rhinebeck. They brought with them an old German Bible printed in 1585, which is now in the possession of one of the members of the family.

Lewis Frederick Streit received the benefits of a common-school education. In 1830 he came to Poughkeepsie, and engaged in the carriage and sleigh-making business with John P. Myers, afterward carrying it on on his own account until 1853, when he took George Lockwood into partnership with him. The firm prospered, and in 1888 they sold their business and retired. Mr. Streit invested in real estate in Poughkeepsie, which at the present time is very valuable. In politics, he was a Republican, although he never sought public office, was made a member of the board of village trustees of Poughkeepsie, and represented the Fourth ward as alderman in 1854. In early manhood he became connected with the Presbyterian Church, with the interests of which he was associated until his death. He was twice married; by his first wife, Martha Vigg, daughter of Nathaniel and Elizabeth (De Groot) Wigg, and born December 23, 1811, married January 31, 1838, died in October, 1861, two children were born: a son who died in infancy, and a daughter, now Mrs. Elizabeth Raub, of Poughkeepsie. By his second wife, Rebecca Matilda Duncan, he had one child, a son who died in infancy. Mr. Streit died March 1, 1891. He will always be remembered as an honorable, upright man, who gained and held the respect and esteem of his fellow citizens. He was identified with the industries of the city, and for many years was a director in the Poughkeepsie National Bank. His taste and enterprise, courtesy and probity, were noteworthy, and in no sphere was he more honored than in the Church where his name was recorded nearly all his manhood. His widow is living at the old home, and in 1886 she purchased her own old homestead at Unionvale, near Millbrook, New York.

Elizabeth Streit (the daughter of our subject by his first wife) was born in the city of Poughkeepsie, married James M. Raub, of Raubsville, Penn., who died July 20, 1872; they had two daughters: Alma, now Mrs. Halsey Haines Cheney, and Lena, now Mrs. John Morton Swift.

ROBERT FORSTER (deceased) was born in Canada March 14, 1821, of English and French ancestry. The father died when Robert was a small boy, and the latter went to New York City, where he received his early education.

Mr. Forster learned the machinist's trade with John Matthews, with whom he lived for several years. While in Mr. Matthews' employ as foreman of the factory, our subject was married June 6, 1843, to Emma Manning. In 1846 he came to Poughkeepsie, and followed his trade, that of a machinist. In 1847 he built the apparatus for the manufacture of soda water, and engaged in the bottling business, in which he was the pioneer in Poughkeepsie. He first started in the retail business, which soon rapidly increased to wholesale, and he supplied the trade of Poughkeepsie and other cities. He was an active member of the fire department, but would never hold a political office. His business, which is now the largest in the city, is carried on by his widow, she has an adopted son, George, who assists her. He married Miss Emma Louise Hager, and they have three children: Grace T., Emma N. and Robert. Mrs. Forster also has in her employ James Du Bois, who has been with her since 1855, and Robert William Polhemus, a nephew, who has been with her since 1873. Mr. Forster died in Poughkeepsie June 28, 1863.

Charles Manning, Jr., the father of Mrs. Forster, was born at Hyde Park, Dutchess county, in 1795, where he spent his boyhood attending public schools. He was a soldier in the war of 1812. On January 4, 1817, he was married to Miss Maria Travis, who was born in the town of Pleasant Valley, August 16, 1795, and children as follows were born to them: Elizabeth and Hester (both deceased); Emma; Sarah, who married William S. Polhemus, of Poughkeepsie; James, and Charles, the latter being deceased. Mr. Manning was engaged in farming in Hyde Park until 1826, when he went to New York City and went into business there. Later he returned to Dutchess county, and died January 2, 1857.

Charles Manning, the grandfather of Mrs. Forster, was a farmer in the town of Hyde Park, where he was born July 17, 1771. He married Miss Elizabeth Myer, who was born April 20, 1772, and they had fourteen children. Charles Manning, the great-grandfather, was one of the early pioneers of the town of Hyde Park. Isaac Travis, the maternal grandfather, was born in the town of Pleasant Valley, February 10, 1763, and was married to Miss Elizabeth Conklin, who was born June 3, 1760. They had nine children, of whom, Maria, the mother of Mrs. Forster, was the fifth.

GEORGE H. CODDING, M. D., a leading physician and surgeon of Amenia, Dutchess county, was born at Egremont, Berkshire Co., Mass., August 1, 1854, and comes of a family that for several generations have been prominent agriculturists of that county. His great-grandfather, Cobb Coddington, whose birth occurred at Taunton, Mass., in 1774, became a prosperous farmer and lumberman in the town of Washington, Berkshire county.

There, Ephraim Coddington, the grandfather, was born February 20, 1800, and spent his boyhood days upon his father's farm. At Colebrook, Conn., he married Miss Ann Eliza Remington, who died in 1872, and to them were born three children: Henry E., the father of our subject, and Ann Eliza and Sarah Philena, both deceased. After a short residence at Lenox, Mass., he in March, 1845, removed to the town of Egremont, Berkshire county, where he carried on agricultural pursuits until his death, which occurred August 11, 1870.

Henry E. Coddington, born June 16, 1826, obtained his elementary education in the common schools of Berkshire county, and completed his literary training in the old Lenox Academy. His active business life was all devoted to farming in the town of Egremont, where he died November 24, 1896. A conscientious, earnest, Christian man, for several years he was deacon in the Baptist Church, and officially served as justice of the peace, being appointed by the governor of Massachusetts. In December, 1849, he was united in marriage with Miss Emeline, daughter of Stephen Edgerley, of Glendale, Berkshire Co., Mass., and they became the parents of three children: Marcia R., who was born November 9, 1850, and is now the wife of Alfred J. Hubbard, of LeRoy, N. Y.; Clara G., who was born May 11, 1852, and died in June, 1892; and George H., of this review. The mother of these children was called to her final rest May 26, 1860, and Mr. Coddington again married, his second union being with Cornelia Eggleston, daughter of David Eggleston, of the town of Northeast, Dutchess Co., New York.

Dr. Coddington was reared upon the home farm in the town of Egremont, Berkshire Co., Mass., and attended the Egremont Academy, after which he taught school for a year and a half, and in 1878 took up the study of medicine with Dr. Henry M. Knight, of Lakeville, Conn. On the death of that gentleman, he continued to pursue his medical studies under the instruction of Dr. John C. Shaw, at that time superintendent of the Kings County Insane Asylum at Flatbush, Long Island, and subsequently graduated at the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York City, in the class of '81.

The Doctor then entered Kings County Hospital at Flatbush, as assistant physician and later was appointed second assistant at the Kings County Insane Asylum, thus gaining much practical knowledge. On January 9, 1882, he arrived in Amenia, where for three years he was in partnership with Dr. Desau Guernsey, but since that time has been alone and is now at the head of a large practice. He is a member of the Dutchess County Medical Society, and was one of the founders of the New York State Medical Association.

On March 28, 1883, Dr. Codding was married to Miss Irene Hinman Warner, daughter of Sherman B. Warner, of Southbury, Conn., and to them were born two children—Joel Hinman, born May 29, 1884; and Desault Guernsey, born September 28, 1886, and died July 23, 1887.

CHARLES BROWN HERRICK (deceased). Among the prominent citizens of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, who have passed to the unseen world in recent years, the late Charles B. Herrick held an honorable place, and the announcement of his death at Haines' Falls, in the Catskills, July 29, 1896, caused sincere and wide-spread grief among all classes in the city where the best of his years had been spent. Although it was well-known that he was stricken with a serious ailment—locomotor ataxia—his unvarying composure under suffering had led many of his friends to hope that the disease would not prove fatal. In the prime of life, having just crossed the half century line (for he was born August 15, 1845), he had scarcely begun to reap the rewards and honors due to his able and conscientious work in the legal profession, while the community which he had faithfully served in the various official capacities has lost an untiring supporter of its best interests.

Like many of the foremost citizens of the country, he was born and reared upon a farm, and his father, William Herrick, still resides at the old home at Salt Point, Dutchess county. Our subject prepared for college at East Hampton, Mass., and was graduated from Yale College in 1869. His legal studies were prosecuted in the office of Thompson & Weeks, and in 1870 he began to practice, his office being located in the old "Lawyers' Row," on Market street at the site of the present post office. In 1876 he formed a partnership with Col. Henry E. Losey, which continued until his death. Mr. Herrick's interest in educational and literary pursuits was shown in many ways; he was a trustee of Vassar Institute, and also served three years as a member of the board of education. In politics he was an active worker, and for a number of years previous to his death he was chairman of the Democratic City Committee. When the water board was organized he was appointed clerk, which office he held for several years, and his work as city attorney under the administration of Mayor Elsworth and of Mayor Ketcham reflected great credit upon him, and was satisfactory in the highest degree to the people. The Poughkeepsie Courier said at the time of his retirement from office:

During Mr. Herrick's incumbency, suits aggregating between $150,000 and $200,000, have been brought against the city, and the total recovery has only been $3,700. This is quite a remarkable record, most of the actions for damages resulting from slippery sidewalks. In addition to defending all suits against the city, Mr. Herrick has been the right hand man and confidential adviser of two mayors, and the official adviser for six years of all the city boards, at the same time has attended to a large private practice. Very little business, however, will remain uncompleted at the close of his term. Only one suit is pending against the city.

In all relations of life, Mr. Herrick was a typical American gentleman. Dignified in appearance, at the same time he was pleasing in manners, and he fully appreciated the value of the friendship and esteem of his associates. Although he was always earnest in the support of any cause which he espoused, he never made use of any methods that were not honorable and straightforward, and neither in public or private life was he ever swerved by criticism, ridicule, or invective from the discharge of his duty as he saw it. His innate kindness and justice were displayed in his characteristic reluctance to express an opinion where character or reputation was involved. His legal brethren held him in the highest esteem, and a meeting of the Bar Association of Dutchess County, held shortly after his death, was largely attended, and eloquent tributes of respect were paid by Messrs. Frank Hasbrouck, ex-Judge Henry M. Taylor, Frank B. Lown, Gifford Wilkinson, J. Hervey Cook, Safford Crummey, Martin Heermance, and others. Resolutions of condolence with the sorrowing relatives were adopted, and the words of praise of the life so prematurely ended voiced the feelings of all present.

Mr. Herrick left a widow, formerly Miss Ada Van Benschoten, daughter of Philip and Jane Ann (O'Dell) Van Benschoten, of the town of Lagrange, and three sisters and a brother also survive him. The funeral services were held at the home of the deceased on Hooker avenue, and his remains were interred in the Poughkeepsie Rural Cemetery, a large company of friends gathering to pay the last token of affection. For several years the deceased was a member of the University Club of New York City.

Although the seventh generation resident in the First Ward of the City of New Amsterdam, afterward New York, and the sixth born therein: that is, through the course of two centuries and a half, Gen. De Peyster's connection with Dutchess county has been just about as long, seven generations. He still holds over 1,000 acres of the thousands which were in the possession of his ancestors, besides what he donated for benevolent purposes to the Order of the Brothers of Nazareth to enable them to establish their hospitals and other institutions. He himself built the first Hospital for Consumptives (since burned down), and a magnificent Training School on a plateau latterly known as Prospect Hill, but in times gone by as Guinea Hill†, 965 to 1160 feet above the sea-level, in such a health-giving and health-restoring air that it was recognized as the most salubrious locality in the Thirteen Colonies.

On the summit ridge of the West Mountain, overlooking the valley threaded by the Harlem railroad, partly in the town of Unionvale and partly in that of Dover, is a tract of between 400 and 500 acres known as the "de Peyster Ranch," now almost a dense forest wherein apple trees have shot up to as lofty

*Gen. de Peyster's medals and decorations are mentioned at § No. 4312 (560) F. W. E. Gnechchi's "Guida Numismatica Universale," Milano, 1894.

General de Peyster was born March 9, 1821, at the house of his mother's father, Hon. John Watts, Jr., No. 3 Broadway, New York.

†This nomenclature, Guinea Hill, was doubtless attributable to the number of black slaves employed as farm hands and laborers in a region which, within seventy-years, was a great wheat-producing country, although latterly unproductive through the exhaustion of the soil, and to many places overgrown with a young forest. Africa was scarcely known at all at that time, and black slaves as a rule were supposed to come from the Coast of Guinea. "Guinea Niggers" was the term generally applied to negroes of every shape and shade of color. Even to-day the traveler remarks with surprise the number of colored people to be found in this neighborhood.

heights, as the forest trees surrounding them. A recent survey revealed the ruins of five or six or more homesteads which were once occupied by thrifty farmers. A tourist through this region, who, sixty years ago had visited these homes and had not returned to the locality for about that period, discovered that the only relic of the former care and horticulture which he had once beheld was a cultivated rose bush in flower within what seemed to be a ruined door-yard.

These farms were once a portion of one of the patents of the famous Col. Henry Beekman, whose landed possessions were so extensive that when the question arose whether or not there was any land in the moon, an old farmer in Dover township* remarked, that "if any human being could tell, it would be Col. Beekman; for he was sure that if there was any land in the moon, the Colonel must have a patent for a large share in it." The burial place of this wealthy proprietor, to the shame, be it said, of his immediate descendants and heirs, was so neglected that the spot where his remains repose is now unknown. When Gen. de Peyster, who has a Chinese reverence for his forefathers, sought to discover the location he could get no clue. All he could learn was that Col. Beekman's remains were most likely interred under the chancel of a church which once stood at Pink's Corners, about three miles south of Red Hook. Not the slightest vestige of this sacred building remains, and the fact that a church once stood there is only known through tradition.

Gen. de Peyster's great-great-great-grandmother was Cornelia, born 1690, the sister of this Col. Henry Beekman, who married Guisbert (or Gilbert), second son of the first Livingston in this country. This branch of the Livingston family never assumed the aristo-

* When the "History of Dutchess County, N. Y.," published in 1882 by D. Mason & Co., Syracuse, N. Y., was in process of preparation, the town of Red Hook was written up by Mr. Hume H. Cale in the library of Gen. de Peyster, and it was said that it was the most thoroughly digested account of any township in the county. The difficulty of obtaining authentic information in regard to past events determined Gen. de Peyster to keep notes of all the trips he made to and fro through the county; and they constitute a collection of records which will be very valuable for reference in any other future historical works on the counties of Dutchess and Columbia, particularly the lower portion of the latter.

Doubtless this conversation about "land in the moon" occurred in the public house referred to in the following sentence, and it is landlord was the speaker. "One of the eccentric characters of the earlier days was John Preston, who kept a tavern in the town [Dover] somewhere about the year 1810. His place was a great resort, and he, with his fund of humor, was widely known."—Vol. page 481.

"It does not appear that the slightest reference is made to the settlement of the town [Dover], except that the first settlers were Dutch who came from the vicinity of the Hudson River."—Ibid. 48. Is it possible that they were brought there by Mac Pheadris to superintend his iron works? The hard labor at that time was generally done by slaves.

pratic airs of the other lines, calling their homesteads after different castles of the local Lord Livingstons in Scotland, to whom, according to the investigation published in the "Curio," Vol. I., 1887-1888, pages 45 and 46, they cannot trace their connection. Burke says as much in his "Lost Peerages." Even E. Brockholst Livingston, F. S. A.: Scot., who has written so largely on the subject, admits he cannot supply "the missing link" ("Curio," . . ., 46). There were almost as many so-styled "Livingston Manor houses" as there were well-to-do heads of families of that name. Nevertheless, there was only one real "manor house," situated on the north shore of the Roeff Jansen Kill, near the railroad station, just to the north of its junction with the Hudson river, which was burned down in the preceding century, never rebuilt, and the possession of its site has passed into other hands.

Like the Hapsburg family, who boasted of the growth of their possessions by marrying heiresses, the first Livingston laid the foundation of his fortune in his union with the widow of a Van Renssalaer. Mrs. Martha J. Lamb, in her "History of the City of New York," Vol. I., pp. 275 and 276, furnishes a pen picture of him, moral and physical, and his descendants have not lost his peculiar characteristics to this day.

The different scions of the Watts family, loved by affectionate recollections of the old home in Scotland—once just without, now within the city limits of Edinburgh—called all their rural residences in the Province and State of New York, "Rose Hill," the title borne by their forefathers' mansion for several hundred years. The simple appellation "Rose Hill" was a common weal. They did not arrogate to their homes the titles of different castles of Earls and Lords in Scotland, scattered throughout the realm, not aggregated, as here, in a small district.

Guisbert, or Gilbert, who married Cornelia Bekman, had Mills near Rock City, in the town of Milan, and they were still in existence and known by his name until recent date, if not still in use. His eldest son, Robert Gilbert Livingston, married Catherine, daughter of a wealthy man, John Mac Pheadris, who was the first to introduce the mining and smelting of iron in Dover Valley in Dutchess county. The brother of this John, known as Capt. Mac Pheadris, afterward resided in Portsmouth, N. H., and built—1718 to 1723—a famous mansion, described at length by Brewster in his "Rambles about Portsmouth," 1st ed., pp. 138-140 inclusive. It cost £6,000, equivalent to $30,000 Colonial coinage, possessing at that time a purchasing power equal to $150,000 to-day.

Helen, eldest daughter of Robert Gilbert Livingston and Catherine MacPheadris, married Samuel Hake, a commissary general in the British army, whose only daughter, again Helen, married Frederic de Peyster, grandfather of the subject of this sketch. Catherine, another daughter, married John Reade, of Poughkeepsie, who was the brother of Sarah Reade, daughter of Hon. Joseph Reade, member of the King's Council, etc. This Sarah married James de Peyster, father of the Frederic above mentioned. Samuel, only son of Gen. Hake, having lost all his children, left all his landed property in Dutchess county to the sons of his sister, Mrs. de Peyster, whence (through his honored father, Frederic de Peyster) it came into possession of her grandchild, the General. The Century for December, 1896, in the article "A Group of American Girls," alludes to these ladies.*

Helen Hake had for guardians Nicholas William Stuyvesant and Vice-President Aaron Burr, one of the most malignantly misrepresented of mortals. She was married to Frederic de Peyster, from the house of her great uncle, Gilbert Robert Livingston, at Upper Red Hook Landing, now Tivoli. This gentleman had been an officer in the British service, and this fact saved his mansion, known as "Green Hill," on the high ground overlooking the river, between the Upper and Lower Landings of the two freighting establishments which are now embraced within the village of Tivoli. This title was derived from the residence built by an old French gentleman, M. Delabegarre, and by him styled the "Chateau of Tivoli," of which the part of the original walls of the "enciente" were standing until within the year, and the postern gate still remains. M. Delabegarre was a visionary, and among his other wild plans he laid out, for a grand city, a large portion of the domain, Rose Hill, now belonging to Gen. de Peyster, as well as the "Chateau" at first given to his second son, Frederic. The plotting and plan of this city, a perfect "Chateau en Espagne," was drawn and engraved by the famous Saint

*Perhaps the best succinct or properly digested genealogical statement of Gen. de Peyster's family is to be found in Munsell's "American Ancestry," Vol. I., Part 3, 1888, Pages 83-86.

Memin, the artist who took and engraved so many portraits of distinguished people about 1796, the same time that he laid out the prospective city of Tivoli, in which not a spade has turned a sod for any improvement, or any structure great or small undertaken. On these grounds the first—or at all events one of the first—silk-worm mulberry groves was planted in the United States. By the way, tradition holds that Delabegarre was an Americanism for L'Abbe de Seguard, which, if true, would indicate that he was a waif of the French Revolution who, like so many thousands of others, drifted to the United States.

General de Peyster's residence and associations with Dutchess county have been continuous since 1841. He was an early contributor to the Poughkeepsie Eagle, in the office of which a number of his works were printed that won him high distinction at home and abroad. One, "The Life of Torstenson," received an honorable acknowledgment from His Majesty, Oscar I., the king of Sweden, accompanied by three exquisite silver portrait medals. Several of his subsequent works were reprinted in Europe, and one of them, the "New American Tactics," was followed by the inauguration of the "New Method of Fighting Infantry;" just as his "Winter Campaigns," according to the opinion of Gen. Wm. P. Wainwright, was succeeded by activity at a season in which, previously, armies had rested or remained inactive. It is somewhat curious that his want of recognition has been due to his having always been ahead of his times. Just as he was the first to report in favor of the mobilized twelve-pounder, or Napoleon gun, which did so much service during the "Slaveholders' Rebellion," just so his indications were remarkable for their foresight and his predictions for their fulfillment, as in succession he wrote and published on various military subjects. That these claims are not an afterthought or unfounded is susceptible of immediate and the fullest proof, because his opinions and suggestions were all in print or preserved in manuscript written long previous to the events to which they referred. To the case of General de Peyster most appropriately apply the lines:

"The man is thought a knave or fool
Or bigot plotting crime,
Who for the advancement of his age
Is wiser than his time."

In 1844 he was a staff officer in an Infantry

Brigade of the Northern Districts of Dutchess county; and next year colonel of the 111th Regiment N. Y. S. Infantry, recruited in the towns of Red Hook, Milan and Rhinebeck. Rendered a Supernumerary officer by the Act of 1845, although the youngest colonel in the new 22d Regimental District N. Y.—which comprised the northern towns of Dutchess county and those in the southern half of Columbia county, including the City of Hudson—he was assigned, as a necessity for the complete organization of the force, to its command over the heads of a number of officers of his rank holding older commissions. Within one year the adjutant-general of the State complimented him with the decision that Col. Willard, of Troy, an old army officer, and himself, were the only two who had completely enforced the law in their districts, of which the population were considered the most difficult to handle and the most unruly at that date in the whole State. In 1851, when the militia law was again changed, and anything but for the better, Col. de Peyster was the first officer selected by Gov. Washington Hunt for promotion as brigadier-general, and his was the first such appointment to a rank hitherto elective made by the chief executive, independently, in this State.

Just as he had been assigned in 1849 for "meritorious conduct", he was made brigadier-general for "important service". On this occasion Gov. Washington Hunt wrote, in the summer of 1850, to Hon. George Cornell, who ran for lieutenant-governor in 1850 on the same ticket with him, but was defeated, that "if he had an army of 30,000 regulars he knew no officer to whom he would entrust their command with such perfect confidence as he would to his friend General de Peyster but he was not so sure that he was as fit to command militia and what was then styled volunteers." His meaning was that the General simply understood the application of "MUST", implying the enforcement of the strictest discipline; whereas militia and volunteers—which latter did not signify at the time—as afterwards—troops subjected to the sternest articles of war—had to be coaxed, which is something that the General could not understand.

Sent out to Europe in 1851 as military agent of the State of New York, confirmed and endorsed in the strongest manner by the general government, the young Brigadier, although a great invalid, made such a thorough examination into subjects in which he was expected to take interest, that on his return he handed in a report which has stood the test of time as to its merits, as will be shown. One of the results of his observation and influence was the establishment of a paid fire department with steam fire engines, and the present municipal police of New York City, to which fact letters or certificates and testimonials exist. For his reports Gov. Hunt presented to him a gold medal with a most flattering inscription, and his officers gave him another gold medal, equally complimentary for his efforts in elevating and disciplining his brigade.

When Myron H. Clark was elected Governor of the State of New York in 1854, he rendered the position of Adjutant-General to General de Peyster in the most flattering terms, irrespective of political opinions; and on various occasions, when the exigencies of the time required, conferred on his Chief of Staff all the powers which the Chief Executive himself possessed, to meet and suppress riot and other breaches of the peace. Although Governor Clark put such implicit confidence in his Adjutant-General, he was surrounded by men who were laboring solely for their own interests, without regard to the interests of the service, and did all they could to neutralize General de Peyster's labors. By the advice of such gentlemen as Ogden Hoffman, Attorney-General, he determined to resign, but the result of his honest labors in office manifested itself, and won for him the most flattering attestations from officials most worthy of confidence, and the best military judges. Perhaps the highest compliment to his fidelity and judgment was the privilege of selecting his successor, and he chose Robert H. Pruyn, at one time United States Minister to Japan, as one whose astuteness in politics fitted him to grapple with the anxious elements which environed the Governor. General de Peyster had been selected as an educated soldier, and did not profess to understand the underhand workings of politicians. He would not submit to men who induced the Governor to do many things in his namelessness which his Adjutant-General could not endorse, and would not enforce, as contrary to right and propriety. On taking leave of him, the Governor gave him the strongest testimonials of his esteem and confidence, and again and again, at a later date, expressed his regret that he had not listened to the advice and warnings of his Chief of Staff.

In 1861, when the Rebellion broke out, General de Peyster, in spite of the advice of his physicians and medical friends, proceeded to Washington to offer his services as Brigadier-General with three regiments. He had a long and very extraordinary interview with President Lincoln, and it is greatly to be regretted that all who were cognizant of the facts, as well as Senator Harris, who introduced the General to the President, and was present throughout the interview, are dead. President Lincoln had just called out 75,000 volunteers, and said he did not want any more troops, but offered to take into consideration the General's offer of his personal services. The only testimony of what followed is the memorandum left by Mr. Halstead, of New Jersey, whose intimate relations with the White House were well known at the time.

According to that President Lincoln intended to take General de Peyster as Chief of his Personal Staff, which he purposed to organize; but he was induced to give up this idea, as it was urged that the influence thus brought immediately to bear upon him might contravene and subvert the plans and interested projects and arrangements of other parties.

Perhaps it is sufficient proof of the confidence placed in General de Peyster's military judgment, that Gen. Kearny wanted his cousin (whose eldest son and namesake was a volunteer and aide-de-camp on his staff), to come on to Washington and draw up a plan for the ensuing campaign. General de Peyster answered that a fixed plan would not be capable of successful execution; because with the number of traitors and spies at headquarters, it would be betrayed to the enemy, who would be thus enabled to meet, anticipate and defeat it.

Curious to say, it was only while this sketch was being written, that it was discovered that this was exactly the reply of the famous Suworow to a similar proposition. He said "that the best conceived plans are exposed to the gravest difficulties or disadvantages, because it is impossible to calculate in advance the modifications which the resistance of the enemy or his counter projects, knowing the fixed plan, may bring to bear in opposition; secondly, that plans digested and committed to paper, and thus known to different individuals on whom it was necessary to rely, inevitably would be betrayed to the enemy, who would at once take measures to meet and defeat the movements which had been divulged by some traitor or spy." [See "Thiebault's Memoirs," II., 143 to 177—same idea, "a fixed plan always betrayed."]

After General de Peyster's return from Washington, the hæmorrhages from which he had long suffered became so profuse, that he could scarcely make up each day, by the aid of devoted physicians and remedies and food, for the daily loss of blood. This condition lasted for many years, and has not been entirely overcome.

Notwithstanding the miserable condition of his health, Gen. de Peyster returned to Washington late in the fall of 1861, to offer to the Government two regiments, instead of the three at first proposed, which he could still raise in Duchess and Columbia counties, provided he was appointed to command them, with the rank of brigadier-general. He was well-acquainted with Mr. Thomas Scott—afterward president of the Pennsylvania railroad—then assistant secretary of war, who received him very kindly. The General was offered by Senator Harris the command of the First Regiment of cavalry, which bore that gentleman's name, and also a regiment of light infantry by Edwin D. Morgan, the governor of New York, with the rank of colonel; but he told them that he was not in a condition of health to discharge the duties of such a position, recalling the remark of the famous Gen. Wolfe, "that he was grateful for promotion to the rank of major-general* (equivalent to brigadier-general), because it enabled him to command those comforts and resources without which, in his feeble state of health, he could not undergo the hardships of active service, and do his duty thoroughly."

As in his previous interview with President Lincoln, he was told that the Government did not want any more troops nor general officers. He afterward learned that at this time, the Government, with a want of foresight incomprehensible, were actually disbanding regiments which had cost so much to raise, and could not be replaced without far greater expense and irreparable loss of time when fresh calls were made for troops. He also had an interview with Gen. McClellan, who told him "they had no need of testimonials; that his reputation was sufficient." On returning to the War Department Gen. de Peyster saw the Secretary, Simon Cameron, who was very polite, but assured his visitor that his proposition was altogether inadmissible, because the Government had no need of more troops or officers. This decision was confirmed by Mr. Scott.

It is needless to proceed further with such reminiscences; and refusing to make further visits to officials, General de Peyster returned home, repeating the remarks of Maj.-Gen. Mansfield, U. S. A., that "if such was the course pursued towards men worthy of attention, Jefferson Davis would some day be warming President Lincoln's chair."

In 1863 Gen. de Peyster was invited by the Historical Society of Vermont to deliver a War speech in the State Capitol of Montpelier, the Capital of that State. He chose for his subject, "The Sonderbund; or, Secession War in Switzerland in 1846," a perfect parallel to the American Slaveholders' Rebellion down to the smallest details, its genesis and termination, with this difference: the Swiss loyal States appreciated the incalculable value of time, and the necessity of determined action, which ours did not. They called out the whole available force of the loyal Cantons or States, and overwhelmed the revolution before the neighboring monarchs, anxious to interfere on behalf of the rebels, had time or opportunity to interpose. The whole affair was over in thirty-two days, about one-third of the term Secretary Seward erroneously declared from time to time that our rebels would be crushed, whereas, hostilities lasted over four years. The conclusion of Gen. de Peyster's oration was a perfect prophecy, fulfilled to the letter. These are the exact words spoken:

Here we should observe a few facts extremely pertinent to our own situation. Notwithstanding the extreme defensibility of the mountains of Switzerland—particularly those of the original Forest Cantons, embraced within the limits of the SONDERBUND—as soon as Lucern (corresponding to the Richmond of the United States Rebels) had yielded, the Rebel leaders, at once, acknowledged that the fate of the Swiss secession depended upon the possession of the large fortified towns and upon the maintenance of the masses about them. This should be a consolation to those who fear that a guerilla war in the South can lead to any successful result or defer for more than a short period its entire subjugation. The Sonderbund generals saw at a glance the game was up after their armies had been dissipated and the principal places taken. So it will be with our Southern secession. It will collapse at once when the armies of Lee, Bragg, Beauregard, Johnson and Magruder are destroyed. * "Thiebault's Memoirs," II., 232. Major-General under Napoleon, equivalent to General of Brigade.

Nevertheless, General de Peyster was not inactive, and his support of the Government was so influential that his efforts were acknowledged in the most striking manner by the Legislature of his native State, in 1866. Since he could not be brevetted by any existing law, by "Special Act," or Concurrent Resolution of the New York State Legislature, the brevet of Major-General, after investigation and debate, was conferred upon him. In this, Secretary Folger (afterward U. S. Secretary of the Treasury, and so cruelly slaughtered at the polls when running for Governor of the State of New York against Grover Cleveland in 1881), then a stranger to the recipient of the honor, made an address which was conclusive.

There is no instance in the history of this country of such an honor having been conferred upon any citizen by the Legislature of any State. Only one case resembles it in degree; and that was far less complimentary in the manner, and a general's commission conferred under a totally different condition of circumstances.

The General's gifts and benefactions to public institutions, or to found public institutions, have been a characteristic and notable feature of his life. He has given a number of special libraries to educational institutions or library associations—special libraries exhaustive of the subjects which they present, and which were gathered together by him in furtherance of the laborious investigation which has always preceded his published works on the various themes which he has elaborated. Following his published studies of the characters of Mary, Queen of Scots, and the Earl of Bothwell (which studies included a drama inspired by this theme which elicited the highest encomiums, in addition to the five well-known historical analyses of character and of the times), he gave the library which he had collected on his subject to Columbia College. Some of his other gifts to this university have already been mentioned. To the New York Historical Society, in addition to the invaluable "de Peyster family papers," he gave special libraries collected during his studies upon many interesting and little-known phases of Dutch history (of which a partial catalogue, Part 1, January, 1868, constitutes a pamphlet of 24 pages), together with a library on Napoleon and the campaign culminating at Waterloo. Of this society his father was long the honored president, as he was also its generous benefactor. The special libraries donated to the New York Society Library* and to Franklin and Marshall College have been referred to. Thousands of volumes have also been distributed miscellaneously in various directions, including many valuable books given to the Cazenovia Lyceum and to the Order of the Brothers of Nazareth of Unionvale, Dutchess county, which books were destroyed in the conflagration which consumed the original institution, and valuable volumes donated to the College of St. Stephens, also of Dutchess county.

General de Peyster has given a number of works of art, of superior excellence and representing the expenditure of large sums of money, to New York City, the City of Hudson, and various public institutions. Several of these are statues of heroic size in commemoration of historic members of his own family. The most striking object which salutes the eye of the visitor to the famous Trinity Churchyard, on lower Broadway, New York City, is the bronze statue, heroic size, of the General's eminent grandfather, Hon. John Watts, Jr. This notable statue has been characterized as one of the most artistic of the monuments which adorn the various parks, squares, and public places in New York. It is the work of George E. Bissell, the well-known sculptor of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, N. Y. The "Year Book and Register of the Parish of Trinity Church in the City of New York," for 1893, contains the following, as introduction to an

*NEW YORK HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

At a Stated Meeting of the Society, held on Tuesday evening May 3, 1892, the President submitted and read a letter from Gen. J. Watts de Peyster, presenting to the Society a collection of Family Papers.

The following Resolutions presented by Mr. Edward F. de Lancey were unanimously adopted:

Resolved: That the thanks of the New York Historical Society be and hereby are given to Gen. JOHN WATTS DE PEYSTER for the unique and most valuable gift of the ancient historical manuscripts, documents, maps and deeds, so long in the possession of this distinguished New York family, of which he is a well-known representative; a gift which illustrates in the clearest and strongest manner New York as a Dutch Colony, an English Province, an Independent Sovereignty, and the greatest member of the Republic of the United States of North America.

Resolved: That this collection be added to that formerly given to this Society by the donor's honored father [Frederic de Peyster], one of its Presidents, and that in honor both of the father and the son, the joint collection be denominated "The de Peyster Papers." Extract from the Minutes. [Signed] ANDREW WARNER, Recording Secretary.

Came early, hoping to see you and to thank you in person for your most generous and acceptable gift. It was highly appreciated by the Society. [Card] JOHN A. KING,
[4th May, 1892.] [President N. Y. H. S.]

My dear General:

4th May, 1892.

I had hoped to see you this morning, but you were an earlier bird than myself, and were already on the wing. I wanted to tell you how gratified the Society was with your generous and noble gift, and of your still continuing remembrance and friendship. De Lancey wrote the Resolutions at my request, and the Society welcomed the gift with universal applause. Again thanking, and hoping we may always remain fresh in your memory, I am, Very truly yours, account of the family and public career of John Watts.*

Another munificent gift to the city of New York is the bronze statue, also heroic size, of Gen. de Peyster's famous ancestor, Col. Abraham de Peyster, who was one of the most eminent and public-spirited citizens during the Colonial period of the history of the city and State of New York. This gentleman was a friend of William Penn, the most intimate friend and adviser of the Earl of Bellemont, perhaps the best of the Colonial governors, was mayor of New York City from 1691 to 1695; colonel, commanding the city troops in 1700; Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court the same year; president of the Council and acting Governor of the Province of New York in 1701, and was Treasurer of the Provinces of New York and New Jersey from 1706 to 1721, holding this trust until his death. The beautiful statue of this notable benefactor of early New York is likewise the work of Mr. Bissell, and comprises the chief decoration of the famous square on lower Broadway, "Bowling Green." Opposite this square Gen. de Peyster was himself born, in the handsome old residence, No. 3 Broadway, of his grandfather Watts.

To the city of Hudson the General also gave the beautiful bronze statue of "St. Winfride Evoking the Fountain Which Feeds the Holy Healing Well." This exquisite work of art (the adjective is well-deserved) was originally intended for a site in Dutchess county, the "pinetum" surrounding Gen. de Peyster's new Home for Consumptives, in the town of Unionvale. But the methods of those for whom the gift was designed, and who had been the recipients of numerous and extensive benefactions, changed the destination of the donation. It now adorns the beautiful fountain in the city of Hudson which issues out of its rock pedestal. The pedestal itself is a mass of natural, moss-grown rocks taken from Beacraft Mountain, in the Lower Claverack Manor, near the city of Hudson, of which Gen. de Peyster was the last patroon.

Another statue, also of the distinguished mayor of New York (executed in Paris, and pronounced even finer than that which stands in Bowling Green), has been completed and but awaits the selection of the proper site for its reception. If it can be said, on the one hand, that few Americans can boast an ancestry so illustrious and so upright, concededly, in public estimation, as that of Gen. de Peyster, it is equally certain that no one could be found who more truly appreciates his ancestral heritage and venerates the memories of those who have preceded him and rendered the family name so notable. The philanthropic spirit of his ancestors he has likewise emulated by linking their names with memorials which are lasting public benefactions.

The Home for Consumptives in Unionvale, before referred to (a donation to the Methodist American University), was conceived as a monument to the virtues and gentleness of those whose memories are dear to the General, as the following tablet for the Home testifies:

The General's donation of the extensive lands occupied by the Brothers of Nazareth of Unionvale, has been already mentioned. More than 130 acres of his ancestral domain besides an adjoining farm, a purchase, were given for this purpose, while the Trainin

*THE BRONZE STATUE OF JOHN WATTS.

During the past year there has been erected in Trinity Churchyard, by Gen. John Watts de Peyster, a statue of his distinguished ancestor, John Watts, the last Royal Recorder of the City of New York. This fine work of art stands to the south of the churchyard, nearly on a line with the porch toward Broadway. The statue and pedestal are together about fifteen feet high. The inscription on the base runs as follows:

VIR AEquANIMITATIS.
JOHN WATTS.

BORN IN THE CITY OF NEW YORK, AUGUST 27, 1749 (O. S.) AND DIED THERE SEPTEMBER 3, 1836 (N. S.)
LAST ROYAL RECORDER OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK, 1774-1777—NO RECORDS DURING THE REVOLUTION; SPEAKER OF ASSEMBLY OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK, JANUARY 5, 1791, TO JANUARY 7, 1794; MEMBER OF CONGRESS, 1793-1795; FIRST JUDGE OF WESTCHESTER CO., 1806; FOUNDER AND ENDOWER OF LEAKE AND WATTS ORPHAN HOUSE IN THE CITY OF NEW YORK; ONE OF THE FOUNDERS AND AFTERWARDS PRESIDENT OF THE NEW YORK DISPENSARY, 1821-1836, &c., &c.
HIS REMAINS LIE IN HIS ADJACENT FAMILY VAULT IN THIS [TRINITY] CHURCHYARD.
ERECTED IN GRATEFUL REMEMBRANCE BY HIS GRANDSON, ONLY CHILD OF HIS YOUNGEST [CHILD AND] DAUGHTER, MARY JUSTINA WATTS [DE PEYSTER], JOHN WATTS DE PEYSTER.

Gen. de Peyster's idea in erecting this statue was, as stated to the writer, that there might still be in this city, as there had been for many years, a visible memorial of his grandfather. His name has long been connected with the well-known charity, "The Leake and Watts Orphan House," which was a noble and sufficient monument to him; but when that building, with the site, was sold to the trustees of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, the memorial disappeared through the removal of the institution to Yonkers. Therefore his descendant conceived the idea of erecting a statue of imperishable bronze, and placing it in some position in which it might stand for ages, keeping the name and good deeds of an eminent citizen in view of the public.

School represents a still more generous outlay. This school is one of the landmarks of that section of the county, and is a model, both for architectural beauty and in respect to its arrangements and appointments. The inscription above the exquisite marble mantel in the hall of the Training School is as follows:

THIS BUILDING,
ST. PAUL'S TRAINING SCHOOL FOR BOYS, WAS ERRECTED HEHE ON PROSPECT FARM OR HILL, WHICH HAD BEEN IN HIS FAMILY FOR SEVEN GENERATIONS, BY JOHN WATTS DE PEYSTER, AS A MEMORIAL OF HIS FATHER,

MR. O'CONNOR, HUDSON, ARCHITECT.

It is not generally known that the establishment of the Order and institutions of the Brothers of Nazareth within the borders of Dutchess county was entirely due to the generous gift of land by the General, at a time when the thought of location in this county was so far from the mind of the authorities of the Order as even to be deemed at first utterly impracticable, the county being rejected as too remote from New York City.

To Gen. de Peyster, Dutchess county, and the Methodist Episcopal denomination in particular, is indebted for the handsome church-building erected in the village of Madalin.* This gift called forth the following resolutions from the Methodist Conference:

This beautiful edifice the General built as a memorial of his daughters. Upon the outside of the church is a tablet containing the following:

AND

*THE NEW YORK ANNUAL CONFERENCE of the Methodist Episcopal Church, assembled at Tarrytown, N. Y., April 8, 1893, ordered the following minute to be entered upon its Journal:

Whereas, Gen. de Peyster has presented to the Methodist Episcopal Church at Madalin a church edifice, as a tribute to the memory of his daughters, free from debt, beautiful in architectural design and wisely adapted in all its appointments for church work; and,

Whereas, Gen. de Peyster, with a benevolence not prompted by a denominational relation with Methodism, as he is not a member of our Church, has not only presented this well-equipped Christian temple to Methodism, but has also built and paid for, and presented to the Church at Madalin a parsonage; therefore,

Resolved, That this Conference extends to Gen. de Peyster its sincere gratitude for his large and generous benefactions, and assures him of its earnest prayers that he may share in time and in eternity the blessings of the Christian faith which his dedicated gifts will perpetuate on earth, and that the memory of his beloved daughters may always be associated in his and in our memory with the preaching of that Gospel which comforts the sorrowful and pardons the penitent.

Resolved, That the Secretary of this Conference be instructed to prepare two engrossed copies of this action, signed by the presiding Bishop and the Secretary, one to be presented to Gen. de Peyster, and the other to the Quarterly Conference of the Church at Madalin. (Signed)

C. W. MILLARO,
Secretary.

(Signed)
JOHN M. WALDEN,
Presiding Bishop.

Upon a tablet within the church appears the inscription appended:

BY HENRY DUDLEY, ARCH'T., N. Y. AND
THE WORK CARRIED OUT AND COM-PLETED IN ACCORDANCE WITH

THE SUPERINTENDENCE OF

This church has been the object of much admiration as one of the most picturesque country church buildings to be found anywhere. Another notable example of important benefactions in Dutchess county is the General's gift to the Methodist denomination of the large home for friendless girls, known as the "Watts de Peyster Missionary Home", with its buildings and extensive grounds at Madalin. This gift inspired the following acknowledgments.*

Important gifts by the General have also been made in other parts of the country, including many States. To the city of Kearney, Neb., he presented a handsome bronze bust of his distinguished cousin, Maj. Gen. Philip Kearny, the typical captain of the Civil war, in memory of whom that municipality was named. In acknowledgment of this gift, the General received a handsome set of resolutions of thanks from the Mayor and a committee of the Board of Aldermen of the city of Kearney, dated January 27, 1892. The General also donated valuable books to the public library of Kearney. The State of Nebraska was likewise indebted to General de Peyster for a handsome chapel, erected by him at Nebraska City, a gift through the very Rev. Robert W. Oliver, dean

Rev. A. M. Griffin, Madalin, N. Y., Pastor of de Peyster Memorial Methodist Church:

DEAR BRO.—At the District Convection of the W. H. M. Society, of the Kingston District, recently held in the St. James Church, Kingston, N. Y., Mrs. Mary Fish Park read a communication from Mrs. Dr. James M. King, stating that Gen. de Peyster had donated a fine property within the bounds of your charge to the W. H. M. Society, of the New York Conference, to be used as an Italian Home. And, on motion, it resolved by a unanimous raising vote that the thanks of the Convection be tendered General de Peyster for his magnificent gift through the Rev. A. M. Griffin, Pastor at Madalin, N. Y.

We shall esteem it a favor if you will kindly inform the General, of the action of the Convection. Yours Truly, Mrs. O. A. MERCHANT, Recording Secretary. Mrs. E. S. OSBORN, President.

DEAR GENERAL—I take pleasure in presenting this to you, which explains itself. Yours, Etc.,

ARTHUR M. GRIFFIN.

Gen. de Peyster:

DEAR SIR—The ladies of the Committee on Italian Girls Industrial Home, at their monthly meeting, held at the residence of Mrs. King, on Tuesday last, passed a hearty and unanimous vote of thanks to you for your noble and munificent gift to their work, which I was authorized to convey to you by letter.

Trusting that you may be blessed in the gift, and that the Watts de Peyster Home may be the means of lightening the burdens from many lives for years to come, and that our Society may prove wise almoners of your bounty, I am, in behalf of the Committee,

Gratefully Yours,
MARTHA GRIFFIN, Secretary.

of Nebraska, and in memory of the General's dead soldier sons. This building was afterward taken down, and its materials—at all events, its tablets in memory of his sons—was removed to Kearney.

Something of the same kind occurred to a church which the General finished in Altoona, Penn., as a memorial of his youngest daughter, MARIA BEATA, which church, contrary to original understanding, was torn down and rebuilt. Nevertheless, the Memorial Parish School and Parsonage which he erected were allowed to stand unchanged.

Another gift of note by the General will be the handsome library building which is being erected at Lancaster, Penn., a donation to Franklin and Marshall College.* The commemorative character of this noble benefaction will be made known in the following simple and modest tablet, which has been very much admired:

To General de Peyster must likewise be credited the notable gift of the "Annex" to the Leake and Watts Orphan House, of which great charity his grandfather, Hon. John Watts, Jr., was the founder, relinquishing an immense inheritance that it might be devoted to the establishment of this splendid institution. The inscription upon the Annex, built by General de Peyster, is as follows:

General J. Watts de Peyster:

DEAR SIR—I have the honor to inform you that the Board of Trustees at its annual meeting, held on the 17th ult., was officially informed that, during the past year, "General John Watts de Peyster, Litt. D., of Tivoli, Dutchess Co., N. Y., presented to the library of the College nine hundred and twenty volumes (he had previously presented three hundred and twenty volumes), many of which are quite valuable." [In all some seventy boxes of books have been presented.] The corresponding secretary was, therefore, directed to convey to General de Peyster the hearty thanks of the Board for his great kindness; and it was further ordered that this action be spread upon the minutes.

Permit me to say that it affords me pleasure to be the medium of this communication, and to assure you that your generosity is gratefully appreciated by all the friends of the Franklin and Marshall college. Yours very truly,

| Great Seal of the State of New Jersey | STATE OF NEW JERSEY, Executive Department, Trenton, February 9, 1891 GENERAL J. WATTS DE PEYSTER, 59 East 21st St. New York City, N. Y. |
|---|--|

DEAR SIR: It gives me great pleasure to transmit to you to-day the thanks of the legislature of New Jersey for your gift to this State of an equestrian portrait of your kinsman, the gallant General Kearny.

In forwarding to you this certified copy of their action, please let me express my thanks officially for this generous act on your part, and believe me.

Yours very truly,
LEON ABBOTT, Governor.

COMMONWEALTH OF NEW JERSEY.

WHEREAS, Gen. J. Watts de Peyster, of New York City, has presented to this State a large equestrian portrait of the late Major-Gen. Philip Kearny; therefore, Resolved (the House of Assembly concurring), That the thanks of the Legislature of this State are hereby given to Gen. de Peyster for his generous gift of the picture of one of New Jersey's most gallant soldiers of the late Civil war.

Resolved, That his Excellency the Governor be requested to forward a certified copy of this Resolution to Gen. de Peyster.

I hereby certify that the foregoing resolution is a true copy of the original as passed by the Senate, February 2, 1891.

JOHN CARPENTER, JR.
Secretary of Senate.

I hereby certify that the foregoing resolution is a true copy of the original as passed by the House of Assembly, February 3, 1891.

THOMAS F. NOONAN, JR.
Clerk of the House of Assembly.

HIS EXCELLENCY LEON ABBOTT,
Governor State of New Jersey.

DEAR SIR: I desire to acknowledge in fitting manner the receipt of the concurrent Resolutions of the Honorable Legislature of the State of New Jersey in regard to my gift of the equestrian portrait of Maj-Gen. Philip Kearny, my only male cousin on my mother's side, with whom I was brought up in the house of our dear grandfather, Hon. John Watts, and to whom my eldest son and namesake was Aide-de-Camp, and while doing so I desire to emphasize my appreciation of the handsome manner in which you transmitted to me the resolution.

Yours Very Truly,
J. WATTS DE PEYSTER,
Brev: Maj-Gen., S. N. Y.

cation from the government of the State of Pennsylvania requires no comment :

IN THE NAME AND BY AUTHORITY OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA.

PENNSYLVANIA.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF THE COMMONWEALTH, HARRISBURG.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,

In the Senate, March 26th, 1891.

WHEREAS, Brevet Maj.-Gen. J. WATTS DE PEYSTER, of No. 59 East Twenty-first street, New York City, author, soldier and public-spirited citizen, from his private collection of paintings, has presented to the State of Pennsylvania an Equestrian Portrait of one of Pennsylvania's most gallant sons: Maj.-Gen. SAMUEL PETER HEINTZELMAN, who was born in Manheim, Lancaster county, September 30, 1805, and whose service in the Army from his graduation at West Point Military Academy in 1826, until his death, May 1, 1880, is the special pride of his native State: therefore, be it Resolved, By the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That, as evidence of the appreciation of this generous and valued gift, the THANKS of the people of Pennsylvania be, and they are hereby extended to Brevet Maj.-Gen. J. WATTS DE PEYSTER.

Resolved, That the portrait of General HEINTZELMAN be appropriately marked and placed in the State library.

E. W. SMILEY,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.

JOHN W. MORRISON,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Approved the 7th day of April, Anno Domini one thousand eight hundred and ninety-one.

ROBERT E. PATTISON, Governor.

Pennsylvania, ss:

WILLIAM F. HARRITY,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

59 EAST TWENTY-FIRST STREET,
NEW YORK, April 18th, 1891.

His Excellency, Robert E. Pattison, Governor of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania:

SIR:—Accept this effort inadequately to express my appreciation of the exquisite manner in which the vote of thanks for the Equestrian Portrait of Major-General HEINTZELMAN has been transmitted to,

Very respectfully and gratefully,
J. WATTS DE PEYSTER.

The documents subjoined, from Gov. Werts, New Jersey, and the Clerk of the House of Assembly of that State, record another handsome gift to that Commonwealth of two paintings of Gen. then Capt. Kearny's famous charge up to the very gate of Mexico, and a bronze medallion of the General.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, STATE OF NEW JERSEY.

Trenton, June 9, 1894.

GEN. J. WATTS DE PEYSTER, Tivoli, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: It gives me great pleasure to enclose you a properly authenticated copy of the resolution passed by the legislature of the State of New Jersey at its last session in reference to gifts made by you to this State.

Very truly yours,
GEORGE T. WERTS, Governor.

THE STATE OF NEW JERSEY.

WHEREAS, Gen. J. Watts de Peyster, of New York City, has presented to this State two beautiful paintings of the charge made by Gen. Philip Kearny, of New Jersey, in the Mexican war, and a bronze medallion of Brevet Maj.-Gen. Robert McAllister, of the New Jersey Volunteers; therefore,

Resolved (the Senate concurring), That the thanks of the Legislature of this State are hereby given to Gen. de Peyster for his generous gift of pictures of a spirited charge in battle made by New Jersey's most gallant leader, and the bronze relief of one of her truest heroes in the Civil war.

Resolved, That his excellency, the Governor, be requested to forward a certified copy of this resolution to Gen. de Peyster.

I certify that the above is a true copy of a resolution offered in the House of Assembly of New Jersey by Mr. Olcott, of Essex, on April 17, 1894; duly adopted by said Assembly on said day, and returned by message from the Senate, April 18, 1894, as having been duly concurred in by the Senate.

J. HERBERT POTTS,
Clerk of the House of Assembly, Session of 1894.

Similarly, by a resolution adopted in the New York Assembly March 20, 1894, and by the Senate March 31, 1894, "Brevet Maj.-Gen. J. Watts de Peyster, a public-spirited citizen of this State," was tendered "the thanks of the people of the State of New York" for the gift of a bronze bas-relief representing a notable Revolutionary scene at West Point. The text of the resolution is as follows:

ASSEMBLY CHAMBER, STATE OF NEW YORK.

By unanimous consent, Mr. Gray offered for the consideration of the House a resolution in the words following.

WHEREAS, Brevet Major-General J. Watts de Peyster, a public-spirited citizen of this State, has presented to the State a bronze bas-relief representing the "Encampment of the Continental Troops at West Point on the Hudson, during the Revolution;" therefore,

Resolved (if the Senate concur), That, as an evidence of the high appreciation of this generous and valued gift, the thanks of the people of the State of New York be, and they are hereby extended to Brevet Major-General J. Watts de Peyster.

Resolved, That the bronze bas-relief, representing the "Encampment of the Continental Troops at West Point on the Hudson, during the Revolution," presented by Major-General J. Watts de Peyster, be appropriately marked and placed in the Capitol by the trustees.

The Speaker put the question whether the House would agree to said resolution, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Ordered, That the Clerk deliver said resolution to the Senate and request their concurrence therein. I certify that the above is a true copy of the resolution offered in the House of Assembly of New York, by Mr. Gray, of Dutchess, on March 20, 1894, duly adopted by said Assembly, on said day, and returned by message from the Senate, March 31, 1894, as having been duly concurred in by said Senate.

G. W. DUNN.
Clerk of the House of Assembly,
Session of 1894.

Gen. de Peyster has been a very prolific writer, and has published a vast amount in the daily press, weeklies, monthlies and pamphlets and monographs on the two "Wars for Independence" and the "Slaveholders' Rebellion." The aggregate, if collected in book form, would fill many volumes. A partial list of his volumes, monographs, etc., etc., are appended.

With his military information, derived from distinguished soldiers, and a multitude of the best works on War, those with whom he consulted were of the opinion that no one could write a history of the Rebellion better than himself. He was the intimate friend of a number of our most distinguished generals of the highest rank, also of some of our grandest admirals.

Gen. George H. Thomas, "our greatest and our best," talked to him with a confidence which, it is said, he seldom showed. Gen. A. A. Humphreys, it is likely our most scientific major-general, was his most intimate friend. To cite all with whom he was in the closest relations would fill pages: McDowell, Heintzleman, Wright, Rosecrans, Gordon-Granger, Cullum, Vogdes, Butler, Fry, Hancock, Hooker, Warren, and a host of others whose names, after the war, were in everyone's mind and mouth; among the admirals, Farragut, Alden, Nicholson, Baldwin (one of the most lovable and charming of men), Flag, Capt. Percival Drayton, and in Europe the Count of Paris, besides many foreign celebrities.

His works on the war have been constantly and copiously quoted, without giving him the credit to which he is entitled, and often no credit at all for wholesale thefts.

With these opportunities of learning the inner working of operations, his prodigious memory, industry and capability, he has been constantly urged and begged to write and publish, or, at all events, to leave behind him memoranda to enable a future historian to prepare a more authentic story.

On the other hand his most intimate friends have advised him not to reveal facts—precious, indeed, but which might occasion bitter animosities and open wounds which it would be difficult to heal. Perhaps he is the only man living, at all events one of very few, who are aware of several of the "Little Reasons" which occasioned momentous results—preventing successes and causing disasters—timidities or selfishness, jealousies and rivalries such as influenced Buonaparte's marshals, especially in Spain, which were "the beginning of the end" of the Corsican's extraordinary career.

Disgusted at the reception of his articles, which proved that Truth was the last thing desired, the General refused to have anything more to do with writing upon the war of the Rebellion, and turned to other subjects, in which he would not make enemies among those with whom he was brought into daily contact and forced to associate.

In preparing for the different historical works which General de Peyster wrote as they appear in the list of his publications, in each different case he collected a library of authorities. Those on Holland, of which the names alone fill a pamphlet Part I., of twenty-four pages, besides subsequent additions even more numerous. He gave a most valuable collection of works on the Thirty Years' War, and Secession in Switzerland, to the New York Society Library, to fill an alcove to bear the name of his father (who died while president of that institution) and himself. Disgusted at the manner in which this library, to his mind, was conducted he ceased donating; and books intended to complete the sets he had given have been transferred to other societies, particularly to Franklin and Marshall College in Lancaster Penn. He likewise donated a valuable collection of rare old law books which belonged to his grandfather, John Watts, last Royal Recorder of the city of New York, and to his great-grandfather of the same name, who was President of the King's Council prior to the Revolution, to the New York State Library. For this it is doubtful if the donor ever received the slightest acknowledgment from a State always ungrateful to her citizens for generation "native here and to the manner born." But must be remembered no State is so thorough in the possession of aliens to its blood, religious interests and antecedents as New York.

While producing his six Studies upon Ma Stuart, Queen of Scots, and James Hepburn Earl of Bothwell, he gathered a large number of works and portraits all across Europe, even to St. Petersburg. This collection, which may be considered unique, with two marbusts of Washington, one by Greenough and one by Crawford, both originals, and the first most likely without a duplicate; also a beautiful bust of his grandfather, John Watts, and of his father, Frederic de Peyster; likewise a miniature fac-simile of George A. Bissell's statue of Lincoln, of which the original was erected in Edinburgh, Scotland, and paid for by subscribers in this country, of whom the General was one; and a medallion in bronze of his cousin, Maj.-Gen. Phil Kearny, were presented to Columbia College (now University).

One of the most remarkable publications of General de Peyster was a series of articles on the Medical Organization of the Roman and other Ancient Armies, published in the Army and Navy Journal in 1864.

The famous Professor Charles Anthon, of Columbia College, who could not be charged with the crime of being ever complimentary to pretenders, who had styled General de Peyster "the Tyrtæus of the War" on account of some stirring pieces of military poetry he had written, when applied to to assist further investigation on this interesting subject, replied finally that he could not offer the slightest assistance, since the General had exhausted all available authorities.*

General de Peyster has also won reputation as a poet. A number of his published poems are characterized by a deeply poetical spirit, and elicited the admiration and praise of the famous author of "Thanatopsis," William Cullen Bryant, who was also one of the ablest of critics. Bryant declared that the General's poems "had the true ring." His poem on "Orisany" was translated into German, while he himself made a translation of Korner's famous "My Fatherland," which is remarkable for its vigor and fidelity to the original, both in respect to the warrior rythm and inspiring language of the notable patriot appeal. This stirring battle hymn was one of those trumpet-blasts of patriotic genius which aroused Prussia to arms, and led to the subsequent overthrow of Napoleon.

On a certain occasion in 1864, General de Peyster paid a visit to the office of the chief editor of the New York Times, who seemed lost in thought. This gentleman had previously observed that he considered his visitor was one of the very few (about a dozen) original thinkers he had ever met. "What are you thinking about so intensely?" "That the ancients, especially the Romans, should have had no Medical Administration connected with their armies." "Nonsense; they had. Who told you they did not have?" "Professor —." Now Professor — was considered a judge of last appeal on all questions upon which he elected to sit in judgment. "The Professor manifests his ignorance in talking so. What reason does he give for such an opinion?" "He says Cæsar makes no mention of them [Medical Men or Medical and Surgical Corps] in his Commentaries." "A very poor argument. Does Cæsar mention camp-diseases among his troops? Do you suppose that his camps were any more free from disease than any camps have ever been? To prove that the great authority, Professor —, does not know what he is talking about I will demonstrate the contrary to be the fact."

The result was Gen. de Peyster wrote a series of articles for the Army and Navy Journal, in which he showed that the ancients had far better medical arrangements than mediæval troops possessed, and far better than most of the European armies enjoyed down to within one hundred and fifty years.

He was proceeding to produce additional confirmatory testimony when the editor refused to print any more, remarking, "Are you not satisfied? You have got your opponent down, and I will not let you kick him or grind his face in the dust."

So the balance of the matter remains in manuscript to this day.

A writer has characterized General de Peyster as "an author of extraordinary fertility and unlimited scope, the omnivorous character of whose studies is displayed on every page of his

NEW YORK, October 5, 1864.

DEAR SIR:—The information which you seek is scattered over many ancient writers. I think, however, that one of them, Vegetius, will answer your purpose. His work is entitled "Rei Militaris Institutio," and may be found, I suppose, in the Astor Library. If not, my copy is at your service. You will find in one part an account of the duties of the Prefect of the camp, among which is the superintendence of the camp "Medici," physicians who were probably 11 freedmen. This alone would prove the existence of a Medical Department in the Roman armies. In another part (Book III., chap. 2), there is a particular chapter entitled "Quemadmodum Sanctas Gubernature Exercitus," embracing plans of encampment, water, seasons medicinal exercise, etc.

You will find some good information also in Le Clerc's "Histoire de la Medicine" and "Sprangell's Histoire de Medicine par Jourdan." There is also a "Sketch of the History of Medicine," founded originally by Bockhock, of which I have a copy. If I can be of any further aid to you, you may command my services without hesitation.

Very truly yours,

CHARLES ANTHON.

DEAR SIR:—Many thanks for the two articles from the Army and Navy Journal, which I herewith return. They do you a very great deal of credit. My reference to Vegetius was like carrying coals to Newcastle. The poetry is capital, and I have shown it to several of my friends—one of whom wants to rechristen you "The American Tyrtæus." I handed the two photographs to my sister, who has placed them, as great prizes, in her album.

writings; an author whose works comprise scores of volumes, with hundreds of smaller works, treatises and pamphlets, of which the entire amount would be doubled by the addition of innumerable articles and series of papers published in magazines and newspapers, and never yet collected together; the author of poetry and drama of an unusual excellence, and an endless miscellany on almost every conceivable subject, and who yet, in his own peculiarly pre-eminent field as a military biographer, military historian and military critic, has no peer in America."* Some indication (though merely that) of his miscellaneous authorship has been given in the preceding pages. But his special place as a military critic—and it is not an exaggeration to say that he "has no peer in America" in this capacity—can be readily shown by the citation of a few characterizations of him by persons competent to pronounce judgment.

The late Lieut. (Brevet Capt.) Frederick Whittaker, author of "Volunteer Cavalry," etc., after asserting that "until the close of the [Civil] war" we Americans "had been accustomed to look to Europe, and especially to France, for our military historians," adds, emphatically: "But we are glad to say that we have changed all that, and now possess in America a military historian of the first rank." It is, of course, General de Peyster whom he thus eulogizes, and whom he describes as the "author of the best military writing our country has yet produced." It was of de Peyster also that Gen. Barnard, brother of the former President of Columbia College, exclaimed: "His judgment of military matters is almost infallible!" It was, again, de Peyster's exhaustive methods of research and indefatigable energy in collecting authorities to which Gen. Adam Badeau bore witness when he wrote to a friend: "He has accumulated a wonderful amount of original matter, some of which is absolutely invaluable, and I expect to avail myself of it." It was de Peyster, likewise, of whom Gen. W. T. Sherman, in conjunction with Maj.-Gen. H. W. Slocum, wrote: "He is thoroughly conversant with all the military operations of both armies during the late war. He has written considerably on this subject, and his writings have attracted much attention." General de Peyster, also it was, whom Brev. Brig.-Gen. William P. Wainwright thus characterized: "His keen eye for topography, his long and still unceasing military education, his uncommon memory, his powers of description, and his opportunities for using his abilities, constitute him the only, as well as the first, military critic in America." When Maj.-Gen. A. Pleasanton penned the words: "His great acquaintance with military matters, his long and faithful research into the military histories of modern nations, his correct comprehension of our own late war, and his intimacy with many of our leading generals and statesmen during the period of its continuance, with his tried and devoted loyalty and patriotism,"—it was of General de Peyster of whom he wrote, while Gen. Grant endorsed this characterization in writing. Of de Peyster, also, Maj.-Gen. A. A. Humphreys wrote:

WASHINGTON, MAY 30, 1872.

MY DEAR GENERAL:—I fully appreciate your labors, which I am conscious have brought into clear relief what was before obscure and ill-defined. Let me for a moment suppose I am writing to a friend, not yourself, for you are one of the few persons to whom one may write, as it were, impersonally, and that implies a very high tribute to your sense of the just.

Your industry in collecting facts upon any subject you treat of, is literally untiring. In a long experience among the working men of the country, I have rarely found your equal, never, I think, your superior; and I may pay the same tribute to your conscientious labor, in the task of evolving the truth from the mass of matter collected, much of it contradictory and apparently irreconcilable with any known truths. Possessing a clear appreciation of the great fundamental principles which should govern military operations and battles, you are quick to perceive adherence to, or departure from, them, and as the extended study of the great military writers and historians has imbued your mind with just military views, so has it richly stored your memory with a redundant supply of apt illustrative examples for every important event or incident of our war.

To all these qualifications as a military critic, you have added a ready, rapid, courageous pen, and a power of application, that physical ailments, growing out of a delicate physique, have not impaired, though they have sorely tried it * * * Sincerely Yours,

WASHINGTON, Sunday, September 29, 1872.

MY DEAR GENERAL (DE PEYSTER):—I returned to Washington, * * * found a letter for me from Gen. Badeau, * * * intending to send you extracts from Badeau's letter, in which he speaks so highly (and justly) of your labors and papers. * * * He says, "you have accumulated a wonderful amount of original matter some of which is absolutely invaluable, and I expect to avail myself of it, etc., etc." You would not think I had lost interest in the subject of your labors, had you heard me talk to some Philadelphians about the pursuit of Lee. I learnt only this summer of the effect of Stanton's telegram on the 6th or 7th of April, giving the whole cred of overtaking and attacking Lee, on the 6th of April, to Sheridan. "There," they said in Philadelphia, (I am told,) "the generals of the Army of the Potomac are lagging; it required Sheridan and Grant to overtake and beat Lee." What an outrage on Wright and myself the telegram was! We laggards! The impression thus made on the public in this movement of success, has never been effaced; it remains to this day. To you, I am indebted, my dear general, for the first presentation of the subject to the public, that will tend to efface this impression.

Sincerely Yours,

Still more significant was the testimony of Sir Edward Cust, General, and author of the nine volumes of "Annals of the Wars" and six volumes of "Lives of the Warriors," in dedicating his second series to Gen. de Peyster, whom he only knew through the latter's writings. From this dedication of twenty-eight pages the following sentences have been extracted: "I am desirous of marking my deep obligations to you by requesting permission to dedicate my concluding volume to you and to your military brethren. We appear to be men of much the same mind, and of common sympathies, desirous alike of employing our common language for a common object—that of enlightening our comrades of a common profession with the necessity of applying the precepts of military history to the useful comprehension of their calling. Both of us agreeing that the best instruction for all officers is to be acquired from the deeds of the old masters in the art of war * * * The United States were on the eve of a melancholy crisis of international conflict, when you naturally wished and you very reasonably desired to show, by the introduction of a better system of war, how to stay the waste of blood among your countrymen in a strife which made every rother on either side a soldier. * * * I, on the other hand, had fallen 'upon the serene and yellow leaf' * * * and * * * had * * * as an old stager, become disturbed by the intrusion of a new school at our military colleges, pre-eminently among the instructors of military history, who were seeking to introduce a theory of war, against which I sought to recommend a knowledge of the past, or, as you put it, 'practical strategy.' * * * I do not claim the merit of originality. * * * My works were written by me for the use of youths who have already entered the service of arms, and whose career has commenced, but whose profession has yet to be learned. * * * You address the higher ranks of the army, and appear to seek to philosophize the art of war by showing it to be capable, under its most scientific phases, of being less lavish of human blood. * * * To both our grievances the remedy is the same—practical strategy. I readily accept from you this expression. It comprises all that be said or written upon skill in war, and while I agree with you that this is best evinced by sparing the lives of its instruments as much as possible, I hold that this is in fact the whole art of war."

Reference has already been made to a remark of Gen. Adam Badeau, in a letter to a friend, in view of the help he expected to receive from Gen. de Peyster's resources in connection with an important military work on which he was engaged at the time. "He," (de Peyster), wrote Badeau, "has accumulated a wonderful amount of original matter, some of which is absolutely invaluable, and I expect to avail myself of it." Not a few have been under the deepest obligation to Gen. de Peyster in this way, although he has not always received the credit which is, one would think, the very least which a service of this character deserves. The most astonishing case of this kind is to be credited to the late Comte de Paris, who, in spite of the greatest obligation to General de Peyster, made not the slightest acknowledgment in his work on our Civil War. When the Count was preparing the volume of his history, embracing the battle of Gettysburg, he enlisted the assistance of General de Peyster, who himself, or through his friend, Major-General A. A. Humphreys, U. S. A., must have furnished the Count information, including statistics and opinions founded on thorough examination, equivalent to hundreds of pages of paper. The Count acknowledged the correctness of his correspondents' judgment, and his American editor or translator, after applying to the General for the translation of a passage which no one else could explain, wrote that he recognized the influence of the General throughout the Gettysburg pages.

Although the Count remained in the most intimate correspondence with the General—a correspondence which has been preserved—writing continually from whatever spots the General's letters reached him, even from the Escorial in Spain, he did not acknowledge in his introduction to the Gettysburg volume his indebtedness to his American correspondent; most likely because General de Peyster was not a regular army officer; consequently, the General refused to meet him when he came to the United States, although he admitted to a relative how much assistance the General had afforded.

So astounding was the Comte's conduct in this matter that mutual friends in America, cognizant of all the facts, did not scruple to express in writing their disapproval of what he had done. Thus in a letter to General de Peyster, dated at Philadelphia, June 29, 1893, soon after the appearance of the Comte's book, his American editor wrote: "In place of writing letters he (Comte de Paris) had better have done you justice. If ever I have a chance I shall say so to him in pretty strong language."

The same writer, in a letter to General de Peyster dated at Philadelphia June 23, 1883, says:

It was the Comte's duty, after having used your pamphlets and reviews to the extent that he did, and as shown by the text, to have at least expressed his obligation. And the biographical portion appears in some cases to be a reprint. That is rather strong, but I mean what I write.

It may have been the unusual method of appropriating General de Peyster's materials, alluded to here, which made the Comte so reluctant to give him credit, very prudently deeming it unwise to advertise the source of matter thus laid hold of. The editor's suggestion that the Comte should have "done justice" in "place of writing letters," is in allusion to the Comte's prolonged correspondence with de Peyster. Indeed, the Comte seemed to overlook the fact that in this correspondence he had left behind him the most indubitable proofs of the obligation which he was so loth to confess. Such "royal" injustice is of curious interest, and some passages from the Comte's letters to General de Peyster will be given here. Lest the charge of a deviation from exact literalness might be made, the precise phraseology and spelling of the Comte will also be preserved. His command of English was wonderfully direct for a foreigner, but not absolutely perfect. In a long letter to the General, dated November 23, 1877, he wrote:

I must apologize for having been so long before returning to you my best thanks for the valuable information concerning the battle of Gettysburg which you were kind enough to furnish me with, both in your letter and in the notes which you forwarded to me as a kind of appendix to your pamphlet on that battle. I was so busy upon all these materials that I had no time to write. I have now to acknowledge the receipt of your letters dated the 21st of September, the 6th, 15th and 22nd of October, and the first of November. I really feel quite ashamed to have left unanswered until now so many and such interesting letters, but if I did not write to you I worked hard on these letters as well as on the notes from your "Decisive Con-licts," which go as far as No. 68. I dare say I know the whole set by heart. It is full of varied information of views which throw a great and often a new light upon the events and of incidents which the historian carefully picks up to relieve the barrenness of his narrative. * * * Such are the main points upon which I think it necessary to tell you my opinion in answer to the remarks contained in your letters. Whenever I have only to say amen and fully agree with you, I do not insist. I shall avail myself of your kind permission to put you frankly any question which my future readings may suggest.

He writes to the same, under date December 18, 1877:

Receive my best thanks for your two letters of November 21st and December 1st, as well as for the notes which you did send me under the same seal as a continuation of those previously received by me. * * * I knew of the existence of the maps which you mention of Adams county, Pa., and Frederick county, Md., but I have not yet been able to get a copy of these through the American agency of Stevens in London. Where could I apply to get these?

On January 29, 1878, he writes again (in a letter of very great length):

I avail myself of the opportunity to acknowledge the receipt of your letters of December 19th, 29th, 30th and of January 1st, as well as of Gen. Whipple's report with your postscript. You seem to think that some of your letters addressed to me last summer have been lost. It could be indeed very unfortunate and I hope it is not the case; but in order to ascertain the fact, as I keep all those letters together, so as to be able to consult them as often as I want, as soon as I return home I shall send you a list of every letter received from you last year. You may be assured that I shall carefully weight the information which you gave me concerning the numbers engaged at Gettysburg. * * * I quite agree with you and my excellent friend, Gen. Humphreys, when you assert that the Army of the Potomac did not number as many men on the field of battle as would appear from the field returns prepared some days before. * * * You see by the length of my answer how fully I value your letters and my gratitude for the trouble you take in giving me every information within your reach.

On March 6, 1878, he wrote:

I thank you very much for your letter of January 29th and February 16th, the last received yesterday, with the photographs which you were kind enough to send me. * * * I shall gratefully accept any papers concerning reliable and unpublished information on the Civil war posterior to July 4, 1863. What you tell me of Sickles' coolness when wounded is very striking. * * * The plan and pamphlet on Gettysburg are also received.

Again (March 23, 1878):

I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated February 23rd and March 1st and 4th, and thank you most heartily for the varied information which they contain. * * * I received Ditterline's pamphlet, for which I thank you very much. * * * If there is any thing which seems to me still doubtful I shall not fail to apply to you.

Again, writing of Chancellorsville and Gettysburg, he says (April 19, 1878):

I had not the letters for the 20th of June. I thank you very much for the whole. * * * Thanks for the very full explanation given first by Gen. Humphreys and then by yourself. * * * I thank you for Fitz Lee's answer to Longstreet, which you took the trouble to send

ne. * * * I am always grateful for the sincere expression of your opinion on things and men. * * * as for your judgments on men you may rely on my discretion.

The long letter of May 12, 1878, contained the following acknowledgments:

I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated April 10th and 20th, as well as of the copy of Gen. Humphreys' letter, his endorsement of a paper from the War Office, your Inaugural Address, as well as the number of the Historical Magazine containing Maj. Kearny's letter. I thought I had already mentioned to you the letter, as I read these letters with great pleasure. I beg you to believe, my dear General, that I am always ready to revise the conclusions to which I may have come whenever I get hold of documents or facts which throw a new light upon the questions which I have already studied. * * * I quite agree with you that Meade did not actually fight the whole of his men present for duty. I do not think that he can be blamed for it. In the afternoon of July 2nd he collected on the threatened flank more troops than he could have fought with on that ground. On the 3rd, Lee's attack was so quickly and decisively repulsed that Meade could not before 4 P. M. have engaged more men than he did. A great general would no doubt have seized at once the opportunity of Meade's repulse and taken the offensive. A direct attack in the front of Lee, covered as it was by the artillery, would in all probability have failed; but the counterpart of Longstreet's move the day before ought to have been attempted. Meade ought to have thrown forward from the Round Tops the 5th and the 6th Corps at once, so as to strike the Emmetsburg road south of Peach Orchard. He would no doubt have achieved a great success. Still, there is some excuse for a commander so new for not having adopted this bold design. But where I entirely agree with you, my dear General, it is in the judgment you give on Meade's conduct from the 4th to the 14th of July. Even if Lee's army had been as strong as he believed, his conduct would be below criticism; but if he was not aware of its weakness it is his fault, he should have acted on it. He positively acted during these ten days as if he had no other object than to facilitate Lee's retreat into Virginia. I have come to that conclusion by the careful study of Meade's dispatches; but as these papers were given to me, most kindly by his own son, Col. Meade, I beg you to keep that opinion quite for yourself; it will be better to utter it when I publish my account. My deliberate opinion is that Meade, under the impression of the Confederate repulse at Gettysburg, had made up his mind never to attack, and to let Lee have his own ways, rather than to take the offensive on the field of battle.

On May 22, 1878, he wrote:

I hasten to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated May 5th, and to assure you that I received some time ago the Inaugural address mentioned in that letter. I read that address with great profit and pleasure. * * * What you say about Crawford is very striking. It is doubtless that his forward move was made late in the evening. * * * Whenever there is something which seems doubtful to me, I shall take the liberty of asking your advice.

On June 24, 1878, he says:

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letters dated 20th of May and June 3rd, as well as the pamphlets mentioned in these letters. * * * The limits which you give me concerning the real causes of the failure of Meade's "campaign of manœuvres," are very interesting, and that failure cannot be understood otherwise than by the great jealousy between his subordinates.

Under date of August 18, 1878, he writes:

Various occupations have prevented me from acknowledging sooner the receipt of your interesting letters, dated June 20th and July 4th and 8th. * * * I quite agree in your judgment upon Rosecrans. He was not a brilliant, perhaps, but certainly a very able leader. He had the qualities most important in an army of volunteers, firmness of purpose and that obstinacy which springs from an indomitable will. Very few generals who have stood as he did at Murfreesboro, very few, indeed, (that) would not have given up the game and thrown victory into their opponent's arms. He snatched victory by his stubbornness. * * * Any new information concerning Chickamauga would at present be very useful to me. * * * I received and read with interest the papers you did send me concerning the American War of Independence. Receive my best thanks for that communication. Your views on the present situation and the prospects of the socialists in America are very striking and valuable.

On September 21, 1878, the Count wrote:

I have to thank you for your letters, dated August 21st and 31st, as well as for the number of the Atlantic Monthly, containing an article by General Lippitt on Pope's campaign in Virginia. * * * My subject now is Chickamauga and Missionary Ridge. I have not a great deal of information on that subject.

October 13, 1878, he writes:

I have to acknowledge the receipt of your three letters, dated September 15th and 24th, containing the manuscript paper on the campaign of Chickamauga, and the newspaper articles on the yellow fever and the Petersburg crater. I beg you to receive my best thanks as well for the pamphlets mentioned in the first letter, and duly received shortly afterwards. I have found a special interest in the particulars which you give me of your talk with Gen. Humphreys about the operation of Grant in May, 1864, and his supposed plan of turning the left of Lee.

Again he says, October 20, 1878:

I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letters of September 28th and of October 2d, 6th and 7th. I thank you very much for the trouble you take in supplying me with whatever kind of information you think may be useful to me, and still more in giving me your own views on the military questions which that information may raise. The papers of Col. Crane, which I duly received, will no doubt be of great value to me. I already advised you of the receipt of the Legend of the Army of the Cumberland. The two other papers, viz., Col. Coburn's report of the fight at Thompson's Station, and the extracts of the Life of Forrest concerning the same fight, reached me at the same time. I have only rapidly perused the documents, but I have seen enough to appreciate their importance. The promised statement of Col. Crane of his treatment as a prisoner will be very interesting. * * * Thank you for the information you give me concerning Col. Goddard.

On November 9, 1878, he writes:

I punctually received your two letters, dated October 9th and 23rd, as well as the book manuscript you mention, viz., the Legend of the Army of the Cumberland, and the papers relating to the fight at Thompson's Station, including the statement of Col. Baxter Crane's life after his capture with Coburn's command. These documents are very useful for the study I am now engaged in. I thank you once more for the valuable assistance which you give me in my arduous task, and I fully appreciate the pains which you take to furnish me with the unpublished documents. As for reading bad handwriting I can manage to do it, but I hate to work on manuscripts hard to decipher, and therefore am very grateful to your copyist for his clear hand. * * * I thank you for the notice concerning Rosecrans.

Again (December 3, 1878):

Col. Crane's statement of the battle of Thompson's Hill is so plain, so natural, and describes so well what one feels and sees in his first fight, that it carries conviction into the reader's mind. It has been of great use to me, as well as Colburn's reports. The narrative of his prison life is of the same character. I keep it for the future, as I intend to discuss the whole question of the treatment of the prisoners on both sides quite to the end of my work. I received the pamphlet on that subject mentioned in your letter of the 4th. In that of the 6th you mention the balance of the Legend of the Army of the Cumberland, and the copy of the official notice of the commencement and termination of the Slaveholders' Rebellion as being dispatched at the same time; these papers have reached me safely. I shall look for Gen. T. Oliver's letter on the supercedure of Rosecrans by Gen. Thomas in the first package sent by you through Humphreys. At the time I received it I picked out only what was for my immediate use, and the remainder was put aside for future examination. * * * Van Horne's book is very useful to me. * * * In answer to your letter of the 11th I shall first thank you for having found out the maps which you had mentioned to me, and could best procure, but I am really sorry and ashamed to see what amount of trouble it gave you.

His acknowledgment December 21, 1878, is as follows:

Receive my best thanks for your three letters, dated November 19th and 23d, and December 5th, which have reached me, as well as the papers mentioned in these letters. I thank you especially for the copy of Gen. Paine's memorandum or private diary. * * * I thank you for the very remarkable articles which you did send me concerning the battle of Monmouth in 1778, and which I read with the greatest pleasure and interest. The report of Gen. Carr, a manuscript, reached me at the same time as your last letter. I have no doubt that will prove very useful to me. As you say, sometimes an incidental remark made without premeditation by an eyewitness may give the long-sought-for solution of some of the most difficult problems of history. I quite agree with you about Warren in regard to his action at Mine Run.

Again (January 1, 1879):

I received your slips concerning the death of Reno. * * * I thank you for sending me the part of the Legend of the Army of the Cumberland, which explains the strange blank in Van Horne's returns.

On January 17, 1879, he writes:

I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letters, dated December 21st, 27th and 31st, the two last named ones adorned with the most picturesque engravings. * * * What you say in your letter of the 21st concerning the place where the Federal line was broken at Gettysburg, viz., near the Peach Orchard, about Birney's right, is in accordance with all the best accounts of the battle. * * * I received the installment of Paine's diary mentioned in your letter of the 27th. It will be very useful to me, especially on account of its accuracy about the dates. * * * I thank you very much for having at last furnished me with the half page which Dr. Van Horne's printer had left in blank.

Again (February 10, 1879):

I received a few days ago a letter from Gen. Humphreys informing me that according to your wish he had sent me a set of maps completed by Gen. Warren, of the country of the Rapidan and Centreville. * * * I thank you very much for mentioning the pamphlet of Col. Brooke Rawle on the operations of the United States cavalry on the right flank at Gettysburg. * * * As you say, the maps are very valuable. * * * I received to-day the copy of the narrative of the part taken by the 11th N. J. in the Mine Run campaign, by Col. McAllister, and I shall certainly make use of it when I review my account already written of that campaign.

On March 30, 1879, he wrote:

I avail myself of the said leisure I can find between two visits to the sick room, to answer your letters as well as I can. * * * Nevertheless, I can assure you that I am most grateful for all the information given in your letters, as well as for the documents which you take the trouble to furnish me with. All the papers mentioned in your letters as having been sent to me separately have reached me safely. I have in hand the regimental report of the 11th New Jersey, and the narrative of events from November 26th to December 3, 1863, which will be very useful for the correction of my narrative of the Mine Run campaign, as well as the "preacher," as you call it, and I quite agree with you in your judgment on Gen. McAllister. Your conversation with Gen. Palmer, as reported in your letter, is interesting. * * * Your picture of the relations between Meade and Webb is very striking, and I shall keep it in mind. I knew personally very little of Meade, while Webb was a friend, and still is, and I had the greatest respect for his military character. I received also all the papers mentioned in your letter of the 5th of February, viz., the manuscript copied in two different inks, which is very good concerning the fall of 1863 in Virginia, and your account of Gen. John Hartranft. I thank you for both, as well as for the picture you make of Hartranft in that letter. The balance of Gen. McAllister's diary which, as you say, will merely be useful to me by its great accuracy, reached me at the same time as your letter, begun on the 8th and closed on the 14th of February. It gives very carefully the state of the weather, which is an important element of military operations very often overlooked in the best narratives. * * * The particulars given in your letters of February 24th and 26th about Thomas at the battle of Chickamauga are very interesting. I received the manuscript of Van Horne's chapter on Chattanooga from his Life of Thomas. It will no doubt prove very valuable, but I cannot use it before I have begun myself the account of that campaign, which implies that I should have ended with Chickamauga. Please therefore tell me whether you wish it to be returned, or whether I may keep it for some time. * * * I thank you very much for remarks on Van Horne's Chattanooga, which will be very useful as soon as I reach that period of the campaign. * * * You are quite right when you say that good and clear maps are sadly wanted for the easy intelligence of Van Horne's Army of the Cumberland. His small map of the battle of Chickamauga is perfectly wretched, and unfortunately I know of no better one.

It would require a volume to record the notable literary and critical achievements, the remarkable forecasts of political and military events, the practical suggestions which have been adopted and found to be of great public utility, and the solution of difficult problems in medical and general science through intuition, close reasoning and the application of extensive reading, of which General de Peyster has been the author. A few examples, which readily occur to mind, will be noted miscellaneously, with no attempt to classify them.

Through his wide reading, giving him a knowledge of a similar phenomenon following ancient eruptions of volcanoes, he was one of the first to give an account of the pink sunsets which occurred for several years after the famous eruption of the Javanese Krakatoa, in August, 1883. In the "Bulletin of the American Geographical Society" [Vol. XXI, No. 1, March 31, 1889, p. 117, note] he is given credit for calling the attention of geographers to a notable case of the kind. "Gen. J. Watts de Peyster," says the writer, "has found * * * Berthelot's account of the strange skies seen after the eruption of Skaptar Jökull in 1783."

General de Peyster is the author of a remarkable discussion of the question, "Did Our Blessed Saviour Speak Greek?" This paper enjoyed the distinction of being read before the Society of Literature, Arts and Science of London, England.

For a number of years he was vice-president of the Saratoga Battlefield Monument, in connection with which he did effective work. He resigned when he found his efforts were unavailing to restrain what he considered waste and innocent misapplication of the funds. He donated an historical cannon to the monument.

In addition to his many other services, and proffer of services during the Civil war, it should be noted that the General offered his extensive new buildings near the corner of Broadway and Thirty-sixth street, free of charge, to the city of New York, to the Federal Government, as quarters for recruits in 1861.

Again, General de Peyster was one of the first to recognize the infectious or contagious nature of consumption. His notable gifts of hospitals for the care of consumptives has been already mentioned.

The General defended John Brown, in his assaults on slavery, on the principle that, unjustifiable as he might be in his method of warfare upon slavery, he was surpassed in this respect by the slave-holders in their attacks upon freedom in the North. The General was the first to suggest the employment of negroes as soldiers in the Civil war, and was reviled by his Democratic neighbors on account of his advocacy of views so radical. At the close of the war, however, he protested against the indiscriminate conferring of the electoral franchise upon the negroes of the South. It was not alone the general condition of illiteracy which influenced his judgment, but a clear foresight of the condition of things (which he prophesied) which resulted; that the proposed measure must inevitably defeat the political end for which it was intended, and only give the South increased representation while leaving the power in the hands of the whites as securely as ever, and strengthening their influence materially in national politics.

General de Peyster had a number of unique experiences during his travels in Europe as military agent of the State of New York. He saved the Italian soldier, Siro Pesci, a follower of Mazzini, from condemnation to the salt mines at Sardinia, from which few ever return alive, after long terms of service. He secured passports for the Italian as his servant, and carried him into France (and subsequently into Switzerland), to the chagrin of the Gendarmes, who had an inkling of what was being done, but could not go behind the passports.

When we consider General de Peyster's many works of military criticism on nearly all the famous wars of Europe, together with his contemporaneous interpretation of the European wars in progress during his own lifetime, it is remarkable that he wrote so little on the Crimean war of 1854-5. But this explained by the fact that at the time he was immersed in his historical studies of the Thirty Years' War, resulting in his various works on this theme, and notably his remarkable "Life of Torstenson." But very few men, historians or military critics, have mastered the facts as to this prolonged and general European war, as General de Peyster mastered them. His astonishing grasp of the topography of Europe, and of the military situation of the European States, was demonstrated in connection with the wars of this century in Europe, subsequent to that of the Crimea, he being able to foretell the course of events and the issues of campaigns with an accuracy which astounded the best military critics. With the outbreak of the Franco-Austrian war these remarkable prophecies began, in his contemporaneous contributions to the New York Express, in which he followed and anticipated the military movements with analysis and forecast. It chanced that in 1834 he had witnessed just such a flood in Lombardy as that of 1859, which hindered and thwarted the combatants, and particularly the Austrians. Again, in the case of the Austro-Prussian war of 1866, he was completely at home, being well-nigh as familiar with the scene of the operations as with his own farm. He foretold the results of this struggle, and put his finger upon the decisive locality. The same thing was true of the Franco-Prussian war of 1870-1. He prophesied the Prussian movement upon Sedan, and its results, in such detail, it was almost an exact prophecy of the genesis and exodus or result. The contribution of his critical pen toward the success of the Federal cause in our own Civil war is little understood. One can only say that it would be almost impossible to overestimate his services.

It would, indeed, be a "work of supererogation" to add anything to such estimates of General de Peyster's remarkable abilities and phenomenal labors as those which have been quoted, and it certainly will not be attempted here. One might say in passing, however, that if it be true that "a prophet is not without honor save in his own country," in this case, honor and recognition abroad, at least, there assuredly is. Perhaps the best idea of the honors which have been won by the General can be conveyed by subjoining a (partial) list of his many degrees, and memberships. He would be entitled to write after his name several formidable titles.

The reader will find subjoined a partial list of the published works of General de Peyster. It is by no means a complete list, for time and circumstances prevented a perfect presentation, since many of his most interesting articles on subjects of the greatest moment and widest range are scattered in magazines and newspapers. Were these collected and republished (which their merit and interest assuredly justifies), they would make many additional volumes. But, although incomplete, the following list will suffice to give some idea of the astonishing versatility of the General's authorship. The immense range of reading, of which these works show themselves to be the fruit, is also evidenced on every page of the thousands of books to be found in the General's large library, as well as in connection with the libraries given away. There probably has never been a private library of such size brought together, nor 10,000 to 15,000 volumes given away, which through marks and marginal notes in the available space on nearly every page afford such evidence of close, thorough and critical reading. These notes are so characteristic of the General's entire library that they enhance the value of these volumes for a student to a large degree which none but the student, capable of availing himself of their help, could understand or appreciate. If books are a blessing there is also peril connected with their use; but in the marginal notes of these volumes (the rich fruit of the General's enormous research, astonishing memory and critical judgment) the student finds that commentary, or citation of either corroborative or adverse evidence elsewhere, which only the painstaking investigation of innumerable authorities could supply—and some of them so rare that the chances are against the ordinary student's having the knowledge of their existence, much less suspecting that they contain anything bearing upon the subject.

History of the Third Corps, Army of the Potomac, 1861-65. This title, though not technically, is virtually correct, for in a series of elaborate articles in dailies, weeklies, monthlies, monographs, addresses, &c., everything relating to this Corps, even to smallest details, from 1861 to 1865, was prepared with care and put in print. These articles appeared in the Citizen, and the Citizen and Round Table; in Foley's Volunteer, and Soldiers' and Sailors' Half-Dime Tales of the late Rebellion; in Mayne Reid's magazine Onward; in Chaplain Bourne's Soldiers' Friend; in "La Royale or Grand Hunt [or the last campaign] of the Army of the Potomac, from Petersburg to Appomattox Court House, April 2-9, 1865," illustrated with engraved likenesses of several of the prominent Generals belonging to the corps, and careful maps and plans; in the life of Major-General Philip Kearny; in the "Third Corps at Gettysburg; General Sickles vindicated" Vol. I., Nos. xi., xii, xii. The Volunteer; in a Speech delivered before the Third Army Corps Union, 5th May, 1875, profusely illustrated with portraits of Generals who commanded or belonged to that organization, &c. These arranged and condensed would constitute a work of five or six volumes 8vo., such as those prepared by Prof. John W. Draper, entitled the "Civil War in America," but were never given as bound volumes to the public, because the expense was so great that the author, who merely writes for credit and amusement, was unwilling to assume the larger outlay, in addition to what he had already expended on the purchase of authorities, clerk-hire, printing, &c., &c.

A complete list, comprising almost as many more titles, not included in the foregoing presentation, was drawn up by the writer, but mislaid, and was omitted for want of time and space.

The General's latest series of works were a succession of monographs on the Wars of Buonaparte. One, a translation of the records of Colonel Pion des Loches in 1812, then belonging to the Artillery of the Imperial Guard, which ran through five numbers of The Golden Magazine (January, February, March, April and May, 1895); with copious notes and a long commentary upon the whole campaign and upon Buonaparte as a commander by the General himself.

5. Authorities treating of the last campaigns of Buonaparte—1812-13-14-15; being critical reviews of numerous authorities on the Buonaparte wars, especially of 1814 and 1815. (1894-5).

8. Napoleone di Buonaparte. Two series; a sequel to No. 7, which the noted sportsman, writer, lawyer and railroad man, Charles E. Whitehead, wrote, "read like volleys of musketry," just equivalent in force of expression to Adj.-Gen. Pruy'n's letter, "the courage to divide a hornet's nest."

FRANK ALLABEN.

JOHAN P. RIDER was born in Rhinebeck, Dutchess county, N. Y., January 28, 1835.

His father, Albert A. Rider, was born in Rhinebeck in 1807, and his mother, Caroline (Jennings), was born in the same town in 1808. His paternal grandparents were Philip Rider, born at Dartmouth, Mass., in 1781, and his wife, Catherine (Van Fredenburgh), born at Rhinebeck, N. Y., in 1786. His maternal grandparents were John Jennings, born in 1773, at Windham, Conn., and Aurelia (Bard), his wife, born in 1778, at Sharon, Conn. His paternal great-grandparents were Thurston Rider and Hannah (Cummings), both of Dartmouth, Massachusetts.

It will thus be seen that our subject traces his lineage back on one side to genuine Yankee blood, and on the other to the stalwart Dutch of New York. His primary education was received in the district schools of his native town, and later he attended the old Rhinebeck Academy, one of the best schools of that day, where he easily took a leading position among the students from his exceptional ability. His classmates often recalled, in later years, his quiet, unobtrusive ways, his sterling qualities of mind and character, his fine progress in his studies, and his clean, manly record through his school-days. When sixteen years old, he took a clerkship with his uncle, John F. Jennings, at Kingston, N. Y., where he began his successful business career. He remained there two years, and then returned to Rhinebeck to act as deputy to his father, who had been appointed postmaster by President Pierce. In 1855 he accepted a position in a wholesale dry-goods establishment in New York City, and has, therefore, a very vivid recollection of the great financial panic of 1857, for, though but just of age, his employers furnished abundant proof of his ability and trustworthiness by sending him on a collecting tour through the far Western States.

In 1860, a few months before the breaking out of the Civil war, he was married to Cornelia A. De Forest, who is a lineal descendant of Col. Johannis Snyder, of the First Regiment of Militia in Ulster county, which was formed at New Paltz on the 19th of January, 1776.

In 1863 he was appointed secretary of the New York Rubber Co., and held that position in New York City until 1883, when the company expressed their further confidence in him by making him vice-president of the company, and putting him in charge of their affairs at Matteawan, N. Y., where their extensive manufacturing works are situated. He then became a resident of Fishkill-on-Hudson, and has ever since been identified with the best interests of the historic town of Fishkill. In 1886 while absent on a visit to Florida, the people honored him with an election as supervisor for the town, and the following year he was re-elected, and was, moreover, chosen chairman of the board of supervisors of Dutchess county. Here he displayed the same marked ability and unswerving integrity in presiding over their deliberations that he had shown in managing the business of the town. He was subsequently elected president of the village of Fishkill Landing, in which capacity he served one term with signal success. He was afterward Democratic candidate for member of the Assembly for the First District of Dutchess County, and although there was a Republican majority of 1,200 in the district, his popularity brought him such a flattering vote that the usual majority was reduced one third. But Mr. Rider is not quite the kind of a man to make an all-round politician. He has too fine a sense of right; too keen an appreciation of his duty to the people; too firm a determination to do that duty on all occasions; and too much self-respect to make him a subservient tool of the leaders in practical politics. Whatever political offices he held came to him unsought, and all their obligations were faithfully fulfilled. His sterling worth, his business integrity, and public confidence in his sound judgment caused him to be elected vice-president of the recently incorporated Matteawan National Bank, to the success of which he has largely contributed.

Mr. Rider is a Free and Accepted Mason of forty years' honorable standing, a member of the Palestine Commandery, Knights Templar, of the famous Mecca Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and has attained the exalted position of the Thirty-second degree in the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite Masonry in the Valley of New York, Northern Jurisdiction of America. These facts serve to emphasize the esteem in which he is held by his fellow-citizens and by the Masonic craft. He is a man of quiet, unobtrusive, retiring manners, yet always a polished gentleman and man of the world, apt at business, cool, calm and reticent, yet endowed with a cultivated insight into men and business which makes him a wise administrator of affairs, public or private, a successful employer of labor, and a valuable citizen. He is a fine specimen of such as carve out their own careers in this free land. Not a college graduate, he is still a well-read man, not only in commercial matters, but also in polite and elegant literature, and in the various departments of science. Social and entertaining among his friends, endowed with a fund of wit and humor always at his command, he is respected and loved most by those who know him best.

CASSIUS M. C. SMITH, the enterprising and popular proprietor of "The Woronock," at New Hackensack, Dutchess county, one of the best hotels in this region, is a native of Columbia county, but his family has been identified with Dutchess county for several generations.

David Smith, his grandfather, was born in the town of Clinton, and spent his life there, following agricultural pursuits. He had nine children: Lewis, Thomas, Stephen, Henry, Joseph, Solomon, Sarah, Eliza and Carrie. Lewis Smith, our subject's father, was born March 14, 1818, and passed his early years at the old homestead. He married Elizabeth Hicks, a descendant of one of the pioneer families of the town of Pleasant Valley, where her great-grandfather, Joseph Hicks, and his wife, formerly Miss Filkins, located in Colonial times, obtaining a grant of land from Queen Anne. Her grandfather, Samuel Hicks, a prominent resident of that locality, married Margaret Doty, and reared a family of three children: Benjamin, Mary (Mrs. Samuel Halstead) and Samuel S., Mrs. Smith's father, who enjoyed fine educational privileges owing to his inability to perform the hard labors of the farm. He became a teacher in Poughkeepsie, but after his marriage to Miss Mary Peters returned to the old home to reside. Mrs. Smith was one of the following children: Margaret, who married Thomas Smith, a farmer of the town of Washington; Hewlett P., a resident of the town of Clinton; Elizabeth (Mrs. Smith); Edward S., a retired farmer of Pleasant Valley; Elias, a merchant in Rochester, N. Y.; Burtis, a farmer in the town of Clinton; Hannah, the widow of Asa Smith; and Mary (deceased), who married Solomon Merritt, a carpenter at Rochester.

After their marriage our subject's parents lived upon a farm in the town of Clinton for a short time, and then moved to Columbia county, and remained twenty years. On returning they settled at Clinton Corners, where Mr. Smith's father was engaged in the cattle business. In 1859 he bought a farm in the town of Lagrange, where he died June 12, 1884. He was a Republican politically, and he and his wife, who survived him, adhered to the Quaker faith.

Our subject was born February 6, 1848. He was only seven years old when his parents moved to Clinton Corners, and ten, when they established their home on the farm, where he grew to manhood. At twenty-two he engaged in the butcher's trade, which he followed twenty-three years. In April, 1892, he purchased "The Woronock", at New Hackensack, a "landmark" of the place, formerly known as "Yates Tavern", and moved there November 1, following. Under his business-like management steam-heat and other modern improvements have been added, and it is a favorite resort of tourists. It will accommodate about forty guests, and in the summer season it is well filled. One especially pleasing feature is the cuisine, as Mr. Smith keeps a farm of forty acres to supply his table.

On February 26, 1872, he married Carrie A. Dorland, and they have one daughter, Edith C. Mrs. Smith's ancestors were early residents of the town of Lagrange, and her father, Samuel Dorland, was a well-known farmer and blacksmith there. He was a cousin of Peter Dorland, father of Cyrenus Dorland, surrogate of Dutchess county. Mr. Smith is a public-spirited, influential man, his circle of friends extending far beyond local limits. In politics he is a Republican.

WILLIAM R. MOORE. The subject of this personal narrative, now residing at Upper Red Hook, N. Y., was born at Barrytown, N. Y., in a house standing in Revolutionary times. His present residence commands one of the finest views of the Catskills from any inland point, its surrounding forty acres combining village privileges with space and comfort.

Mr. Moore's family record runs back to the time when New York State was but a Province. The old stone house still standing near Barrytown Corners was in the family for five generations. The tract of land coming into his possession as he reached his majority, and which he sold in later years to John Aspinwall, was originally a portion of the grant of Col. Peter Schuyler, and deeded to Phillipus Hendrich Mohr, his great-grandfather, in 1771. He died in 1775, before the Declaration of Independence was declared. Peterus Moore, his son, served in the Revolutionary army, and family traditions picture his wife subjected to the depredations of the British soldiery (as they sailed up the Hudson in their sloops), hiding her food and begging them to spare her last horse. The line of descent is as follows: Phillipus Hendrich Mohr, born about 1723, died in 1775, married Engel Dederick. Peterus Moore, their son, born November, 1743, died May, 1833, married Christyna Benner, December, 1770. Garret Moore, their son, born March, 1793, died June, 1826, married Lanah Rowe, January, 1815. William R. Moore, their son, was born August 22, 1826, and was united in marriage with Jane Ann Ten Broeck, who was born on the old Ten Broeck homestead in Germantown, Columbia Co., N. Y., April 27, 1830, and was educated in Hudson Academy. To this worthy couple have been born five children, namely: Anna B., William B., Helen R., Hattie E. and Minnie. Hattie E. died when she arrived at maturity. Helen R. is the wife of Rev. John Morrison, of Fishkill-on-Hudson, by whom she has two children: Stewart Ten Broeck and Anna Janette, and the family is now located at Portland, Ore., where Mr. Morrison is pastor of a flourishing Presbyterian Church.

The early history of the Ten Broeck family, to which Mrs. Moore belongs, dates back to 1626, when Wessel Ten Broeck, a merchant from Munster, Westphalia, came over in company with Peter Minuit (pronounced Menewe), the newly appointed director of New Netherlands. He settled in New Amsterdam as a merchant. He had three sons, Derick Wessel, Hendrick Wessel and Joachim Wessel. Derick Wessel, the eldest, was born in 1639, and known in history as Maj. Wessel. As early as 1662 he was the largest fur-trader at Beaver Wyck (now Albany). He was largely engaged in Indian and other public affairs. The historical records of New York show that in 1680 he was employed by Gov. Dongan as ambassador to Canada to settle matters of Provincial difficulty. He was also major of militia, commissary first recorder of Albany in 1686, mayor of Albany in 1696, and Indian commissioner. He bought of the heirs of Anneke Jans, in 1662, her residence on the east corner of State and James streets, which became his city dwelling, being the same lot now occupied by the Mechanical & Traders Bank and the Evening Journal buildings. He owned much real estate, and Ten Broeck street in Albany was named for him. By deed of date October 26, 1694, Robert Livingston conveyed to him a tract of land on both sides of Roel Jansen's Kill, containing about 1,200 acres, also a tract on the Hudson river of 600 acres situated 200 paces south of the old Livingston Manor House.

In 1663, he married Christyna Van Buren, who died November 23, 1729; his death occurred September 18, 1717. Their eldest son, Wessel, was Indian commissioner, recorder of Albany, and lieutenant of militia. From this line descended Gen. Abraham Ten Broeck, of Revolutionary fame. As president of the committee of safety of New York, he carried on an able and patriotic correspondence with Hon. John Hancock, President of Congress. He married Elizabeth, sister of Stephen Vansensalaer, the fourth Patroon of the Manor of Renssalaerwyck. Their son, Derrick Ten Broeck, a lawyer, was for three sessions the eloquent speaker of the House of the Assembly, New York State. All these facts are proved true in histories and documents in the State Library at Albany. Up to the present date, the tract of land on the Hudson, at Germantown, deeded by Robert Livingston to Derrick Wessel Ten Broeck, in 1694, has descended from eldest son to eldest son, so that, most literally, it may be called "old homestead," having been in the family over two hundred years. There is preserved the oldest known family Bible in the Ten Broeck line, and also a portrait of an ancestor, Jacob Ten Broeck, born in 1700, son of the above Wessel. This ancestor was married in 1725 to Christyna Van Alen, who died July 28, 1758. His death occurred September 14, 1774.

From the founder in America to the eldest brother of Mrs. Moore, this branch of the Ten Broeck family is traceable through the eldest sons. (1) Derrick Wessel married Christyna Van Buren in 1663. (2) Wessel married Cathryna Loermans in 1684. (3) Jacob married Christyna Van Alen, September 29, 1725. (4) Wessel married Janetje Person, February 1764. (5) Jacob married Christina Schepwas. (6) Jacob (the father of Mrs. Moore), who married Anna Benner, is the next in direct descent. (7) Jacob Wessel, her brother, married Sarah Ann Evarts, May 24, 1848. (8) Andrew J., his son, married Julia Winans, October 26, 1882.

Hon. Jacob Ten Broeck, the father of Mrs. Moore, was born on the Ten Broeck homestead at Germantown, May 13, 1800. In 1844 he removed to Hudson, leaving his son, Jacob Wessel, the old homestead; was made a charter director of the Farmers National Bank, of Hudson, at its organization in 1839, and he was the oldest officer of that institution at the time of his death in 1883. During the troublous times of the Civil war he efficiently served as mayor of Hudson, and was also a member of the Assembly from Columbia county in later years. He married Anna Benner, who was born November 15, 1798, and was a daughter of Hendrick Benner, of the town of Red Hook, Dutchess county. She died March 26, 1879.

MRS. CATHERINE E. TAYLOR, the subject of this sketch, spent her early life in the town of Lagrange, Dutchess county, attending the district schools and Miss Booth's boarding school, besides a private school at Fishkill. She met Edward Preston Taylor in Poughkeepsie, where they were married. He was born in Orange, N. J., and was a member of the firm of Nelson & Taylor, cabinet makers, with their place of business on the corner of Main and Crannell streets.

After their marriage our subject and her husband conducted the "Forbus House," which stood where the "Nelson House" now is, and was where the old stage house was located, a very historic spot. When Mr. Taylor died, Mrs. Taylor continued to run the "Forbus House" until 1875, when she built the new "Nelson House," which was opened April 1, 1876. The house was named in honor of our subject's brother, Judge Homer A. Nelson. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Taylor: Ella Kate, and Nelson (deceased). Ella married F. J. Jewett, of Albany, N. Y., and they have two children—Rev. F. G. Jewett, rector of St. Paul's Church at Albany, and Edward Taylor Jewett, of the Albany Engraving Co. The Rev. F. G. Jewett has one daughter, Catherine Pauline, and a son, F. G. Jewett (3).

Reuben Nelson, the great-grandfather of our subject, was born in Dutchess county; was drafted for the Revolutionary war, and served as one of the "Minute men," receiving a pension for his services. He married Miss Hannah Morse, a native of Delaware county, N. Y. Reuben Nelson, Jr., grandfather of our subject, was born in the town of Lagrange, where he went to school, and later engaged in farming. He married Miss Catherine Garzee, whose birth took place in Newport, R. I. She was a daughter of a French sea captain, who owned a vessel and came to America and joined LaFayette's army in the cause of American Independence. John M. Nelson, the only child of Reuben, was born on the old homestead in Lagrange, where his early education was obtained, and where he was married to Miss Eliza Smith, who was born in Boston of English parents. Their children were: Catherine Eliza, our subject; Laura, Homer A., Charles and John, of New York City; and Cora, who married Dr. Vandenser.

JOHAN W. SPAIGHT, a prominent resident of Fishkill-on Hudson, Dutchess county, whose able editorial management of the Standard has made that paper influential throughout the community, is one of the men whose energies and abilities have been constantly and consistently devoted to the best interests of the town.

He is a native of Dutchess county, having first seen the light in Poughkeepsie, May 26, 1833. He attended the common schools of that city until the age of fourteen, and in 1849 entered the office of the Poughkeepsie Telegraph as an apprentice, remaining five years. On attaining his majority he took charge of the Highland Eagle at Peekskill, the predecessor of the present Highland Democrat. The following year he purchased the paper, and carried it on successfully for three years, when he sold it with the intention of going into business elsewhere; but his plans failing he remained in charge of the office for another year. In the spring of 1859 he returned to Poughkeepsie, and formed a partnership with A. S. Pease and J. G. P. Holden for the publication of the Daily Press; but this venture proved a failure, and he lost all that he had made while in Peekskill. After three years in Poughkeepsie he purchased the Fishkill Standard with the assistance of his brother-in-law, James E. Member, and February 10, 1862, he assumed the control of the paper. The office was a very small one and the paper only a seven-column folio; but by untiring industry and judicious management the enterprise has been made to prosper, and the Standard has been enlarged from time to time until it is now a folio of nine columns.

Mr. Spaight was married January 1, 1856, at Peekskill, to Miss Eliza J. Diven, of that village, and they have four children—three sons and one daughter. The sons are all connected with the Standard office in various capacities, and are giving evidence of the same qualities which have marked their father's successful work in the journalistic field. The family are identified with the Methodist Church, Mr. Spaight and his wife having become members while in Peekskill, and he has been steward, district steward, trustee (for thirty-three years), and president of the board of trustees. In the Sunday-school he was a leading worker for twenty-five years, having been a teacher, secretary, treasurer, and superintendent. He resides in a beautiful part of the village, on high ground overlooking the river and bay, the view including the mountains and city of Newburgh. His place has been named "The Cedars," from the fact that the hill was formerly covered with a fine growth of cedar trees, only a few of which now remain.

As a public-spirited citizen Mr. Spaight has always been ready to encourage any worthy movement and to assist in local affairs. He was the first treasurer of the village of Fishkill Landing; holding the office for several years, and a trustee four terms; was a trustee of the public schools for about sixteen years, and is now treasurer of the school district. He has been connected with the Howland Circulating Library, as its secretary, since its organization in 1872; is a trustee of the Mechanics Savings Bank, for several years has been a member of the funding committee, and is now its second vice-president. He is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, was secretary of Beacon Lodge No. 283, F. & A. M., for some time, and for the last seventeen years has held the office of treasurer.

WILLIAM B. MILLARD, for many years the senior member of the firm of W. Millard Sons, of New Hamburg, Dutchess county, now the Millard Lumber Co., is a worthy representative of a family which has been distinguished through several generations for business ability, integrity, public-spirit, and all those admirable qualities of character which go to make good citizenship. The head of the American branch of the family came from France at an early date, settling in New England, and John Millard, our subject's great-grandfather, lived in Cornwall, Conn., where he had a sawmill.

Charles Millard, our subject's grandfather, was born in Cornwall, Conn., in 1763, and belonged to the army of the Revolution in 1780, in his eighteenth year. His first wife was Lydia Pride, a native of Poughkeepsie. He settled in Marlboro, Ulster county, where he was engaged in the lumber business until 1824, when he moved to New Hamburg and opened a lumber yard. He manufactured his lumber from the raw material and had an extensive trade for that early day, the distance from our own times being more easily realized when the fact is recalled that he witnessed the trial trip of Robert Fulton's steamer on the Hudson in 1807. He was prominent in local affairs and a leading member of the Presbyterian Church. On June 17, 1816, his first wife died, leaving seven children, and October 22, 1818, he married Sarah Miller, by whom he had two children. His own death occurred April 30, 1827. Of the first family the eldest son (1) John was born May 21, 1789; (2) Charles Millard, born September 15, 1792, located in New Orleans, where he acquired a large fortune. He was a man of unusual energy and business ability, and took a prominent part in affairs in his adopted city. (3) James, born August 15, 1795, was a wholesale dealer in lumber and coal at Catskill. (4) Cornelia, born June 27, 1797, married Hackaliah Purdy, of Marlboro. (5) William born June 19, 1800, settled in Galena, Ill., and became a leading business man there, holding the office of postmaster at one time. His later years were spent in traveling in Europe and the United States, and he died while in Jacksonville, Florida. (6) Walter, our subject's father, is mentioned below. (7) Catherine, born August 21, 1803, married Elem Dunbar, then of Poughkeepsie and later of Cortland county. The children of the second family were Margaret G., born May 24, 1820, and Franklin, born February 26, 1824.

Walter Millard was born in Marlboro, February 27, 1802, and remained there until the removal of the family to New Hamburg. Until 1834 he was engaged in the lumber business exclusively, but at that time he became interested in the freighting business and built the barge "Lexington," which ran between New York and New Hamburg. In 1844 he purchased the steamboat "Splendid," which carried freight from New Hamburg and Marlboro to New York City. About 1855 he disposed of his line of business to give his attention to dealing in lumber and coal, which he continued until his death, August 20, 1880. He was a man of remarkable business acumen and the energy and enterprise to carry his projects to completion. A strict Presbyterian in religious faith, his life was marked by integrity and fair dealing. In politics he was in early years a Whig and later a Democrat. He was married, November 14, 1834, to Martha Hyer Bull, a native of New York City, who died June 14, 1896. Her father, William Bull, who was of English birth, was a well-known saddle and harness dealer in New York, and was the first to import hame collars from England. He had six sons, viz.: William B., Walter P., Howard C., Charles, I. Edward and Fenwick T., the last two named being now deceased.

William B. Millard was born at New Hamburg, June 10, 1836. When a young man he began clerking in his father's office, and in 1863 became a partner in the business, the firm name being W. Millard & Son. After his father's death he conducted the business under the same name until 1884, when his brothers, Howard C. and Charles, entered the firm, which became known as W. Millard Sons. On November 1, 1893, a corporation was formed under the present title of the Millard Lumber Company. They employ about 150 men in the various departments of their work, which includes the manufacture of the finished product from sawed green lumber, their mills and factory being located at Rouse's Point, in the Adirondack region. They do a wholesale business there, while their retail trade is supplied from their yards at New Hamburg and Marlboro.

On February 8, 1860, Mr. Millard was married to Miss Cordelia A. Lawson, a lady of Dutch descent, and daughter of William I. and Ann (Smith) Lawson, of New Hamburg. Two children were born of this union: Martha H., the wife of Harris S. Reynolds, of Poughkeepsie, and William I., who is not married. Mr. Millard and wife are prominent members of the Presbyterian Church, and he has taken an active interest in many movements tending to promote the public welfare, being especially devoted to the temperance reform and to the improvement of the schools. He has been president of the board of education, and is a member of the National Division of the Sons of Temperance. In politics he is a Democrat, but favors a liberal tariff. He has at times held minor offices, declining, however, further honors, although as one of the leading men in southern Dutchess county, he has more than once been urged to enter the political arena.

THOMAS McWHINNIE, a well-known manufacturer, of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, was born in that city, March 20, 1842, and is the son of James and Euphemia (Hall) McWhinnie, both natives of Scotland, the former born at Glasgow in 1807, and the latter at Paisley in 1819.

Thomas McWhinnie, the grandfather of our subject, was born it is supposed in Edinburgh, as he came from there, and was a weaver by trade. His brother, John, up to his death, was keeper of Edinburgh Castle, where the Scottish regalia are kept. Grandfather Thomas McWhinnie was married in 1804 to Janet Crawford, who was the mother of all his children. She died in 1819, and in 1828 he married Margaret McAllister. In May, 1829, the family sailed from Greenock in the sailing vessel "Roger Stewart," arriving, on the fourth of July following, in New York City, where they made their first home in the New World on 20th street, between 8th and 9th avenues. Grandfather McWhinnie's second wife did not come to this country with him; but after a year or two's sojourn here he went back to Scotland, and staid there until her death, when he again came to the United States, and died in New York.

Grandfather McWhinnie had six children, namely: (1) Margaret, married to Alexander Cameron, a machinist; (2) Janet, married at West Farms, Westchester Co., N. Y. (now a part of New York City), to Robert B. Wilson, who in his younger days was captain of a sloop running on the North, or Hudson, river, the East river and the Bronx, up to West Farms; (3) Elizabeth, who became the wife of James Reed, who was in the Custom House at Glasgow a great many years until pensioned off; (4) Peter, who was a weaver by trade; (5) John, also a weaver, who died in New York City; and James, the father of Thomas. Our subject's parents came to America before their marriage, and resided in New York City and other places, finally moving to Poughkeepsie, where they were married. Here the father followed his trade as a weaver for about thirty-three years. He then removed to New York City, where he continued to work at weaving until his death July 17, 1866; his wife died September 11, 1851. He was originally a Whig, later a Republican. They had four children: Catherine and James died in infancy; Thomas is the subject of this sketch; and Archibald is a farmer in Wisconsin.

The father was born in Glasgow, Scotland, in 1807, and reared there, being twenty-two years old when he came to this country in 1829.

Thomas McWhinnie attended the public schools in Poughkeepsie until he was twelve years old, when he went to Wappingers Falls, where he worked in the cotton mills for nine months at two dollars a week. He then returned to Poughkeepsie, and worked for two and a half years in a bakery at $25 a year and his board, the first year; at $30 a year and his board, the second year; and at $35 a year and his board the remainder of the time, leaving the bakery in the winter of 1857, the year of the financial panic. In the spring of 1858 he went to learn the tinner's trade, but left it after serving about one and one-quarter years, and went to work in Chichester & Co.'s chair factory, which stood on the site where his own factory now stands. In 1863 he was employed for a few months in repairing railroad bridges, afterward going to New York City and working in a chair factory for four years, and for about one year more was a partner in a chair factory.

In 1869 Mr. McWhinnie again returned to Poughkeepsie, and embarked in the business in which he has since been successfully engaged; manufacturing all kinds of wheelbarrows—such as canal, coal, garden, ore, stone, brick and wood barrows; also the celebrated Dutchess Bolted Canal, and Dutchess Bolted Garden wheelbarrows. His first location was at No. 25 N. Water street, but in 1883 he erected the large brick factory in which he is now established, at Nos. 39 and 41 South Water street, and 31 and 33 South Front street. His products are shipped to New York City and other points, whence they are sent all over the world. Mr. McWhinnie is a man of progressive ideas, of excellent business ability and great energy, and has worked his way up from a poor boy to his present position. He is popular with his associates, and is a loyal citizen always ready to assist in public enterprises.

Mr. McWhinnie was married June 1, 1871, to Miss Fannie Whitwell, who was born in Poughkeepsie. Her father, Thomas Whitwell, and her mother Mary (Arnold) Whitwell, were natives of Peterborough, England. He followed farming in East Park. Three children were born of this union: Mary E., who was married to Frank Brooks on October 7, 1896; Fannie J. and Roy A.; the last named died January 13, 1893. Mr. McWhinnie is a Republican, and in 1882 he was elected alderman of the Second ward, serving some two and one-half years; in 1896 he was selected by his party to represent them on the board of supervisors, being elected for two years. He is a member of the Congregational Church, and has been a trustee of that body for eight years. Socially he has been a member of the Masonic order since 1864, and also belongs to the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

JAMES STUART CHAFFEE. The family to which the subject of this sketch belongs is of good old Puritan stock, having been founded in the New World in 1635, at Hingham, Mass., by Thomas Chaffee, who landed at Boston a year or two previous. He removed to Hull, where he died in 1683. His son, Joseph Chaffee, married Ann Martin, of Swansea, Mass., and died in that town in 1689. His son, John Chaffee, removed to Woodstock, where Joel Chaffee, the son of John, died. Joshua, the youngest son of Joel, was born in Woodstock, Conn., in 1733, and in 1755 moved to Sharon, Conn. On July 22, 1755, he wedded Mary St. John, and they continued to live at Sharon until 1760, when they removed to Ellsworth, Conn., where his death occurred October 8, 1789, and she passed away August 28, 1824. Their son, Joshua Bignall Chaffee, the grandfather of our subject, was born at Sharon, Conn., March 8, 1781, and became a farmer by occupation. On June 4, 1809, he was united in marriage with Ann Seymour, a daughter of Amos and Sarah (Cook) Seymour, of Plymouth, Conn.; her death occurred June 4, 1819. Later he was united in marriage (December 25, 1820) with Hannah Birdsey, who was born at Cornwall, Conn., September 29, 1791. At the time of his death, the grandfather was most acceptably serving as one of the magistrates of Sharon.

The birth of Jerome Seymour Chaffee, the father of our subject, occurred at Ellsworth, Conn., December 14, 1814, and he was there educated in the common schools. At Kent, that State, on October 24, 1839, he was married to Miss Aritta Stuart, daughter of James and Melinda Stuart. She was born December 15, 1812, and was called to her final rest November 24, 1872. Later, the father was married (June 8, 1876), at Sharon, to Adelia Emma Fuller, who was born March 13, 1841, the daughter of Cyrus Sackett and Harriet Fuller. Until 1855 Jerome S. Chaffee continued to reside at Sharon, at which time he came to the town of Amenia, Dutchess county, where he has since engaged in farming. He is a consistent member of the Congregational Church at Ellsworth, Conn., and politically cast his first vote in support of the Whig party, later becoming an Abolitionist, and since its organization has been a stalwart Republican. By his fellow citizens he has been called upon to serve in the positions of highway commissioner and assessor.

James Stuart Chaffee, whose name introduces this review, was born at Sharon, Conn., October 3, 1846, and was educated at Wesleyan Academy, Wilbraham, Mass. He was married at Kent, Conn., on September 17, 1872, to Miss Lydia A. Judd, who was born December 16, 1850, and is a daughter of Edward Matthew and Laura (Cartwright) Judd. Of their union there are five children: Jerome Stuart, born November 11, 1873, is a graduate of the Yale University, and expects to complete the course in the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania with the class of '97; Edward Judd, born August 6, 1875, married Celia M. Cline; Aritta L., born August 22, 1877, graduated at Wesleyan Academy in 1896; Everitte St. John, born November 15, 1879; and Rollo N., born February 28, 1882.

After his marriage Mr. Chaffee removed to his present residence in the town of Amenia, and for about four years was engaged in the flour, feed, grain and lumber business with William H. Tanner, of Wassaic, but with that exception his entire life has been devoted to agricultural pursuits, and with excellent results, showing that he thoroughly understands the occupation which he has chosen. His unwavering support is given the Republican party, and he has served in several positions of honor and trust, such as highway commissioner and justice of the peace and supervisor.

CHARLES F. HASBROOK, a leading business man of New Hamburg, Dutchess county, the senior member of the well-known firm of Capt. Wm. Hasbrook's Sons, forwarding and commission merchants, was born January 2, 1845, at Cortlandville, in the town of East Fishkill, where his ancestors were among the early settlers. The family originated in Holland, and its representatives in this locality are descended from three brothers who came to this country together, two settling in Ulster county, and one in Dutchess county, at Fishkill.

Francis Hasbrook, our subject's grandfather, was born there August 5, 1789, and became a merchant at Cortlandville, where he was a prominent citizen, an active supporter of the Whig party and a leading member of the Reformed Church, with which most of his descendants have united. He married Margaret Blatchly, a native of Fishkill, who died July 11, 1839, and he survived her until March 8, 1854. They had three children, of whom William Hasbrook, our subject's father, was the eldest, the others being: Susan H., born July 25, 1824, married to Albert Emans, a farmer in Fishkill, and Sarah R., born March 20, 1830, married to John P. Storm, a farmer at Stormville.

William Hasbrook was born at Cortlandville November 12, 1822, and grew to manhood there. He was engaged in the mercantile business with his father for some time, and later conducted it alone, but in 1857 he became captain of the steamer "Wyoming," which he ran for twelve years. From 1869 to 1872 he followed the freighting business at New Hamburg, and then for five years was captain of the "Walter Brett," a steamboat running between New Hamburg and New York, and on leaving this he resumed the freighting business and continued it until his death, which occurred December 18, 1893. He was a Republican in politics, and prominent in local affairs, serving some time as clerk of the town of East Fishkill, and he was the first postmaster of that village. On August 17, 1843, he married Maria Storm, daughter of Gory and Anna (Boice) Storm. She died June 28, 1874, leaving three children, of whom our subject, Charles F., was the eldest, the others being: Emily, born December 11, 1849, died April 9, 1852, and George A., born July 27, 1856, is a member of the firm.

Charles F. Hasbrook was educated in the schools of New Hamburg and Hughsonville. On leaving school he clerked for four years in a grocery in New York City, and then came back to New Hamburg, where he was engaged for a year in the feed business, afterward in a grocery. On March 1, 1886, he became interested in his father's business, and since the latter's death the two sons have carried it on successfully. On January 13, 1869, Mr. Hasbrook married Miss Jennie E. Van Voorhis, who was born September 10, 1845, at Brinkerhoffville. Her parents, William H. and Elizabeth (Haight) Van Voorhis, were both natives of Dutchess county, the former having been born at Matteawan, May 24, 1809. Three children were the result of this marriage, of whom only one is now living, Edward G., born October 24, 1870.

Mr. Hasbrook, as one of the leading men of southern Dutchess county, has been influential in local affairs, and is prominent in the Republican party, although he has never held office, with the exception of four years as justice of the peace of the town of Wappinger. He is a member of the F. & A. M., Wappingers Falls Lodge No. 671, of Poughkeepsie Chapter No. 172, and Poughkeepsie Commandery No. 43.

ZEBULON RUDD. The subject of this sketch was born in the town of North-east, Dutchess Co., N. Y., September 24, 1823.

The family for a long time had been one of influence in the eastern part of the county, and also in western Connecticut, from which locality Mr. Rudd's great-grandfather came. The following is a brief record of the family:

Lieut. Jonathan Rudd, the founder of the family in America, came to New England about the year 1637. He was a resident of New Haven, Conn., in 1644, when he took the oath of fidelity to the government. He was at Saybrook in 1646. In the winter of 1646-47 he was married. The occasion was a romantic one, and is often referred to in the State disputes concerning boundary lines. The magistrate, who had been engaged to perform the ceremony, was delayed by a great and sudden snowfall, and application was at once made to John Winthrop, then acting as magistrate under the jurisdiction of Massachusetts. In order that he might obviate any infringement of the law, the parties agreed to meet at a little stream—to this day known as Bridebrook—which served as a boundary between New London and Lynn. There, in the solemn stillness of the forest, Winthrop, standing upon one bank, joined together the man and woman who stood upon the other.

Jonathan Rudd was a settler of Norwich,

Zebulon R. Redd

Conn., later on, and died in 1668, leaving four children. His eldest son, Jonathan, born about 1650, married Mercy ——— in 1678, and died in 1689, leaving a son born in 1684, who afterward became Ensign and Captain Nathaniel Rudd. He moved to Windham, Conn., where he was a highly respected member of society, and died at a ripe old age February 20, 1760. His first wife, the mother of his children, was Rebecca, daughter of John Waldo, of Chelmsford, Mass., and his wife Rebecca, daughter of Samuel Adams, the progenitor of the Adams family of Massachusetts. Nathaniel and Rebecca Rudd had four children, the third of whom was Zebulon, born at Windham, Conn., in 1717. In 1742 he was married to Jerusha Brewster, and about 1750 moved to Dutchess county, N. Y., and resided in the town of Amenia, and also in Northeast. He died in 1802. His family consisted of eight children—six daughters and two sons. The eldest child, Nathaniel, born in 1742, married Naomi St. John, in 1768, and died in 1774, leaving a widow and three children. He was the ancestor of the Rudds of St. Lawrence and Wayne counties, in New York, and of Litchfield county, in Connecticut.

Zebulon's other son, Bezaleel, born in 1751, survived his brother seventy-two years, and died in 1846, aged ninety-five years and one month. During the greater part of his life he resided at Northeast, Dutchess Co., N. Y. He served faithfully during the war of the Revolution. Having signed the pledge with his father, Zebulon, in July, 1775, he served in the Continental army from August, 1775, to February, 1777, when he left the army with the rank of major. That same year he married Ruth Brush, and they had seven children, of whom the second was Reuben Brush Rudd, born in 1780. He lived at the old place at the northern end of Rudd Pond, Northeast, N. Y., but in middle life spent many years at Poughkeepsie. He was president of the village of Poughkeepsie in 1814. He married on February 22, 1813, Elizabeth, daughter of Capt. Israel Smith, of Newburg, N. Y., and his wife, Mary, daughter of Col. Jonathan Hasbrouck.

Elizabeth Smith was born September 3, 1783, in the house which is now known as "Washington's Headquarters", Newburg, but then owned by Col. Hasbrouck's son Isaac. Mr. Rudd's family still possess a brocaded satin oak given by Lady Washington as a baptismal robe for the child which was born a few days after Washington's departure.

Reuben B. Rudd had five children: Mary, born November 25, 1813, married Milton Smith, and died February 14, 1895; Sarah, born October 29, 1815, and married to Alexander W. Trowbridge, is still living at Ansonia, Conn. John, born December 28, 1817, died at Mobile, Ala., October 9, 1842. Charles, born March 17, 1820, and married to Frances E. Folk, is still living at Pine Plains, N. Y.; and Zebulon, the present representative of the family in Poughkeepsie, N. Y. His early youth was spent upon his father's farm. Financial reverses, however, coming upon the family, the boys were early compelled to seek their own livelihood.

In 1842 Mr. Rudd came to Poughkeepsie to take a position as clerk in the dry-goods store of Joseph Wright. Here he remained two years, and then accepted a clerkship with Bowne & Co., where he remained eight years. He was then appointed teller and bookkeeper in the Fallkill Bank, remaining there six years. Mr. Rudd was next offered the cashiership of the Dover Plains Bank. Six years after his going to Dover Plains the First National Bank of Poughkeepsie was organized, and the directors tendered the position of cashier to Mr. Rudd. He accepted the offer, and for twenty-five years held the position until his resignation in 1889. Since then he has been engaged in the brokerage and investment business in Poughkeepsie.

Mr. Rudd was married May 23, 1855, to Blandina V. Adriance, second daughter of John Adriance, the founder of the "Buckeye Manufacturing Co." Three children have been born to them: Charles Adriance (now deceased), who married Ella Robinson, of Poughkeepsie; John Adriance, who married Bertha Strawn Morgan, of Trenton, Neb., and is now living in Poughkeepsie; and Arthur Belding, who at the present time is studying in New York City.

A B. STOCKHOLM, a prominent resident and leading business man of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, is engaged in the crockery and glassware business at No. 306 Main street, where he has carried on operations since 1885. He was born in that city January 6, 1849, and is descended from Aaron Stockholm, whose birth occurred on Long Island, but who early came to Dutchess county, where he located on a farm in the town of Hopewell, and there married, reared his family and died. His brother located in St. Lawrence county, N. Y., obtaining about one thousand acres of wild land by a grant from King George, and there are now four villages in that county named in honor of him.

The son of this Aaron Stockholm (who also bore the name of Aaron) was the grandfather of our subject. He was born in Hopewell, town of East Fishkill, Dutchess county, and after his marriage with Miss Painter continued to reside upon the old homestead, where his death occurred. In politics he was a Democrat, and religiously was connected with the Reformed Dutch Church. His family included three sons: Aaron, who was a harness dealer at Peekskill, N. Y.; Richard, who went west to Illinois and became a general merchant, and Abram, the father of our subject.

On April 2, 1819, Abram Stockholm was born in Hopewell, town of East Fishkill, and upon the old home farm spent his boyhood and youth. He was united in marriage with Miss Antoinette Lyon, who was born in Westchester county, N. Y., and was a daughter of Walter S. Lyon, a retired minister, of English descent. In 1840 the young couple located at Poughkeepsie, where the father engaged in the furniture business until his death, which occurred in 1872. He was a firm supporter of the Democratic party, and he and his wife contributed to the Methodist Episcopal Church. She is still living; by her marriage with Mr. Stockholm she became the mother of three children: Maria L., who married John S. Gilbert, a farmer of the town of Hyde Park, Dutchess county; Helen L., who married W. H. Haight, a brick manufacturer of Poughkeepsie, and A. B., the subject of this review.

When A. B. Stockholm had reached a sufficient age he entered the public schools of his native city, and completed his literary training in the old Dutchess County Academy, in 1865, after which he entered the general store of Trowbridge & Co., remaining with them for eleven years. He then clerked for Robert W. Frost for three years, and in the fall of 1877 began the retail carpet business at No. 150 Main street, as a member of the firm of Marshall & Stockholm, which partnership was continued until March, 1885, when our subject sold out his interest, and has since engaged in his present business.

In 1874 Mr. Stockholm was united in marriage with Miss Jennie Ward, a native of the town of Pleasant Valley, Dutchess county, and a daughter of Daniel I. Ward, a farmer of that township, whose ancestors came from England. One daughter has been born of this union, named Helen. In politics, Mr. Stockholm affiliates with the Republican party, being an earnest advocate of its principles, and he is prominently identified with the Royal Arcanum, of which for three years he served as regent. He and his wife are consistent members of the Congregational Church, and for eight years he has served as its treasurer. He is a highly respected and esteemed citizen of Poughkeepsie, and as a merchant bears the reputation of an honest, upright and trustworthy man.

MARSHALL HERRICK, a prominent merchant of Poughkeepsie, and one of the most enterprising and prosperous of the business men of that city, is a native of Dutchess county, born at Salt Point, in the town of Pleasant Valley, December 10, 1852, the son of William and Catharine Elizabeth Herrick, whose family are the lineal descendants of Sir Henry Herrick, of England, in the fifteenth century.

Mr. Herrick, after profiting by the somewhat limited course of study offered by the local schools, prepared for college at Amenia Seminary. He entered Cornell University with the class of '74, and for two years pursued an elective course. While there he was a member of the Theta Delta Chi fraternity. At the close of the Sophomore year he returned home, intending to take up scientific farming, but circumstances called him aside, and he settled in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., in 1876. In 1882 he and Elmer Van Vliet purchased the good will and business of Crosby & Spaulding at No. 395 Main street, Mr. Herrick being the senior member of the new firm. In 1888 he bought Mr. Van Vliet's interest, and since then has carried on the business alone, removing it in 1890, to Nos. 375 and 377 Main street, its present location. He has from time to time enlarged, and taken in other lines of goods, and now styles himself a general house furnisher supplying everything needed in fitting up a house. This is the only place of the kind in the city, and the largest in the Hudson River Valley, and has proved a profitable venture.

Mr. Herrick has shown unusual ability as a business man, learning the details of his chosen line of work by practical experience. His judgment has always balanced his spirit of enterprise, and he has now an extensive trade, with a prospect of even greater things in the near future.

In 1876 Mr. Herrick married Miss Julia Allen, a daughter of James M. Allen, a leading citizen of Salt Point, and a descendant of one of the old families of Dutchess county. Their only child now living, Harold Allen Herrick, is at River View Academy preparing for Yale College. Politically, our subject is a Democrat with strong Prohibition tendencies, and of late years has taken an influential part in the local work of the latter organization. He is a man of high moral principle, has been an active member of the Presbyterian Church since he was twelve years of age, and is now a deacon. He has done a large amount of reading for a man absorbed in business cares, his preference being for writers of a substantial nature and especially those on history, political economy and the topics of the day.

WILLIAM J. BROWN, who is well known in connection with the Franklindale Company, and is a prominent citizen of Wappingers Falls, Dutchess county, was born in the latter place, January 10, 1844.

Samuel Brown, the father of our subject, was a native of County Monaghan, Ireland, and there followed the occupation of folder. He was married in 1831, and that year came to the United States. He found employment at what is known as the Dutchess Print Works, Wappingers Falls, and followed that vocation until 1848, when he went into the mercantile business, in which he continued until his death, January 22, 1876. His wife survived him until 1880. Their children were five in number, as follows: Elizabeth, Joseph, Samuel R., John H., William J., Martha, Henry, and two who died in infancy. Mr. Brown was originally a Whig, but later became a Democrat. He took an active part in politics, and held a number of local offices. He was poor master, justice of the peace and collector for the town of Poughkeepsie; was one of the first board of trustees of Wappingers Falls, and was a trustee of the Savings Bank of that village.

William J. Brown attended the district school of his native village during his boyhood, and in 1861-62 was a student at Princeton, N. J., afterward attending Williston Seminary at East Hampton, Mass. Then went to New York City, and for four years was employed as custom-house clerk for the large importing house of Barclay & Livingston, 24 Beaver street. On January 4, 1871, Mr. Brown was married to Miss Esther, daughter of George Warhurst, of Wappingers Falls, and for a short time was a clerk in his father's store. On May 1, 1872, he was made bookkeeper in the Franklindale office. In 1881 he was made superintendent of the Franklindale cotton-mill, continuing there until the destruction of the mill by fire in October, 1885. Mr. Brown has since been bookkeeper for the Franklindale Company, and in connection with that position is also superintendent of the outside business of the Clinton company, under William Bogle, agent. He is a man of fine business ability, and has the confidence and esteem of the firm with which he has so long been engaged. He has always taken an active part in public affairs; has been the village treasurer for eighteen years, and is still holding that position. He was collector for the town of Poughkeepsie in 1871, and supervisor for the town of Wappinger in 1892. He has been a trustee of the Savings Bank for twenty-two years, since 1874; is treasurer of Zion Episcopal Church, and a trustee of the cemetery association. Socially, he is a Knight Templar, and, politically, he belongs to the Republican party, in whose interests he is an active worker. He is popular with all classes of people, and a good citizen of Wappingers Falls.

Mr. and Mrs. Brown have an interesting family of six children, all of whom are at home, namely: Edward McKinlay, Mary Louisa, Edith, Violetta, Alice and Clayton W.

CHARLES I. ROUND, one of the most prominent builders and contractors of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, was born October 28, 1844, in Birmingham, England, where he received his early education and had his home until he was twenty-two years old.

In his twenty-second year Mr. Round came alone to America, landing at New York, whence he went to California, where he remained a year, and then returned to New York. For three years he worked for Lyons & Bunn, builders, during which time he built the Eastman Terrace High School, an addition to Vassar College, and a gas tank at the gas works. He then returned to California, remaining there for a few months, subsequently coming to Poughkeepsie and rebuilding the rolling mill. In 1877 he went into the building business for himself, and erected the Vassar Brothers Institute, the Vassar Brothers Hospital, and two sections of the State Asylum, although most of his work has been outside of the city. He built the Thorn Memorial Building at Millbank, a fine building for Archibald Rogers on the Hyde Park road, and at the present time (spring of 1897) has secured the contract for the building of the New Adriance Memorial Library, which is to cost $70,000, and is to be finished in November, 1897. Although starting at the bottom he has worked his way up to the top, and is to-day one of the most successful business men in the county.

Mr. Round was married in New York City June 20, 1870, to Miss Mary Seckerson, a native of Dudley, England, and five children have been born to them, three of whom are now living: Maud (who married Frank Scofield), Bertha and Charles. Our subject is a member of Triune Lodge, F. & A. M., Poughkeepsie Chapter R. A. M., and of the I. O. O. F., Lodge No. 21.

Eli Round, father of our subject, was a builder by trade, which the Round family for four generations have followed. Eli married Miss Mary Ann Staley, who is yet living. They had seventeen children, six of whom are living: Staley, Adelaide and Alfred are in England; Charles I., Eli and Herbert are living in Poughkeepsie. The father died in England in November, 1896, at the advanced age of eighty years.

NELSON LOUIS BOICE, one of the most energetic and industrious men of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, was born in Waterford, N. Y., November 2, 1852, and is a son of Benjamin Boice, whose birth occurred in 1808, in Poughkeepsie, where he passed his early life, receiving his education in its public schools. For a number of years the father conducted a hotel at Channingville, Dutchess county, and for several years was engaged in the livery business on Catherine street, Poughkeepsie. His death, however, occurred at Waterford, N. Y. He was twice married, by the first union having one son, William, of Worcester, Mass. At Poughkeepsie he wedded Lettie A. Ostrander, a daughter of Peter M. Ostrander, and to them were born three children: Louisa, wife of Franklin S. Hawley, of Broadalbin, N. Y.; Carrie, wife of C. B. Olmstead, of the same place; and Nelson Louis.

Our subject was only a year old when his father died, and by his mother he was taken to Fulton county, N. Y., where his boyhood days were spent upon a farm, and in the district schools he obtained his primary education. This he supplemented by a course in the high school at Broadalbin. His mother later became the wife of Giles W. Churchill, a farmer (now deceased). In August, 1872, Mr. Boice came to Poughkeepsie, where he was first employed by Trowbridge & Co., with whom he remained six years, and for the following two years was with Joseph G. Frost, an undertaker. He then returned to his former employers, for whom he worked two and one-half years, after which he entered the grocery store of James H. Mills, at No. 282 Main street. At the end of two years he secured a situation with Willard H. Crosby, an undertaker, by whom he was employed for the same length of time, and the following year was passed with Leonard Carpenter. Returning to Mr. Mills, he remained with that gentleman for two years, and then formed a partnership with W. V. Holmes, under the firm name of Holmes & Boice, grocers, at No. 364 Main street. At the end of a year and a half this partnership was dissolved, and Mr. Boice became book-keeper for Hull & Co., for one year. He then joined Mr. Selfridge, and they conducted the undertaking business for Mrs. W. H. Crosby for a year, when she turned the business over to Mr. and Mrs. Selfridge, with whom our subject remained five years. On March 15, 1897, he started in the undertaking business for himself at No. 395 Main street.

In Poughkeepsie, on October 12, 1881, Mr. Boice was married to Miss Mary W. Brown, a daughter of Thomas S. Brown, superintendent of the Buckeye Works. They are held in high respect by all who know them, and are sincere Christian people, faithful members of the Baptist Church. Socially, Mr. Boice holds membership with the Royal Arcanum Lodge.

WILLIAM H. BADEAU. The subject of this sketch is a descendant of French

A numerous band of these, in the names of Flandreau, Coutant, Barmy and many others, left La Rochelle, France, and founded New Rochelle, a suburb of New York City. Elie Badeau, on his arrival in 1708, purchased 120 acres of land.

Two generations later, and before Horace Young Man, go West" was given to the world, John Badeau, of New Rochelle (son of Elie) went north, acquired a tract of land, and in 1775 located at Mahopac, in Putnam county, N.Y. One of his sons, John Badeau, was Isaac Badeau, Sr. Isaac Badeau, Jr., married Elizabeth of Mahopac Falls. Their children were Robert H. (deceased), William H. (our subject), Matilda S., and Joseph N. They also went north, locating in Dutchess county in

The restless ambition of W. H. Badeau (son of the foregoing) begat aspirations for something beyond the field of possibilities in his home in Fishkill surroundings, and he secured an appointment in a wholesale fancy goods house in the down-town section of New York City. The proprietor, G. S. Ely, was the son-in-law of Col. Richard M. and one of the great inventors and builders of the printing presses. Mr. Badeau was more than many young men resorting to the city, in that he was successful in his acquaintance with the proprietor in his home in Brooklyn. He became at once engaged in Sunday-school, choir and church work at the Clinton Street Presbyterian Church in the Heights, whose pastor was the Rev. Spencer, D. D., author of "A History of the Church" and other works. After leaving the business house, and continuing his connection with the renowned firm of E. & H. T. Anthony & Co., No. 591 Broadway, New York, manufacturers, importers, and wholesale dealers in every class of photographic requisites.

From his residence to the Seventh Avenue New York City (at that time a suburb) and making as his Church in the Heights Presbyterian, Rev. W. Spencer, D. D., pastor, was afterward a member of its board of trustees. Mr. Badeau was at this time a member of the New York City, New York, Department, New York City, and served in temporary service in the ranks of the 6th of the battle of Gettysburg, and at the same time he volunteered to put a man in the army at his own cost of several hundred dollars.

The business of E. & H. T. Anthony & Co. became a rapidly increasing one, and had for its field every State in the Union, the Canadas, Mexico, West Indies, Central America, South America, Australia, Europe, and even China. At this juncture, and as showing the then course of events, we copy from a little historical brochure issued by E. & H. T. Anthony & Co. not long since:

"After a time these gentlemen found it expedient to look after all the interests of the firm, and William H. Badeau, after being associated with the Brothers Anthony for several years, was appointed to the firm, and became the representative of the house in Europe."

Mr. Badeau made many voyages across the water both before and after the formation of the co-partnership. By the way, one crossed was by the "Great Eastern," which was an "eight" of a mile in length. It was a smooth August trip, eighteen hundred thirty-two, and he returned on board.

It was becoming necessary that Mr. Badeau should remain permanently abroad, and he accordingly established his residence by turns at the capitals of the Old World—Vienna, Berlin, Paris and London—and by occasional tours through Italy, Austria, Switzerland and France, also through all parts of the United Kingdom, and in many instances far to the north, to the Orkney and Shetland Islands.

While residing at the Austrian capital, and during the Vienna Exhibition Mr. Badeau (his firm co-operating) set his heart upon and addressed himself assiduously to the acquiring, in that international contest, of the "Medal of Progress." There was only one prize medal of this rank, and that was to be competed for by the wide world.

After the close of the World's Fair he shipped part of his exhibit from Vienna to London, and put it out at the annual exhibition of British Photographers. As setting forth the nature of his efforts to carry all home at Vienna, he quotes from the "British Journal of Photography" of January 10, 1873, a part of its editorial written upon that same exhibition, viz.:

"And here it is to be regretted that a firm so well-known in this country as it is in America, we mean the firm of Messrs. E. & H. T. Anthony & Co., of New York—a firm which, although young so far as forty years are concerned (being that it has only recently entered upon its fourth decade), is yet as old as it can possibly be, finding as we do that it dates from the introduction of Photography in 1839. This establishment is so colossal in its extent and ramifications as to occupy 40,000 square feet of floor room; and its industrial operations are so numerous and varied as to necessitate the services of 200 skilled work people and forty wardens. WILLIAM H. BADEAU. The subject of our sketch is a descendant of French Huguenots. A numerous band of these, including the names of Flandreau, Coutant, Badeau, and many others, left La Rochelle, France, and founded New Rochelle, a suburb of New York City. Elie Badeau, on his arrival there in 1708, purchased 120 acres of land.

Two generations later, and before Horace Greeley's "Young Man, go West" was given to the world, John Badeau, of New Rochelle (descendant of Elie) went north, acquired a large tract of land, and in 1775 located at Mahopac Falls, in Putnam county, N.Y. One of the sons of John Badeau was Isaac Badeau, Sr. His son, Isaac Badeau, Jr., married Elizabeth Hart, also of Mahopac Falls. Their children were: Gilbert H. (deceased), William H. (our subject), Matilda S., and Joseph N. They also "went North," locating in Dutchess county in 1846.

The restless ambition of W. H. Badeau (second of the foregoing) begat aspirations for something beyond the field of possibilities in sight to him in Fishkill surroundings, and he accepted an appointment in a wholesale fancy dry-goods house in the down-town section of New York City. The proprietor, G. S. Ely, was a brother-in-law of Col. Richard M. and Robert Hoe, the great inventors and builders of lightning printing presses. Mr. Badeau was more fortunate than many young men resorting to great cities, in that he was successful in arranging residence with the proprietor in his own home in Brooklyn. He became at once actively interested in Sunday-school, choir and Church work at the Clinton Street Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn Heights, whose pastor was Rev. Ichabod S. Spencer, D. D., author of "A Pastor's Sketches" and other works. After even years passed in the business house, and very delightful home of G. S. Ely, Mr. Badeau arranged connection with the renowned firm of E. & H. T. Anthony & Co., No. 591 Broadway, New York, manufacturers, importers, publishers and wholesale dealers in every class of photographic requisites.

Transferring now his residence to the Seventh ward, New York City (at that time a pleasant quarter), and making as his Church home the Allen Street Presbyterian, Rev. W. V. Newell, D. D., pastor, was afterward elected a member of its board of trustees. Mr. Badeau was at this time a member of the twenty-second Regiment, New York City, which was ordered to temporary service in Pennsylvania, at the time of the battle of Gettysburg, and at the same time he volunteered to put a man in the army at his own cost of several hundred dollars.

The business of E. & H. T. Anthony & Co. became a rapidly increasing one, and had for its field every State in the Union, the Canadas, Mexico, West Indies, Central America, South America, Australia, Europe, and even China. At this juncture, and as showing the then course of events, we copy from a little historical brochure issued by E. & H. T. Anthony & Co. not long since:

"After a time these gentlemen found it impossible to look after all the interests of the firm, and William H. Badeau, after being associated with the Brothers Anthony for several years, was admitted to the firm, and became the representative of the house in Europe."

Mr. Badeau made many voyages across the water both before and after the formation of the co-partnership. By the way, one crossing was by the monster steamship "Great Eastern," which was one-eighth of a mile in length. It was a smooth August trip, eighteen hundred merry-making souls being on board.

It soon became necessary that Mr. Badeau should remain permanently abroad, and he accordingly established his residence by turns at the capitals of the Old World—Vienna, Berlin, Paris and London—making occasional tours through Italy, Austria, Germany and France, also through all parts of the United Kingdom; and in midsummer (for recreation) to the Orkney and Shetland Islands.

Whilst residing at the Austrian capital, and during the Vienna Exhibition, Mr. Badeau (his firm co-operating) set his heart upon and addressed himself assiduously to the capturing, in that international contest, of the "Medal of Progress." There was only one prize medal of this rank, and that was to be competed for by the wide world.

After the close of the World's Fair he shipped part of his exhibit from Vienna to London, and entered it at the annual exhibition of British Photographers. As setting forth the outcome of his efforts to carry off honors at Vienna, we quote from the "British Journal of Photography" of October 31, 1873, a part of its serial critique upon that autumn exhibition, viz.:

"And first of all let us accord a hearty welcome to a firm as well-nown in this country as it is in America; we mean that of Messrs. E. & T. H. Anthony & Co., of New York—a firm which, although young so far as mere years are concerned (seeing that it has only recently entered upon its fourth decade), is yet as old as it can possibly be, finding as we do that it dates from the introduction of Photography in 1843. This establishment is so colossal in its extent and ramifications as to occupy 40,000 square feet of floor room; and its industries are so numerous and varied as to necessitate the services of 200 skilled work people and forty warehousemen. We are glad to see so eminent a firm contributing to our annual collection of pictures, knowing what personal power they possess in securing American representation; for much is gained in many ways by the international advances toward each other of two great nations so intimately connected in lineage and language, thus promoting the mutual interchange of whatever is exceptional and valuable in the pursuit of our art-science as practiced in both the Old and New Worlds. Let us hope that through the friendly agency of this, the largest photographic firm in the World, and through the cordial services of Mr. William H. Badeau, the English resident partner, American photography will henceforth be adequately represented at our annual exhibitions. It is fitting that we should here remind our readers that the senior member of this great firm, Mr. Edward Anthony, has generously offered $500 in prizes to be contested for in February next; and as the artistic encounter is an international one, we urge upon the photographers of the United Kingdom to commence the preparation of such works as will enable our trans-Atlantic brethren to see that, although the progressive proclivities of their nation have secured for the firm to which we have referred the only and much valued 'Medal of Progress' awarded at the Vienna Exhibition, yet, that Englishmen will retaliate by wresting from our American friends, if they can, the munificent prizes offered by Mr. Edward Anthony. We should have been pleased to have seen the 'Medal of Progress' sent to England; but as the fates or jurors otherwise decided, it only remains for us to congratulate the fortunate recipients of this coveted award."

During his whole stay abroad, whether in visit or in residence, Mr. Badeau was the foreign contributor to the columns of "Anthony's Photographic Bulletin" over the nom-de-plume "Viator."

Fifteen years with the firm of E. & H. T. Anthony & Co., he, after a much varied and exceedingly pleasant experience, and having acquired a competency, retired from the firm (The portrait accompanying this sketch is a copy of the photographic souvenir made on that occasion).

Personally Mr. Badeau is a gentleman of simple habits, culture, well educated, lover of science, research, art. To his tastes the whole co-partnership career was contributive, bringing him into hand and hand intimacy with Art of both worlds.

Relinquishment of the bustling activities found installation of appreciations for the fruits of Post Commercial Relations. Pleasure travel, the diversified diversions and numerous private affairs have made his life (since retiring) one of busy leisure, he residing by turns in Europe, New York City, State of Iowa, and the counties of Schoharie, Rockland and Dutchess in New York State. Mr. Badeau has many interests in the West. He is a member of the board of directors, and vice-president of the First National Bank of Glidden, Iowa.

BENJAMIN H. BREVOORT. The Brevoorts came originally from Holland, the first of this family known in this country being Hans, who settled in Putnam county, N. Y. Of his history not much is known. Dean, the great-grandfather of our subject, was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and at one time was in the employ of Gov. Kemble.

Thomas J. Brevoort, the father of our subject, was born in Putnam county about 1828; was a farmer by occupation, but for many years held the position of superintendent of the Mott Haven Ore Company, of New York City. For seventeen years he was a justice of the peace in his county, and was a leading citizen, a man of good natural ability, and successful in whatever he undertook. He was well acquainted with all the prominent men of the county, and took an active part in politics, being a strong Democrat. He belonged to the Baptist Church, and to the Masonic Order at Cold Spring, and in all the relations of life was well thought of by his associates and a large circle of warm personal friends.

In 1846 Mr. Brevoort was married to Phoebe White, daughter of Joshua White, who for many years was a justice of the peace in the town of Pawling. Her mother was a descendant of the Townsend family. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Brevoort: Benjamin H. (our subject) and Jennie (who married C. W. Horton, of Stormville). The father died in 1873, and the mother in 1886.

Benjamin H. Brevoort, our subject, was born in the town of East Fishkill, April 23, 1847. He first attended school at the Poughkeepsie Collegiate Institute, College Hill, afterward entering upon his profession at Boyds Corners, in Putnam county, which public works were under the management of Gen. George S. Greene, now the oldest living graduate of West Point. In 1864 Mr. Brevoort was appointed assistant city engineer of St. Paul, Minn., and later received the appointment of civil engineer on the St. Paul & Chicago railroad. He was then recalled to New York and put on the Canal Department at White Hall Harbor, under the supervision of the State. He was assistant engineer in this work, but later was put in charge of the Topographical Department for the enlargement of the Champlain canal. He was afterward assigned to work on the New Croton aqueduct, where he remained until that great undertaking was completed. In all these responsible positions he showed great ability, and secured the confidence and esteem of all with whom he was associated. He has been in close intercourse with all the leading civil engineers of the State, and has had valuable and extensive experience in his line of work. In his various undertakings Mr. Brevoort has been uniformly successful, and is now following his profession in the city of Poughkeepsie. He was also at one time a clerk under William C. Whitney, with whom he studied law, and was admitted to the bar, when the latter was corporation counsel.

Mr. Brevoort was first married in 1873, to Miss Fisher, of Danbury, Conn., who died in 1882, leaving two children, Thomas and Eva. The daughter resides in Buffalo. In 1894 our subject married, for his second wife, Miss Kittie Riley, a native of Walden, Orange Co., N. Y. For a number of years Mr. Brevoort was a Democrat, and was a delegate to the convention at Rochester which ruled Boss Tweed out of power. Soon after this he went over to the Republican party, and has been quite active in its interests ever since. Socially he is a Royal Arch Mason, and in all public matters is a generous and progressive citizen, who is ever ready to do his part.

HUFUCUT FAMILY. In early times a settlement was made along what is now known as the Ten Miles river, in Dover, in eastern Dutchess county, by immigrants from the upper Rhine (now Alsace) and from Holland. One of these families who came from Agersheim, in Alsace, was named Hoffgoot.

John Lodwick Hoffgoot is the first of which there is authentic knowledge. He claimed to be a Lutheran minister. Objection was made by Rev. Christian Knoll, the Lutheran minister of the Beekman's Precinct, to his officiating in Dutchess county, and he was ordered by the Consistory not to preach. He appealed to the Colonial Governor, George Clinton, of New York, who, after investigating the matter, granted him on the 24th day of February, 1748, a license as a minister to preach the Gospel. He is said to have had a son Nicholas, and that Nicholas was the father of John (born 1760), who spelled his name Hoofcoot.

John could speak both German and English, and his wife, Jane Koens, who was of Holland-Dutch descent, could talk the Dutch language. John and Jane were the parents of George, Nicholas and others. Of these, George, who spelled his name Hoofcut, married Hannah Benson, and their children were: John, Carbone, George, Jane, Henry, Shadrach, William, Betsey, Obed and Perry. All of these married, and left issue, except Jane and Shadrach. John Hoofcoot, the father of George, Nicholas and others, died about 1848, and was buried in the cemetery at Dover Plains. He was called "Captain John Hoofcoot" on the tombstone. George, the son of John, was a farmer and lawyer at Dover, and died about 1853, aged seventy-eight.

George, his son, married Sarah A. Dennis. The first of her family was John Dennis, who, in 1647, received a deed of land at Cape May, in Jersey, from an Indian chief named Panktoe, in behalf of the Indians. While the Revolutionary war in America was in progress Thomas Dennis, then a resident of New Jersey, was captured by the British, carried off a prisoner and died. His two children, Joseph and Sarah Dennis, being left without any one to care for them, a relative from Beekman, Dutchess county, brought them from New Jersey to Beekman, Dutchess county, and they were there cared for. This Joseph Dennis, who married Rebecca Tanner, was the father of Sarah Dennis, whom George Hoofcut married. In 1827 this George Hoofcut changed the spelling of his name to Hufcut. He was a farmer and lawyer, owning mills and quarries at Dover Plains, and carried on considerable business there. He served his apprenticeship in one of the small cloth factories which were in almost every town throughout Dutchess county, from 1820 to 1835. They made sattinet (a mixture of cotton and wool), and also dressed and colored the homespun woolen cloths made by the farmers' wives; carding machines were also connected with these establishments, to make the rolls of wool which the women spun at their home. He never engaged in the business. All the Hufcuts carried on farming at Dover except John, who resided in Lewis county, and was a farmer there. George and Sarah Hufcut were the parents of George, Horace D. and Rachel. George Hufcut died in 1881, aged seventy-five; Sarah, his widow, died in 1885, aged seventy-nine. He was admitted as an attorney and counselor in 1848.

Horace D. Hufcut, now residing at Poughkeepsie, was born in Dover, Dutchess Co., N. Y., October 12, 1837. He was educated at the schools of Poughkeepsie and at Amenia Seminary, then studied law with George Hufcut, his father, at Dover Plains, and was admitted as an attorney and counsellor in 1860.

In politics Mr. Hufcut is a Democrat, and as such ran for the office of school commissioner in the first Lincoln campaign, in the First Assembly District of Dutchess county. He was elected and served as town clerk and also as supervisor of the town of Dover; in 1866 he was appointed and served as clerk of the board of supervisors. In 1863 he was appointed, by Governor Horatio Seymour, recruiting agent for the First Assembly District of Dutchess county. He enlisted, and had accepted by the United States mustering officer, 150 men. After the war he continued to practice his profession in partnership with his father, under the name of G. & H. D. Hufcut, until January 1, 1884, when, having been elected surrogate of Dutchess county, he removed to Poughkeepsie and served in that incumbency until January 1, 1890. In 1891 he was elected district attorney of Dutchess county, and served as such for three years. In 1892 he associated with him Everett H. Travis, and since that time has practiced his profession, under the name of Hufcut & Travis, at No. 54 Market street, Poughkeepsie. In the election of 1896 he supported the regular Democratic ticket. He is a member of the M. E. Church.

Mr. Hufcut's wife, Alice M. (Glidden), was a daughter of Samuel G. and Martha A. Glidden, and was born at Damariscotta, Maine. They have two children: Florence G. and Horace G.

COL. ROBERT F. WILKINSON, one of the most prominent lawyers of Poughkeepsie, and a veteran of the Civil war, is a member of one of the most distinguished families of Dutchess county.

John Wilkinson, his great-grandfather, was a well-known citizen of his day, a farmer by occupation and the father of a large family, among whom were three sons (triplets)—Robert, our subject's grandfather; Gilbert; and Livingston, who died when a young man. They were named for Robert Gilbert Livingston, a prominent resident of Dutchess county. John Wilkinson lost his life by the fall of a bridge over the Housatonic river, across which he was driving on his way to New Haven to place his son Robert in college.

Robert Wilkinson, our subject's grandfather, was born in 1787, and in 1806 was graduated from Yale College as the valedictorian of his class. He married Phœbe Oakley, daughter of Jessc Oakley, who was the head of a large family. Another of his daughters married Judge Abraham Bockee, a member of the Court of Errors, and for several years a representative of this district in the State Senate and in Congress, while still another daughter married Gilbert Wilkinson, one of the trio above named. Robert Wilkinson moved to Glens Falls in 1812, and was surrogate of Warren county for two years, but returned to Dutchess county to practice law at Dover Plains, where he remained until the election of his brother-in-law, Judge Thomas J. Oakley, to Congress in 1828, when he moved to Poughkeepsie and succeeded to a considerable part of Judge Oakley's practice. He was a scholarly man, eloquent, with many fine natural gifts. Holding strong convictions upon the reform movements of his time, he became widely known as a promoter of religion and of the temperance cause. He was a Whig, and a warm personal friend of Henry Clay, but he never held any official position except that of surrogate of Warren county, as stated, and surrogate of Dutchess county, by appointment just previous to the adoption of the Constitution of 1846. He died in Poughkeepsie in 1849.

His son, William Wilkinson, our subject's father, was born at Poughkeepsie, May 7, 1810, and after receiving a common-school and academic education, he attended the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, at Troy, N. Y., then under the control of the celebrated Prof. Eaton. He then studied law and practiced with his father, and later with the late William I. Street. He was a leading member of the Presbyterian Church, and a man of considerable literary attainments, being a frequent writer upon various subjects. In 1842 he married Mary E. Trowbridge, daughter of Stephen B. Trowbridge and his wife, Eliza Conklin, both of whom were members of well-known families in the county. He died December 12, 1864, leaving five children: Robert F., our subject; William; Edward T.; Eliza, who married Augustus E. Bachelder, of Boston, Mass.; and Catherine, who married Peter French, and died in 1885, leaving two children.

Robert F. Wilkinson was born at Poughkeepsie June 10, 1843. He studied at the Dutchess County Academy, and under a private tutor, and then spent one year in the State and National Law School at Poughkeepsie. In 1859 he entered Williams College with the class of 1863, and the next year joined the class of 1861. He left college in 1861 without graduating, but he and other students who entered the army were given the degree of A. B. by vote of the trustees, and he has since received from Williams College the honorary degree of A. M. Returning home he spent some time as a student in his father's office, and in July, 1862, he became captain of Company I, 128th N. Y. V. I., raised in Dutchess and Columbia counties. They went to the front in September, 1862, and Mr. Wilkinson, after serving with his regiment through the siege of Port Hudson, Louisiana, was assigned to duty as judge advocate of the First Division of the Nineteenth Corps, on the staff of Gen. W. H. Emory, and served as a staff officer until the end of the war. In 1865 he was promoted to the rank of major, and thereafter received from the U. S. Government a brevet commission as lieutenant-colonel for distinguished gallantry at the battle of Winchester, September 19, 1864, and later a brevet commission as colonel for distinguished gallantry at Cedar Creek, October 19, 1864. He received several severe wounds during the latter engagement, and after some weeks spent in the hospital he returned home, where he remained until his recovery. In February, 1865, he rejoined the army, and acted as inspector-general and adjutant-general of the post of Savannah. In July, 1865, he was mustered out, having seen service in the departments of the Gulf, in the Shenandoah Valley under Sheridan, and in Georgia.

Returning home to Poughkeepsie at the close of the war, he was admitted to the bar in 1866, and has since that time continued to practice law. He has conducted several of the most important litigations originating in Dutchess county, has a large equity practice, and transacts much railroad and other corporation business. Always a Republican, and formerly active in politics, he nevertheless is independent in his political belief and conduct. He has never held office except the recorder-ship of Poughkeepsie for four years.

In 1867, Col. Wilkinson married Julia Gifford, daughter of Elihu Gifford, of Hudson, N. Y., and they have four children: Edith; Gifford, who graduated at Williams College in 1891, and is now a lawyer in Poughkeepsie; Emily C.; and Robert, a graduate of Yale College in the class of '95, and now a member of the Harvard Law School at Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Being fond of hunting, fishing, walking, and all out-door exercises, Mr. Wilkinson spends his vacations in the Adirondacks and the Catskills. He is a member of several noted social organizations—the University, the Century, the City, and the Lawyers Clubs of New York, also the Adirondack League Club and the Sigma Phi (college) Fraternity, and to the Bar Associations of the State and City of New York. He is a warden of St. Paul's Episcopal Church in Poughkeepsie, of which his family have long been members.

CHARLES W. PILGRIM, M. D., a leading physician of Poughkeepsie, and a well-known writer on medical topics, was born in Monroe, Orange Co., N. Y., March 27, 1855, and is a son of Roe C. Pilgrim, a native of the same place.

Morris B., the great-grandfather of our subject, was a native of Holland. The grandfather, also named Morris B., was born in Orange county. He married Ann Coleman, a native of the same county, and settled down to farming, which occupation was interrupted by service in the war of 1812. They had three children: Aminda, Susan and Roe C.; of these, Aminda married Phineas B. Thompson, of Orange county, and Susan became the wife of John Knight, a farmer and miller of the same county. Roe C., the father of our subject, was reared upon the farm, and married Frances, daughter of George Wilkes, of Orange county. The latter was a prominent man of the county, and for many years a justice of the peace. After their marriage our subject's parents located on the old homestead, where they reared a family of six children, as follows: Augusta A. married Henry Ingram, a merchant in New York City; Morris B. is a business man in Jersey City; Mary died in infancy; Charles W. is our subject; Susan M. died when eighteen years old; Roetta married Charles Sumner, an official of the Erie Railway Company. The father of this family practiced law in Orange county. He was a member of the Episcopal Church, while his wife was a Presbyterian. He died in October, 1858, and she in September, 1880.

Our subject's early schooling was obtained in Monroe, Orange county, and when ten years of age he went to Jersey City, where he attended the city and private schools. In 1876 he began the study of medicine with Dr. Herman Canfield, who was one of the physicians in the Bellevue Hospital at New York City, and was graduated from Bellevue Hospital Medical College in the class of '80. He then became house physician to the hospital, in which position he remained for a year and a half, when he went to Auburn, N. Y., as assistant physician in the Asylum for Insane Criminals. There he remained about ten months, and then went to Utica, where he was engaged in the State Hospital as fourth assistant, a year later becoming first assistant physician. Dr. John P. Gray was head physician at that time. Dr. Pilgrim remained in this institution about five years, and in the early part of 1885 entered the University of Vienna, Austria, afterward becoming a volunteer physician in the Woman's Hospital at Munich. In 1886 he returned to Utica, and on June 12, 1889, was married to Miss Florence Middleton. Her father, Robert Middleton, who was born in Aberdeen, Scotland, is president of the Globe Woolen Co., at Utica.

After their marriage Dr. Pilgrim and his wife went abroad, and were absent about five months. On his return the Doctor was offered the superintendency of the Willard State Hospital, and began his duties as such in February, 1890. In that office he remained about three years, at the end of that time becoming, on May 1, 1893, the successor of Dr. Cleveland as superintendent of the Huson River State Hospital at Poughkeepsie, which position he is now occupying. Dr. and Mrs. Pilgrim have one child, Florence M.

Dr. Pilgrim is a member of the Masonic Fraternity, and of the Royal Arcanum. He is also a member of the Physicians' Mutual Benefit Association, the New York State Medical Association, the Bellevue Alumni Society, and the County Medical Society of Dutchess county. From 1882 to 1890 he was associate editor of the "American Journal of Insanity," and, among other valuable contributions to medical science, is the author of the following papers: "Acute Lobar Pneumonia with Cardiac Failure" — Independent Practitioner; "The Advantages and Dangers of Intra-Uterine Injections"—idem July, 1882; "A Case of Epileptic Insanity with the Echo Sign Well Marked"—American Journal of Insanity, April, 1884; "A Case of Spontaneous Rupture of the Heart,"—idem, January, 1885; "Pyro-Mania (so called) with Report of a Case"—idem, 1885; "A Visit to Gheel"—idem; "A Study of Suicide"—Popular Science Monthly; "Genius and Suicide"—idem;

"Schools for the Insane"—idem; "Communicated Insanity"—idem.

Dr. Pilgrim is a man of much intellectual ability and mental culture, a deep student and thoroughly interested in all matters pertaining to his profession, especially in cases involving brain diseases. He is popular, not only with his patients, but with the public at large.

JOHAN POWELL WILSON, M. D., a prominent physician of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, was born January 27, 1845, at Hobart, Delaware County, New York.

Dr. Wilson's family is of Scotch origin. John Wilson went from Scotland to the North of Ireland at the time of the Reformation, and bought two towns of land in Armagh which he entailed to pass to the John Wilsons in a direct line of descent. He was a Covenanter.

John Wilson, our subject's grandfather, sold his birthright in Ireland, and came to America in 1795, locating first in New York City and later in Harpersville, Delaware county. He sailed from Warrenpoint, Ireland, on the ship "American Hero," May 12, 1795. He was a member of the Masonic order, and by occupation was a farmer and mason. He married Ann Tate, and their son, Robert Wilson, our subject's father, was born in Harpersville, Delaware county, in 1818. He was in the iron business, and was a man of prominence in his locality. He married Polly Ann Powell, and had six children, our subject being the eldest. Calista married William S. Bonton, of Nebraska; Mary married Charles L. Hicks, of Roxbury, Delaware Co., N. Y.; Charles lives in Nebraska; Frank is a successful physician in Brooklyn, N. Y.; and Egbert died at the age of twenty-two years.

His mother's great-grandfather was John McKeel, who was a first lieutenant in Col. Sam Drake's regiment of Westchester militia, which did good service in the war of the Revolution. John McKeel's ancestors sailed from Amsterdam, Holland, April 16, 1663, in a ship known as the "Brindled Cow," otherwise spoken of as the "Spotted Cow." They settled at Fordham, N. Y. Her paternal grandfather, Reuben Powell, lived in Fishkill, and was a soldier of the Revolution.

Dr. Wilson's boyhood was spent at Roxbury, Delaware county, where he attended the public schools. In 1867 he entered the Albany Medical College, and later the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York City, from which he was graduated in 1870. He practiced one year at Stamford, Delaware county, and then came to Pleasant Valley, where he followed his profession for some years with marked success. In 1879 he moved to Poughkeepsie, and has established a fine practice entirely on his own merits. His abilities have been widely recognized. He has been health officer of the city of Poughkeepsie, and held the same position in Poughkeepsie town for twelve years. He was in the State military service about twenty-one years; in 1871 was commissioned assistant surgeon of the 21st Regiment, and in 1883 of the 19th Separate Company, with the rank of captain.

On August 18, 1885, Dr. Wilson was married to Miss Geraldine Siever, a daughter of George Siever, a well-known citizen of Poughkeepsie, and they have one son, George Robert, born November 28, 1886. Socially, the Doctor and his wife occupy a leading position in the most exclusive circles. He belongs to the order of Elks and to the Masonic fraternity, being past master of Shekomeko Lodge No. 458, F. & A. M. His residence is No. 40 Cannon street, Poughkeepsie, New York.

GEORGE H. WILLIAMS, M. D., M. R. C. S., L. R. C. P. But few members of the medical fraternity of this locality have enjoyed the advantage of as thorough preparation for the exacting duties of their calling as has the subject of this sketch, now a successful practitioner at Fishkill. To a course in one of the best of our American medical colleges, he has added prolonged study in foreign institutions, where he has won degrees representing years of research and observation under the guidance of eminent workers in his profession.

Although he has been among us but a few years, the standing which Dr. Williams has already won makes it most appropriate that his biography should be given at some length in this volume. He was born May 30, 1860, in Johnstown, Fulton Co., N. Y., and is of English descent in both lines of ancestry. His paternal grandfather, Roger Williams, was a native of the "Merrie Isle," and followed the business of carriage manufacturing there in early manhood, and later in Sing Sing, N. Y., and Bridgeport, Conn., where he and his wife, Elizabeth Spiller, passed their last days.

Rev. W. H. Williams, our subject's father, was born in Plymouth, England, and was approaching manhood when he came to America. He received an important portion of his education under the able instruction of Rev. Dr. Coit, rector of St. John's Church, Bridgeport, Conn., who prepared him for entrance to Trinity College, Hartford, Conn. He completed his theological course at Middletown, Conn., where he was ordained to the ministry in the Episcopal Church. His first charge was at New Canaan, Fairfield Co., Conn., and his second at Johnstown, N. Y.; but some years after locating there the Civil war broke out, and he served until its close as chaplain of the 87th N. Y. V. I. On his return to the North, he became rector of the Episcopal Church at Winsted, Conn., and in 1867 he went to Dixon, Fulton Co., Ill., to take charge of the congregation there. In 1871 he accepted a call to the Church at Albany, Ga., and from 1873 to 1876 he served as rector of the Church at Pontiac, near Providence, R. I. He returned to England in 1876; in 1879 he was called as vicar to Christ's Church, Padgate, Warrington, and died there in 1889. He was, we believe, the second American clergyman who held a benefice, or "living," in the Established Church. His wife, Maria (Merritt), to whom he was married in 1848, was a daughter of John B. Merritt, a prominent resident of Bridgeport, Conn. She was born in that town, but her family was of English extraction. Five children were born of this union, of whom three died in infancy. Of the two survivors the elder, Rev. John W. Williams, is rector of St. Paul's Church (Episcopal) at East Orange, New Jersey.

Dr. G. H. Williams, the younger son, passed his youth in various places owing to the changes of location which are so common an incident in a clergyman's life. His elementary education was obtained mainly in the school of the Rev. C. M. Selleck, Norwalk, Conn., and in 1876 he entered Trinity College, Hartford, Conn., where he spent two years. In 1878 he was enrolled as a student in the medical department of Yale College, and the following year he joined his father at Warrington, England, where he pursued his professional studies at Owen's College (Medical), Manchester. Later he graduated at the College of Physicians at Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1883, and in January, 1884, he was graduated as a member of the Royal College of Surgeons at London, these honors conferring the right to use the titles commonly abbreviated to L. R. C. P. Edin., and M. R. C. S. Eng. He served one term as house surgeon of the Royal Infirmary in Manchester, and two years as house surgeon of the North Lonsdale Hospital at Barrow-in-Furness, Lancashire, and in 1887 became assistant surgeon to Dr. J. A. Hall, of Huddersfield, Yorkshire, with whom he remained one year. In 1888 he established an independent practice at Warrington, Lancashire; but returning in 1890 to his native land, he opened an office in New York City, in West Eighty-first street. During his first year there he completed his course at Yale, securing the degree of M. D. from that university. In 1894 he purchased the practice of Dr. F. T. Hopkins, at Fishkill, and has now become well established among the leading physicians of that place.

On January 12, 1893, Dr. Williams married Miss Sarah Vacher, second daughter of John Van Vorst, a prominent resident of Jersey City, N. J. Three children—Agnes Van-Vorst, Helen Merritt and Sarah Vacher—have blessed this union. The Doctor is a member of the Episcopal Church, and also belongs to the Masonic fraternity. While he takes an intelligent interest in all the questions of the day, he is not a partisan in politics.

CHARLES EDWARD LANE, M. D., a prominent and successful physician and surgeon of Poughkeepsie, is descended from one of the old families of Dutchess county, his great-grandfather, Jacob Lane, having resided here before the Revolution. Jacob Lane had two sons, Peter, and John G., our subject's grandfather, who was born May 22, 1776, and passed his life in the town of Beekman (now Unionvale). He married Betsey Emigh, and had twelve children: Thomas, Benson, Marvin, Jackson, William, Rennselaer, Jeremiah, Edward, Betsey, Hannah, Phœbe and Julia, all of whom lived in Dutchess county except Jackson, who moved to Michigan.

Edward Lane, father of our subject, received a limited education in his youth, and at an early age left home to support himself. He embarked upon a whaling voyage, and several years passed before he returned to his native land. Having a bright intellect, he spent his leisure hours in study, trying to gain as best he could the education denied him in his earlier years. On his return home he served on several boats on the Hudson as pilot and captain, and later became the owner of a schooner, which at that time was the largest that ran to Troy. In 1854 he married Jane A. Hall, a lady of Dutch descent, and daughter of Gilbert and Mary Hall. Three children were born to them, as follows: Charles Edward; Celestia A. died in infancy; and Irvin J. is a prominent physician at Sing Sing, N. Y. In 1863 Edward Lane sold his schooner after a final trip to Providence, R. I., accompanied by his family, and he then bought a farm in Seneca county, N. Y., whereon he lived three years, when he sold it and purchased his present farm in Fishkill.

The subject proper of these lines, whose name appears at the opening, was born at Clove, Dutchess county, August 16, 1855, and lived with his parents until he was nine years old, when he returned to his place of birth in order to make his home with his uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph M. Cutler, the latter being his mother's sister, and as they had no children they practically adopted our subject. At sixteen he had obtained such elementary education as was afforded by the district schools of the neighborhood, and was sent to the Wesleyan Academy, at Wilbraham, Mass.; but before his course there was completed, his uncle's failing health caused him to return and devote his entire attention to the sufferer. Upon the latter's death, in 1876, he bequeathed to our subject the old home—stead of the Hall family, and associated as it is with memories of mother, grandparents and others, Dr. Lane still retains it as a prized possession. In 1876 our subject took the business course at the Eastman Business College, Poughkeepsie. On March 28, of the following year, he married Hattie A. Yoemans, of Clove, by whom he has had two sons: Theron, born February 27, 1878, who died in infancy; and George Edward, born November 30, 1883, who is at home.

In 1880 Dr. Lane entered the New York Homeopathic Medical College, from which he was graduated in 1883, and for five years he successfully practiced his profession at Clove. In 1888 he moved to Poughkeepsie, where his abilities as general practitioner and specialist in orificial surgery won for him speedy recognition from the medical fraternity, as well as from the public. From 1889 to 1894 he was secretary of the board of examining surgeons of the U. S. Bureau of Pensions; he is a member of the Dutchess County Medical Society, and of the New York State Homeopathic Medical Society. While taking a prominent part in the social life of the city of Poughkeepsie, he still retains an active interest in local affairs at his home in Clove, and he is a member of the Christian Church there. He affiliates with Triune Lodge No. 782, F. & A. M.; Poughkeepsie Chapter No. 172, R. A. M.; Poughkeepsie Commandery No. 43, K. T.; Mecca Temple of the Mystic Shrine; Poughkeepsie Council No. 391, R. A.; with the I. O. O. F., Fallkill Lodge No. 297; and with the I. O. G. T., Lodge No. 80, and the International Supreme Lodge.

GEORGE MARVIN WELLMAN, A. M., M. D., a prominent physician of Dutchess county, residing at Dover Plains, is a descendant, in the seventh generation, of (I) Thomas Wellman,¹ who in 1640 came to America, probably from Poundsford Park, Somersetshire, England, locating in Lynn, Mass.; and also in the seventh generation, of Thomas Bliss¹ and his wife Margaret, who likewise came from England and settled in Springfield, Mass., in 1639. Thomas Wellman¹ (I) died October 20, 1672, leaving no will. His estate was settled by agreement of the heirs, which agreement was accepted by the court, and is in the records of the town of Lynn, Massachusetts.

Thomas Wellman¹ (I) married Elizabeth [surname not now known], and by her had six children, as follows: ²I Abigail²; ³II Abraham,² born about 1643, died in 1717; ⁴III Isaac,² the date of whose birth is unknown, but record says that he was living December 7, 1710; and ⁵IV Elizabeth², ⁶V Sarah², and ⁷VI Mary², all three of whom were living and of age, at the time the agreement was signed, March 22, 1673. Of this family Isaac² (I) was the great-great-great-grandfather of Dr. George M. Wellman. A descendant of Abraham Wellman² (3) is Rev. Joshua W. Wellman, D. D., whose home is at No. 117 Summer street, Malden, Mass., and who was born in Cornish, N. H., November 28, 1821. His grandmother, Althea (Ripley) Wellman, was a descendant, in the seventh generation, of Governor William Bradford, of Plymouth Colony, Mass. Rev. J. W. Wellman, D. D., is a member of the New England Historical and Genealogical Society, and has quite full records of the descendants of Thomas Wellman, the immigrant of 1640. To him Dr. Wellman, the subject of this sketch, is indebted for many of the events and dates recorded herein.

Isaac Wellman² (4) was married March 13, 1679, to Hannah Adams, who, it is thought, in 1723 (being then a widow), moved with her son, Isaac, to Norton, North Precinct (now Mansfield), Mass., as related farther on. Her children were as follows: ⁸I Isaac,³ born February 7, 1680, died September 19, 1681; ⁹II Stephen³, born September 6, 1681, died January 21, 1767, aged eighty-five; ¹⁰III Isaac (2d),³ date of birth not known, died in 1740, at Mansfield. Of this family Isaac³ (2d) (10) was the great-great-grandfather of Dr. Wellman.

Isaac Wellman³ (10) married Mary Slafter, who was born in November, 1688, the eldest of ten children of John Slafter, of Lynn, Mass. [See "Slafter Memorial," pp. 4-7]. In 1723 Mr. Wellman and family removed to Norton, North Precinct, Mass., where he purchased 118 acres of land for the sum of 236 pounds sterling, lawful money of the province of Massachusetts Bay, the deed bearing the date of "this twenty-third day of May, Anno Domini, 1723, in the ninth year of the reign of our Sovereign Lord, George of Great Britain," etc. Mrs. Mary (Slafter) Wellman died January 12, 1793, "in the 105th years of her age; a religious woman." At the time of her husband's death (1740) there were five children in the family, the youngest of whom died soon after, and the name of that child is not on record. The others were as follows: ¹¹I Isaac,⁴ baptized June 8, 1718, died in Norton, North Parish, December 30, 1804; ¹²II Ebenezer,⁴ born about 1720, died February 11, 1776, in the fifty-sixth year of his age; ¹³III Hannah,⁴ baptized May 27, 1722; and ¹⁴IV Timothy,⁴ born about 1724. Of these Isaac⁴ (11) was the great-grandfather of Dr. Wellman.

Isaac Wellman⁴ (11) was a resident of Mansfield. He married, August 4, 1748, Hannah Wellman, of Attleboro, Mass., who died November 29, 1794, at Mansfield. Her ancestry is as yet unknown. Their children were: ¹⁵I Peter,⁵ born August 7, 1750, died May 28, 1791; ¹⁶II Ebenezer,⁵ the grandfather of Dr. Wellman; ¹⁷III Mary,⁵ born

May 12, 1756; unmarried; and ¹⁸IV Sarah,⁵ born September 19, 1758, unmarried.

Ebenezer Wellman⁵ (16) was born at Mansfield, Mass., September 22, 1752, and died January, 1831. When a young man he removed to Vermont, where he purchased a farm at Grassybrook, since called Brookline, in Windham county.

Ebenezer Wellman⁴ (12) (who was born about 1720), married (first), May 28, 1747, Sarah Payson, of Stoughton, Mass.; (second) March 26, 1761, Priscilla Day, of Stoughton. Children of first marriage: ¹⁹I Joseph,⁵ born December 28, 1747; ²⁰II Sarah,⁵ born March 27, 1749; ²¹III Samuel,⁵ born March 13, 1751; ²²IV Benjamin,⁵ born March 18, 1753; ²³V Mary,⁵ born June 9, 1755; ²⁴VI Judith,⁵ born February 9, 1757; and ²⁵VII Phebe,⁵ born July 2, 1759. Children of second marriage: ²⁶VIII Oliver,⁵ born October 18, 1761; ²⁷IX Lucy,⁵ born November 30, 1763; ²⁸X Abigail,⁵ born July 21, 1767; ²⁹XI Betty,⁵ born March 24, 1769; and ³⁰XII Ebenezer,⁵ born May 4, 1772. Of these, Joseph⁵ (19) and Oliver⁵ (26) rendered military service in the Continental army, in the Revolutionary war.

Timothy Wellman⁴ (14) (who was born about 1734) married, August 14, 1755, Rachel Newland, of Norton, Mass. Their children (as far as known) were: ³¹I Timothy,⁵ born in 1757 in Mansfield, Mass., died in Brookline, Vt., March 8, 1842; ³²II John,⁵ [birth and death unknown]; ³³III a daughter [birth and death unknown]; ³⁴IV a daughter [birth and death unknown]; ³⁵V Darius [birth and death unknown]. There is no full record of their children, but it is believed that it was their eldest son, Timothy⁵ (31), who married Lucy Skinner, of Princeton, Mass. This son Timothy⁵ (31) was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and was in the fight on Dorchester Heights, Mass. There is evidence that he was "a brave, generous and energetic man, a true Christian and a public benefactor." At the close of the war he removed to Brookline, Vt. There is no record of the date of his marriage, nor of his wife's family.

Peter Wellman⁵ (15) married February 5, 1780, Hannah Capron, of Mansfield, Mass. Their children were: ³⁶I Solomon,⁶ born December 21, 1780, died at Lowell, Mass., July 13, 1851; ³⁷II Hannah⁶ born January 20, 1783, died September 1, 1874, aged ninety-one years; ³⁸III Deliverance,⁶ born February 25, 1785; ³⁹IV Christiana,⁶ born February 26, 1788, died September, 1809; ⁴⁰V Isaac,⁶ born June 8, 1790. The widow of Peter⁵ (15) married, for her second husband, Solomon Grovener, of Jamaica, Vt., September 15, 1796. They had children, and she died about 1840, in Jamaica, Vermont.

Ebenezer Wellman⁵ (16) (grandfather of Dr. Wellman) married in Mansfield, Mass., Miss Sarah Austin [no date of their marriage given, and no record of her parentage or birth]; she died in Brookline, Vt., September 16, 1803. Their children were: ⁴¹I Sarah,⁶ born November 8, 1783; ⁴²II Ebenezer,⁶ born November 11, 1787, died March 20, 1852; ⁴³III Isaac,⁶ born May 20, 1790, died November 24, 1866; ⁴⁴IV Abigail Ann,⁶ born February 25, 1797, died February 28, 1865; ⁴⁵V Marvin,⁶ born at Brookline, Vt., June 6, 1800; died at Dover Plains, N. Y., March 20, 1876.

Timothy Wellman⁵ (31), who married Lucy Skinner, had by her twelve children, as follows: ⁴⁶I Isaac,⁶ born January 1, 1784, died January 26, 1848, at Lagrange, Wyoming Co., N. Y.; ⁴⁷II Lucy,⁶ [date of birth unknown]; ⁴⁸III Lucinda,⁶ born 1790; ⁴⁹IV Asa,⁶ [birth date unknown] died 1820; ⁵⁰V William,⁶ [date of birth and death unknown]; ⁵¹VI De Louis,⁶ born 1796; ⁵²VII Hannah,⁶ born 1797; ⁵³VIII Hiram,⁶ born 1799; ⁵⁴IX Timothy,⁶ born 1801; ⁵⁵X Daniel,⁶ born November 5, 1802; ⁵⁶XI Laura,⁶ born 1804, died 1877; ⁵⁷XII Elmira,⁶ born 1809.

John Wellman⁵ (32) married at Mansfield, Mass., April 26, 1784, Cloe Wellman, who was probably youngest daughter of Elkanah Wellman and his wife, Mehitabel Wellman. Cloe Wellman was baptized in Lynnfield, Mass., May 20, 1764. John and Cloe removed to Brookline, Vt., and are reported to have had two sons (58) and (59) [names not known]. The family afterward removed to Amherst, Mass., and conducted a forge, about a mile north of the college buildings.

Solomon Wellman,⁶ (36) married Elizabeth Tripp Leeds, daughter of Thomas Leeds, of Dorchester, Mass. [date not known]; she was born September 26, 1791, and died September 4, 1849. Their thirteen children were: ⁶⁰I George,⁷ born March 16, 1810, in Boston, Mass., died April 4, 1864; ⁶¹II Eliza Ann⁷ born March 25, 1811, in Boston, died June 9, 1875; ⁶²III Caroline Capron,⁷ born August 23, 1812, married Josiah Shaw, of Abington, Mass.; ⁶³IV Lucinda Boyden,⁷ born December 3, 1813, died January 26, 1833; ⁶⁴V Mary Eliz abeth,⁷ born January 21, 1815, married Martin Bayley Pierce, of Abington, Mass.; ⁶⁵VI Clarissa Maria,⁷ born December 9, 1817; ⁶⁶VII William Lloyd,⁷ born October 23, 1819; ⁶⁷VIII Henry Ripley,⁷ born March 20, 1821, died May 14, 1848; ⁶⁸IX Charles Payson,⁷ born December 13, 1823; ⁶⁹X Otis,⁷ born January 26, 1827, died in infancy; ⁷⁰XI Harriet Angeline,⁷ born March 25, 1828, married John Adams Floyd, of Abington, Mass.; ⁷¹XII Elisha,⁷ born^o October 21, 1830, went to California; ⁷²XIII Lucinda Jane,⁷ born January 26, 1833.

Hannah Wellman⁶ (37) married April 25, 1805, Jesse George, of Wrentham, Mass. He was born October 22, 1783, and died September 5, 1851. Their eight children were: ⁷³I Emily,⁷ born October 7, 1805; ⁷⁴II Elizabeth,⁷ born November 1, 1807, died July 8, 1834; ⁷⁵III Hannah Maria,⁷ born April 8, 1811, died January 31, 1816; ⁷⁶IV John Capron,⁷ born November 4, 1813, died November 2, 1882. Resided in Boston; ⁷⁷V Lyman Augustus,⁷ born March 17, 1817, resides in Boston, Mass.; ⁷⁸VI Hiram,⁷ born June 23, 1820, resides in Wrentham, Mass.; ⁷⁹VII William Emerson,⁷ born August 11, 1823; ⁸⁰VIII Catharine Augusta,⁷ born July 20, 1826, died April 22, 1879.

Deliverance Wellman⁶ (38) married Windsor Wheelock, of Mendon, Mass. Their six children were: ⁸¹I Clara Elizabeth,⁷ born —, died September 18, 1857. She married her cousin Hiram George,⁷ (78) who survives and lives in Wrentham, Mass.; ⁸²II Charlotte,⁷ born —, married Marvel Marr, and had as children Waldo and Maria, who reside in West Thompson, Conn.; ⁸³III Nancy,⁷ [birth and death dates unknown]; ⁸⁴IV Mary,⁷ born —, married Philip Taft; had son Philip; ⁸⁵V Sylvia,⁷ born —, married Nelson Steere, and had children Adelbert and Sarah, who reside in Burrillville, R. I.; ⁸⁶VI Peter,⁷ born —, married [name of wife unknown], and had Joseph and Mary, who live in Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

Christiana Wellman⁶ (39) married Harvey George, and had Mary⁷ (87), who died in infancy.

Isaac Wellman⁶ (40) married (first) Lucinda Boyden; (second), Nancy Boyden, sisters, of Medfield, Mass. He had at least seven children by his first wife [names and births not known.] He removed to Alabama, Genesee Co., N. Y. After his first wife died he removed to Grattan, Kent Co., Michigan.

Sarah Wellman⁶ (41) married Zachariah Holden [no dates]. Their children were: ⁸⁸I Elmore⁷ [dates of birth and death unknown], married and lived in Dansville, N. Y.; ⁸⁹II Elvira⁷ [no dates given] died young.

Ebenezer⁶ (42) married Susannah Moore [no dates given]. Their ten children were: ⁹⁰I Leavit K.,⁷ born December 25, 1809; ⁹¹II Elvin M.,⁷ born August 10, 1811; ⁹²III Peter Dallas,⁷ born March 9, 1813; ⁹³IV Norman Andrews,⁷ born April 15, 1815; ⁹⁴V Mary Moore,⁷ born June 8, 1817; ⁹⁵VI Sarah Austin,⁷ born September 22, 1819; ⁹⁶VII Abigail Marsh,⁷ born October 23, 1821; ⁹⁷VIII Marvin,⁷ born November 1, 1823, died in Illinois; ⁹⁸IX Luke,⁷ born January 31, 1826; ⁹⁹X Chelis,⁷ born 1829. The first four were born in Brookline, Vt., the next four in Montgomery, Vt., and the other two in Avery's Gore, Vermont.

Isaac Wellman⁶ (43) married July 12, 1812, in Brookline, Vt., Kesiah Robbins, daughter of William and Kesiah (Benson) Robbins. She was born July 6, 1792, and died November 24, 1866. They had only one child, ¹⁰⁰I Everett Perry Wellman,⁷ born in Brookline, Vt., January 5, 1813, died in Brookline, Vt., February 22, 1891.

Abigail Ann Wellman⁶ (44) married June 28, 1814, Allen G. Andrews, of Providence, R. I. They emigrated in 1814, to Hardin county, Ky., and in 1828 removed to Monmouth, Warren county, Ill., where they spent the remainder of their lives. Their ten children were: ¹⁰¹I Sarah Elizabeth⁷, born October 10, 1817, married April 1, 1834, Nathaniel Hopper; ¹⁰²II Allen Talbot (1st),⁷ born March 10, 1819, died August 27, 1829; ¹⁰³III Abby Ann,⁷ born November 28, 1821, married March 20, 1845, Norman Buck; ¹⁰⁴IV Roland Green,⁷ born March 17, 1823, married November 2, 1848, Ann Carter, and died August 4, 1849; ¹⁰⁵V Alexine Southgate,⁷ born February 3, 1827, married October 12, 1847, Elvin M. Wellman; ¹⁰⁶VI Lydia Beals,⁷ born March 2, 1828, married April 2, 1845, Seth Gates; ¹⁰⁷VII Cynthia Jane,⁷ born October 13, 1829, died August 13, 1843; ¹⁰⁸VIII Elkanah W.,⁷ born August 26, 1831, died March 19, 1834; ¹⁰⁹IX Lusannah R.,⁷ born October 17, 1835, married February 25, 1853, William Ward; ¹¹⁰X Allen Talbot (2nd),⁷ born April 19, 1837, married; lives in Monmouth, Illinois.

Marvin Wellman⁶ (45) (the father of Dr. George M. Wellman), in April, 1822, became a resident of Springfield, Mass., where he spent most of his life, engaged in conducting a store at the corner of Maine and William streets. In 1866 he sold his property in Springfield, and returned to Vermont, buying a home in Fayetteville (near Brookline, his native town), where he lived until 1872, when he brought his wife to Dover Plains, N. Y., making his home with his son, Dr. Wellman. On June 8, 1826, he married Miss Mary Bliss, a daughter of Zenas and Mary (Babcock) Bliss, of Springfield, Mass. [See the Bliss genealogy as given farther on]. The children of Marvin⁶ (45) and Mary Bliss Wellman: ¹¹¹I Abigail,⁷ born June 21, 1827, did not marry; ¹¹²II Mary Bliss,⁷ born October 11, 1829, married September 9, 1861; ¹¹³III Isaac Austin (first),⁷ born December 11, 1831, died February 25, 1833; ¹¹⁴IV Isaac Austin (second),⁷ born April 27, 1834; ¹¹⁵V George Marvin⁷ (the subject of this sketch), born February 24, 1837; ¹¹⁶VI Laura Bliss,⁷ born August 5, 1839, did not marry; ¹¹⁷VII Emma Lucretia,⁷ born July 18, 1843, married July 18, 1888, James Y. Robinson, of Kansas, a veteran Union soldier of the war of the Rebellion. No children. They reside in Queneino, Kansas.

Isaac Wellman⁶ (46), son of Timothy⁵ (31) and Lucy Skinner Wellman, of Brookline, Vt., married April 21, 1808, Sally Bixby, who was born in Brookline, March 12, 1787. In 1824 they removed to Friendship, Allegany Co., N. Y. Thence they removed to Wyoming county, N. Y., where they spent the remainder of their lives. They were deeply religious people and belonged to the Baptist denomination. Isaac⁶ (46) was a second cousin of Isaac⁶ (43). There were two branches of Wellmans in Brookline, Vt., Isaac⁶ (46) was a deacon and preacher, and several of his sons were elected deacons. Their children: ¹¹⁸I Chauncey,⁷ born July 16, 1810; ¹¹⁹II Nelson H.,⁷ born April 21, 1815, died December 21, 1885; ¹²⁰III Sarah C.,⁷ born June 14, 1817, died 1885; ¹²¹IV Alvin,⁷ born May 17, 1822; ¹²²V Miriam Delight,⁷ born September 26, 1824, in Friendship, N. Y.; ¹²³VI Harvey,⁷ born April 17, 1827. The first four were born in Brookline.

Everett Perry Wellman⁷ (100) married Electa Butterfield, daughter of Samuel and Polly (Miller) Butterfield, at Newfane, Vt., August 13, 1840. She was born September 10, 1813, and died June 9, 1889. Everett Perry⁷ (100) was a quiet, industrious farmer, universally respected; and honored by his fellow townsmen by a seat in the Vermont House of Representatives. Their children: ¹²⁴I Mary Abby Ann,⁸ born October 20, 1846, at Brookline, Vt.; ¹²⁵II Martha Electa,⁸ born July 9, 1849, at Brookline, Vt.; Mary Abby Ann⁸ (124), married at Brookline, November 16, 1882, Judge Andrew Asa Wyman, who was born March 12, 1830, and died suddenly November 21, 1894, of heart disease, upon the steps of the capitol at Montpelier, Vt., where he was in attendance as a member of the House of Representatives. They had no children. Martha Electa⁸ (125) married, March 25, 1895, at Athens, Vt., Rev. George Henry Bolster, who was born in Alstead, N. H., February 26, 1860.

Mary Bliss Wellman⁷ (112) married September 9, 1861, at Quincy, Ill., John Sprout, a native of Pennsylvania, a substantial farmer and stock breeder. After their marriage they removed to Monmouth, Ill., where they have since remained. Their children: ¹²⁶I John Wellman,⁸ born September, 1864; ¹²⁷II Mammie,⁸ born August, 1867.

Isaac Austin Wellman (second)⁷ (114) married November 5, 1879, at Solomon Rapids, Kans., Mrs. Sarah Mitchell, of the same place. Mr. Wellman is a merchant, and resides at Centropolis, Kans. They have had only one child, ¹²⁸I Emma May,⁸ born July 15, 1882, at Centropolis, Kansas.

Dr. George Marvin Wellman⁷ (115) married, at Otego, N. Y., on September 8, 1869, Miss Jeannie S. Cole, daughter of James H. and Augusta Cole, substantial farmers of Otego, Otsego Co., N. Y. She was born at Otego, N. Y., July 3, 1849, and died at Dover Plains, N. Y., December 13, 1886. Children of Dr. George M.⁷ (115) and Jeannie S. Cole Wellman: ¹²⁹I Marion Augusta,⁸ born November 25, 1870; ¹³⁰II Fred Browning,⁸ born August 31, 1877, died June 12, 1878; ¹³¹III Maude Sherman,⁸ born December 24, 1884. Marion Augusta Wellman⁸ (129) married at Dover Plains, N. Y., July 1, 1896, Rev. Edward Duncan Kelsey (a sketch of whom follows). They have one child ¹³²I Marion Wellman Kelsey,⁹ born at Sharon, Conn., May 17, 1897.

Dr. George M. Wellman, the subject of this sketch passed his early life in Springfield, Mass. In the high school of that city he prepared for college, and in 1857 he entered Amherst College, where, working his own way by teaching school, he completed the classical course, graduating in 1861, receiving the degree of A. B. Five years later the degree of A. M. was conferred upon him. In 1861 he entered the government hospital service at Washington, D. C., as ward master in Lincoln Hospital, serving until 1864, when he obtained an appointment in the Ordnance Office of the War department, where he continued for four years. In the meantime he had taken up the study of medicine in the Georgetown Medical College, Washington, D. C., where he graduated in 1868 with high honors, delivering the valedictory at the commencement exercises in Wall's Opera House in that city. Proceeding to New York City, he then took a one-year's course of study at the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

In 1869 Dr. Wellman located at Dover Plains, Dutchess county, where he soon built up a large and lucrative practice. His plain common sense, good judgment, thorough knowledge of medicine and skill in surgery, at once won for him the confidence of the people, and his success was an assured fact. He is one of the prominent members of the Dutchess County Medical Society. As a citizen he stands deservedly high, and has often been urged to accept public office, but cares little for political preferment.

Rev. EDWARD DUNCAN KELSEY, who married Miss Marion A. Wellman, is a son of Lysander and Mary (Duncan) Kelsey, the former of whom was born October 1, 1817, at Rutland, Vt., the latter on March 4, 1826, in Maysville, Ky. They were married May 30, 1847, and became the parents of the following children: Rev. Francis Duncan, born February 15, 1849, resides at Oberlin, Ohio; Charles Duncan, born August 25, 1850, died August, 1874; Rev. Edward Duncan, born January 16, 1853, at Wheelersburg, Ohio, resides in Sharon, Conn.; Elizabeth Duncan, born March 15, 1855, married to George S. Van Every, of Portland, Oregon, resides at Los Angeles, Cal.; Caroline Duncan, born October 31, 1860, married to Charles H. Hauks, of Washington, D. C., resides at Tacoma, Wash.; George Duncan, born August 28, 1864, has been twice married, resides at Meadville, Penn.; and Frederick Duncan, born June 8, 1866, married and resides at Juneau, Alaska. The father of this family died May 24, 1889, at Portland, Oregon, where the mother is yet residing.

Rev. Edward Duncan Kelsey removed, in 1857, to Columbus, Ohio, where he graduated from the high school; from 1870 to 1874 he attended Marietta (Ohio) College, graduating in the latter year; in 1875 he entered Andover (Mass.) Theological Seminary, where he remained two years. In 1877 he went to Ash-ville, N. Y., where for two years he was pastor of the Congregational Church; then, in 1879, entered Yale Theological Seminary, New Haven, Conn., graduating there in 1881. From 1882 to 1884 he was settled as pastor at Almont, Mich.; from 1884 to 1885 was assistant pastor of the Seventh Presbyterian Church, New York City; from 1885 to 1889 he was pastor of the First Presbyterian Church at Cutchogue, L. I., N. Y.; from 1889 to 1890 was settled at Prospect, Ohio; from 1890 to 1894 was pastor of the Presbyterian Church in South Amenia, N. Y. In 1894 he became principal of the high school at Sharon, Conn., in which position he has since remained. Mr. Kelsey has been twice married, first time on June 29, 1881, to Miss Julia C. Baldwin, of New Haven, Conn. She was born at Milford, Conn., February 23, 1857, and died February 1, 1894, at South Amenia, N. Y. The children of this union were: Frank Childs, born July 19, 1882, died September 3, 1883; Arthur Baldwin, born September 10, 1884; Florence Duncan, born October 13, 1886; and Josephine Dykeman, born July 25, 1893.

The Bliss Genealogy—Zenas Bliss was a descendant of Samuel Bliss, the youngest son of Thomas and Margaret Bliss, who settled in Springfield, Mass., in 1639. Samuel's son, Ebenezer Bliss, married Mary Gaylord, of Madison, Conn., January, 1707. Ebenezer's son, Jedediah Bliss, was born February 7, 1708, and married Rachel Sheldon July 2, 1733, and had by her eight children, and nine by his second wife—seventeen in all. They were: Rachel, born July 24, 1734; Moses, born January 16, 1735; Jedediah, Jr., born April 20, 1738; Mary, born December 11, 1739; Lucy, born March 9, 1741; Lucy (second), born November 24, 1742; Aaron, born 1745; Patience, born October 24, 1747.

Jedediah Bliss, Sr., married his second wife, Miriam Hitchcock, August 19, 1748, and had by her nine children, viz: Miriam, born May 17, 1749, married Silas Bliss; Ebenezer, born January 26, 1750, married (first) Miss Nevens, and (second) Sarah Ferry; Reuben, born November 3, 1751, killed in the war of the Revolution; Alexander, born October 11, 1753; Zenas (grandfather of Dr. Wellman), born February 3, 1756, married Mary Babcock; Martha, born December 7, 1757, married a Mr. Gridley; Isaac, born August 10, 1760, married Welthy Butters; Jacob, born March 12, 1763, married Mary Collins, who was born in 1765; Naomi, born October 22, 1766, married a Mr. Kneeland.

Zenas Bliss (grandfather to Dr. Wellman) married Mary Babcock, December, 1784 (she was born August 20, 1758, and died September 25, 1824), and had by her ten children, all born in Springfield, Mass., at the old homestead, corner of Main and William streets. They were as follows: Horace, born February 13, 1786, died March 26, 1844; Elisha, born November 25, 1787, died at Hartford, Conn., January 1, 1881, aged ninety-three years; Abigail and Harvey (1) (twins), born November 24, 1789 (Abigail died March 5, 1807, and Harvey (1) died December 3, 1789); Harvey (2), born March 27, 1792, died November 23, 1869; Lucretia, born May 3, 1794, died unmarried February 26, 1844; John B., born February 17, 1797, died February 22, 1884, aged eighty-seven years; Isaac, born September 8, 1798, died March 5, 1892, aged ninety-three years; Mary (the mother of Dr. Wellman), born January 8, 1803, married Marvin Wellman, June 8, 1826, died March 10, 1877; Emeline, born February 19, 1805, died February 2, 1806.

Of these children of Zenas and Mary Babcock Bliss: Horace was twice married, and had by his first wife three children, Eliza, Mary and Emily; and by his second wife, had also three—Horace, Charles and Lucretia. Elisha married Almira Sikes, and by her had eight children—Elisha, Almira, Harriet, Frank, Edward, Richard, Mary, and Elizabeth. Harvey married Abbie Grout, of Putney, Windham Co., Vt., and by her had eight children—Edwin, Marshall, Isaac, Harvey, Emma, Laura, Sylvester and Samuel; of these, Edwin and Isaac were for many years missionaries in Armenia. John B. married Maria Parker, and had six children—Roswell, Charles, Abbie, Hiland, Sarah and Earle. Isaac married Eleanor Titus, and had seven children—Horace C., Isaac R., Elisabeth L., Eleanor M., Samuel B., Ephraim T., and Edgar. Mary married Marvin Wellman, and had seven children, as shown in the Wellman genealogy.

JOSEPH MARTIN FAMILY. The village of Red Hook, Dutchess county, was in the earliest times a favorite point with the Dutch settlers of this region, and it boasts of one of the oldest houses in the State of New York, built for a residence by Hendrick Martin, who crossed the ocean in 1727. On his arrival he took a lease from the Beekman patentee, and at once erected this house, which he located about one-eighth of a mile from the old New York and Albany post road, and adjacent to the present village of Red Hook. It has received alterations from time to time, but parts of the original structure still stand. In 1751 he leased other lands adjoining, from the Van-Benthuyssen patentee.

When Hendrick Martin's son, Gotlob, was married, the father cut a big stake, and walking across the farm drove it into the ground, remarking to the young bridegroom that it was time for him to "swarm for himself," and upon this spot Gotlob built a plain but substantial stone house, which stands to-day. The carpenters were putting up its rafters while the Declaration of Independence was being read in Philadelphia, July 4, 1776. To this house, in 1789, John Martin, son of Gotlob, brought his bride, Isabella Fulton, a relative of the famous Robert Fulton. It had been willed by Gotlob to his grandchildren, but the sons would not take it from their mother, and after her death Edward Martin, a son of John, purchased it for a home for his sister, who, like himself, never married. He was born February 18, 1811, and lived beyond the ordinary limit, dying December 3, 1893. He made a fortune as a civil engineer by taking his pay in land from a railroad company he was employed by, some of which property now lies within the present boundaries of Chicago.

To John and Isabella Martin eleven children were born, viz.: Philip, Michael S., Augustus, Henry G., Robert, Claudius G., James Edward, Joseph, John and Serena. Joseph Martin was born February 8, 1814, and was educated in the schools of the neighborhood. At an early age he learned the trade of tanner and currier; afterward studied law and practiced until his death, November 25, 1889. He was identified with the old militia, holding all the offices, from second-lieutenant to colonel, both inclusive, in the 111th Regiment New York Militia, and he served a short time in the war of the Rebellion. On January 10, 1837, he was married to Miss Margarite S. Barrenger, of Red Hook, and had ten children, whose names, with dates of birth, are as follows: (1) Frederick A., December 7, 1837; (2) John D., October 21, 1840; (3) Joseph F., April 15, 1842; (4) Claudius E., March 13, 1844; (5) Augustus, October 3, 1845 (died April 20, 1846); (6) Gertrude A., June 8, 1847; (7) Isabella F., May 15, 1849; (8) Elizabeth B., July 20, 1852; (9) Harriet A., January 7, 1854; (10) Sarah S., August 6, 1857.

Joseph Martin

All the boys in this family served in the Civil war, and one, John D., corporal of Company B, 7th N. J. V. I., died in the army January 3, 1862. Claudius E., at the outbreak of the Rebellion, offered himself as a recruit for a New Jersey regiment, but was refused on account of his youth, being under sixteen years of age. Returning home, however, he obtained his father's written consent, and went out as one of the original members of the Fifth New York Cavalry. At the organization of his regiment as a veteran regiment, he re-enlisted and served until the close of the war. He had a horse shot under him, and was wounded and captured at Orange Court House, but was re-captured by his own regiment the same day. Returning home at the close of the struggle, he settled upon a farm in Warners, Onondaga county, where he still resides. Joseph F. (or J. Fielding) enlisted at Trenton, N. J., April 20, 1861, in Company C, First N. J. Militia, for three months; re-enlisted at Trenton, August 27, 1861, this time in Company B, 7th N. J. V. I., for three years; again enlisted, this time at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., September 3, 1864, for one year, and October 24, 1864, was commissioned as first lieutenant in the 9th N. Y. S. V. I., and was honorably discharged September 14, 1865. Prior to the war he had finished his studies in Poughkeepsie, and after his return he studied law in the West, then practiced his profession in Illinois, South Dakota and New York State. While in Illinois he was elected justice of the peace in the town of Seward, Kendall county, and was commissioned as such by Gov. Shelby M. Culm April 28, 1881. On November 15, 1884, he was admitted to practice as an attorney and counselor at law in Sully county, Dakota (now South Dakota), of which county he was elected county judge November 3, 1885. On March 1, 1889, he was admitted to practice as attorney and counselor at law in the United States District Court of the Territory of Dakota, at Huron (now South Dakota), and October 8, 1890, was appointed by the board of county commissioners of Sully county, South Dakota, as a member of the board of insanity. On November 16, 1892, he was admitted to practice in the superior court of Dakota, at Pierre; on December 6, 1892, was admitted to practice in the U. S. District and Circuit Courts of South Dakota, at Sioux Falls; on May 11, 1893, was admitted to practice in the Supreme Court of the State of New York at Poughkeepsie, and October 22, 1894, was admitted to practice in the Supreme Court of the North Grand Division of Illinois, at Ottawa, Illinois.

Frederick A. Martin entered the service on the organization of the 115th N. Y. V., in August, 1862; was wounded and captured at the surrender of Harpers Ferry, September, 1862, and paroled with the surrendered garrison. At Olustee, Florida, February, 1864, he was wounded and left on the field, but escaped with the assistance of mounted officers of his regiment. For a time he was detailed in charge of commissary stores at Hilton Head, S. C., and later as inspector of the Port of Beaufort, S. C., then returning to his regiment served until the close of the war. In his youth he had learned the trade of carpenter and builder, and on returning home he engaged for five years in car building; then entered the office of the Boston & Albany R. R., remaining some twenty-five years, and he has since carried on a drug store at Ford Edward, N. Y. In October, 1865, he was married to Miss Susan L. Near, of Red Hook, and has one son, Joseph Louis, who is now in partnership with him. He is a member of several Masonic bodies in Albany, N. Y., including Temple Commandery No. 2, K. T., and is commander of the G. A. R. Post No. 491, Fort Edward, N. Y. Joseph Louis, his son, is also a member of various Masonic bodies, including Cyprus Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, Albany, N. Y., and is also a graduate of the Albany College of Pharmacy.

Two of the daughters married, Gertrude A. and Isabella F., the former of whom is living in Bayonne, N. J., the latter in Brooklyn, N. Y. The Misses Elizabeth B., Harriet A. and Sarah S. Martin occupy an elegant residence on the site of the old homestead of the Barringer family, to which their mother belonged, and have always held a prominent place in the most refined and exclusive social circles.

WILLIAM BOGLE, president of the Dutchess Print Works, located at Wappingers Falls, Dutchess county, is one of the best known and most highly esteemed residents of the county. This extensive plant was established in 1832, and has been engaged in printing and dyeing cotton goods for over sixty years. Some 1,150 hands are employed in the works, all of whom reside in or near the village, forming a goodly portion of the population. Mr. Bogle has been connected with the establishment for thirty-nine years, fifteen as its president, and it has been re-organized three times during the last twenty years in order to suit the times and the market.

Mr. Bogle was born near Manchester, England, September 7, 1834, a son of John Bogle, who was born in the same locality in 1799, and lived until 1880. He was a color-mixer in a cloth-printing business for sixty-five years. At Middleton parish church, Lancashire, he married Ann Brooks, a native of Ainsworth, England, and they reared a family of ten children, our subject being seventh in the order of birth. None of the family except William ever came to America. James Bogle, the father of John, was born in Scotland, whence he went to England, and in 1805 established a print works in Lancashire. He was one of the earliest master printers in that country.

Our subject lived in England until he was twenty-three years of age, and there learned the business of color-mixing with his father. On July 22, 1857, he was married to Miss Selina Hoyle, of Manchester, and on the first of August following sailed for the United States, reaching Wappingers Falls, Dutchess county, August 14, 1857. He came to that place under a contract with the Dutchess Print Works, and for nine years was employed by them as a color-mixer. He then became assistant superintendent, holding that position for eleven years, and on April 1, 1876, was made superintendent of the works, which office he now holds. Mr. and Mrs. Bogle have three children: John, born in 1858, has charge of the cambric department in the print works; Alice, born in 1860, is at home with her parents; and Mary, born in 1862, married John Macauley, who is an engraver in the print works. Our subject is a Republican in his political views, and all the family are members of the Episcopal Church.

Mr. Bogle, as may be inferred from the foregoing sketch, holds an important place in the community. He stands high with his business associates as a man of ability, strict integrity and of progressive ideas. In all the relations of life he has fulfilled his duties with fidelity, and his enterprise and industry have brought him financial prosperity as well as the good will of his fellow men. No citizen of Wappingers Falls is more deserving of respect and esteem or more worthy a place in this volume.

ANTHONY BRIGGS (deceased) was one of the leading agriculturists of the town of Pleasant Valley, Dutchess county, and one of her well-to-do citizens. He was widely known and honored, and in his death Dutchess county, in whose welfare he always took a commendable interest, has lost a valued citizen. His integrity of character, unbounded benevolence, and never failing courtesy, made him beloved by all who had the honor of his acquaintance.

Mr. Briggs was born in the town of Pine Plains, Dutchess county, May 25, 1829, and his father, who was a son of Anthony Briggs, was also born in that town, March 25, 1800. The family is of English lineage. The father married Clarissa Benham, who was also of English descent, and a native of New Haven Conn., and they became the parents of three children: Elizabeth, wife of John H. Jewett who is living retired in Poughkeepsie; Harriet wife of Benjamin White, a farmer of Wisconsin; and Anthony, subject of this sketch. The parents began house-keeping in the town of Pine Plains, on a farm, but later removed to Washington town, Dutchess county, where they reared their family.

Our subject passed the first three years of his life in his native town, after which he was taken to Washington town, where he received good education, and became a surveyor, which business he followed in early life, being three years thus employed in Wisconsin. On February 24, 1852, Mr. Briggs was united in marriage with Miss Hannah White, who was born in the town of Washington, April 9, 1830, and a daughter of Ethan White, who was also born there, the date of his birth being October 1, 1802. Her mother, who bore the maiden name of Myra Northrope, was born in the town of Amenia, Dutchess county, April 9, 1800, and after her marriage with Mr. White they located on a farm in the town of Washington where they reared their seven children as follows: Mary, wife of Hiram T. Beecher, farmer of Pleasant Valley town; Benjamin, agriculturist of Wisconsin; Abner (deceased who was a farmer of Washington town, Dutchess county; Seneca, also a deceased farmer of Washington town; Catherine, wife of Edward R. Kinney, of the same town; Hannah, widow of our subject; and Davis, who operates a farm in Washington town. In politics the father was a Republican, and he and his wife belonged to the Methodist Church; he died in 1871, she in 1868. Abner White, the paternal grandfather of Mrs. Briggs, was a native of the town of Washington, and a son of Charles White, who was a descendant of Peregrine White, the first white male child born in America. Her maternal grandfather, Benjamin Northrope, a native of Redding, Conn., was the son of Samuel Northrope, who was of English descent, and became one of the leading farmers of the town of Amenia. Both the White and Northrope families were very prominent in this part of the State.

For fifteen years after his marriage, Mr. Briggs engaged in farming in the town of Washington, but in 1869 he removed to the farm now owned by his widow, which comprises 300 acres of good land. There he carried on general farming in connection with surveying, and was very successful in his undertakings. In the family were three children: Davis W., of whom special mention will presently be made; Mary E., who died at the age of three years; and HOMER E., a well-known lawyer of Poughkeepsie. Mr. Briggs was a staunch advocate of the policy pursued by the Republican party, held the office of supervisor for two terms, was justice of the peace in the town of Washington, eleven years, and five years in Pleasant Valley, ever discharging his duties with promptness and fidelity. While in Wisconsin he was elected superintendent of schools in the town of Empire, and after returning to Washington he taught school several months. The whole community mourns with the bereaved family the taking away of this noble-hearted and generous man, who died February 5, 1895. He was a sincere member of the Methodist Church, to which his widow also belongs.

DAVIS W. BRIGGS, the eldest son of this honored couple, was born February 24, 1853, in the town of Washington, Dutchess county, and received his education in both Washington and Pleasant Valley towns. He is now operating the old farm in Washington, and also the homestead farm in Pleasant Valley. On October 18, 1882, he married Irene Bower, who was born February 20, 1858, in Pleasant Valley, daughter of Joseph and Hannah (Kirk) Bower, and four children have been born to this union: Anthony J., Mary Alida, Harold G. and Norton Augustus. In politics he is a Republican. His wife is a member of the Episcopal Church of Pleasant Valley.

TRISTRAM COFFIN is a descendant of the Coffyns, of Devonshire, England. The Manor of Alwington in that county was assigned to Sir Richard Coffyn by William the Conqueror in the eleventh century. It has remained in the family ever since, and is now known as Portledge Manor. It is located on the coast near Plymouth, and contains about four thousand acres. The family mansion and one of the churches on the estate are ancient stone buildings. Many of the memorial stones of members of the family are in this old church.

Tristram Coffyn, the first of the race who settled in America, came to Massachusetts in 1642. He lived for a time in Haverhill and Newburyport, and removed to Nantucket in 1660. In company with nine others, he purchased the Island from the Crown and the Indians. He was prominent among the early settlers, and became chief magistrate of the Island. He died there in 1681. His letters to Sir Edmund Andros, the English Colonial Governor of New York, are preserved in the State archives in Albany.

The accurate genealogical records existing in Nantucket, enable members of its old families to trace their lineage back to England in unbroken lines. The names of the successive sires of the nine generations of the Coffin family, ancestors of Tristram Coffin, were as follows: Nicholas, Peter, Tristram (the pioneer), John (who died at Martha's Vineyard in 1711), Peter, Tristram, Abishai (who settled in the town of Washington, Dutchess county, in 1774), Robert and Alexander H. With the exception of the last, these names are inscribed on the family monument in the burial ground of the old Friends' meeting house at Nine Partners (now Millbrook), New York.

Alexander H. Coffin, father of Tristram, died in Poughkeepsie in 1890. His wife, Jane Vincent, also died there, in 1871. They had three children: Owen Vincent Coffin, ex-Governor of Connecticut, who resides in Middletown, in that State; Tristram; and Harriet M. Valentine (deceased). Through his mother,

Mr. Coffin is related to the Vincent, Fowler and Vail families of Dutchess county. Capt. Israel Vail, of the Revolutionary army, was one of his ancestors. Through his father he is connected with the Vanderburgh and Bentley families. Henry Vanderburgh, his ancestor five generations back, was one of the early settlers in Poughkeepsie. James, son of Henry Vanderburgh, who was Mr. Coffin's direct ancestor four generations removed, lived and died in the town of Beekman. He was a colonel in the Revolutionary war. Washington mentions in his journal having dined at Col. Vanderburgh's on several occasions, while the army was encamped above the Highlands.

Tristram Coffin was born in the town of Unionvale, and attended the district school, and, later, Amenia Seminary. He left home at an early age, and was in business in New York for several years. He made a number of trips through the South and West before the war of the Rebellion. After the outbreak of the war, he studied law in the office of Joseph W. Gott, of Goshen, Orange Co., N. Y. Leaving Goshen in 1863, he entered the Albany Law School, from which he was graduated in 1864. He then went to Poughkeepsie, where he was a law student in the office of the late Hon. Allard Anthony for one year before commencing practice. In 1870 he was elected district attorney of Dutchess county, and held the office for three years. In 1881 Mr. Coffin delivered the principal oration at the meeting of the representatives of the Coffin family of the United States held at Nantucket. He has been asked to compete for different public positions, and to accept office in monied and other corporations, but has invariably declined. For about twenty years he devoted himself untiringly to the practice of his profession in Poughkeepsie, in which he was successful from the outset. While in the midst of a lucrative practice, and in the prime of life, he surprised his clients and friends by refusing to receive any new business. For several years, although he has kept an office for the transaction of his duties as trustee of a number of estates, he has been absent much of the time. He remained a bachelor until 1890, when he married Miss Ida M. Gardner, a native of Michigan, and a descendant, of the eleventh generation, from Sir Thomas Gardner, of Yorkshire, England.

Mr. Coffin is a gentleman of sterling character, refined tastes, an ardent lover of nature and an enthusiastic traveler. He has seen much of his own country, and has made a number of trips to Europe and the East. He has been a frequent contributor to newspapers and periodicals, and possesses marked literary ability. He is a collector of antiques, rare books and autographs. His collection of manuscripts is especially rich in Colonial and Revolutionary letters and documents.

Mr. Coffin has an attractive country home on the Hudson, at Milton, Ulster county, where he usually spends the summer.—F. C. VALENTINE.

EDWIN JUCKETT, who was called from this earth on the 2d of February, 1896, had spent his entire life in Dutchess county, and for many years was a leading blacksmith and wagon-maker of Stanfordville, where his death occurred. His honorable upright life had secured for him the respect of all.

Mr. Juckett was born in the town of Amenia September 24, 1824, and was one of the three children of Lewis M. and Juliette (Bennett) Juckett, the others being Stephen and Sally, both now deceased. On both the paternal and maternal sides he was of French descent, and his father, who was born in Kent, Conn., became a prominent farmer of the town of Amenia, Dutchess county, where Edwin passed his school days. On leaving the parental roof in 1844, he began working for S. O. Rogers Sr., in an axle factory at Stanfordville, and five years later bought the Daniel Young place near that village, where he erected a house and shop, the former of which is still standing. The shop was burned in March, 1873, but he at once rebuilt, and there carried on blacksmithing and wagon-making up to the time of his death—a period of almost half a century.

On October 31, 1849, Mr. Juckett was married to Miss Elsie A. Gildersleeve, daughter of Joseph Gildersleeve, a woolen manufacturer of Stanfordville. Her birth occurred April 30, 1824, and she died on March 17, 1874. In their family were five children: (1) Mary B., after graduating from D. C. Wright's private school at Poughkeepsie, N. Y. engaged in teaching until her mother's death after which she kept house for her father, and still makes her home in Stanfordville. (2) George B., after learning the blacksmith trade with his father, followed the trade at Stanfordville and Wassaic, in the town of Amenia, f several years. He then engaged in the milk business with his uncle in Brooklyn, N. Y., with whom he remained several years. Later he studied stenography under the tuition of Prof. T. J. Ellinwood, for twenty-five years the official reporter of Henry Ward Beecher's sermons. In 1883, after completing his study of stenography, he entered the employ of Col. George Bliss, of New York City, a well-known lawyer and legal author, as his stenographer and private secretary, with whom he remained twelve years. During the year 1895, while Mr. Bliss was traveling in Europe, he was in the employ of the Grant Monument Association, under Gen. Horace Porter, president of the Association, and the present ambassador to France. During this year Gen. Porter dictated to him his "Campaigning with Grant."

Upon Col. Bliss' return from Europe he again entered his employ, with whom he still remains.

3) William M., a native of the town of Stanord, attended school there, and began his business career as a clerk in a store at Bangall, N. Y. He then held a similar position in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., after which he became traveling salesman for his uncle, who was connected with the wholesale dry-goods house of Tefft, Weller & Co., of New York City. At the end of three years he left this firm to accept position as salesman for the wholesale dry-goods house of Butler, Clapp & Co., with whom he remained seven years. He then became connected with the dry-goods house of J. S. Jaffray & Co., remaining with them until their failure. He is now a traveling salesman for Dunham, Buckley & Co., wholesale dry-goods merchants at No. 340 Broadway, New York City. He married Margaret Husted, and they now make their home at Attlebury, N. Y.

(4) DeWitt, after following the blacksmith trade for several years, then became traveling salesman for Joseph Ruppert, a wholesale hardware merchant at No. 212 Suffolk street, Brooklyn, N. Y. He married Miss Elma Green, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., by whom he has had three children: Elsie A. and Lizzie B. (both deceased), and William. He resides at No. 313 Glenmore avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

(5) Carrie E., after graduating from the Eastman Business College, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., entered the employ of Orvis Bros. & Co., bankers and brokers, of No. 44 Broadway, New York City, as stenographer, remaining with them eight years. She is now the wife of George C. Trefry, and two children bless their union: Edwin J. and George Clifford. They reside at No. 36 Morton street, New York City.

PPETER BURHANS (deceased). The subject of this sketch, who was formerly a well-known wagon manufacturer of Poughkeepsie, was born in Pleasant Valley, Dutchess county, January 2, 1812, and was the son of William and Mary (Smith) Burhans. Jacob Burhans arrived in this country prior to December, 1660. Jans, a son, who arrived in April, 1663, married Miss Helena Traphagan, and from them the subject of this memoir is descended through Barent and Johannes and Petrus.

Our subject had no schooling to speak of, but was a man of good mechanical ability. He spent his younger days in Pleasant Valley, coming to Poughkeepsie when about eighteen years old to learn the wagon maker's trade. He worked as a journeyman only a few years, and then started in business for himself in the city, later forming a partnership which proved somewhat disastrous. About the year 1844 he carried on business at No. 377 (now 385) Main street. In 1851 or 1852 he purchased the premises, and continued to carry on business there until the spring of 1877, when he retired on account of ill health, and had the building altered to suit other business. In 1855 he bought the adjoining lot, and put up a frame building which was used by various parties as a blacksmith shop till the summer of 1877, when it was demolished to give place to a more substantial brick building—Nos. 387½ and 389 Main street. Both buildings are still in the possession of the family. He was a self-made man, very thorough, careful, and painstaking, and his work had the reputation of being the very best.

Mr. Burhans was twice married, his first wife being Miss Johanna B. Smith, a daughter of Uriah Smith, a farmer in the town of Hyde Park (who died a comparatively young man), and niece of Judge Isaac Smith, of Lithgow. She died in 1859. To Mr. and Mrs. Burhans were born three children: Albert, who died young; Ella, who married Isaac Germond; and Mary, who died in 1875, aged twenty-three years. His second marriage was, in 1860, to Miss Eliza Pinckney, daughter of Jacob Pinckney, of Bethel, Sullivan Co., N. Y. Our subject was a Republican, and took quite an interest in political matters. Although receiving but little schooling, he supplemented it with a great deal of reading, and was well informed on current topics of the day. He was a member of the Methodist Church, and was early in life associated with the sons of temperance, having strong views and ideas regarding total abstinence. He died in 1887, in his seventy-sixth year. Mrs. Germond has one daughter, Clara, now (1897) eight years old.

William Burhans was a farmer by occupation. He married Miss Mary Smith, and they had the following children: Henry, Elmira, Peter, William (2), Edwin S., Charles, John, Willitt (who died in 1894), and George H. (who lives in Pleasant Valley, and is the only survivor). William (Sen.) died about 1855.

ISAAC GERMOND, mentioned above, is a member of one of the very oldest families in the county, who formerly owned a large tract of land surrounding "Germond Hill," near Verbank, and one of the descendants, Lewis D. Germond, still occupies a part of the original tract in the town of Washington. George Washington Germond, father of Isaac, died in 1891 in his ninetieth year, leaving five sons and two daughters. The Germonds, Germans and Jarmans are said by some to be all descended from four brothers who came from France about two hundred years ago, one settling on Long Island, one in Harlem, one in the town of Washington, Dutchess county, and one in the town of Stanford, Dutchess county.

MON. SAMUEL K. PHILLIPS, county judge of Dutchess county, and a lawyer of wide reputation for ability and success in the management of important cases, is a native of Brooklyn, N. Y., born February 12, 1858, but since the age of four years he has had his home in the village of Matteawan. His father, Edmund S. Phillips, was the first lawyer to locate at Matteawan.

Judge Phillips received his education in the private and public schools of Matteawan, and at an early age began his professional studies in his father's office. He was admitted to the bar in May, 1879, having just attained his majority, and immediately engaged in practice. During the past sixteen years he has made an enviable record, and has been retained as counsel, on one side or the other, in nearly all the cases of note that have arisen in this locality. He was engaged by the State of New York to take charge of the legal matters in connection with the location of the State Hospital at Matteawan, and later was employed by the State in the important matter of acquiring a right of way for a sewer from that institution to the Hudson river. He is now the attorney for the Mechanics Savings Bank, of Fishkill Landing; for The Matteawan Savings Bank, and for The Matteawan National Bank, and has been the legal advisor of the promoters of many of the leading business enterprises of the town. In some of the most important of these ventures he is personally interested; he is president of The Matteawan Savings Bank, a director of The Matteawan National Bank, and was one of the projectors, and is still a director and one of the principal stockholders of the electric railway system of the town of Fishkill. He is a trustee and the treasurer of Highland Hospital; a trustee of the Fairview Cemetery Association, chairman of the board of trustees, and for more than twenty years secretary of the Sunday-school of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Matteawan. For the past ten years he has been a member of the board of education, and during the last year of his service therein was its president.

Able and popular, possessing all the qualities which insure success in public life, it is not surprising that he should already have become a leader in political affairs. In November, 1895, he was elected on the Republican ticket to the office of county judge. Commenting upon his nomination, the Poughkeepsie Star says: " * * * young in years but old in experience, a good lawyer, a man to be trusted by the people. Although there are many attorneys in the county who feel that this is a good year to be the nominee on the Republican ticket, all were united in endorsing Mr. Phillips as the choice of the party." The Fishkill Standard, the leading Democratic paper of the locality, said: "As a citizen of the town of Fishkill, and as an active professional man, we have only words of commendation for Samuel K. Phillips. Raised in Matteawan, and educated in the public schools there, he has always been before the eyes of the public, and has won his way to distinction and success by many excellent qualities. That he will make a good county judge, if elected, and be a worthy successor of those who have preceded him, is sure."

S. A. Phillips

The Judge is a prominent Free Mason, and at present is master of Beacon Lodge No. 283, F. & A. M., a member of Highland Chapter No. 52, R. A. M., Hudson River Commandery, K. T., and Mecca Temple, Order of the Mystic Shrine. In October, 1885, he married Miss Henrietta Reid, daughter of Luke and Abigail (Darling) Reid, of Hudson, N. Y. They have one son, Samuel Vincent Phillips.

GUERNSEY FAMILY. (I) John Guernsey, the progenitor of the Guernsey family in America, appears in Milford, Conn., about 1634. (II) Joseph Guernsey, son of the above, born in 1639, married Hannah Coley, daughter of Samuel Coley, Sr., April 10, 1663, resided at Milford, and was a "free planter."

(III) Joseph Guernsey, son of Joseph, was born at Milford, 1674. Large land owner. He married Hannah Disbrow, daughter of Gen. Disbrow, of Horse Neck, and removed to Woodbury, Conn., where he died September 15, 1754. (IV) John Guernsey, son of above, born April 6, 1709, married "Ann Peck, daughter of Jeremiah Peck, and granddaughter of the Rev. Jeremiah Peck, well known throughout New England." He removed to Litchfield, Conn., thence to Amenia, N. Y., where he died and was buried, 1783.

(V) John Guernsey, son of John and Ann Guernsey, was born October 28, 1734. He married Azubah Buel; removed to Broome county, N. Y., where he owned 1,000 acres of land; afterward returned to Amenia, where he died in 1799, and was buried near the grave of his father. (VI) Ezekiel Guernsey, M. D., son of the above, was born in 1775, married Lavoisa Bennett, daughter of Col. Peter Bennett, and died at Stanford, Dutchess county, N. Y., in 1856.

(VII) Stephen Gano Guernsey, son of Ezekiel and Lavoisa Guernsey, was born in the town of Stanford, September 8, 1799, and died in the town of Stanford in 1875; married Elenor Rogers, of Litchfield, Conn., daughter of Dayton Rogers and granddaughter of a Revolutionary soldier.

(VIII) STEPHEN GANO GUERNSEY, son of Stephen Gano and Elenor Guernsey, was born April 22, 1848, in the town of Stanford, Dutchess county, N. Y., and in his boyhood winters attended the common schools of the locality, while in the summers he did general work on the farm. His education he finished at Fort Edward Institute, Glens Falls, New York.

In 1870 Mr. Guernsey moved to Poughkeepsie, where he read law with Judge Charles Wheaton and his brother, D. W. Guernsey, and was admitted to the bar in 1871. In 1874 he was appointed deputy county clerk, which incumbency he held until 1876, when he resigned to commence the practice of law for himself in the office of Jacob Jewett, who died some few months later. Mr. Guernsey continued in the same office, and has since remained in active practice, which is a general one. In his political preferences Mr. Guernsey is a Democrat, and has served as member of the board of education four years—from 1890 to 1894. He was U. S. Loan Commissioner, appointed under Gov. Robinson, and has been re-appointed by each succeeding governor to the present time, although, owing to a change of the State laws, there is little business for the office at present. In 1892 he was elected president of the Poughkeepsie National Bank, and is still serving as such.

In 1877 Mr. Guernsey was married to Miss Marianna Hicks, and children as follows were born to them: Raymond Gano (IX) Homer Wilson, Louis Gildersleeve and Emeline. Our subject is a careful, conservative business man.

ELIZABETH H. GEROW, M. D., a pioneer woman physician of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, whose success has been a pleasing and convincing test of the ability of her sex to cope with all the difficulties of her profession, is a descendant of an old Huguenot family, the name being originally Giraud.

Her ancestors were early settlers in Ulster county, and her great-grandfather, William Gerow, was a resident of Plattekill, where the homestead has ever since been maintained. Her grandfather, Elias Gerow, lived and died there; he married Elizabeth Coutant, and their son, Elias Gerow (2), our subject's father, was also a lifelong resident, following farming as an occupation. He married Sally Ann Baker, a native of Westchester county, who survived him and died at our subject's home in Poughkeepsie. Ten children were born of this union—four daughters and six sons—of the latter only four are now living.

Dr. Elizabeth H. Gerow attended the schools of Plattekill during her childhood, and later studied in the Friends' School at Union Springs, N. Y. She taught for some time in Ulster county, and then, desiring to prepare herself for the medical profession, she entered the Woman's Hospital in Boston, Mass. After eight months there she began the course in the Medical Department of Michigan University, from which she was graduated in the spring of 1875. She had, in the meantime, continued her studies in the Woman's Hospital during her vacations, spending about three years, in all, in the institution, and gaining an experience which at that time was seldom obtainable by a woman. She became an expert in dealing with the diseases of women and children, and, from the first, has met with unusual success in her practice. On May 1, 1875, she opened her office in Poughkeepsie, and in five years had all the business that she could attend to. For the past ten years she has devoted her entire time to her large office practice.

Dr. Gerow is held in high esteem among her professional associates, as well as with the general public, and was appointed on the first Medical Board of the Vassar Hospital in Poughkeepsie, and she is a member of the Dutchess County Medical Society, and a corresponding member of the Boston Gynecological Society.

WILLIAM L. DAVIS (deceased), a well-known farmer and auctioneer of the town of Washington, was born in Columbia county, February 10, 1835. His father, Henry D., was born in the same county, where he married and settled on a farm. To him and his wife were born these children: Orville, who married Miss Maria Emigh, and is now farming in the town of Clinton; he has one son, Henry T.; Esther died unmarried, April 10, 1896; William L. is our subject. Mr. Davis farmed in Columbia county and in Wisconsin, dying in the latter place in 1837. His wife was Miss Jane Ann Lawton, who was born in the town of Washington May 1, 1809, the only child of Seth Lawton, who was born June 18, 1782, in Rhode Island, and died in November, 1869, and Esther (Peck) Lawton, who was born near New York City, August 25, 1786, and died December 6, 1851. David Lawton, the father of Seth, was a farmer in Washington town.

William L., our subject, remained at home in the town of Washington until December 27, 1856, on which date he was married to Miss Mary L. Wilson, daughter of Thomas and Mary (Streight) Wilson. Mr. and Mrs. Davis secured a farm in this town, and three children were born to them, namely: Thomas L., born March 6, 1859, died October 7, 1862; Seth L., born December 17, 1862, died December 20, 1864; Willard H., born September 15, 1865. Mr. Davis was a Democrat, and he and his wife were both members of the Methodist Church.

WILLARD H. manages the farm of 168 acres, on which he raises Jersey cattle, Berkshire hogs, and Thorndale horses. The farm is called "Brookside Stock Farm."

Thomas Wilson, the father of Mrs. Davis, was born and reared in the town of Unionvale; his wife was born in Stanford. They settled on a farm in Unionvale, and reared a family of six children: Eseck, a retired citizen of Poughkeepsie; Maria became the wife of Dr. John Perry, of Amenia, and after his death she married Moses Conger, a lawyer in the town of Clinton; Sally A. married Henry Chamberlin, a tanner and currier (both are deceased); Mary L. is our subject's wife; John died in the Civil war; George, a farmer, died August 21, 1896, in Ashley, Illinois. Thomas Wilson died in 1843, and his wife July 3, 1879.

Joseph Wilson, Mrs. Davis' grandfather, was born in Ireland, where he followed the occupation of a weaver. Henry Streight was the maternal grandfather of Mrs. Wilson.

WILLIAM R. KIMLIN, who was a prominent contractor and builder in Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, and whose death took place December 8, 1891, was born in that city October 7, 1843. His father, William Kimlin, was born in Ireland in 1800, and came to America in 1839.

William Kimlin obtained a good education in the public schools, and also in that connected with Christ Church (Episcopal). He was a man of keen perceptions, and, having always been a great reader, was well informed on all subjects of general interest. After leaving school he learned the trade of a mason, serving an apprenticeship of three years with Mr. Harlow while the latter was engaged in building Vassar College. He was a journeyman mason for some time, and was also foreman for Elias Spross for several years. About 1874 he started as a contractor and builder in partnership with James Mathews, the firm name being Kimlin & Mathews. This connection continued for three or four years, when Mr. Kimlin assumed entire charge of the business for himself. During this time he made contracts for some of the largest buildings in the city, among others the post office, which was begun in the fall of 1884, Mr. Kimlin completing his part of the work in 1886. He was one of the foremost men in his trade, and, having more than average ability and judgment, was successful in his enterprises. He possessed strong individuality, and made himself felt in any matters in which he was interested.

Mr. Kimlin was married September 17, 1873, to Miss Mary, daughter of Thomas Conn, of New York City. Her father was a butcher, and was of Irish descent, his family coming from County Down. Five children were born of this union: William T. is in the employ of F. J. Nesbitt; Stewart T., Lottie S. and Edith B. are at home with their mother; and one died in infancy. Of these, William T. and Stewart T. have learned the mason trade, and expect in about a year or so to enter in the same business as their father.

Mr. Kimlin was strongly in sympathy with the Republican party, although he never took an active part in politics. He belonged to the Exempt Firemen, and was a member of Christ Church, Episcopal. He was a loyal citizen, and always ready to do his share toward promoting the interests of his community.

GEORGE TOFFEY DOUGHTY (deceased) was throughout life identified with the interests of the town of Beekman, his birth having occurred at Greenhaven, in that township, October 6, 1816. The Doughty family came from England at a very early period in the history of this country, one of the first being Francis Doughty, a clergyman of the Church of England.

Joseph Doughty, the grandfather of our subject, was born on Long Island, and followed farming as a life work. He was a sincere member of the Society of Friends. He married Miss Psyche Wiltsie, and to them were born twelve children, namely: Thomas, who became a farmer of Beekman town; Joseph, who in early life was a merchant, and later lived in Beekman town; Cornwell, a farmer and merchant of the same township; Nehemiah, a farmer and miller, also of Beekman town; William, the father of our subject; Martin, also a farmer of Beekman town; Jacob, a merchant of Greenhaven; Psyche, who married Samuel Vail, a prominent citizen of Albany, N. Y.; Mary, who wedded Jonathan Hoag, a farmer of Nassau, N. Y.; Jane, who married Philip Flagler, an agriculturist; John and Elizabeth.

William Doughty, the father of our subject, was a native of the town of Beekman, and on attaining to man's estate was united in marriage with Mrs. Sarah Vanderburgh (née Van Wyck), by whom he had six children: Phebe, John J., Psyche, William, Sarah and George T. All his life the father carried on farming in the town of Beekman, where he was numbered among the highly-esteemed citizens. He died in 1854 at the age of eighty-four years, the mother in 1865 at the age of ninety-four years.

During his boyhood, George T. Doughty attended the district schools near his home in Beekman town, and for three years resided with his sister at New Lebanon, N. Y. He was also for a time a student in the Nine Partners Boarding School in the town of Washington, Dutchess county. He always followed the vocation of farming, and erected all the buildings upon his place with the exception of the residence.

On December 14, 1836, in the town of Beekman, Mr. Doughty married Miss Elizabeth Van Benschoten, of the town of Lagrange, Dutchess county, and to them were born three children: Mary G.; William H., of New York City, who married Mrs. Edith Bryant (née Chatterton), and to them was born one child—Laura Isabelle; and Edward, deceased. The mother of these died May 17, 1843, and in the same township Mr. Doughty was again married, his second union being with Hester Kelley, by whom were also born three children: James A., of Torrington, Conn., who was married to Miss Alice J. Brooker, of the same place, and to them were born two children—Ella Brooker (deceased) and Marion Seymour; Phebe J.; and Cornell, of Brooklyn, N. Y., married Miss Anna J. Butts, of New York City, and to them was born one child—Isabelle Perry.

For three terms, Mr. Doughty filled the office of supervisor of the town of Beekman, and enjoyed the popularity which comes to those generous spirits who have a hearty shake of the hand for those with whom they come in contact from day to day, and who seem to throw around them in consequence so much of the sunshine of life. He was a member of the Society of Friends, and was one of nature's noblemen, the world being better for his having lived. His death, which occurred in the town of Beekman, June 7, 1887, was widely and deeply mourned.

GEORGE E. CRAMER, president of the Board of Trade of Poughkeepsie, and a leading grain dealer and wholesale grocer of that city, was born in Pleasant Valley, Dutchess county, August 31, 1841.

Our subject's ancestors came originally from Holland, settling in Dutchess county at an early date. His grandfather, Philip Cramer, was born in 1783, near Poughkeepsie, where he was a farmer for some years before his removal to Pleasant Valley, Dutchess county, where he died at the age of forty-nine years. He married Susannah Reynolds, and they had three children: Phœbe, who married Jehial Smith; Elizabeth, the wife of Henry Burhans, and George B., our subject's father, who was born in Poughkeepsie in 1814. His schooling was limited to a few years' attendance at the public schools of that city, but he was a man of common sense, and acquired a good practical education in the course of his life. He was a carpenter and builder in Pleasant Valley for many years, and was quite successful; but failing health compelled him to choose another occupation, and, in 1874, he engaged in the butcher trade at the same place. Politically, he was first a Whig, and later a Republican, but although he was greatly interested in the welfare of his party, he was never an office-seeker. For full half a century he was a devout and consistent member of the Presbyterian Church, and was a trustee for many years. He married Miss Mary A. Duncan, a daughter of Joshua Duncan, a well-known manufacturer of cotton goods at Pleasant Valley, in partnership with George P. Farrington. The Duncans are among the oldest families in that locality. Nine children were born of this marriage, seven of whom are still living, and all residents of Dutchess county. The mother died in 1880, the father surviving her until May, 1893.

The subject of our sketch attended the district schools of Pleasant Valley, and studied for a time with a private tutor, supplementing these limited opportunities in his later years by an extended course of reading. At the age of eleven he began to work for his uncle Duncan in the grocery business in Poughkeepsie, but after two years he returned home and clerked in a country store for about two years. At the age of sixteen he went to Poughkeepsie as clerk for John McLean, grocer, remaining four years; then engaged as bookkeeper for John H. Matthews in the freighting business at the Lower Landing, and after five years there he spent two years in the same capacity with Gaylord, Vail & Doty, at the Main Street Dock. In 1871 he entered the employ of W. W. Reynolds & Co., as bookkeeper, and three years later became a member of the firm, then known as Reynolds & Co., and composed of William T. and John R. Reynolds and George E. Cramer. On January 1, 1890, the firm became Reynolds & Cramer, and as the senior member is not in good health, the more active management of the business devolves upon Mr. Cramer. This is one of the oldest houses in the city, dating back to 1820, and under the able and enterprising direction of Mr. Cramer its already extensive trade has been enlarged to five times its volume at the time of his entrance into the firm, and is now the largest establishment of its kind in the Hudson River Valley. He holds high rank in commercial circles, and has been president of the Poughkeepsie Board of Trade for the past four years. In 1892 he was appointed president of College Hill Park Commission, by William W. Smith, who bought this property and donated it to the city as a public park.

In 1866 Mr. Cramer was married to Miss Mary A. Barnes, a daughter of Mrs. Jane A. Barnes, and a descendant of one of the old families of Poughkeepsie. They have one daughter, Ella W. Cramer. Although he is a Republican in principle, and has taken an active interest in the success of his party, Mr. Cramer is not an office seeker, and has refused to accept any nominations for public office. He is ready to assist any movement for the welfare of the city, and takes especial interest in the schools, serving for eleven years in the board of education, and for several years its president. He belongs to the Washington Street M. E. Church, of which he is a trustee and the treasurer, and has been superintendent of the Sunday-school for twenty-five years. At one time he was active in the Masonic fraternity, of which he is still a member, and is past master of Poughkeepsie Lodge No. 266, and past eminent commander of Poughkeepsie Commandery No. 53, Knights Templar.

HOWELL WHITE, M. D., a prominent physician of Fishkill, Dutchess county, is a descendant of a family which has been notable for generations for its connection with the medical profession. His great-grandfather was a physician, and had two brothers in the calling, and the same is true of his grandfather and his father, three brothers in each generation choosing the deep researches and arduous labors of the medical practitioner.

Dr. White was born at Fishkill June 12, 1856, the son of the late Dr. Lewis H. White, whose long and successful career as a physician, and excellent qualities as a citizen, won him a lasting reputation. He was given good educational advantages, and, after leaving the public schools of Fishkill, studied two years at Warring's Military School, in Poughkeepsie, and four years in the private school of Hugh S. Banks, at Newburg, and then entered Williston Seminary at East Hampton, Mass., where he was graduated in 1875. A complete course in Bellevue Medical College, New York City, followed, and on his graduation in 1879 he became an interne in the Presbyterian Hospital in that city, securing invaluable practical work. He began his professional labors in Fishkill in 1880, and has been constantly in practice ever since, meeting with marked success. He is a member of the Dutchess County Medical Society, and of the New York State Medical Society. In politics he is a Republican.

On June 9, 1881, the Doctor married a lady of Huguenot descent, Miss Elizabeth M. Cotheal, whose interesting genealogical record is given below. They have four children: Catherine Elizabeth, Lewis Howell, Richard Rapalje and Helena. Both the Doctor and his wife are members of the Reformed Dutch Church of Fishkill, and take a generous interest in all advanced movements.

Doctor White's lineage is a long and honorable one, as he is in the eighth generation in descent from Thomas White, of Weymouth, Mass., who was Representative in General Court in 1636-37. He died in 1679, leaving (according to Farmer) five children: Joseph, Mendon; Samuel, born in 1642; Thomas, Braintree; Hannah, who married John Barter; and Ebenezer, born in 1648, died August 24, 1703.

Second Generation: Ebenezer, the fifth child of Thomas, of Weymouth, was the father of the Rev. Ebenezer White, who was pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Bridgehampton, Long Island.

Third Generation: Rev. Ebenezer White, of Bridgehampton, was born in 1673, and died in 1756. He married Hannah —, and they had children: Elnathan, born 1695, died 1773; James; Rev. Sylvanus, born 1704, died 1782; Silas, born 1710, died 1742.

Fourth Generation: Rev. Sylvanus White, second son of Rev. Ebenezer White, of Bridgehampton, L. I., was born in 1704, and went to Weymouth, Mass., in 1715, to attend a classical school. He entered Harvard College in 1719, graduating in 1723. In 1727 he assumed the pastoral charge of the Church at Southampton, L. I., which he retained for nearly fifty-five years. He died October 22, 1782. He married Phebe Howell, only daughter of Hezekiah Howell, and had nine children, viz.: Sylvanus, Edward, Hezekiah, Daniel, M. D., Silas, Phebe, Ebenezer, M. D., Ebenezer (2), Henry, M. D. Except the first Ebenezer, who died in infancy, they all lived to adult years.

Fifth Generation: Ebenezer, the seventh son of Rev. Sylvanus, after being instructed in the classics by his father, commenced the study of medicine, as did also his brothers Daniel and Henry, availing himself of all the facilities existing in our country, at that time, for acquiring a thorough knowledge of his chosen profession. In early life he married Helena, daughter of Theophilus Bartow, of New Rochelle, and granddaughter of Rev. John Bartow, of Westchester, and great-granddaughter of Gen. Bartow, who fled from France to England in 1685 (on the revocation of the Edict of Nantes). This marriage was a union of Puritan with Huguenot. The young couple commenced life together where they ended it, in Yorktown, Westchester Co., N. Y. The old homestead is still standing, and is occupied by a grandson, Josephus L. White. The Doctor soon acquired an extensive practice, and engaged in the cultivation of a large farm. Here, on what afterward became the neutral ground at the commencement of the Revolutionary war, found him, and from the first of which struggle to the end he was the zealous, uncompromising advocate of his country's cause. Many were the advantages and thrilling incidents he would relate to his listening grandchildren of Tory raids and persecutions, and many of the wounds received in these affairs came under his professional care and treatment. [See Dr. Thatcher's Military Journal—Boston, 1823, page 307; also Bolton, in his history of Westchester Co., Vol. II., page 384, relates one of many incidents in Dr. White's experience during the war.] He was elected to the State Senate, and afterward as Presidential elector. He was born in Southampton in 1746, and died in Yorktown in 1827, after more than half a century's successful practice of his profession. His wife survived him only a few years. Their children were: Catharine, Bartow, Ebenezer, Henry, Lewis, James and Theodosius.

Sixth Generation: Ebenezer, the second son of Dr. Ebenezer, of Yorktown, also made choice of the profession of medicine, as did his brothers Bartow and Henry. He was a pupil of his father, and finished his studies by attending medical lectures in the City of New York. He married Amy, daughter of the late Samuel Green, of the town of Somers, Westchester county, and located there in the house now owned and occupied by his son Samuel. After a practice of more than sixty years, he died March 18, 1865, at the advanced age of eighty-five. He was surrogate of Westchester county, and represented Dutchess county in the State Legislature. In politics he was a Republican; in religion a Presbyterian; and in theory and practice an ardent temperance man. He had nine children, of whom three sons adorned the profession which their father so long followed.

Seventh Generation: Bartow F., M. D., married Ann Augusta Belcher, of Round Hill, Conn., and located there; Stephen G., a merchant of Somers, died unmarried, aged twenty-three; Helen A. married James Brett, of Fishkill; Lewis H., M. D., married Helena Van Wyck, of Fishkill; Oliver, M. D., who settled in New York, married Catharine O. Ritter; Phebe married Robert Calhoun; John P., a merchant of New York, married Margaret Bryson; Euphemia married James W. Bedell, of Somers; Samuel married Emma Jackson, and is now living in the old homestead at Somers, Westchester county.

Dr. Lewis H. White, the father of Howell, was born in Somers, March 17, 1807. He studied at Yale College, New Haven, in after years receiving an honorary medical degree from the University Medical College of New York. He settled in Johnsville, Dutchess county, and after several years of practice removed to Fishkill, where he resided the remainder of his life. He practiced his profession in Fishkill and Johnsville for fifty-eight years, occupying a position in his profession equalled by few and excelled by none. He was a member of the Dutchess County Medical Society, and for eleven years its president; also a member of the New York State Medical Society. On June 7, 1853, he married Helena, daughter of John C. and Delia Van Wyck, of Fishkill. They had three children: Howell, born June 12, 1856; Catharine, born June 1, 1859, died July 16, 1862; Kate, born October 3, 1865, married Hasbrouck Bartow, of Hackensack, N. J., and now resides there. It is a noteworthy fact that Dr. Lewis H. White, his father and grandfather each practiced his profession for over half a century.

Mrs. White is a daughter of Isaac E. Cotheal and his wife, Catherine E. (Rapalje), and on the maternal side is a descendant in the eighth generation from Joris Jansen de Rapalje, one of the proscribed Huguenots, from "Rochelle in France," and the common ancestor of all the American families of this name. He came to this country with other colonists in 1623, in the "Unity," a ship of the West India Company, and settled at Fort Orange (now Albany), where he remained three years. In 1626 he removed to New Amsterdam, and resided there until after the birth of his youngest child. On June 16, 1637, he bought from the Indians a tract of land computed at 335 acres, called Rennegacouck, now included within the city of Brooklyn, and comprehending the lands occupied by the U. S. Marine Hospital. Here Mr. Rapalje finally located, and spent the remainder of his life. He was a leading citizen, acted a prominent part in the colony, and served in the magistracy of Brooklyn. He died soon after the close of the Dutch administration, his widow, Catalyntie, daughter of Joris Trico surviving him many years. She was born in Paris, and died September 11, 1689, aged eighty-four. The original family record, preserved in the library of the New York Historical Society, gives the names and dates of birth of their children, as follows: Sarah, born June 9, 1625, was married (first) to Hans Hausse Bergen, and then to Tennis Gysbert Bogart; Marrisie, born March 11, 1627, married Michael Vandervoort; Jannetie, born August 18, 1629, married Rem Vanderbeeck; Judith, born July 5, 1635, married Pieter Van-Nest; Jan, born August 28, 1637, married, but died in 1662 without issue; Jacob, born May 28, 1639, was killed by Indians; Catalyntie, born March 28, 1641, married Jeremias West-erhout; Jerominus, born June 27, 1643; An- nettie, born February 8, 1646, was married first) to Marten Reverse, and then to Joost Fransz; Elizabeth, born March 28, 1648, mar- ried Dirck Hooglandt; Daniel, born December 29, 1650.

Second Generation: Jerominus Rapalje became a man of some prominence, a justice of the peace, and a deacon of the Brooklyn Church. He married Anna, daughter of Tennis Denys, and had nine children born, as follows: Morris, born November 5, 1668, married July 27, 1694, Nellie, daughter of Jan Conwenhoven, died at Cripplebush, in 1697; Tennis, born May 5, 1671; Jan, born December 14, 1673; Emmetie, born October 5, 1676, married Jan Bennet; Jacob, born June 25, 1679; Jerominus, born March 31, 1682; Catalina, born March 5, 1685, married Peter DeMond, of Raritan, N. J.; Sarah, born November 4, 1687, married Hans Bergen; and Cornelius, born October 1, 1690.

Third Generation: Jan Rapalje, son of Jerominus, married Annettie, daughter of Coert van Voorhees, and was a farmer on a portion of the family estate in Brooklyn, which at his death in 1733 he left to his son George. They had three children: George C., Jeromus, and John, who married Maria Van Dyke, in 1737.

Fourth Generation: Jeromus Rapalje, son of Jan, inherited a farm at Flushing, where he died in 1754. He was twice married, and left six children: John, Richard, Stephen, Ann, Maria and Elizabeth.

Fifth Generation: John Rapalje, son of Jeromus, was born in 1722, and died at Jamaica at the age of about fifty years. He was twice married, and by his first wife, Elizabeth, daughter of Abraham Brinkerhoff, had five children: Catherine, who married Tennis Brinkerhoff; Jeromus; Abraham Brinkerhoff, born 1761, died 1818; Aletta, who married James Deberville; and Richard. The sons settled at Fishkill, N. Y., where some of their descendants remain.

Sixth Generation: Richard Rapalje, son of John, was born on Long Island August 30, 1764, removed to Fishkill during the Revolu- tionary war, and died September 2, 1825. He was married three times, first on January 31, 1795, to Letty, daughter of Isaac and Eliza- beth Van Wyck. She was born November 21, 1775, and died September 11, 1800. They had children: Elizabeth, born March 21, 1796, died September 13, 1796; John Van- Wyck, born August 18, 1798, died Septem- ber 13, 1798; Eliza Van Wyck, born Feb- ruary 28, 1800, died January 17, 1801. Mr. Rapalje married December 2, 1801, for his second wife, Jane Van Wyck, a sister of his first wife. She was born March 15, 1782, and died November 23, 1806. They also had three children, viz.: William Edward, born October 11, 1802, died and was buried at sea while on his return from Europe June 2, 1833; Isaac Van Wyck, born Novem- ber 8, 1804, died December 7, 1809; John Augustus, born October 6, 1806, died same day. On September 1, 1810, Mr. Rapalje married Ann, daughter of Archibald and Cath- arine Currie, of New York (born September 13, 1777, died January 31, 1860), and they had children as follows: Jane Ann, born June 18, 1811, died July 4, 1825; Isaac Van Wyck, born March 14, 1813, died August 2, 1824; Richard, born March 16, 1815, died December 26, 1846; Archibald Currie, born January 16, 1817, died July 28, 1831; Catharine Elizabeth, born July 8, 1819, died January 8, 1864.

Seventh Generation: Catharine Rapalje married October 22, 1856, Isaac E. Cotheal, born August 12, 1817, died May 8, 1884, of New York City, son of Henry and Phebe (Ber- rian Warner) Cotheal. They had three chil- dren: Elizabeth M., born February 25, 1858, the wife of our subject; Anne Rapalje, born De- cember 13, 1860, who married Charles D. Sher- wood; and Catharine Elizabeth, unmarried.

The old homestead, known as "Robinia," where Mrs. White was born, contained be- tween 500 and 600 acres, and was originally part of the Madame Brett Patent, transferred at first to the Van Wyck family, from them to the Southards, from them, in the year 1795, to Richard Rapalje (Mrs. White's grandfather), who built the present residence in 1800. At his death the estate came to Catharine Coth- eal, his daughter; and, at the death of her hus- band, to Mrs. White. After her marriage to Dr. Howell White they lived there for eight years, when they sold it in 1893 to its present owner, William T. Blodgett.

MON. AUGUSTUS B. GRAY, the able and popular representative from the Second Dutchess District in the New York Assembly, was born April 2, 1861, in New York City, of New England ancestry, being a descendant of Henry Gray, one of two brothers, John and Henry, who settled at Fairfield, Conn., in 1643. Hiram B. Gray, father of our subject, was born at Fairfield, Conn., March 22, 1801, and lived when a child at Pawling, Dutchess county, and Paterson, Putnam county. At the age of twenty-one he went to New York City and engaged in mercantile business. On December 20, 1847, he was married in Schuyler county to Miss Nancy Hager, a native of that county, and of their children two are now living: John Hiram, born August 20, 1852, who is engaged in the building and real-estate business in New York City; and Augustus B., our subject. Hiram Gray, who was a strong supporter of Lincoln's administration, was burned out during the draft riot in New York City, in July, 1863, and he then went to Schuyler county, where he bought two farms whereon he remained until 1866, in that year disposing of them. In 1870 he bought the homestead now occupied by our subject on the outskirts of Poughkeepsie; he died in New York City, January 27, 1872; his wife, Nancy (Hager), still survives.

Our subject was born April 2, 1861, and spent his boyhood in New York City, attending the public schools and preparing for college. After his father's death he took up his residence at the homestead which he has managed with great ability, gaining a high reputation among farmers throughout the State.

On June 23, 1882, in Tompkins county, N. Y., he was married to Miss Mary Case, daughter of Homer Case, of Schuyler county, a gallant soldier of the 103rd N. Y. V. I., in the Civil war, who lost his life in 1862 in defense of the Union. Four children were born of this marriage: George W., January 17, 1885; Nancy Isabel, April 9, 1886; Harry Augustus, February 24, 1888; and Homer B., July 10, 1893.

Mr. Gray is a Republican, and devoted to his party. He has taken a deep interest in town politics, and rendered faithful service on the board of supervisors in 1888, 1889 and 1890, his constituents showing their appreciation by re-electing him the third time without opposition. He succeeded in bringing in a minority report in regard to keeping the present site of the State Armory, and gained the good will and support of the military men and taxpayers. In 1893 he was elected to the Assembly by a plurality of 237 votes over J. W. De Peyster Toler, and has been re-elected in the years 1894, 1895 and 1896, having received increased majorities, and in 1896 having received 2,144 plurality.

In 1896 and 1897 he served as chairman of the Committee on Banks, and has served on the Labor Committee for three years, and his support by the laboring classes shows that he always has the interest of the laborer at heart, and does all in his power to advance their cause. He has served for three years on the Committee on Agriculture, Commerce and Navigation. In fact, his entire record has proved him to be a most efficient supporter of the interests of his district.

He has served on the Republican County Committee for twelve years, and chairman of the Town Committee, and is treasurer of the Dutchess County Agricultural Society. He is a member of Poughkeepsie Chapter No. 172, R. A. M., and Triune Lodge No. 782, F. A. M., and Armor Lodge No. 107, K. of P.

PHILIP CLAYTON ROGERS. Among the leading citizens of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, none hold a higher place in the estimation of the public than the gentleman whose name introduces this sketch, and who comes of a long line of distinguished and worthy ancestors.

Moses Rogers (the grandfather of our subject), born in 1750, died November 30, 1825, was one of the merchant princes of New York City. He was engaged in the West Indies trade for many years, and was a wealthy man for those early days, being one of the fifteen merchants in the city who could afford to keep horses and carriage. He was one of the founders of Grace Church, and was much devoted to Church work. He was a brother-in-law of Archibald Gracie, who was even more celebrated than himself. He was a man of extreme sagacity, and was very successful in all his enterprises. The family is of English descent, and came, probably, from Yorkshire. They are connected with President Dwight, the first president of Yale College, and by marriage with the Woolseys and Governor Fitch, the first Colonial governor of Connecticut; the Veplancks, the Winthrops, Van Rennselaers, at Pendletons of Virginia. Moses Rogers married Sarah Woolsey, and they had four children: Benjamin Woolsey, Archibald Rogers (our subject's father); Frances married Frank Winthrop; and Julia became the wife of Samuel Hopkins, of Geneva, N. Y. Mr. Rogers died in 1825, and his wife passed away in 1820.

Archibald Rogers, the father of our subject, was born in 1791 at Shippan Point, Stamford, Conn., where his father had his summer home. He was educated in Yale College, and in about 1816 took a trip abroad at the suggestion of his father, whose favorite son he was, in company with Tom Moore, nephew of Bishop Moore, of Virginia. He spent three years in traveling, and among other places visited the field of Waterloo, where he secured some interesting relics. He was married in 1821 to Miss Anna Pierce Pendleton, only daughter of Judge Nathaniel Pendleton, of New York City, who was on the bench before Judge Emmott. To this union eight children were born, and the following record of seven is given: (1) Nathaniel Pendleton, who was born April 29, 1822, was for many years a prominent lawyer in New York, and was associated with Alexander Hamilton, a grandson of the famous Alexander Hamilton of history, and Francis Reeves, son of Francis Reeves, minister to France, the firm name being Hamilton, Rogers & Reeves. In his later years he lived at "Placentia," Hyde Park, until his death, which occurred at his town residence in New York City, April 22, 1892. (2) Julian, born February 12, 1824, died when six months old. (3) Edmund Pendleton, born in 1827, father of Col. Arch'd Rogers, of Gov. Morton's staff, and died at Hyde Park, February 9, 1895, married Virginia Dummer, of Jersey City, in 1850. (4) Archibald, born August 10, 1825, died March 21, 1831. (5) Philip Clayton, our subject, was born August 13, 1829 (he was named after Major Phil Clayton, of the Catalpas, of whom he was a lineal descendant, who settled in Culpeper county, Va., in 1643). (6) Archibald (2), born November 12, 1832, died in New York City, December 20, 1836. (7) Susan Bard, born November 4, 1834, married Herman T. Livingston, only son of Herman Livingston, of Oake Hill, opposite Catskill, and lives in New York. Anna P. Rogers, their mother, died at Hyde Park, December 26, 1873, in the eighty-seventh year of her age. After his marriage our subject's father passed the remainder of his life in the quiet pursuits of a country gentleman. He was a great hunter and fisherman, and enjoyed these sports to their full extent. He was a man of great generosity of character, and was universally esteemed.

The Pendletons, ancestors of our subject's mother, were of an old English family (the name is mentioned in King Edward's time, "Penniltonns"), members of which came to this country and settled in Virginia in 1628. Edmund Pendleton was the first president of the Virginia State Assembly, and was a close friend of General Washington and Patrick Henry. He was one of the most distinguished of the Pendletons. He lived in Culpeper county, Va. Martha Washington was a Dandridge, and the Pendletons and Dandridges are closely connected. Judge Nathaniel Pendleton became a soldier in the Revolutionary war when only eighteen years old, and by his bravery rose to the rank of major. He distinguished himself greatly at the battle of Eutaw Springs, serving at that time on the staff of General Nathaniel Greene; the General's pistols are still in the family. After leaving the army he married Susan, a daughter of Dr. John Bard, of Burlington, N. J. The Bard family is of good old Huguenot stock, and came to this country after the Edict of Nantes. Dr. John Bard was a distinguished physician of Burlington, N. J., son of Gen. Peter Bard, of the Revolutionary army, afterward settling in New York City, where he lived a number of years. He died at Hyde Park, where he resided the latter part of his life. His epitaph reads: "The longer he lived the more he was beloved."

Judge Pendleton was the second to Gen. Hamilton in the latter's famous duel with Aaron Burr at Weehawken, in 1804. He was a noted lawyer of his day in New York City, and at the time of his death was a judge in the court at Poughkeepsie. He bought a place at Hyde Park which he named "Placentia," meaning "Rest," where he died in 1821, in his sixty-first year. His eldest son, Edmund Henry, who eventually filled his father's place at the bar in Poughkeepsie, and was judge from 1830 to 1840, married Frances Maria Jones, of Jones Wood, N. Y.; he went to Europe in 1836, and spent the balance of his life between Hyde Park and New York City. He died in 1863 without issue, his large property being left to his only sister's eldest son, Nathaniel P. Rogers.

Nathaniel Greene Pendleton went to Cincinnati, when a young man, and practiced law, becoming very successful and being twice sent to Congress. His first wife was Jane Hunt, a daughter of Gov. Hunt, of Ohio, and his second, Miss Anna Bullock, of Kentucky. He left a large family—his most distinguished son being George Pendleton, of Ohio, who was sent twice to Congress, was a U. S. Senator from that State, was minister to Berlin, and was a candidate for Vice-President on the ticket with Gen. George B. McClellan, in 1864. He married Alice Key, daughter of Francis Scott Key, the American poet (who was born in 1780, and died in 1843), author of the "Star Spangled Banner." James M. Pendleton, M. D., married Margaret Jones, a member of one of the prominent families of New York City; he was a distinguished physician, and having a large fortune spent much of his time in practicing among the poor people of the city, never accepting any money for his services.

Philip Clayton Rogers, the subject proper of this review, was educated in his younger days in the celebrated school of Dr. Huddart, in New York City. In 1840 he entered Columbia College, where he remained until 1845, leaving in the junior year to take a position in the counting-room of Robert Kermit, of the old Red Star Line. In 1853 he was appointed secretary of the Second Avenue Railroad Co., filling that office for three years. At this time a change took place in the management, and Mr. Rogers removed to Hyde Park. In 1859 he took a trip to China, going out as a passenger and coming back "before the mast," having a strong wish to see strange climes and people. In 1861 he enlisted as a private in the famous New York Seventh Regiment (Old 8th Company, Capt. Shumway), and went to Washington, returning in June of that year in company with his brother, Edmund P. Rogers, to whom he was devotedly attached. The following August he was made second lieutenant in the 55th N. Y. V., and this regiment, next year after, being consolidated with another, he was made first lieutenant of Company H, 39th Regiment. He was soon promoted to the captaincy, and was appointed aid-de-camp in the First Brigade, First Division, of the Second Army Corps. In the second day's fight at the battle of the Wilderness, May 6, 1864, he was taken prisoner and carried to Macon, Ga., whence he was sent to the jail at Charleston. On his way there, he in company with eighty other officers who were prisoners jumped from the cars at Pocatigo Station, and made a bold dash for freedom, but were hunted down by hounds, only one succeeding in escaping. He was afterward exchanged by special order of Gen. Foster, and was sent back to New York on board the steamer "Arago," in August, 1864. In October he resumed his duties on the staff of the First Battalion, First Division, Second Corps, remaining at his post until February 20, 1865, when worn out by the hard life of a soldier he took an honorable discharge. He wears a bronze cross of the 7th Regiment, N. Y. S. V., which was given him for long and faithful service, and is among his choicest treasures.

In 1865 Mr. Rogers was married to Miss Julia Kavanagh, of New Rochelle, a descendant of the Kavanaghs of Ireland, a very old family. To this union four children have been born: Philip Clayton, Jr., Juliana, Virginia and James M. The latter, who was a favorite child of his father, was killed when seven years old by the discharge of a gun in the hands of a playmate.

Capt. Rogers has seen many stirring events in the course of his long and eventful life, and bore an active part in one of the strangest and bloodiest wars in history, when brother was arrayed against brother and State against State. He lived to see a re-united country, more prosperous and happy than ever before, and with most brilliant prospects for still greater power and glory in the future. He is now passing the evening of his life in peaceful retirement, happy in his family and friends and with the consciousness of having done his part well in whatever he has engaged.

ROBERT RIDER THOMPSON (deceased), at one time a prominent citizen of Smithfield, widely and favorably known, was a native of Dutchess county, born in the town of Stanford, December 14, 1814. His grandfather, Elias Thompson, was also a resident of the county, where the birth of his father, James Thompson, occurred. The latter served his apprenticeship to the latter's trade but never followed that business, devoting his time principally to agricultural pursuits in the town of Stanford, where he died at the age of seventy-six years. His political support was given the Democratic party. He was married to Rebecca Rider, daughter of Robert Rider, and to them were born nine children: Eme-line, Robert R., Hannah, Jane, David, Melissa, Edwin, Elias M. and Henry P., all of whom are deceased except David and Elias M.

After attending the district schools for a time, our subject entered the Nine Partners Boarding School, but finished his education in the Amenia Seminary, after which he aided in the work of the home farm during the summer season, while the winter months were devoted to school teaching until his marriage. That important event of his life was celebrated in 1841, Catherine Sanford becoming his wife. After a long and happy married life of over half a century she was called to her final rest in 1893.

Four children blessed their union, as follows:

- (1) Ellen C. is the wife of William J. Clanney, of Amenia, by whom she has five children—Grace, George, Robert, William and Clarence.
- (2) George married Nellie Le Roy; he died in 1895, leaving no children.
- (3) John R., a leading resident of Amenia, is the superintendent of the water works at that place and at Pine Plains and Wassaic. In 1877 he married Mary F. Bertine, and they have three children—Kate, John R., Jr., and Anna Frances.
- (4) Edward B. was born at Smithfield, November 8, 1862, and there spent his boyhood, later attending the Amenia Seminary. At the early age of ten years he took quite a fancy to ducks, which he engaged in raising for a few years, and then turned his attention to Plymouth Rock chickens, paying $8 for his first setting of eggs. He then began dealing in fancy fowls and eggs, and now makes two shipments a week. He has successfully exhibited his fowls in New York City, Chicago and Philadelphia, and has won many premiums. Socially, he is connected with Amenia Lodge No. 672, F. & A. M., of which he has twice served as master, is a Democrat in politics, and is a member of the Smithfield Presbyterian Church. At Newburg, Orange Co., N. Y., in February, 1891, he was united in marriage with Miss Mary Ada Smith, daughter of Rev. W. E. Smith, and has two children—Edward Valentine, born in 1892, and Walter Carlyle, born in 1893.

After his marriage, Robert R. Thompson located at Smithfield, where he made his home, and for forty years was successfully engaged in the fire, life and accident insurance business. For twenty-five years he also served as postmaster of Smithfield, and was school inspector. He cast his ballot in support of the principles advocated by the Democratic party, and affiliated with Amenia Lodge No. 672, F. & A. M. He was a pleasant, genial gentleman, winning many friends, and faithfully discharged every duty that devolved upon him. He passed away at his home December 26, 1896, at the ripe age of eighty-two years and ten days, in full possession of his business faculties to the very last.

MILTON H. ANGELL, M. D., one of the leading physicians of Dutchess county, is established in Salt Point, where he follows a career of usefulness, having thoroughly fitted himself for the duties of a most responsible position. He gives his entire attention to his chosen profession, with most satisfactory results to himself and patrons.

Ephraim Angell, the paternal grandfather of our subject, was born in Rhode Island, of English origin, and after his marriage with Mary Thorne he located in Columbia county, N. Y. Their family included nine children, namely: Augustus carried on farming in Columbia county; Joseph died in early manhood; Stephen is the father of our subject; Henry (deceased) was in early life a farmer, but later became a coal dealer in Chicago; William carries on agricultural pursuits in Columbia county; Ephraim is engaged in the same occupation in that county; Sarah is the wife of Elisha Clark, a farmer of Columbia county; Martha first wedded Ashley Niles, a merchant of that county, and after his death became the wife of Nodiah Hill, a very learned man; and Emma (deceased) married Dr. William Vail (now deceased), who was engaged in the practice of medicine in New Hampshire. The father of this family followed farming exclusively in Columbia county until his death.

Stephen T. Angell, the father of our subject, was a native of the village of Spencertown, Columbia county, where he grew to manhood. He married Hannah E. Ham, who was born in the town of Clinton, Dutchess county, and is a daughter of George Ham, an agriculturist. They began their domestic life upon a farm near Salt Point, in Pleasant Valley town, where their five children were born as follows: Evelyn; George H., a merchant of Wappingers Falls, N. Y.; Augustus, a physician and oculist, of Hartford, Conn.; J. Thorne, engaged in railroad business in Pine Plains, Dutchess county; and Milton, the subject of this review. Besides general farming the father was successfully engaged in breeding Shorthorn cattle and Southdown sheep. For many years he served as justice of the peace, was ever identified with the Republican party, and a man of most estimable character. His death occurred in October, 1889, his faithful wife still surviving.

On the family homestead at Salt Point, Milton H. Angell was born October 8, 1856, and under the parental roof spent his boyhood, during which period he attended the district schools. Later he entered the Military Academy at Poughkeepsie, and for three years pursued his studies at De Garmo Institute, Rhinebeck, N. Y., after which he taught school for one year. He then began the study of medicine, taking a course of lectures at the New York Homeopathic Medical College, where he was graduated with the class of '82. Shortly afterward, the Doctor located at Wappingers Falls, where he engaged in practice for a year and a half. Then he removed to Stanfordville, Dutchess county, where he followed his chosen profession for six years, and in 1890 succeeded his brother, Dr. Augustus, at Salt Point, where he enjoys a large and lucrative practice.

On October 13, 1886, Dr. Milton H. Angell was married to Miss Frances McKay, a daughter of Robert McKay, a native of Brooklyn, N. Y., who is now living retired; he is of Scotch descent, and a son of Samuel McKay, a prominent hatter and furrier. Two children have been born to the Doctor and his wife: Evelyn and Milton. Dr. Angell stands high in the ranks of the medical fraternity of Dutchess county; politically, he is an adherent to the principles of the Republican party.

WILLIAM, HENRY TABER. One of the first grants of land in the far-famed Oblong Valley, in Dutchess county, was made by King George III, in 1760, conveying the title of 500 acres to Thomas Taber, the great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch. He came from New Bedford, Mass., where he was born in 1732, and in 1760 made his home upon this estate, which has ever since been in the possession of the family.

His son, Jeremiah Taber, our subject's grandfather, was born there in 1762, and like his father was a farmer by occupation. He was prominent in local affairs, also in the Society of Friends at Quaker Hill, and being a man of unusual sagacity he was greatly respected throughout the locality. He lived until 1834, and his wife, Dillalah Russell, daughter of Elihu Russell, departed this life in 1852. They had six children: (1) Eliza, who married Joseph Carpenter, a native of Harrison township, Westchester Co., N. Y., a farmer, and they had three children—Harriet A., married to Daniel Griffin; Mary T., wife of Joseph Parks, of the firm of Parks & Tilford (they had two sons—George and Herbert—in business with their father), and Arthur, now deceased. (2) Russell, who succeeded to his mother's homestead, and lived there during his life, married Deborah Hoag, and had four children—Mary H., who married Alfred Wing, brother of Ebby P. Wing; Eliza, who died when young; Ann, unmarried, and John, who wedded Delia Ross. (3) Thomas, a farmer, settled in Broome county, N. Y., where he left descendants; he married Mary Gilbert, and had four children—Amelia, who married Morton Crane, of Putnam county; Gilbert, who first married Amanda Tripp, and had one daughter, Hattie (now Mrs. Birdsell); Delilah, who married Warren Merchant, and Jeremiah, who lives in Delaware county. (4) William, our subject's father. (5) Harriet, who married Jonathan Akin, and with her husband was greatly esteemed in the Society of Friends, as well as in the community at large. (6) John, who died at the age of sixteen.

William Taber, who was born December 10, 1796, inherited 260 acres of the old farm, by buying out the other heirs. He was a successful farmer, a Quaker in religion and an exemplary citizen, noted for his unflinching kindness to the unfortunate. Although he never took an active part in politics, he was a staunch Democrat in principle. He married Eliza, daughter of Abial Sherman, a leading resident of the southern part of the town of Pawling. She died February 5, 1841, and he survived her until 1863, when he breathed his last at the old homestead. Of their three children, one died February 4, 1846, at the age of six years. Walter F. Taber, the youngest of the two surviving sons, is a well-known resident of Poughkeepsie.

William Henry Taber, the eldest son, was born May 4, 1825, and has spent the greater part of his life on the old estate. After finishing the course of study afforded in the district school of the neighborhood, he attended the Jacob Willets select school for some time, and then studied one winter in Poughkeepsie, with Prof. Hyatt. He received a fair education for the times, which his naturally active mind has enabled him to enlarge by reading and observation. He remained at home until his marriage in 1852 to Miss Catherine Flagler, daughter of Benjamin F. Flagler, a prominent citizen of Beekman, when he settled upon a farm belonging to an aunt of his wife, conducting same for two years. In 1854 he bought J. J. Vandenburg's interest in a general store at Pawling, and gave his whole attention to the business. In the following year Mr. Merritt sold his interest in the same store, to Walter F. Taber, and the two brothers continued in partnership until 1863, when our subject moved to the old homestead, buying up all other claims upon it. Here he has carried on general farming, and has also engaged in other lines of business, dealing extensively in live-stock, in the slaughter of cattle, and in the sale of meat at retail. His purchases of Western cattle to supply the local demand for milk cows have been large and profitable—in fact, his enterprises have been uniformly successful. He was an incorporator and one of the original trustees of the Pawling Savings Bank, has been for many years its vice-president, and for more than twenty years has been an inspector of the National Bank of Pawling.

Wm H. Faber

Mr. Taber's first wife died on September 26, 1855, leaving two daughters: Eliza, the wife of William H. Osborne, of Pawling; and Amelia, who married Edwin R. Ferris, of Jersey Heights. In 1858, for his second wife, Mr. Taber wedded Elizabeth Thomas, daughter of Charles Thomas, a well-known resident of the town of Dover, and three children were born to them: George A.; Nellie, wife of Stephen Moore; and Charles W., who resides at Gaylords Bridge. The mother of this family died April 6, 1874, and Mr. Taber formed a third matrimonial union January 10, 1888, with Miss Louise Frost, daughter of Alva Frost. They have had two sons: William Henry, Jr., and Sherman, both at present attending school.

Mr. Taber is an influential worker in the Democratic party, and served as supervisor and justice of the peace in 1854. He is active in local affairs also, and has been assessor for nineteen years, during which time he has revised the entire assessment list.

HENRY D. WHITE, M. D., a leading physician and surgeon of Hopewell Junction, Dutchess county, belongs to a family that has had several able representatives in the medical profession. His great-grandfather, Ebenezer White, was an eminent practitioner of Westchester county, N. Y., where his entire life was passed. The White family is of old English stock, and was founded in this country during the early period of its settlement. In religious belief they have been principally members of the Reformed Dutch Church.

His grandfather, Dr. Bartow F. White, was a native of Westchester county, N. Y., but engaged in the practice of medicine in Connecticut. In politics he was a stalwart supporter of the Democratic party. He married Ann Augusta Belcher, a native of Roundhill, Conn., and a daughter of Elisha Belcher, M. D., who served with distinction during the Revolutionary war, and whose ring, worn by him at that time, is now on the finger of the Doctor. Four children were born to the grandparents: Stephen; Alethea, who married Dr. Henry A. Weeks, of New York City (and whose son, Bartow F., was assistant district attorney of that city); and William and Elisha, deceased.

Stephen White was born at Roundhill, Conn., was reared to manhood in New York City, and has been engaged in mercantile pursuits exclusively, both in that city and in Brooklyn, but is now living retired. He was united in marriage with Caroline Elizabeth De la Pierre, whose birth occurred in New York City. Her father was a native of Holland, but of French-Huguenot parentage. The Doctor is the third in order of birth in a family of three children, his sisters being Alethea A., and Caroline De la Pierre, who died at the age of six years. His parents are highly-esteemed people, members of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and his father is an adherent of Democratic principles, always supporting that party.

Dr. White was born at Brooklyn, February 8, 1866, there received his primary education in a private school, and later attended the Polytechnic Institute. After the completion of his literary course he entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons, of New York City, where he graduated with the class of 1887, after which for one year he was house physician of St. John's Hospital of Brooklyn, thus gaining much valuable practical experience. He located at Hopewell Junction in 1896, and from the present outlook will soon be at the head of a large and lucrative practice. He has that love for his profession which is sure to win success, and his skill cannot fail to be recognized. Like his ancestors, the Doctor is also an ardent Democrat, and socially holds membership in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Royal Arcanum, both in New Jersey lodges; also in the New Jersey Society of the Sons of the Revolution. Professionally, he is a member of the Dutchess County Medical Society.

DAVID COLE (deceased) was one of the most genial and whole-souled men of Dutchess county. He had accumulated a good property, by his own thrift and industry, owning at the time of his death the property in the town of Red Hook, known as the William Waldorf farm, which contains sixty-nine acres of rich and fertile land. His tastes always inclined him to agricultural pursuits, and that industry found in him a most able representative. He was a son of David Cole, a leading farmer of the town of Rhinebeck, Dutchess county.

In 1846 our subject was married to Miss Catherine Lewis, who was born in Woodstock, Ulster Co., N. Y., in 1825, and educated in the common schools of that place. To this worthy couple were born six children. (1) James Lewis was born in the town of Red Hook, and when eighteen years of age enlisted in the Union army at Albany, N. Y., becoming a member of the United States Cavalry. In an engagement he was taken prisoner by the Rebels, and while confined in one of those loathsome Southern prisons contracted the measles, from which he died when in the nineteenth year of his age. (2) Prudence is the next in order of birth. (3) Alida married Alfred Henion, and had four children—Jennie Louise, born March 24, 1872; Philip Hiram, born November 9, 1874; Watson Lewis, born January 9, 1879, and died in infancy; and Ethel Catherine, born August 21, 1888. (4) Luella is the fourth in the family. (5) Elizabeth died in infancy. (6) Philip Henry was also born in the town of Red Hook. He became a student in Union College at Schenectady, N. Y., and also attended the New York College for one year. He then became professor in the former institution, which position he held until 1895, at the same time being pastor of the Second Reformed Church at Schenectady. He has been quite an extensive traveler, having visited Europe several times. He married Miss Anna Furbeck, of Schenectady, and they have two children: Edward Martin, born August 30, 1892, and Lewis Furbeck, born June 6, 1893.

Garrett Lewis, the father of Mrs. Cole, was a native of Woodstock, Ulster county, and during his boyhood and youth attended the public schools of the locality. He followed farming as a lifework. He was united in marriage with Miss Fannie Ewryrie, of the same place, and they became the parents of ten children, as follows: Bowen remained single; William H. married Nellie Kipp; John married Eliza Smith; Christopher married Sophia Homer; Marie married Andrew Wolvern; Nellie married John Whittaker; Leah married Peter John; Philip died in childhood; Matthew died in infancy; and Catherine (widow of David Cole, of this review) completes the family.

CARPENTER FAMILY. Tradition, Parish and Church records, and other information quite conclusive, tell us that the first of the Carpenters, of whom this sketch relates was a German of the name of (I) Gotlieb Zimmerman, who about the year 1500 emigrated from Prussia to England, where he anglicized his name to Caleb Carpenter. William and (II) Richard Carpenter are supposed to have been his immediate descendants, and the only children of their parents to attain to man's estate, (II) Richard being the only one of the two who left issue. William was engaged extensively in ship chandlery, and later in the shipping business, chiefly with the West Indies and when he died in 1700 at the age of ninety seven years, he left an estate said to have been valued at three million pounds sterling, devised by will (bearing date 1684) to his legal heirs who are supposed to have been his nephews (III) Ephraim and Timothy Carpenter, the residing in America; and Josiah and Phebe Carpenter (both then residing in Wales), children of (III) Ephraim Carpenter, only son of (I) Richard Carpenter.

(III) Ephraim Carpenter had issue: Ephraim, (IV) Timothy, Josiah, and Phebe, who died in Wales; the other three emigrated America about the year 1678; but Josiah returned to Wales a few years afterward, and died there. Ephraim and (IV) Timothy purchased a large tract of land of the Indians on Long Island, in the then Province of New York, embracing a large portion, if not all, of the town of Hempstead, and settled thereon at or near what is now known as Jerusalem.

(IV) Timothy Carpenter was born in England December 19, 1665. About 1688 he married Mercy Coles, of Oyster Bay, Long Island, and a short time thereafter they moved to Westchester county. Their family consisted of the following children: John, born June 13, 1690; Hulda, August 29, 1692; Jephtha, December 18, 1693; (V) Benjamin, March 25, 1696; and Timothy, Jr., April 1, 1698.

(V) Benjamin Carpenter was born in Westchester county, N. Y., March 25, 1696, and for his first wife married, October 30, 1718, Hannah ———, who was born March 19, 1698. Children as follows were born to them: Eliza, September 12, 1719; Elijah, December 23, 1722; Ezra, May 6, 1726; Luther, August 16, 1730; Sarah, July 11, 1734, and (VI) Caleb, September 25, 1736. After the death of his first wife, November 3, 1758, (V) Benjamin married Lydia ———, born August 4, 1712, and died November 25, 1778. (V) Benjamin died March 26, 1778 or 1779.

(VI) Caleb Carpenter was born September 25, 1736, in Westchester county, N. Y. For his first wife he married Amy ———, who was born November 25, 1738, and children as follows were born to them; Sebe, born July 4, 1760; Benjamin, April 1, 1762; Mary, June 20, 1767; Lydia, August 4, 1769, died August 27, 1796; (VII) John, October 20, 1771; Zeno, December 8, 1773, died February 8, 1795; Ruth, January 24, 1776, and Caleb, October 22, 1778, died December 3, 1814. The mother of these died January 18, 1795, and to his second wife (VI) Caleb married Zipporah Kip, who died February 12, 1818, aged sixty-nine years. (VI) Caleb died December 20, 1826.

(VII) John Carpenter was born at White Plains, Westchester county, October 20, 1771, and died October 10, 1828. He was married February 16, 1799, to Amy Green, who was born January 7, 1781, daughter of Isaiah and Elizabeth Green, and children as follows were born to them: Leonard, November 8, 1799; (VIII) Emory, March 5, 1801; William G., October 24, 1802; Jacob, November 24, 1804;

Caleb, February 5, 1807, and John G., in November, 1812. The father of these followed farming exclusively, and he and his wife were members of the Hicksite Quakers Society. He died 10th 9th Mo., 1828, she on 8th 7th Mo., 1851, aged seventy years, six months, one day.

(VIII) Emory Carpenter was born March 5, 1801, in Westchester county, where he lived until he was sixteen years old, and then came to the town of Clinton, Dutchess county, later removing to Ulster county. In that county, at New Paltz, by Rev. Bogardus, October 22, 1825, he was married to Jane Ann Du Bois, who was born April 15, 1806, in Plattekill, Ulster county, daughter of Joseph and Abigail (Cooper) Du Bois, of Ulster county, whose children were: Jane Ann, Hannah, Martha, Rachel, Josiah C. and Elias M. Joseph Du Bois was a lifelong farmer. Peter Du Bois, son of Jacques, who was the Huguenot who emigrated to America in the year 1674, was the great-great-great-grandfather of William J. and J. Du Bois Carpenter, both of Poughkeepsie. His descendant, Elias Du Bois, married Elizabeth Tompkins. Soon after their marriage (VIII) Emory Carpenter and his wife located on a farm near Poughkeepsie, later removing to New York for a time. They had the following children: Edmund, born June 29, 1826, died September 10, 1827; Caleb, August 25, 1827, died August 5, 1828; (IX) William J., December 10, 1828; Amy J., May 8, 1831; (IX) J. Du Bois, March 14, 1833; Harriet N., November 13, 1834; George E., May 13, 1836; Elias Du Bois, December 11, 1837; and Jacob G., August 2, 1843. Of these, William J. lives a retired life in Poughkeepsie; Amy J. married Capt. Smith, who is deceased; Harriet N. became the wife of Nathan Williams, of Ulster county; George E. is a clerk with his brother, J. Du Bois; Elias D. is captain of a steamer on the Hudson; and Jacob G. has been connected with the Brooklyn Eagle for twenty-three years. After leaving the farm near Poughkeepsie, the parents moved to another in the town of Lagrange, where the father died August 17, 1844; politically, he was a Democrat, in religious faith a Hicksite Quaker. The mother, for her second husband, married Selleck Carpenter, August, 1856. She died June 10, 1891.

(IX) Josiah Du Bois Carpenter, one of the leading and oldest grocers of Poughkeepsie, was born at New Paltz, Ulster Co., N. Y.,

March 14, 1833. When one year old he was taken to Poughkeepsie, where he attended the district schools until fourteen years of age, and then studied with his uncle, Josiah C. Du Bois, after whom he was named. Mr. Carpenter entered a general store at Highland conducted by his uncle Josiah C. Du Bois, where he stayed for five years; then returned to Poughkeepsie and clerked in a dry-goods store for John W. Miller one year; then clerked for Cornwall & Heath for the same length of time. Subsequently he engaged in the grocery business with his brother, William J., which he continued from 1854 until 1861, when he left the grocery business for freighting; but in 1863 he resumed the grocery trade. On May 28, 1857, Mr. Carpenter was married to Miss Elizabeth R. Southwick, who was born August 25, 1835, in Napanoch, Ulster Co., N. Y., daughter of Adna H. Southwick. The following children were the result of this union: Stella B., born April 10, 1858; Alice M., born December 31, 1863; Mary A., born January 28, 1866; died March 16, 1866; Lydia S., born October 10, 1867; and Du Bois, born March 22, 1873. Of these, Alice M. was married April 2, 1886, at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., to Clinton D. Parkhill, son of Mortimer and Eleanor (Shultz) Parkhill, of Canisteo, N. Y., and children as follows have been born to them: Clinton D., Jr., born August 2, 1887; J. Du Bois, born May 24, 1892, died September 28, 1892; Mortimer S., born December 10, 1894; and Reynolds S., born February 13, 1896, died July 17, 1896.

(IX) Josiah Du Bois Carpenter is a Republican in politics, a member of the Royal Arcanum, and he and his wife belong to the Methodist Church. He has always taken an active interest in all public matters pertaining to the welfare of Poughkeepsie; was first president (for two years) of the Merchants Association, and has served on several committees for the improvement of the city. His place of business is on the corner of Main and Academy streets, opposite the "Morgan House."

GEORGE K. TABER, a leading agriculturist of the town of Pawling, Dutchess county, and a director of the Pawling National Bank, is a descendant of one of the oldest and most distinguished families of that vicinity. His ancestors were originally from England.

Thomas Taber, great-grandfather of our subject, was born in New Bedford, Mass., in 1732, came to Dutchess county in 1760, and bought a farm at Quaker Hill, where he passed the remainder of his life. He was a Quaker in religion, and most of his descendants adhered to the same faith. His death occurred September 18, 1783, when he was aged fifty years; his wife, Anne Theresa Taber, was born in 1734, and died August 29, 1805, at the age of seventy-one years. They had eleven children, whose names, with dates of birth and death, are as follows: Hannah (wife of Edmond Ferris), November 12, 1753—December 4, 1777; Salome, June 11, 1755—1766; Nathaniel (son), April 26, 1757; Meribah, March 23, 1759—June 4, 1850; William, November 6, 1760—November 3, 1836; Jeremiah, August 26, 1762—May 8, 1834; Anne Therese, April 2, 1766—1856; Ruth, April 1, 1768—1789; Salome (wife of Charles Hurd), August 29, 1771—1827; Almy, August 28, 1773; Mary, November 18, 1775—May 27, 1852. Of these, William, grandfather of our subject, married Martha Akin, who was born March 1, 1761, and children as follows came to this union, names and dates of birth being given: Isaac, October 11, 1782; Hannah, November 25, 1783; Thomas, May 19, 1785; George P., June 25, 1787; Phebe, January 13, 1790; Sybilla, June 27, 1791; Abigail, December 21, 1793; Jonathan Akin, March 7, 1797; and Ann, February 15, 1799. Of these, Thomas married, February 2, 1820, Phebe Titus, daughter of Stephen Titus and his wife Elizabeth (Holmes), and their children were: Stephen, born March 7, 1821, and Samuel Titus, April 13, 1824, died at Roslyn, Long Island, February 4, 1871. The father of these died March 21, 1862, at Roslyn, Long Island, the mother on August 13, 1824, at Chestnut Ridge, Dutchess Co., New York.

Stephen Taber, son of Thomas and Phebe (Titus) Taber, married Rosetta M. Townsend May 27, 1845, and their children were: Samuel T., who was lost at sea in October, 1865; William T., married to Sarah Canton; Adelaide, married to Walter R. Willets (their children—Rosetta, Elsie, Gertrude and Edna; Gertrude, married to Benjamin Kirk; and Thomas T., married to Katharine Brooks (have one son—William T.)). The father of these died in New York City April 23, 1886, the mother on March 4, 1883.

Samuel Titus Taber married Katherine C. Hiller, September 2, 1845, and they moved from Dutchess county to Long Island, in 1856. Their children are two in number: (1) Martha Elizabeth, born July 2, 1846, married William H. Willets, September 12, 1867 (their daughter, Katherine Taber Willets, born October 10, 1868, married Alfred A. Gardner, August 22, 1892; they have one son, born November 8, 1896); and (2) Sarah Phebe, born November 4, 1847, married William Willets in 1869 (their children are: Samuel Taber Willets, born October 15, 1872; Stephen Taber Willets, born August 1, 1878; and Robert Henry Willets, born June 24, 1881).

William Taber, grandfather of our subject, became a man of distinction and note. He was a Democrat in politics, was one of the judges of sessions in Dutchess county, and in 1790 was a member of the State Assembly, his strong, upright character and aggressive disposition giving him great influence with all classes. He was an extensive land holder, owning about one thousand acres which he divided among his sons. He married Martha Akin (daughter of Jonathan and Lillias (Ferris) Akin), who died January 3, 1847, in her eighty-sixth year. Of their nine children, the eldest, Hannah, married (first) Mr. Pierson, and (second) Daniel Rumsey; she left a son, William T., who married (in 1842) Caroline Field, and settled at Fairfax Court House, Va., where he and his family still live. (2) Thomas married Phœbe Titus, of Hempstead, L. I., and they lived at Chestnut Ridge, Dutchess county, until, about 1856, the family moved to Roslyn, L. I. They had two sons: Stephen (who went to Congress from there, serving two terms—1864 and 1866) and Samuel T. Thomas lived at Chestnut Ridge, and took a prominent part in the political movements of his time, serving as a member of the Twentieth Congress. (3) George P. married Helen Akin, and had three children: William (who died February 16, 1859), Oliver (who died September 17, 1878), and Philip (the only one now (1897) living). George P. died in February, 1870, in his eighty-third year, and of his three children, above named, William married Helen Kirby, Oliver married Eliza Irwin, of East Albany, and Philip is a bachelor residing on the homestead; William and Oliver both died without issue. (4) Sybil married John Pierce, and had one son—George T. Pierce. (5) Abigail married Cyrus Tweedy. (6) Phœbe married Thomas Sweet.

(7) Ann married Chesterfield King, and had two children—William T. and Helen.

Jonathan Aiken Taber, our subject's father, was born in 1797, and with his two brothers inherited the homestead, his share being 260 acres, to which he afterward added until he owned more than 600 acres. His life was passed in agricultural pursuits, and he did not take a prominent part in politics; but he was always interested in public questions, and took a decided stand against slavery, becoming a Republican in his later years. He was one of the most substantial and public-spirited men of his town, and he and his cousin, Jonathan Akin, were among the prime movers in the construction of the Harlem railroad, to which he gave much time and energy. Like his father and a majority of the family, he was a lifelong supporter of the Society of Friends. His first wife, Hannah Kirby, daughter of George Kirby, died December 25, 1832, leaving two children, of whom our subject is the elder. The other, Martha Ann, married William H. Akin, and had two children: Albro and Amy. His second wife was Abigail Ayers, by whom he had five children: Hannah, who married Edward Wanzer, and has one daughter, Margaret; William T., who married Emma L. Crawford, and has one child, Frederick C., who has been bookkeeper in the National Bank of Pawling some twenty years; James Ayers, who married Virginia Houghton, and has three children—William, James Akin and Gertrude; Mary, who died at sixteen years of age; Abbie, who died in 1880, aged thirty-two years. The father of this family died in 1868, and his second wife survived him until 1889.

George K. Taber, the subject proper of this sketch, was born February 5, 1822, at the old homestead about two miles below the village of Pawling. He received a common-school education, which was supplemented with a three-seasons' course at Dutchess County Academy, Poughkeepsie, where he graduated when about twenty-one years old. He has been engaged in farming all his life, and for twenty-four years lived on the Ravinewood farm, about three miles southeast of the village. In 1869 he bought his present property, and built the house in which he now resides. As a business man he is successful, and he is one of the most influential men of the locality. In October, 1845, he married Charlotte Field, who was born January 16, 1826, in the town of Pawling, only child of Comfort Field, and granddaughter of Gilbert Field. The family is one of the oldest in this region, and her ancestors were early settlers at North Salem, Westchester county, where the old homestead is still in the possession of lineal descendants. Of the five children of this union, two are living: Gilbert Field, the eldest child and only son, born September, 1846, died August, 1889. He married Mary B. Allen, and had three daughters—Hattie A., Hannah and Mary, all yet living; he was a farmer and cattle raiser, importing the first Red-Polled cattle ever brought to this country. Hannah K. died at the age of twenty. Martha A. and Alicia are at home. Lottie died in 1880, at the age of eighteen years. Mr. and Mrs. Taber are Baptists in faith, and have always taken great interest in the work of the Church, and in all measures for the public welfare. In politics he was formerly a Republican, but of late years he has affiliated with the Prohibition party, taking a strong stand in the cause of temperance. His father was one of the first to prohibit the use of stimulants in the harvest field and on other occasions, as the custom then was.

EUGENE S. CRAFT, one of the most straightforward and energetic business men of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, spent the first ten years of his life in Port Chester, Westchester Co., N. Y., where his birth took place February 14, 1867. He is a son of John W. and Phœbe (Merritt) Craft, who were married in that city; but when he was only three years of age his mother died, leaving eight children, namely: Graham, Earls, Phœbe, John, Manford, Louis, Eugene Sloat and Washington. The father, who was a native of Putnam county, N. Y., became a highly-educated man, and for seven years followed the profession of teaching. By trade he was a stone mason, and while following contracting in that line was employed as overseer on the masonry of the West Shore railroad passing through Newburgh, N. Y., where he is now engaged in the grocery business. For his second wife he married Eliza Terwilliger.

In the public schools Eugene S. Craft obtained his education, and was ten years of age on going to Newburgh, where he remained eight years. On the expiration of that time he came to Poughkeepsie, first being in the employ of Mr. Griggs, at the "Morgan House," where he remained some three years. He next entered his father's grocery store as clerk, and two years later the business was sold to S. J. Kelder, for whom he also worked two years. In 1892 he entered into partnership with J. G. Bloomer, under the firm name of E. S. Craft, but at the end of six months he purchased his partner's interest. In January, 1894, he bought his present store at No. 466 Main street, from Mr. Bloomer, and admitted that gentleman to a partnership in the store at No. 521. Nine months later he sold his interest in the latter establishment to his partner, retaining the store at No. 466, of which he is sole proprietor. He has been quite successful in his business ventures, and now receives a liberal patronage.

While a resident of Newburgh, Mr. Craft held membership with Trinity Church, and now belongs to Washington Street Methodist Episcopal Church, while he is also assistant superintendent of the Cherry Street Chapel. Socially he is connected with the Knights of Pythias Lodge, and in politics is an earnest and strong advocate of the principles of the Prohibition party. He is a conscientious, Christian gentleman, an active worker for the temperance cause, and upright and honorable in all the walks of life.

MAJ. WILLIAM HAUBENNESTEL, of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, senior member of the well-known firm of Haubennestel & Son, dealers in boots and shoes, is one of the representative men of that place. He has been identified with the city since his childhood, for, although he is a native of New York City, born in 1843, he was taken to Poughkeepsie six years later by his parents.

After leaving school he learned the shoe-making trade, and in 1867 started for himself in the shoe business, which he has conducted ever since. Mr. Haubennestel is a staunch Republican, and has served his party faithfully on many occasions. He was assessor in 1872-74-76, and was elected supervisor of the Second ward in Poughkeepsie in 1887. In that body he did valiant service, and it was through his instrumentality that the matter of caring for the insane was amicably arranged, saving the city thousands of dollars. In 1894 he was elected treasurer of Dutchess county with a majority of 2,290.

In military circles Mr. Haubennestel is known throughout the entire State. On May 2, 1860, he joined Company D, 21st Regiment, N. Y. V. I. (now the Nineteenth Separate Company), as a private, and received rapid promotion as follows: July 2, 1861, second sergeant; July 3, 1862, first sergeant; November 3, 1862, second lieutenant; April 6, 1866, first lieutenant; November 12, 1866, captain; and on January 2, 1876, by virtue of long service, he was promoted to the rank of brevet-major. During all these years he had served his country faithfully without a furlough or even a leave of absence. At the front his record is bright. In June, 1863, when the National Capital and the whole North was threatened by the victorious army of Gen. Lee, the command left Poughkeepsie, reported to Maj. Gen. Schenck at Baltimore, and was assigned quarters at Belgier's barracks. It was at this critical juncture that the history of Company D and Maj. W. Haubennestel became closely linked. He was then a lad of only eighteen years, and was with them in all the exciting times until mustered out of service in August, 1863. He was repeatedly offered the position of post adjutant, but his age prevented his acceptance. On February 20, 1897, he was appointed battalion commander of the Eleventh Battalion, embracing the territories of Westchester, Putnam, Dutchess and Columbia counties.

To this gentleman the city of Poughkeepsie is indebted for the beautiful armory on Market street; for almost alone, for seven long years, he fought for its erection, making at least three hundred trips to Albany before he secured his purpose. In May, 1891, on Decoration Day, the corner stone was laid with imposing ceremonies, and now the grand structure is a monument to his energy and perseverance.

Our subject was married October 10, 1867, to Alice Buys, and two children have been born to them: Ella L. and Louis P.

Major Haubennestel's friends are legion, and he is active in fraternal society work. In 1866 he joined the I. O. O. F., at Poughkeepsie, Lodge No. 21, in which he has passed all the chairs, and he has been a representative to the Grand Lodge several times. He is also an old member of Poughkeepsie Lodge No. 266, F. & A. M., having joined same in 1868. In 1880 he united with Hamilton Post, G. A. R., and he is a member of the Veteran Fireman Association. The Nineteenth Separate Company Fife, Drum and Bugle Corps, the crack drum corps of the State of New York, was organized in the fall of 1888 by Mr. Haubennestel, assisted by his son Louis P. Haubennestel, who is leader of the corps, and was the promoter of the organization.

Louis P. Haubennestel, the junior member of the firm of Haubennestel & Son, was born in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., August 16, 1870, and his education was completed at Riverview Academy, where he held the position of drum major. He was the commanding officer of St. Paul's Co., Knights of Temperance, in 1890, when they won the prize banner for drill, in New York City. On April 11, 1894, he was married to Minnie Avis Barton, daughter of Edward and Mina (Fenn) Barton, of Salisbury, Conn., where she was born. Her grandfather, who was a prominent Democrat, in 1842 delivered a political address in Poughkeepsie, and in 1852 he carried the official vote of the State of Connecticut to Washington. From 1852 to 1856 he was a member of the Assembly, and in 1873 was State senator. He is still living at Salisbury, Conn. Mrs. L. P. Haubennestel's father is also prominent in Democratic circles and has held several positions of trust.

JOSE MANUEL GODINEZ, of the firm of C. H. Gallup & Co., is as his name would indicate, of Cuban origin, born August 1, 1853, on the island of Cuba, where his father, Francisco J. Godinez, was the owner of a large sugar plantation.

Jose Manuel Godinez passed his boyhood in his native land, and received his education in the lower schools, from which he took the degree A. B., and in the University of Havana. When yet quite young he was made one of the guards of the Captain-General of Cuba, and stationed at Havana. He served three years, receiving the rank of lieutenant, and then obtaining a furlough, came to the United States, and at once declared his intention of becoming a citizen; he remained here until after his final papers were signed, and then went home on a visit. In 1876 he entered the Eastman Business College at Poughkeepsie, and took a full business course. During all this time he made frequent visits home to see his parents. Even now, while Poughkeepsie is his home, he still retains a large plantation of several thousand acres in Cuba, though this has been laid waste and the buildings all burned in the progress of the present Cuban war. In 1890 he entered partnership with Mr. Gallup in the photograph business.

In 1877, in Poughkeepsie, Mr. Godinez was married to Miss Ella Gallup, daughter of Charles H. Gallup, and sister of his present partner in business. To this union one child has been born, Francisco Laurent, now attending Riverview Military College. Mr. Godinez is a member of the Masonic fraternity—Ancient Scottish Rite—which he joined in Cuba. He is also a member of the Poughkeepsie Gun Club.

ISAAC W. SHERRILL, who has twice served as county treasurer, and who is one of the most prominent citizens of Poughkeepsie, was born in New Lebanon, Columbia Co., N. Y., May 16, 1849, a son of Walter and Amy (Fowler) Sherrill.

The Sherrill family is of English ancestry, and the first of the name in this country settled on Long Island, whence some of them came to Dutchess county. Isaac Sherrill, the grandfather of our subject, was born in the town of Stanford, Dutchess county, where he carried on farming. On June 18, 1809, he married Betsy Jackson, and they had five children, of whom the following record is given: Jeremiah is a farmer in the town of Washington, Dutchess county; Walter is the father of our subject; Hunting is a farmer in Columbia county, N. Y.; Eliza M. married Lewis Adsit, also a farmer, and now deceased; and Margaret married George Fowler, now deceased.

Walter Sherrill was born in the town of Stanford, and was reared on the home farm. He married Amy E., daughter of Israel Fowler, who was born at Unionvale, Dutchess county, and they settled on a farm in Columbia county, where the father died in 1852, and the mother in 1854. They were consistent members of the Christian Church, and in his political belief the father was a Whig. They had two children: Isaac W. and Henrietta, the latter being now deceased.

Isaac W. Sherrill was a child of three years when his father died, and his mother's death following two years later, he was taken by his uncle, Jeremiah Sherrill, with whom he lived in the town of Hillsdale, Columbia county, until twelve years of age. His uncle at that time removed to the town of Washington, Dutchess county, and there our subject attended the district school, later taking a course at the Dutchess County Academy. His education was completed at Cary's Institute, Poughkeepsie, and when twenty-one years of age he returned to that city and entered the hardware store of Uhl & Husted, as clerk. With this house he remained two years, and then went into the general store of Budd & Trowbridge. A year later he bought the interest of Mr. Budd, and the firm became Trowbridge & Sherrill. In the following year Peter Adriance was admitted to the partnership, and the name was changed to Trowbridge, Sherrill & Adriance. This connection continued for three years, when Mr. Sherrill sold out his interests, and for a short time was engaged in the manufacture of shoes with Bayly & Halsted.

In 1878, Mr. Sherrill was elected alderman of the Third ward, on the Republican ticket, and was re-elected in 1880, serving two terms. He was afterward appointed city chamberlain, by Mayor Ezra White, which office he held four years. In 1886 Mr. Sherrill started as a dealer in investment securities, a business he is yet carrying on, at No. 19 Market street. In 1888 he was elected county treasurer, and at the expiration of his term was re-elected, serving in this capacity until January 1, 1895. In April, 1897, Governor Black appointed him one of the Board of Trustees of the New York State Soldiers' and Sailors' Home, located at Bath, Steuben Co., N. Y., which is an institution of about fifteen hundred inmates. In June of the same year he resigned from that position, and the Governor appointed him to the honorary position of one of the Board of Managers of the Hudson River State Hospital located at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., which is considered a position of prominence in the State.

On October 1, 1873, our subject was united in marriage with Miss Virginia Halstead, a native of the town of Stanford, Dutchess county. The Halsteads are of English descent, and her father, Nehemiah Halstead, was for a time a merchant at Bangall, Dutchess county, afterward following farming. Four children have been born to our subject and his wife: Wilfred H., Harold W., Virgil C. and Arthur L. Mr. and Mrs. Sherrill attend the Congregational Church. Mr. Sherrill is a Republican in politics, and has always taken a lively interest in public matters, lending his influence to all projects for the growth and welfare of his community. His ability as a business man is well-known, and he stands high in the estimation of his associates.

Isaac W. Sherrill

JAMES HARVEY SWIFT (deceased) was born in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., April 23, 1825, and was a brother of George H. Swift, a leading citizen of the town of Amenia, Dutchess county. His boyhood days were passed in his native city, attending the Dutchess County Academy and College Hill Academy. For two years later he was a student at Yale College, after which he entered Rutgers College at New Brunswick, N. J., taking the classical course and graduating with the class of '44. He then came to the town of Amenia, where, for a year, he lived upon a farm with his brother John, and subsequently purchased the Burton farm, where he lived until his marriage.

On February 4, 1847, Mr. Swift was married in New York City to Miss Frances Augusta Swift, daughter of Thomas Swift, and they became the parents of seven children, namely: Alida Warner, born November 9, 1847, died December 12, 1892; Henry, born December 31, 1849, died January 15, 1865; Frances Augusta, born December 12, 1851, died March 15, 1852; Thomas James, born March 6, 1853; Charles Rowland, born January 28, 1858, died April 30, 1860; Freeborn Jewett, born February 11, 1862, died December 15, 1864; and John Morton, born October 6, 1865.

In 1857 Mr. Swift purchased the Philo Reed farm, which continued to be his home until his death, on September 27, 1889. During his active business life he carried on farming in the town of Amenia, with the exception of when, in connection with his brother, George H., he was executor of his brother Charles' estate, at which time he resided in Poughkeepsie.

Mr. Swift was a most earnest and consistent member of the Presbyterian Church at South Amenia, in which he served as elder from 1864, and politically was a Republican. His record was an honorable one, and his memory will be long cherished by the many who had the pleasure of his acquaintance, for his sturdy worth and for his countless acts of benevolence and kindness, of which often only the recipient and himself knew. He was an influential man, and contributed liberally to all good enterprises.

Mrs. Swift was born in the town of Dover, Dutchess county, July 25, 1828, and before her marriage was a distant relative of her husband, both tracing their ancestry back to Judah Swift, their paternal great-grandfather.

The founder of the family in America was William Swift, and from him in direct line to Judah are William, Ephraim and Samuel. Judah Swift, by his marriage with Elizabeth Morton, had eight children: Lois; Samuel; Nathaniel; Moses; Rebecca; Seth, the grandfather of Mr. Swift, of this review; Elizabeth; and Moses, the grandfather of Mrs. Swift. Seth wedded Mary Wells, and they had six children: Henry, Moses, E. Morton, Ann W., Maria and Thomas W. Henry, the eldest, married Rebecca Warner, and to them were born six children: Charles Wells, Maria, John Morton, George Henry, Frances, and James Harvey, whose name introduces this sketch.

Moses Swift, the grandfather of Mrs. Swift, spent his entire life in the town of Amenia. He married Hannah Hurd, of the town of Dover, on June 9, 1785, and one of their children was Thomas Swift, the father Mrs. James H. Swift. He was born in Amenia, January 24, 1789, and was three times married, his first wife being Maria Barlow, and his second Mary L. Grant. After the death of the latter he married Asenath Cline, the mother of Mrs. Swift. She was born October 6, 1793, and died April 1, 1891. The father was principally engaged in hotel keeping throughout life, conducting the "Forbes House" at Poughkeepsie; the "Atlantic Hotel" at Hoboken, N. J.; and the "Bull's Head" in New York City. His death occurred January 25, 1872.

EMERY WING (deceased) was born at Wing's Station, on the Harlem railroad, in the town of Dover, Dutchess county, May 20, 1825. There he remained during his youth, attending the public schools.

At the age of twenty-two he went to Albany, and clerked in the wholesale grocery store of Cook & Wing; stayed there three years, and then for one year traveled with the circus and menagerie of G. C. Quick & Co; next clerked in the "Northern Hotel," at the corner of Mill and Washington streets, for four years. Mr. Wing was married in the town of Washington to Ann Maria Vail, and then engaged in the fancy dry-goods and millinery business at No. 304 Main street, later buying the store at No. 306 Main street, and building the place now occupied by A. B. Stockholm. He remained in business from 1855 to 1877, and in 1872 bought his late residence on South avenue, where he passed the rest of his days. His first wife died November 9, 1875, and September 17, 1876, he married Miss Mary Eliza Van Kleeck, a daughter of Levi Van Kleeck. Of this union there were two children: Irene K., born October 7, 1877, died August 2, 1878, and Emery, Jr., born March 14, 1880. Mr. Wing had a large orchard, and was a very successful fruit grower, and for the past twenty years of his life he lived retired on South avenue, dying May 9, 1896.

Elijah Wing, father of our subject, was born at Wing's Station, where he spent his youth. He married Lucy, daughter of Bradford Holmes, M. D., and children as follows were born to them: (1) John, deceased; (2) Maria H., married (first) to Erastus Burch, and they had one child—Mary E.—and (second) wedded Edward M. Buckley, by whom there were three children—Charles, Arthur and Emery W. (3) Emery, our subject. (4) Walter F., who was on the whaling vessel, "Yonkers." (5) Hiram. Mr. Wing was a farmer, and gave all his time and attention to that occupation.

Thurston Wing, the grandfather, was born in Rhode Island, and came to the town of Dover when a boy. He married Mary Younger, and they had the following children: Archibald (deceased), Rhodie (deceased) married Zebulon Ross, Mary Ann became the wife of Theodorus Sheldon, and Elijah and Thurston (both deceased). Mr. Wing died in 1844, an adherent of the Quaker faith.

Thomas Wing, the great-grandfather, was born in England, and came to America, locating first in Rhode Island, and later in Dutchess county. He was the earliest ancestor of the Wing family in this country.

CORNELIUS LAMOREAUX CANNON, the well-known contractor and builder of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, was born February 1, 1850, at the old homestead of the family on South Hamilton street, Poughkeepsie.

His early education was acquired at the public schools of his native place, at the Dutchess County Academy, and at the Eastman Business College, from which he was graduated in 1867. His father, the late Arnout Cannon, was prominent in the building trade, and our subject learned the business thoroughly under his instruction, serving a three-years' apprenticeship. He was then made foreman of his father's shop, and held that position until 1873, when he and his brother Arnout, an architect, went into business under the firm name of A. Cannon's Sons. This arrangement lasted until 1881, when they separated, our subject continuing his work as builder, and his brother following architecture exclusively. Mr. Cannon is a leader in his line, and employs about twelve men the year round.

On April 28, 1873, Mr. Cannon was married in Poughkeepsie to Miss Julia E. Schon, a native of St. Croix, Danish West Indies. Her father, James N. Schon, was born in Copenhagen, Denmark, in 1815, and went to St. Croix when a young man as superintendent of a large hospital. He was married there to Miss Maria Schuster, a native of the place, who had been educated at New Haven, Conn. They had two children, Julia E. and Charles E. After twenty-two years at St. Croix, Mr. Schon came to the United States, spending one year in New York City before making his home in Poughkeepsie. He was for a short time employed as bookkeeper for the iron works of Edward Beck, and then became private secretary to the late Matthew Vassar. On the foundation of Vassar College he became registrar and assistant treasurer, and held those offices until his death, which occurred March 26, 1875.

Mr. and Mrs. Cannon have had eight children, whose names with dates of birth are as follows: Frederick, March 17, 1874; Nellie October 7, 1876; James Schon, October 25, 1878; Clara Louise, November 22, 1880; Ernest Alton, March 19, 1883; Wallace Cornelius, July 11, 1885; Francis Jones, April 3, 1887; and Julia Gardner, November 10, 1889. Politically Mr. Cannon is a Republican, but while he is a staunch and influential supporter of the doctrines of his party he is not an office seeker. He is a member of the I. O. O. F. No. 297, and of the Royal Arcanum.

CAPTAIN LUTHER ELTING, one of the oldest and most highly respected residents of the city of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, was born August 2, 1815, at Highland, Ulster county, then known as New Paltz Landing.

His ancestors were early settlers in the locality, and his grandfather, Noah Elting, was born there, and became one of the prominent business men of his day, being extensively engaged in the freighting business and in sloop building; he was also the originator of the ferry line between Highland and Poughkeepsie. He married Hannah Deyo, of Ulster county, and had the following named children: Deyo, Henry D., Philip, David, Abram, Mrs. David Fowler, Mrs. Clinton Woolsey, Mrs. Bradner Woolsey and Joseph.

Abram Elting, our subject's father, was born at New Paltz Landing in 1785, and after acquiring an education in the Dutch schools of New Paltz he engaged in freighting and sloop building, later conducting also a store and a farm, in all of which lines of effort he met with success. He was a leading member of the Presbyterian Church, and stood high in the esteem of the community. He married Miss Betsey Ransom, of Highland, and had seven children: Noah, who died at eighteen years; Milton, who died at three; Phœbe Ann (deceased); Luther, our subject; Albert (deceased); Mary Ellen, who married Ezekiel Elting, of Highland; and John J. (deceased). The mother of this family died in 1851, and the father in 1859.

Capt. Elting's school days were spent in the district school at Highland, and at fourteen and one-half years of age he began the freighting business with his father. After twelve years on the sloop "Intelligence," he ran a barge for another twelve years. In 1854 he moved to Poughkeepsie, where he had bought his present residence a short time before, and he has since lived a retired life so far as business is concerned, with the exception of our years—1860-64—when he was in the ice business under the name of Rockland Lake Ice Co., now the Knickerbocker Ice Co.

On January 26, 1853, at Middletown, Orange county, he was married to Miss Sarah C. Watkins, a lady of Welsh descent, and a daughter of Hezekiah Watkins. Of their three children, only one, Irving (the second child), is now living. Theodore Hezekiah died in infancy, and Eugene at the age of two and one-half years.

Irving Elting, born May 1, 1856, is a prominent attorney of Poughkeepsie. After graduating from Harvard University, in 1878, he studied law at the Harvard Law School, and then in his native city. In 1882 he opened an office there, and has met with great success in cases involving patent rights and copyrights, which he makes a specialty. On November 5, 1885, he married Miss Susan D. Green, a daughter of Jacob Green, a well-known resident of the town of Poughkeepsie, and to their union has been born one child—Elisabeth.

AIKEN T. BRILL, a well-known resident of the town of Pawling, Dutchess county, is one of the leading workers in his chosen occupation of farming and gardening. An apprenticeship of six years with J. B. Dutcher gave him unusual opportunities for perfecting himself in the details of the latter business, and his work as gardener for Miss M. B. Monahan, of Quaker Hill, does credit to both his training and native ability.

Egbert Brill, father of our subject, was one of the patriots who served his country during the Civil war, being a member of Company F, 128th N. Y. V. I. He participated in many engagements, among which were the battles of Bull Run, Port Hudson and Gettysburg. He was finally discharged on account of disability.

Aiken T. Brill is a native of the town of Pawling, and grew to manhood there, acquiring his education in the public schools. He married Miss Georgiana Squires, who was born in the same town, August 6, 1867. In her childhood her parents moved to the old homestead at Roxbury, Conn., and she there attended the schools and grew to womanhood; and there also she and our subject were married. Mr. and Mrs. Brill have four children: Clifton, Mabel, John C., and one whose name is not given.

Mrs. Brill's ancestry deserves especial note because of the patriotic services rendered during the Revolutionary war by the representatives of the family in that day. Her great-grandfather, Gideon Squires, was born and educated in Roxbury, Conn., and was captain of a company in the Colonial forces. He lost his life in the struggle for freedom while crossing Lake George. Having raised up in the boat to see where they were, he was shot by an Indian who was on the watch for a chance to take aim at the voyagers. He married Miss Martha Warner, a sister of Col. Seth Warner, who was second in command at the battle of Bennington. Four children were born to them: Abyathy, Eben, Martha and Margaret. Abyathy Squires, Mrs. Brill's great-grandfather, was born at Roxbury, Conn., and made his home there, following farming during his manhood. He served throughout the Revolutionary war, as sergeant, and drew a pension of $20 per month until his death at the age of eighty-nine years. He and his wife, Rachel Atwell, reared a family of four children, of whom Mrs. Brill's grandfather, Cyrus Squires, was the youngest. Of the others Levi died at the age of ten years; Moses married Clarissa Curtis; and John married Miss Eunice Hunt.

Cyrus Squires was born at the old home in Roxbury, June 24, 1804, and after completing his studies in the common schools there he engaged in farming. He married Miss Sarah Wilcox, daughter of Elisha Wilcox, a leading farmer of the town of Dover, Dutchess county, and his wife, Elizabeth Bircham. Of their two children, the elder, Moses, died at the age of seven years. The younger, George M., the father of Mrs. Brill, was born at the old homestead, September 13, 1839. He attended the common schools there in his youth, and learned the hatter's trade when it came time to prepare for taking a place in the business world; but after following the trade fifteen years he gave it up to engage in agriculture. He served in the governor's guards in the State of Connecticut, and was drafted during the Civil war. He died May 9, 1897, when he was aged fifty-seven years. His wife was Miss Emily Amelia Woodin, daughter of Henry L. and Laura (Chaplin) Woodin, of the town of Pawling, Dutchess county, her father being a well-known farmer. Mrs. Brill was the elder of two children. Her brother, Origen G. Squires, an adopted child, was born in New Milford, Conn., April 4, 1876, and died at fifteen years of age. He was taken by Mr. and Mrs. Brill when only eight days old and adopted as their own child.

J WILSON POUCHER, M. D., a prominent physician of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, and a representative of one of the oldest families of this State, was born July 24, 1859, at Claverack, Columbia Co., N. Y. His family originated in France, but his ancestors fled to Holland at the time of the "Massacre of St. Bartholomew", later coming to the New World.

Simon Poucher (or Boucher, as the name was then given) was born in France, came to America in 1658, and settled upon the Van-Rensselaer estates which included several counties, the site of the present city of Albany being a portion thereof. He was a millwright by trade, and was employed on the manor by Patroon Van Rensselaer, his home being in the vicinity of Claverack, where his descendants have since resided, many of them attaining to positions of great prominence. His son, Pierre Boucher, was born about 1675, and died February 19, 1739. One of his sons, Jacob (born January 13, 1715, died in 1786), had a son Antoine (born April 30, 1775, died 1856) who had a son Johannes, our subject's grandfather (born October 11, 1806), who had a son, Peter, our subject's father (born May 5, 1835). With the exception of the last-named these all followed the millers' trade in the vicinity of Claverack. Peter departed from the rule, engaging in agriculture exclusively, and being industrious, temperate and thrifty has made a success of a business which is not always profitable in these days. He is a member of the Baptist Church, and in politics is a Democrat, taking no part, however, in the active work of the organization. He married Miss Mary Cummings, daughter of Jacob Cummings, a native of New England, and a prominent resident of Claverack. She died in 1870, and of their five children only three are now living, our subject being the eldest.

Dr. Poucher received his primary education at the public schools of Claverack, later attending Claverack College, from which institution he was graduated in 1879, in the classical course. For one year he taught in the public schools, and then entered Union College, graduating in 1883 from the medical department. Locating at Modena, Ulster county, he established a general practice; but wishing to pursue his studies further, he disposed of his business in 1885 and went to Europe for two years, spending the first year in Berlin, then dividing the second between Vienna and Paris, making a specialty of surgery and gynecology. On his return, in 1887, he opened an office in Poughkeepsie, and has since built up a large general practice. Although a general practitioner, he makes a specialty of surgery, in which respect he is widely known throughout this section of the State, and takes rank among the foremost of his profession. He is a surgeon on the staff of Vassar Brothers' Hospital, a member of the State and County Medical Societies, and a liberal contributor of articles to meetings of these societies. He has lately been appointed to the board of Pension Examining Surgeons.

J. Wilson Puckett

In 1892 Dr. Poucher married Miss Catherine D. Le Fever, daughter of Hon. Jacob Le Fever, member of Congress, and one child, a daughter, has been born to them. Both the Doctor and his wife are prominent in the social life of the city, and are leading members of the Washington Street M. E. Church, of which he is a trustee. He is a member of the Sons of the Revolution, and Mrs. Poucher's ancestry entitles her to a place in the society of the Daughters of the American Revolution. Dr. Poucher is a member of the Holland Society, the Society of Colonial Wars, and the Society of Old Guard. He is interested also in athletics, and belongs to the Tennis, Golf, and Boat Clubs, and to the Amrita Club. Of all movements for local improvement he is a prompt and hearty supporter, and in political affairs his influence is given to the Republican party. He has served as alderman of the Fifth ward, and at the present time is one of the commissioners of the board of public works, the first member elected to that board, previous ones having been appointed. Socially he affiliates with the F. & A. M., Triune Lodge; Poughkeepsie Chapter and Commandery; the Mystic Shrine of New York City; and he is a life member of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of New York, which gives him the 32nd degree.

CLARK KIRBY. For over a century the Kirby family has been identified with the interests of Quaker Hill, town of Pawling, Dutchess county, New York.

In 1757, in the village of New Bedford, R. I., was born George Kirby, of English descent. In 1780, he came to Quaker Hill and settled just across the road from where the new school house now stands. He possessed about one hundred acres of land at this place, and here made his home for some time, later buying what was then known as the old Reed Ferris farm, but subsequently called the "old Kirby House." Some time afterward he bought the farm consisting of about three hundred acres, and on this he passed his remaining days. He married (probably after his coming to Dutchess county) Anna Stocum, and by this marriage had seven children—five sons and two daughters: Clark, of whom special mention is made below; Gideon, who was associated with his brother Clark, and died on the homestead; Uriah, who lived in Amenia; William, who lived near Poughkeepsie; Humphrey, deceased while young; Hannah, who married Akin Taber; and Amy, who died unmarried. With the exception of the son Humphrey, the entire family lived to advanced ages. The father died in the year 1831, beloved and respected by his fellowmen. He was one of the leading men in the community, and in his religious faith was a Quaker, practicing in his daily life the simple tenets of that sect, and in his kindly, courteous manner, announcing his unfaltering belief in the Brotherhood of Man. His wife died February 18, 1894.

Clark Kirby, the eldest son of George Kirby, was born on Quaker Hill, February 16, 1794, and made his home there until the removal of his parents to the Kirby farm below the Hill. Here he and his brother Gideon owned a large tract of land, some eight or nine hundred acres, and followed farming as an occupation all their lives. In this they had more than ordinary success, and were ranked among the leading men of the place.

Clark Kirby had acquired an education such as was obtained by very few men in these times, and was especially fond of mathematics. He was a natural student, and his leisure time was spent in reading, which covered a wide range, and he became a well-informed man on general topics of interest—ancient and modern.

On November 28, 1833, he was married to Charlotte Hungerford, of New Milford, Conn., and they became the parents of three daughters, as follows: Caroline, who married George Miller, of New York City; Helen, who married William Akin Taber, of Pawling, Dutchess Co., N. Y.; and Frances. Mr. Kirby was one of the original board of directors of the Pawling National Bank, and held this position for over twenty years. In politics he was first a Whig, later a Republican, and as a private citizen was much interested in public affairs, though he had no desire to pose before the world in the fierce light that beats on public officials. In his quiet, unassuming way he served the public only by his conscientious performance of every duty, a worthy example for emulation. Like his father before him, he was a believer in the religion that sprung from the teaching of George Fox. In 1881 this gentle spirit was gathered to his fathers, and 1894 his wife, too, entered upon the unseen life.

FRANK L. R. TETAMORE, M. D. Although but a recent acquisition to the medical fraternity of this section, Dr. Tetamore, of Matteawan, has a reputation, gained in other fields of practice, which has at once placed him in the front rank of the profession here. In 1882 he began his active practice in Brooklyn, N. Y., and continued there until September, 1896, when he opened his present offices in Matteawan, and also established a sanitarium for the accommodation of his numerous patients, who will find here pure air, quiet, and the soothing influences of charming natural scenery. Dr. Tetamore has attained prominence as a surgeon, and, to quote from the Brooklyn Record, is a "specialist" in those delicate operations which relate to the restoration of the face by transplanting tissue. He successfully demonstrated that the bones of animals could not be utilized in restoring injured portions of the face, but by the transplanting of tissue he succeeded in constructing an artificial face for a lady from Scranton, Penn., who was fearfully disfigured in an accident on the Reading railroad. "Many natural deformities have been successfully operated upon by him—crooked limbs, backs and necks straightened under his methods."

A brief outline of Dr. Tetamore's history will be of interest to the readers of this volume. His family originated in Holland, the first of his ancestors to cross the ocean being his great-great-grandfather Tetamore, who served in the Revolutionary war. He married an Indian squaw, and their son, our subject's great-grandfather, who was born in the northern part of this State, served as a soldier in the war of 1812. William Tetamore, the grandfather of our subject, was born in 1806, in the town of Rhinebeck, Dutchess county, and throughout his mature years made his home in the village of Red Hook, where he died in 1895. For seventy years he was a member of the old Dutch Church of Rhinebeck; his talents were of an unusual order, and he invented the old hay press, which has been in common use for many years, and has not yet been superseded. He married Hannah Amie, of the town of Milan, Dutchess county, and has three children: John W.; Anna, who married C. C. Coons, an extensive horticulturist of Germantown, Columbia county; and Mary E., the wife of V. O. Ricker, a house-finisher at 116th street, New York City.

John W. Tetamore, the Doctor's father, was a native of Red Hook, where he first saw the light in 1830; he lived in Dutchess county until he was twenty-one, when he went to New York City. He married Elizabeth Martin, a daughter of Robert and Maria (Done) Martin; the former, a well-known merchant and tin-smith of Hudson, N. Y., was a soldier in the war of 1812, and the grandfather, Robert Martin, a native of the North of Ireland, served in the Revolutionary war; Mrs. Maria Martin was a daughter of Ezra Done, of Columbia county.

After their marriage the Doctor's parents settled for a time in Hudson, but at present they reside in Brooklyn. They are both members of the Baptist Church, although the Tetamore family have always been Lutherans. In politics, however, J. W. Tetamore agrees with the other members of his family, and is a staunch Republican. The Doctor is the eldest of six children, the others being: Lelia married Geo. W. Granger, of Brooklyn; Jane T. B. is the wife of E. A. Anderson, an assistant superintendent of the New York Life Insurance Co.; Henry M., who died at the age of twenty-eight, was a dentist in Brooklyn; Lewis J., a printer in New York City, is married to Miss Ada Pouch, of Brooklyn; and William, who is now twenty-one years old, resides in New York City.

Dr. Tetamore's earthly career began August 28, 1851, at Hudson, but until he was eleven years of age his time was chiefly spent in Red Hook. He then returned to his native place, and attended the public schools for about two years. At thirteen he went to Albany as clerk in the drug store of Collins & Kirk, and after two years there he went to Staten Island in a similar capacity. Later he returned to Albany and entered the employ of H. B. Clement & Co., druggists, for a time, and then he took charge of the drug store of Dr. William H. Peer, of Brooklyn, remaining a year and a half. While there he attended the New York Dental College, and although he did not graduate, he began to practice at Brooklyn, and at the same time began to read medicine with Dr. George R. Fowler, surgeon of the Second Brigade, N. Y. N. G. Continuing his medical course, he was graduated in 1882 from the Long Island Hospital College, and after spending a short time as Curator of the college, he established an office at Brooklyn, and began his work as a practitioner. His abilities have received recognition from many sources. He was appointed hospital steward of the Fourteenth Regiment, N. Y. N. G., in 1879, assistant surgeon in 1885, surgeon in 1890, and State medical inspector of U. S. Camp at Peekskill, N. Y., in 1896. As has been noted, he went to Matteawan in the fall of 1896, and has leased the residence of the late Dr. J. P. Schenk, where he has an office on Leonard street, near Fountain Square.

On November 25, 1873, Dr. Tetamore married Miss Mary E. Davison, daughter of William Davison, of Brooklyn. Three children have blessed this union: Walter D., born in 1874; Florence M., born in 1876; and Clarence, born in 1878. Politically the Doctor is a Republican. In religious faith he is a Baptist, and while living in Brooklyn he served as superintendent of a Sunday-school, which increased under his care from fifty pupils to 1,200. He belongs to the I. O. O. F., also the Junior Order of American Mechanics, and is a prominent member of the N. Y. County Medical Association. Altogether it will be seen that Matteawan has reason to congratulate herself upon Dr. Tetamore's choice of a home.

GEORGE NORTON MILLER, M. D., a prominent citizen of the town of Rhinebeck, Dutchess county, resides upon a beautiful estate two miles from the village of Rhinebeck. It was there that he first saw the light September 27, 1857, and in his mature years he finds it the pleasantest spot in which to pass the leisure which culture and refinement can so well employ in congenial tasks. He attended school in his boyhood in New York City, and later entered Harvard College, and was graduated from the literary department with the degree of A. B., in 1879, and from the medical department, in 1882. A trip to Europe followed, with two years of study at Vienna and Heidelberg, and he then returned to his native land. April 18, 1886, he was married to Miss Martha LeRoy Glover, who was born in New York City in 1864, and received there a liberal education. Ever since their marriage the Doctor and his wife have resided at the old home. They have three children: George Norton, born January 6, 1888, the third of the name in direct line of descent; Helen LeRoy, born July 1, 1889, and Catherine Caroline, born March 1, 1890.

The Miller family is of English origin, and the Doctor is of the sixth generation from William Miller who settled in 1648 at Ipswich, Mass., where he became a freeholder and was one of the heaviest tax payers. He and his wife Patience had a son Abram, who was born January 20, 1671, at Northampton, Mass. He married Harriet Clapp, and had a son Jonathan, who was born in 1703, and died in 1787. He was married January 2, 1723, to Sarah Allen, and had a son Elisha, our subject's great-grandfather, who was born in Connecticut in 1730, and died in 1807. October 18, 1764, he married Sarah Fowler, whose death occurred in 1772. Their son William, our subject's grandfather, who was born in Connecticut in 1768, became a well-known minister of the Congregational Church. He died in 1818; but his wife, Anna Starr, who was born in 1772, lived nearly a century, passing away in 1865.

George Norton Miller, our subject's father, was born in Hartford, Conn., July 27, 1805, and for many years was a prominent business man in Charleston, S. C. In October, 1855, he married Miss Caroline Tucker Chace. She passed to her eternal rest September 19, 1872; but his life was prolonged until March 10, 1892. Of their four children all but one, a daughter, survive, viz.: William Starr, H. Ray, and the subject of our sketch.

JOSEPH FIELD (deceased) was born in the city of New York, January 7, 1829, and was a son of Joseph and Hannah (Dusenberry) Field, the former a native of Westchester county, N. Y. In that city he was reared and educated in its public schools. After learning the wagon-maker's trade, in 1851 he went to Kings Bridge, N. Y., where he engaged in that business. It was there that he met Temperance R. Darke, to whom he was married, December 8, 1853; in the following spring, on account of ill-health, he gave up wagon-making.

About 1865 Mr. Field removed to a farm near Sharon, Conn., which he operated until 1868, when he came to the village of Amenia, where he conducted a market up to the time of his death, January 27, 1892. He was made a Mason in Shekomeko Lodge at Washington Hollow, Dutchess county, and later affiliated with Amenia Lodge No. 672, F. & A. M., while politically he was an ardent Republican, but would never accept official positions. He was faithful in the discharge of every duty, was a man of excellent principles and a blameless life, and thoroughly enjoyed the esteem and respect of every community in which he resided, and died, mourned by a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

Mrs. Field, a most estimable lady, was born June 24, 1832, and is the daughter of Charles and Temperance R. (Hayden) Darke. By her marriage she became the mother of three daughters: Ella, born February 12, 1855, married Charles Jenkins, by whom she has three children—Maria Louise, Harry and John Roy; Maria, born May 26, 1860, died March 21, 1864; and Gertrude, born June 14, 1872, completes the family.

Charles Darke, the father of Mrs. Field, was a native of Bloomingdale, N. Y., and most of his life was engaged in the market business at Kings Bridge. However, he spent his last years in Amenia, where both himself and wife died and were buried. They had four children: Temperance; Charles H., of Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; Isaac D., of Springfield, Mass.; and Emma, wife of George T. Willson.

MHEERMANCE FAMILY, THE, now represented in Dutchess county by Martin and Dewitt Heermance, is descended from Jan Heermance, who came to America from Holland in 1659. His will, written in Dutch, is on record in the surrogate's office in New York City. His descendants settled, at an early date, in Dutchess county. One of them, Hendricus Heermance, married a daughter of Gerrit Artsen, one of the partners to the first purchase of land from the Indians, at Rhinebeck (the Kipsberger) in 1686, subsequently confirmed by royal patent in 1688. In 1716 Hendricus Heermance bought, of his father-in-law, property now known as Ellerslie, the present home of Governor Morton. Catharine Heermance, a granddaughter of Jan Heermance, married John The Baptist Kip, a grandson of Jacob Kip, one of the original grantees under the royal patent of 1688.

Jacob Heermance, a grandson of Jan, and brother of Catharine, married Catharine Vosburgh, a daughter of Jan Vosburgh and Cornelia Knickerbocker. They had eight children—four sons and four daughters—Jacob, John, Andrew, Martin, Cornelia, Anna, Dorothea and Eleanor. Cornelia Heermance married Gen. David Van Ness; Eleanor married Peter Cantine; Dorothea married Henry De-Witt, and Anna married Isaac Stoutenburgh. Martin Heermance married a daughter of Dr. Hans Kiersted, a direct descendant of the Dr. Hans Kiersted who in 1642 married Sarah Roeloffe Jans, daughter of Anneke Jans, from whom came the millions now possessed by the Trinity Church Corporation of New York City. Martin was the only son of Jacob Heermance, who left sons. For many years he was a leading citizen of the county, and was commissioned brigadier-general in the war of 1812. One of his daughters married Archibald Smith, a prominent lawyer of Saratoga county, while another daughter married Dr. Henry Van-Hoebenbergh, at one time health officer of the Port of New York. Andrew J. Heermance, one of his sons, bought the property on which stands the house built by the Kips in the year 1700, and which was subsequently owned by the Beekman and Livingston families. It is still in a good state of preservation. He was a public-spirited, progressive man, and an honored citizen, and for several terms represented the town of Rhinebeck in the board of supervisors of Dutchess county.

Rev. Harrison Heermance, another son of Gen. Martin Heermance, was a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church. At the breaking out of the Civil war he was settled in Lenawee county, Mich.; but he resigned his charge and entered the army with the 4th Mich. Cav., and subsequently served as chaplain of the 128th N. Y. V. His son, Isaac Henry Heermance, then under sixteen years of age, enlisted at the same time, in the same regiment, and died in the service before he was eighteen. At the close of the war Rev. Harrison Heermance resumed his residence at Rhinebeck, his native town, and died there in 1883. His wife was Rebecca A. Van Denbergh, of Lansingburg, N. Y. Their two surviving sons, Martin and DeWitt Heermance, were born in Michigan, but from their early childhood have lived at Rhinebeck, and were educated in the De Garmo Classical Institute, then located in that town. They have since taken up their residence in Poughkeepsie. In 1881 MARTIN HEERMANCE was elected supervisor of the town of Rhinebeck, and was re-elected in 1882. In 1883 he was admitted to the bar, and entered upon the practice of his profession in Poughkeepsie. In 1888 he was elected district attorney of Dutchess county, and his brother DeWitt, who had graduated at the Albany Law School several years before, and was then in partnership with him in the practice of law, was assistant district attorney. In 1856 Martin Heermance was appointed one of the three State assessors of New York, by Gov. Morton, and was made chairman of the board. Both Martin and DeWitt Heermance are members of the Holland Society. Martin is a member of the Masonic order, and while residing at Rhinebeck was twice elected master of Rhinebeck Lodge. In 1881 he married Nina Radcliffe, daughter of the late David Van Ness Radcliffe, of Albany, N. Y., and they have one child, Radcliffe Heermance. In 1892 DeWitt Heermance married May Hallenbeck, daughter of the late John J. Hallenbeck, of Montclair, N. J., and they have one son, Andrew Hallenbeck Heermance. Jacob Heermance, the great-grandfather of Martin and DeWitt, had a brother Nicholas, who left descendants, none of whom are known to be residents of Dutchess county. The late Rev. Henry Heermance, of Kinderhook, and Col. William L. Heermance, now residing at Yonkers, are descended from this branch of the family.

HENRY L. YOUNG, a prominent resident of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, now living retired from active business, was born in New York City, August 28, 1818, the son of Henry L. and Mary L. (Hyde) Young.

The Young family is of English extraction, and Quakers in religious belief. Alexander Young, the grandfather of our subject, was a farmer at Sing Sing, N. Y. He married Miss Ann Slausson, and they reared a family of five children, namely: Jacob, who became captain of a Hudson-river vessel. Hiram, who was a sailor; Nathaniel, who was a farmer in Westchester county, N. Y.; Charlotte, married to William H. Smith, a merchant of New York, and Henry, father of our subject.

Henry Young was born in 1792 at Sing Sing, N. Y. His wife, Mary L. (Hyde), was born at Norwich, Conn., and her family was also of English descent. After their marriage they lived in New York City, where Mr. Young carried on a large hardware business. They had four children, namely: Henry L., our subject; Mary, who married a Mr. Barnes, a merchant in New York City (now deceased); James, who lives in New York City, and is retired from business, and Martha, married to Henry S. Leavitt, a merchant of New York City. The father served in the war of 1812, and he and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church.

Henry L. Young, the subject proper of this review, spent his boyhood days in New York City, where he attended the private schools, and on completing his education clerked in his father's store for four years. He then went to Avon Springs and settled on a large farm, where he remained for eleven years. On June 23, 1842, Mr. Young was united in marriage with Miss Mary E., daughter of Henry Dwight, of Utica, N. Y., and who was of English descent. Five children have been born to them: Edmund, who resides in Poughkeepsie; James H., residing in Brooklyn; Mary D., at home with her parents; William H., an attorney in New York City, and Henry D., who died while a student at college.

In the fall of 1853 Mr. Young removed to Poughkeepsie, which has since been his home. He has a beautiful residence at No. 98 South Hamilton street, with fine grounds filled with flowers, and every comfort and luxury attainable. Here, with no cares of business to annoy him, he is passing the evening of his life in peace and happiness, his only sorrow being the loss of his beloved wife, who passed from earth January 9, 1890. She was a member of the Reformed Church (as is also Mr. Young), and was a most estimable woman.

Mr. Young held various positions of honor and trust, having been a trustee of Vassar College for ten years; vice-president and director of the Farmers' and Manufacturers' Bank for several years; trustee of the Savings Bank; president of the cemetery board; and president of the board of water works for three years. He was one of the committee who drafted a new charter for the city of Poughkeepsie, and has always taken an active interest in its growth and prosperity. He is a man of sterling integrity, and has frequently been made executor of large estates. In every relation of life Mr. Young has borne an unblemished reputation, and his worth as a man and a citizen is well known and thoroughly appreciated, not only by the public generally, but by a host of warm personal friends.

REUBEN WILEY (deceased). During the Civil war, the subject of this sketch, then in the prime of his manhood, offered himself to the Union cause. Enlisting in the Eighth

N. Y. H. A., he served with the quiet heroism of the true soldier until death came to him in the midst of the hard-fought struggle before Petersburg, June 16, 1864.

Mr. Wiley was of Scotch descent, his great-grandfather, Hugh Wylie, being the first ancestor to come to America. Arriving in early manhood, he located in the town of Clinton, Dutchess county, where he became the owner of a farm of 300 acres near Clinton Hollow. He married Mary Hall, and had two children: Reuben and Mary. Reuben Wiley's son, John Wiley, our subject's father, was born and educated there, and also engaged in farming in mature years. He married Sarah Allen, and eight children were born of this union: Ensign (deceased), Allen, Reuben (our subject), Mary Jane, Hannah M., Martin (who served as a soldier in the 150th N. Y. V. I.), and William and Adeline (both deceased).

Reuben Wiley was born at the old homestead July 17, 1827, and received his early education in the neighboring schools. At the age of seventeen he went to Saratoga and engaged in a general mercantile business, later moving to New York City, where he went into the commission business on Washington street. While there he married Miss Mary T. Adee, a native of Pleasant Valley, Dutchess county. Of this marriage two children were born: Samuel, now a resident of Fairbury, Neb., and SARAH A., who was married October 13, 1875, in the town of Clinton, to John W. Dutcher, a son of Lotan Dutcher and Eliza (Doughty) Dutcher, of Lagrange. He was educated at Clinton Hollow and Pleasant Plains, later engaging in farming, and is now one of the agriculturists of his vicinity. After their marriage they lived in the town of Clinton for two years, when they moved to the town of Washington, remaining there twelve years. In 1889 they returned to Clinton Hollow, where they have since resided. They have two children: Reuben W. and Lotan H. In politics Mr. Dutcher is a Republican.

ARTHUR FRANCIS HOAG, M. D., a prominent physician of Millerton, is a native of the town of Northeast, Dutchess county, born November 11, 1856.* His family is of English origin.

William P. Hoag, our subject's father, was born in the town of Pine Plains, Dutchess county, in 1819, and received a good literary education. He was of a scientific turn of mind, and while he was always an interested reader on general subjects, he made a special study of geology. Until 1873 he was a farmer in the town of Northeast, whence he removed to Wabasha, Minn., where for some years he conducted a storage elevator for grain, later going to Cass county, North Dakota, and engaging in farming. He married Mary Jane Simmons, daughter of John Simmons, a wealthy farmer of near Chatham, Columbia county, N. Y., and had four sons: William Edward, born May 4, 1852, now a traveling salesman; Arthur Francis, our subject; Robert Henry, born November 22, 1858, a commission merchant of Minneapolis; and Charles Simmons, born November 25, 1860, a farmer at Norcross, Minn. On his removal to the West, Mr. Hoag was accompanied by all of his family except our subject, and since 1890 has made his home with his son in Minneapolis. He has always been a Republican, but has never sought or held office. In religious belief he is a Quaker, and has by his upright and consistent life commanded the esteem of his associates.

Dr. Hoag received an excellent education in his youth, studying the English branches, and also the classics with Rev. A. H. Seeley, of Smithfield, Dutchess county. At the age of seventeen he entered the office of Dr. Sidney Stillman, of Millerton, as a medical student, where he remained three years, making a specialty of surgery. In 1876 he entered the medical department of Columbia College, and was graduated in 1879, having taken special work in anatomy and surgery in addition to the prescribed course. He took clinics with Dr. Sands, and did a great deal of hospital work. On August 16, 1876, he returned to Millerton and formed a partnership with Dr. Stillman, which continued three years, since which time he has practiced alone. His preparation for his work has been most thorough, and he is no less painstaking in his practice, and as a result he has a large business extending throughout the northeastern part of the county. He holds in a high degree the confidence of the community, and has been health officer of the town of Northeast and the village of Millerton for about ten years, being elected on the Republican ticket. He is also medical examiner for eight life insurance companies; he is a member of the State Medical Society and the County Medical Society. The Doctor is a liberal-minded man, and holds to the simple and tolerant Quaker faith in which he was reared. Socially, he is a member of Webatuck Lodge No. 480, F. & A. M., in which he has held various offices. He takes an active interest in local affairs, and is now a member of the board of education.

In 1881 Dr. Hoag was married to Miss Jessie L. Wheeler, daughter of the late Norman Wheeler, of the town of Northeast, and they have two sons: Arthur Edmond and William Harvey.

GEORGE W. CONKLIN (deceased). A life so strongly marked by worthy ambition and well-directed energy as that of the subject of this brief memoir, cannot fail to convey to every reader a practical lesson which they would do well to heed. Although of good family, Mr. Conklin's chief inheritance consisted of the vigorous mentality and upright character upon which his success was based. His ancestors were among the early settlers of Putnam Valley, Putnam county, and his parents, William and Phœbe (Sirrine) Conklin, resided upon the old Conklin homestead north of Oscawana Lake, where on January 3, 1828, our subject was born.

Mr. Conklin was educated in the schools near his home, and had no other advantages; but, being fond of books, he supplemented his common-school education by extensive reading, and became a man of broad information. As a student of human nature, he enjoyed fiction, and Dickens' works were his especial favorites. He was phenomenally successful in business. When seventeen years of age he went to Maryland to get out ship timber, and immediately after arriving there he was recognized as a young man of good ability, and was put in charge of a gang of men who were engaged in that work. He remained there until 1850, when he was married to Miss Elizabeth Jenkins, of Phillipstown, Putnam county. He then gave his attention to building bridges on the Hudson River railroad, having charge of a gang of men on the extension from Poughkeepsie north, and was in the employ of the road until the last year of the Civil war. He went to Port Royal in March, 1865, returning in July of that year, and then entered the employ of the government in the navy yards at Brooklyn. He laid tracks, and was the general overseer during his stay of four years.

There he became acquainted with R. G. Packard, and later he formed a partnership with him in the dredging business. This was an extensive enterprise, and he was quite successful, continuing for twenty-six years at least. After leaving the navy yard Mr. Packard and Mr. Conklin went with Morris & Cumings; but after a while Mr. Packard went into business for himself, and Mr. Conklin accompanied him, and continued in the business until within three years of his death, which occurred May 8, 1893. He helped in the making of dredging machinery, and in all the different branches of the business, having a natural talent for mechanics. By nature he was energetic and forceful, and would have been successful in anything.

In his political faith Mr. Conklin was a strong Republican, but he was not especially active in party work. For some time he was a member of the fire department at Poughkeepsie, Cataract Company No. 4, and became an exempt fireman. In religion he was a Methodist.

Mr. Conklin had a pleasant home and a charming family. His wife was a daughter of David and Ann (Stevens) Jenkins, of Phillipstown, Putnam county. Six children blessed their union: (1) George L., born November 14, 1852, is a machinist, and has been in the dredging business. He married Miss May Pickert, and has three children: May Elizabeth, George Wesley and L. Clyde. (2) Lillie J. is married to William Saltford, an Englishman, and a florist by occupation. They have two sons: W. Arthur and George C. (3) Minnie C. married William Seeholzer, of Middletown, N. Y., proprietor of the R. R. restaurant, and has one daughter, Helen C. (4) Lizzie M. is at home. (5) Josephine and (6) Carrie died in infancy.

Mrs. Conklin is the granddaughter of Joel Jenkins, a native of Maine, who was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. He and two brothers were among the first to enlist in that struggle, and the three were engaged in the first battles. One brother was shot in one of the early engagements, but Joel Jenkins and other brother served throughout the war, and after its close he settled south of the Croft's church, in the town of Phillipstown. The Jenkins family of that place are descended from him. He married Elizabeth Garrison, and had the following children: David, Mrs. Conklin's father; Polly, who married Daniel Bishop; Sarah

(Mrs. Masters); Isaac, who lived at Garrison; Abram, the fifth in order of birth; Hannah (Mrs. Curry); Susan, wife of James Croft; James; and Ann, who married Mr. Jennings.

HENRY E. ALLISON, M. D., medical superintendent of the Matteawan State Hospital, at Matteawan, was born December 1, 1851, at Concord, N. H., a son of William H. and Catherine (Anderson) Allison.

He received his preliminary education at the public schools of his native city, later attending Kimball Union Academy at Meriden, N. H., where he graduated in 1871. In the fall of the same year he entered the classical department of Dartmouth College. He was elected president of the class in his Senior year, and graduated with honors in 1875. Among his classmates was Gov. Frank S. Black, of New York. After graduation, in the fall, he taught the high school of Hillsborough Bridge, N. H., and during the following year attended the full course of lectures and instruction at Dartmouth Medical College. In June, 1878, he received the degree of M. D. at Dartmouth, and in August commenced the practice of his profession in the capacity of an assistant physician at the Willard Asylum, in the town of Ovid, N. Y., an institution then containing some twelve hundred patients. Here he remained in charge of various medical departments of the service until March, 1883, when he resigned, although strong inducements were offered him to remain. After pursuing a post-graduate course at the New York Polyclinic, he commenced the general practice of medicine at Waterloo, Seneca Co., N. Y., where he remained some fourteen months, meeting with excellent success. During this time (1883-84) he served as town physician. At the urgent request of the board of trustees of the Willard Asylum, he returned in 1884 to that institution as first assistant physician, passing the State Civil Service examination for that position held in New York City. On July 1, 1889, he was appointed medical superintendent of the State Asylum for Insane Criminals at Auburn, Cayuga Co., N. Y., an institution at that time containing two hundred and nineteen patients. By virtue of this office he also became, by statute, a member of the commission created by the Legislature to erect a new asylum for insane criminals which was founded at Matteawan, Dutchess county, and to which, upon its completion, the inmates of the old Auburn asylum were transferred April 25, 1892. This new institution is now known as the Matteawan State Hospital, of which Dr. Allison is the medical superintendent and treasurer. The total cost of the buildings and grounds was in the neighborhood of $900,000; the hospital has accommodations for five hundred and fifty patients.

Dr. Allison became a member of the Seneca County Medical Society in 1879, and was elected president of the society in 1886; was also president of the Seneca County Medical Association. He is a member of the Dutchess County Medical Society, the Newburgh Bay Medical Society, and of the American Medico-Psychological Association, and an honorary member of La Société de Médecine Mentale, of Belgium.

Dr. Allison has published the following papers and monographs: "A Case of Multiple Tubercular Tumor of the Brain" [New York Medical Record, August, 1882]; "Cerebral Lesions in the Chronic Insane" [Alienist and Neurologist, July, 1885]; "Moral and Industrial Management of the Insane" [Alienist and Neurologist, April, 1886]; "Mental Changes Resulting from the Separate Fracture of Both Thighs" [American Journal of Insanity, July, 1886]; "Notes in a Case of Chronic Insanity" [American Journal of Insanity, April, 1887]; "An Historical Sketch of Seneca County Medical Society" [Press of Brandow & Speed, Albany, 1887]; "On a General System of Reporting Autopsies in American Asylums for the Insane" [Read before the Association of Medical Superintendents of American Institutions for the Insane, Newport, R. I., June, 1889; American Journal of Insanity, October, 1889]; a short contribution to "De La Responsabilité Atténuée," by Henry Thierry, Paris, 1891; "On Motives Which Govern the Criminal Acts of the Insane" [Read before the Association of Medical Superintendents of American Institutions for the Insane, Washington, D. C., May, 1892; American Journal of Insanity, October, 1892]; "The Insane Criminal" [The Summary, December, 1892]; "Insanity Among Criminals" [Read before the American Medico-Psychological Association, Philadelphia, Penn., May, 1894; American Journal of Insanity, July, 1894; Criminal Law Magazine and Reporter, Vol. 16, 1894]; "On the Care of the Criminal Insane in the State of New York" [Read at the annual meeting of the Trustees and Superintendents of the State Hospitals of New York, Matteawan, October, 1894; Conglomerate, October, 1894]; "Some Relations of Crime to Insanity and States of Mental Enfeeblement" [Read at the annual meeting of the American Medical Association, Atlanta, Ga., May, 1896; Journal of the American Medical Association, September, 1896]; "Simple Melancholia and its Treatment" [Read at Newburgh Bay Medical Society; Medical Record, January, 1897]; four annual reports of the "State Asylum for Insane Criminals," 1889, '90, '91, '92; four annual reports of the "Matteawan State Hospital," 1893, '94, '95, '96. In addition, although not seeking the work, he has been frequently called upon to testify as an expert medical witness in various important trials before the courts.

On October 8, 1884, Dr. Allison was married to Miss Anna M. De Puy, daughter of Lewis and Sabina E. (Schoonmaker) De Puy, of Kingston, N. Y., and four children, as follows, have come to brighten their home: Catherine De Puy, Elizabeth Shand, William Henry and Anna. On February 24, 1889, at Ovid, N. Y., he united with the Presbyterian Church, and is now a member and an elder of the First Reformed Dutch Church at Fishkill Landing, N. Y.; socially, he is a member of Union Lodge, No. 114, F. & A. M.; of Dartmouth College Association of New York, and of the Association of the Alumni of Dartmouth College.

The Matteawan State Hospital was originally established at Auburn, in 1855, and opened for the reception of patients in February, 1859. Next to Utica it is the oldest of the State hospitals for the insane. Designed at first for the care of insane convicts, its scope has been gradually enlarged until it now provides for all classes of insane criminals, and occupies a position of highest importance among the hospitals of the State. Its growth at Auburn was not rapid, but the buildings became overcrowded in the course of years, finally rendering it necessary to erect a new institution upon a larger scale and a more convenient site; and Matteawan, in the Hudson River Valley, was selected. Modern buildings, complete in every detail, were erected there, and the new asylum opened in April, 1892. Its name was subsequently changed from the State Asylum for Insane Criminals to the Matteawan State Hospital. It receives patients not only from penal institutions, but also all cases from the courts of the State where the plea of insanity arises as a defense for crime. Such persons are committed to its custody during the continuance of their mental disease. The population again rapidly increased at Matteawan, until, within four years from its opening on the new site, the hospital was filled to more than its utmost capacity. The desirability of separating the convicted from the unconvicted inmates had long been recognized, and it was recommended that this end should be accomplished by providing a hospital in connection with one of the State Prisons, to be built by convict labor, and for the purpose of caring only for the convict insane. Gov. Morton in his annual message approved the project, and an appropriation for this purpose was made at the legislative session of 1896. Complete plans for the new Institution, designed when finished to accommodate six hundred inmates, were prepared by Dr. Allison, and the buildings are now under construction. The change will relieve the Matteawan State Hospital of an undesirable class of patients, and enable the hospital to expand along lines more favorable to its proper development and growth.

ISAAC M. CORNELL, M. D., a prominent physician of Wappingers Falls, Dutchess county, was born in Defreestville, Rensselaer Co., N. Y., April 26, 1851, the son of Rev. William A. and Helen M. (Wyckoff) Cornell.

Peter Cornell, the great-grandfather of our subject, was born April 1, 1756, and married Maria Meserole, who was born October 22, 1758, and their family comprised nine children as follows: Cornelius, born in 1781, was a farmer in Lagrange; Isaac (1) died in infancy; Isaac (2) was the grandfather of our subject; Sarah married a Mr. Van Valen; Jane married Matthew Luyster; Margaret died unmarried; Maria and Cornelius died in infancy; Elizabeth, born in 1790, married Oliver Todd. Peter Cornell and his wife were members of the Reformed Dutch Church. Of this family, Isaac married Miss Hoffman, a native of Dutchess county, and they settled on a farm in Lagrange, where they reared their seven children, to wit: Peter M., a farmer in the town of Lagrange; William A., father of our subject; Frederick, a farmer in Kansas; Margaret married to Darius Howland; and Mary, Elizabeth and Isabella.

William A. Cornell, father of Isaac M., grew to manhood on his father's farm, and after completing a common-school education entered Rutgers College, at New Brunswick, N. J., where he prepared himself for the ministry. During the better part of his life he was a preacher in the Reformed Church, but his health becoming impaired he returned to the farm at Lagrange, where he died August 18, 1876. During his ministry he was pastor of the churches at Athens and Blooming Grove, N. Y., or Defreestville, as it is now called. About 1853 he gave up regular work, but preached occasionally until the time of his death. On April 12, 1843, he married Miss Helen M., daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth Wyckoff, the former of whom was a native of New Brunswick, N. J.; the family was of old Holland stock. Of this union six children were born: Elizabeth W., who married Thomas B. Burnett, of Orange, N. J.; Helen, who died in infancy; Sarah L., who married James Y. Luyster, of New Hackensack, N. Y.; Isaac M., our subject; William A., who married Bertha Schultz, and lives at Sioux Falls, S. Dak.; and Jacob W., assistant treasurer of the Wappingers Savings Bank, who married Emma Stockholm, and resides in Wappingers Falls.

The subject of this sketch was brought up on his father's farm in Lagrange, and attended the district school until he was fifteen years of age. Subsequently he became a student in the Carey and Pelham Institute, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and then began the study of medicine with Dr. S. S. Greene, of Lagrangeville. In 1873 he entered the Medical Department of the University of New York, and graduated therefrom in the class of '77. After his graduation Dr. Cornell went to Buffalo, N. Y., and for some time practiced with his old preceptor; then resided at New Hamburg, N. Y., and in the spring of 1878 settled at Wappingers Falls, where he has since made his home. The Doctor stands high with his professional brethren, and has been very successful in his calling. He has secured the confidence of the public, and has made many friends by his genial manners and kindly disposition. His practice is one of the largest in the vicinity.

On October 30, 1878, Dr. Cornell was married to Miss Kate E. Dorland, a sister of C. P. Dorland, the county surrogate. She died July 29, 1880, and June 6, 1883, the Doctor was married to Elizabeth W., a daughter of Joseph D. Harcourt, a sketch of whom will be found on another page. Martense H., born December 26, 1884, is the only child of this union. In his political views, the Doctor is a Republican. From 1883 to 1886 he was health officer of the town of Wappinger, and in 1878 was appointed to the same office for the town of Poughkeepsie. He has been a member of the Dutchess County Medical Society since 1878; is a trustee of the Wappingers Savings Bank; belongs to Wappingers Lodge No. 671, F. & A. M., at Wappingers Falls, to Poughkeepsie Chapter No. 172, R. A. M., and Poughkeepsie Commandery No. 43, K. T. In all respects he is one of the leading citizens of Wappingers Falls.

WILLIAM MORGAN LEE, one of the prominent attorneys of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, is a member of a family which has long held a leading position in this locality.

Darius Lee, his father, was born July 28, 1794, in East Fishkill, and in early manhood moved to Poughkeepsie, where he became identified with several important business enterprises, a general store, a carriage factory, and a hotel at Arlington. He was one of the founders of Heading M. E. Church, was for many years a class leader and local preacher, and he held for a long time the office of justice of the peace in the town of Poughkeepsie. He married for his second wife Naomi Odell, who was born July 28, 1812, a native of Putnam county, and they had seven children, of whom our subject is the eldest; the others were: Kate, a successful teacher in the public schools of Poughkeepsie; Frank K., a physician; Edward, who resides at Mt. Vernon, S. Dak.; David (deceased); Sarah; and Henry G. (deceased). The father died in 1858, and the mother on February 26, 1883.

William Morgan Lee was born May 18, 1838, in Poughkeepsie. His literary and scientific studies were pursued in the public schools of that city, and with private tutors. When twenty years old he taught a school at Pleasant Valley, and in the same year he began the study of law in the office of Wilbur & Van Cleef, with whom he remained one year. He then taught for a few months at Schultzville and in 1862 entered the office of the provost marshal at Poughkeepsie, where he was employed for two years and a half. Resuming his legal studies in the office of Judge Charles Wheaton, he prepared for his examination, and was admitted to the bar in 1866. For some time he practiced with Judge Wheaton, and later with Judge Allard Anthony. He is an able and influential worker in the Republican party, and in 1869 was appointed city chamberlain, serving five years; in 1873 he was elected supervisor of the Sixth ward, and city attorney in 1877, which latter incumbency he held for nine years. In 1883 he was nominated for surrogate on the Republican ticket against H. D. Hufcut, but, like the other candidates of his party at that election, he was defeated. From 1889 to 1893 he was deputy collector of Internal Revenue for the Fourteenth District. His well-proven abilities have given him a high standing in business circles, and from 1893 to February, 1895, he was auditor and general passenger agent for the P. & E. R. R. Through all the varied and exacting duties of these different positions he has carried on his regular professional work, and enjoys an extensive and profitable practice.

On June 23, 1870, in Poughkeepsie, Mr. Lee was married to Miss Mary Worrall, a native of Pittsburg, and the daughter of John Worrall. Her grandfather, William Worrall, was an early settler in Poughkeepsie, and at one time owned most of the land upon which the eastern part of the city now stands. Two children were born of this union: Maud and Frederick William. Mr. Lee and his wife are leading members of the Episcopal Church, and he has been a vestryman for thirteen years, clerk of the vestry for four years, and is also the treasurer of the Archdeaconry of Dutchess county.

He is an active member of the Masonic fraternity, and he was received into Poughkeepsie Lodge in March, 1869; Poughkeepsie Chapter No. 172, Royal Arch Masons, in September, 1869; Poughkeepsie Commandery, Knights Templar, in October, 1870; and was elected High Priest of the Chapter in December, 1872, and re-elected four successive terms. In May, 1876, he was chosen Commander of Poughkeepsie Commandery, and held the office six years. He was a charter member and first Master of Triune Lodge No. 782, organized in 1879, and became a member of King Solomon Council, Royal and Select Masters, in 1880, serving as Master of the Council for two years. In 1883 he served on the staff of J. Edward Simmons, and in 1884 with William Brodie as Deputy Grand Master. In 1887 he was Grand Principal Sojourner of the State, and he has been Grand Steward in the Grand Council, and is now the Representative of the State of Wisconsin near the Grand Council of the State of New York. In 1889 he became a member of Mecca Temple of the Mystic Shrine in New York City.

RICHARD A. VARICK, M. D. (deceased), was born in the City of New York, April 24, 1806. His ancestors were Holland-Dutch, and the name was originally spelled Van Vaarick.

Dr. Varick spent his early days on his father's farm, after which he took a course of lectures in a Medical College in New York, from which he was graduated with the class of 1827. After completing his course in medicine he came to Poughkeepsie, and practiced with Dr. John Barnes, with whom he remained until the latter's death, after which our subject practiced alone. He married Miss Eliza Harris, of Poughkeepsie, and two children—one son and one daughter—were born to them: John B. is a wholesale hardware merchant in New Hampshire; and Elizabeth Harris married William R. Pell, of New York. Mrs. Varick died in 1837, and Dr. Varick subsequently married Miss Isabel Shepherd, who was born in Albany June 27, 1809. By this union there were children as follows, five in number: (1) Robert S. was in the hardware business in New York City, and died when a young man. (2) Remsen was in the Civil war, and was on the first boat that went to Richmond, Va.; after the war he returned to Poughkeepsie and entered the drug business; he died in 1883. (3) Richard A., Jr., died while attending college. (4) Ellen S. married Edward Barnes, a druggist of Poughkeepsie. (5) William was a merchant of Boston, and died in 1878. In politics, Dr. Varick was originally a Whig, later a Republican. He was a prominent citizen, and stood high in the esteem of his fellow men. He and his wife were liberal contributors of the Reformed Church. He was a member of the Society of Cincinnati, as eldest son, in nearest male line, inheriting it through Col. Richard Varick, of the Revolutionary army, and being succeeded at his death by his eldest son, John B. Varick. Dr. Richard A. Varick died August 10, 1871.

John V. B. Varick, father of our subject, married Miss Dorothy Remsen in New York City, shortly after which he located on a farm in the town of Poughkeepsie, where he followed agricultural pursuits a few years. Returning to New York, he there remained until his death. To him and his wife the following children were born: Richard A.; Henry, who was an attorney in Poughkeepsie, and died there; James L., a merchant in New York; John was a farmer on the homestead, where he died; Abram was a resident of Poughkeepsie; Jane married Richard V. Gilbert, a resident of Bridgeport, Conn., and Poughkeepsie (both are now deceased); Antoinette married William Pell, a sea captain; and Kate became the wife of Abram Van Santvoord, a resident of New York City. By his second wife, who was a Miss Romeyn, John V. B. Varick had two children: Susan, who married Cornelius Van Santvoord, a prominent lawyer of New York; and Theodore R., who was surgeon general of New Jersey till his death.

HENRY DU BOIS VAN WYCK, proprietor of Knickerbocker Lodge, Van Wyck Lake, near Fishkill Village, Dutchess Co., N. Y., and also the owner of extensive property interests at Norfolk, Va., is one of our most talented and successful men of affairs, having given to various financial enterprises throughout his life the generalship, the energy, the insight, and the indomitable will which mark the highest type of business man.

He is a native of Fishkill, born October 27, 1823, at the old Van Wyck homestead, on the Hudson, a place which has been in the possession of his family for one hundred years. The mansion is of the Colonial type, and is famous as the house in which the proceedings of the first legislature of the State of New York were printed, and it is now occupied by the Misses Vandervort, Mr. Van Wyck's nieces, the estate having been sold to them by him for one-tenth of its value. His father, John C. Van Wyck, was the owner of large tracts of land in that vicinity, and for many years followed mercantile pursuits in New York City. He married Delia Griffin, and reared a family of seven children: Letitia, Catherine, Jacob, Helena, Henry Du Bois, Mary Ida and Adelia.

Mr. Van Wyck was educated in the district schools near his home, also at College Hill, Poughkeepsie, and on leaving school he went to New York City and clerked in a large wholesale tobacco house for three years. He then spent two years in the oil business; went to Kalamazoo, Mich., with a large drove of sheep, and located there upon a large farm which he devoted to sheep raising and wheat growing, his first crop of wheat from 600 acres of land being the first large crop harvested in the United States. In 1849 he went to San Francisco, Cal., meeting there William Annin, of Fishkill Landing, and bought the barque "Galindo," in which Mr. Van Wyck made an exploring trip to the North along the coast of California and Oregon. Mr. Van Wyck was captain, with James Riddell as sailing master, and they carried sixty passengers, who were in search of a river which was laid down on one of Van Couver's charts as flowing into Trinidad bay. They found the bay, but no stream large enough to be called a river. One whale boat was sent north from this point and one south, with five men in each, but they returned on the fifth day, having lost four men while entering the mouth of Humboldt bay. There was a mutiny on board of the barque, which lasted several days, the passengers being of a very rough class. The party found a tribe of Indians at Trinidad bay, who treated them with great kindness, as did another large band at Klamath river under Chief Cawtapish, numbering about 1,800 warriors. Mr. Van Wyck's party were the first whites they had ever seen, as the generation which had greeted Van Couver's men had gone to the happy hunting grounds.

James Johnson and Mr. Van Wyck were the discoverers of the great Gold Bluff claims, eight miles south of the Klamath river, which are still being worked. In 1850 Mr. Van Wyck sold his interest to A. J. Butler, brother of Gen. Benjamin F. Butler, and then having procured thirty mules from San Francisco, he started on an exploring expedition through the Indian country, following the Klamath river, and at the end of forty-four days they struck the rich camp known as Yreka Mining camp, near the foot of Mt. Shasta. They had passed through several different large tribes of Indians, viz.: The "Chora," "Mad Rivers," "Klamaths," "Smith Rivers," "Rogue Rivers," "Scott Rivers," "Shastas," "Modocs," and others, always being treated well, although the Indians had never seen a white person before, and Mr. Van Wyck thinks there never would have been any trouble with the Indians if the white men had used them justly.

Respectfully
A. D. Bois Van Nye

Many noted chiefs were among these tribes, and Mr. Van Wyck says, "he never saw more beautiful women than were many of these Indian maidens," particularly on the coast. The Modoc Indian Jim, afterward known as "Shack Nasty Jim," rode for one year the bell animal, leader of a train of mules, that Mr. Van Wyck was running from Yreka to Portland, Oregon, and also to Marysville, Cal., and other towns, where goods could be procured. Mr. Van Wyck gave him a furlough that he might visit his people, who were supposed to be camping at the Lava Beds, sixty miles from Yreka. When he reached the Lava Beds, he found they had gone to Pitt river, fishing for salmon, and he came back after three or four days in a very filthy condition, having laid on the earth after heating it, so as to keep warm, during the cold nights. He had lived for two days on shack berries (a very nutritious fruit), and when he appeared before Mr. Van Wyck, the latter said to him, "Jim, you look so filthy, and having lived on shack berries, I think your name ought to be changed, so I will give you a new one, that of 'Shack Nasty Jim,'" and this nickname clung to him until his death.

The Modocs were always very kind to the whites, until the whites by misusing them caused them to be enemies instead of friends. As an instance: In 1853, during the immense immigration across the plains (all the men and women being sick, and the cattle exhausted, on account of the shortness of supplies), a party of 300 emigrants went into camp near the Modoc country, and one of the Modocs volunteered to carry word of their sad plight to "Yreka." On his arrival the message was delivered to Mr. Van Wyck at his store, as he was the largest dealer in that country. He immediately called a meeting of the citizens, and, as gold dust was as plenty as dirt, quickly raised enough to purchase cattle, provisions, medicines and everything needed to bring them through. An expedition was sent out under the charge of a supposed merciful man, who distributed the supplies among the suffering emigrants. Having one fat ox left, he killed it, barbecued a quarter of it, and invited the leading men of the Modoc tribe to partake of the feast. It was said at the time that strychnine had been put on this quarter, which he had taken out to kill wolves in order to get their pelts. At any rate, the party returned to Yreka with eleven Indian scalps, and said that they had had a terrible fight with the Modocs, and the scalps were the trophies of their victory. Yreka people learned afterward that there had been no fight, but that the Indians had been poisoned. This accounts for the manner in which Capt. Jack of the Modocs treacherously killed Gen. Canby, of the U. S. Army, as he always said he would get even by killing some "big Boston fighting man." Mr. Van Wyck remained at Yreka until 1860, when he went to Portland, Oregon, and remained there six months, forming another expedition which started for Idaho Territory, passing through the Dallas, Umpqua, Umatilla, and the place where the city of Walla Walla now stands, on through Grand Ronde valley, and over the Blue mountains, to the site of Boise City, then a wilderness; from there they went north and camped on a small stream sixty miles from Boise City, and finding placer gold in abundance, they started Idaho City, and in nine months 18,000 miners were there at work washing out the precious metal in enormous quantities. On this trip the party passed through the "Nez Percés" Umatillas, Grande Ronde, Boise Rivers, Bannocks, and other tribes of Indians without losing a man or even having any trouble, being treated well all the time. The Yreka camp and the Idaho City camp were two of the richest mining places ever discovered in the United States, and Mr. Van Wyck was the leader of the party who discovered both camps. In attempting to cross Boise river with their mules they were detained over twelve hours to allow a school of salmon to pass up the stream, as the mules could not be persuaded to go into the water until the fish had passed. At this early period these rivers were literally filled with salmon, and other fish.

Mr. Van Wyck ran stages from Yreka to Red Bluff, Cal. (160 miles), for several years, carrying Wells, Fargo & Co.'s express daily, and having at times from 500 to 1,000 pounds of gold dust to be minted at San Francisco and carried back as coin. He never lost one dollar by the "road agents," and it was said that he was "in with the 'road agents,'" as, knowing them all, and being very kind to them, loaning them money whenever they needed it, they had promised him that his stage coaches should never be attacked, while the robberies of other coaches were constant. Both Idaho and Yreka Camp were filled with the roughest elements in the world in those days, and murders were of daily occurrence, as from one to seven men were found murdered every morning in the streets. Mr. Van Wyck ran the Bonaparte Gold & Silver (in which he was a quarter-owner) for five years, doing his own amalgamating, retorting and assaying, having received a perfect knowledge of this science as a student of the celebrated Joseph Oesstricher, the gold and silver assayer of Idaho City.

Mr. Van Wyck was at one time given a pass-word by Caw-Ta-Pish, chief of the Klamath's tribe (whose life he had saved on one occasion), which was often of great service to him among the tribes who understood the jargon language. The pass-word was this—Cho, Ko, Nez, Wa, Gee, which expresses that Mr. Van Wyck had been a great friend of the Indians. Mr. Van Wyck at this point again asserts his belief that there never would have been bad Indians if it had not been for the bad whites, some of whom would shoot a poor Indian for their own amusement.

George P. Gordon, the inventor of the Gordon printing press, with whom Mr. Van Wyck had been acquainted since 1839, induced him to sell his interests in Idaho and join him in Southern speculating, and in 1869 Mr. Van Wyck went to Norfolk, Va., to look after property to purchase. Being pleased with the outlook and location, he wrote for Mr. Gordon to come down immediately, and their first purchase was the Mallory plantation, for which they paid $51,000 cash, at the same time buying four other estates adjoining at a cost of $21,000 more, making three thousand acres in all of the most beautiful trucking land in Virginia. Mr. Gordon died in 1879, and three years later Mr. Van Wyck married his widow, who died in California in 1890 of pneumonia. Mr. Van Wyck was the pioneer in the garden truck business in Virginia, working 180 negroes, and eighty mules, and six horses daily, and he still has an interest in the plantations which will soon be sold to close up the estate of the late Mrs. Van Wyck. He also owns many buildings in Norfolk, Va., including Van Wyck's Academy of Music on Main street, which was built twelve years ago at a cost of nearly $171,000, and is a temple of the dramatic and lyric arts, of which Norfolk is justly proud. It is four stories high, 200 x 150 feet ground plan, and has an auditorium seating 1,600 people, at the same time affording standing room for some seven or eight hundred more. Its stage is 45 x 60 feet, with a height of twenty feet to the grooves, and a height in the clear of sixty-five feet. The proscenium arch is thirty-two feet wide by forty feet high. These dimensions, the general design of the house and its handsome decorations and finish, have earned for it the reputation of being the finest theatre south of Washington. The best talent on the American stage is engaged for this house. The present manager, who has had charge for the past five years, is A. B. Duesberry, a Richmond man of considerable experience in theatrical matters. The treasurer, C. M. Mayes, has been with the house, in various capacities, for the last seven years.

In 1890 Mr. Van Wyck purchased the property known as the Ross farm, at Fishkill, Dutchess Co., N. Y., and constructed the lake and buildings known as Knickerbocker Lodge, Van Wyck Lake, improving and beautifying the place at a cost of $51,000. The spring of water located there has no equal in the world for the cure of diabetes, and the charming scenery and other advantages make it a delightful summer resort.

EDMUND L. HENDRICKS (deceased). The family name of Hendricks has long been prominent in business circles in this region, and the subject of this sketch sustained well the reputation for enterprise, good judgment and public-spirit which was his birth-right. His grandfather, Lawrence Hendricks, was a well-known resident of Red Hook. He had a son, Jacob L. Hendricks, our subject's father, who married Anna Moore, and reared a family of children whose names with dates of birth are as follows: Edmund L., July 12, 1809; Magdalene, October 19, 1811; Jeremiah, November 2, 1813; and Philip, January 29, 1816.

Edmund L. Hendricks received the name of Lawrence Edmund at his baptism, but in later years he transposed it to Edmund Lawrence. He was educated at the Upper Red Hook Academy; then learned harness making, and afterward engaged in the manufacture of harness at Red Hook. He retired in September, 1863. On September 25, 1832, he was married to Miss Barbara Ann Davis, of Red Hook, and six children were born of this union: Francis Theo, Mary Elizabeth, Cornelia A. Edmund D., William E. and Magdalene A. Of this family all are now deceased except Mary E. and Magdalene A. Their home was characterized by refinement and quiet devotion to Christian principles. After fifteen years of wedded life, the mother died August 19, 1847, the father surviving until November 27, 1883.

The Misses Hendricks still occupy the residence built by their father in 1842. They were educated in Red Hook, and have taken a leading position in social, religious and philanthropic enterprises, and both are regarded as most ready, active and generous supporters of any measure tending to promote the welfare of their community, or of that wide circle which includes all humanity as one family.

ABRAM WRIGHT, one of the most prominent business men of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, was born November 8, 1812, in the town of East Fishkill, and now carries the burden of his eighty-five years with a sprightliness and vigor which many men younger than he might envy.

Isaac Wright, his father, was born in 1764 in Westchester county, N. Y., where he grew to manhood and married Miss Mary Hamilton, who was born in 1763, a native of the same county. Her father was born in the North of Ireland, of Scotch-Irish parentage. Thirteen children came of this union, of whom our subject is the youngest and now the only survivor. Isaac Wright engaged in farming at his native place after his marriage, and a few years later moved to East Fishkill, being one of the earliest settlers there. He was a man of very strong constitution, and never knew what illness was until his last years. He died in 1839, his wife surviving him nine years. They were members of the M. E. Church, and so hospitable were they to ministers and other travelers in those days that their home was known far and near as the "Methodist Tavern."

Abram Wright passed his boyhood on the farm where he was born, his educational opportunities being limited to the neighboring district school. His first money-making employment was in a country store at Coldspring, Putnam county, at $4 per month and board. Later, while visiting a brother at New Orleans, he was persuaded by him to go into the cotton commission business at Manchester (now Yazoo City), Miss. There he remained six years, when he was burned out, sustaining a loss of $50,000. Gathering up what he could, he again embarked in business, locating at Vicksburg, where for eight years he dealt extensively in plantation supplies. He then returned to

New Orleans, holding an interest with his brother Hamilton for two years, but sold out and came back to his early home. After a few years passed at Coldspring he moved to Poughkeepsie, where in 1857 he bought his present place. He is a man of great energy and business acumen, and has engaged in various profitable enterprises. He was a stockholder in the company which built the Poughkeepsie bridge, a director in the Farmers' and Merchants' Bank, and is now one of the trustees of the Poughkeepsie Savings Bank. He has also speculated in real estate to some extent, and has built five stores on Main street between Academy street and Eighth place. Business cares have not, however, engrossed his thoughts to the exclusion of matters of public moment, for he has always been ready to forward any movement for the welfare of the city; he has held office on the board of education, and on the alms house commission; has been alderman from the Sixth ward, and has served several times on the waterworks board, having been a member of that board at its organization. Politically, he has always been a staunch Democrat.

Mr. Wright was married, in 1837, to Mary Warren, a daughter of Judge Warren, of Coldspring, and has had seven children: Eliza, Charlotte, Webster, Sarah (Mrs. Leonard Carpenter), Cornelia, Ida and William, of whom only two are now living: Webster, a resident of Plainfield, N. J., and William, who lives in Poughkeepsie.

CHARLES DAVIS, whose death occurred in 1895, was one of the leading and influential agriculturists of the town of Dover, Dutchess county. Timothy Davis, his grandfather, was a native of Delaware county, N. Y., and was also a farmer. He wedded Miss Mary Wilbur, by whom he had five children: Zilla, Wilbur, Silas, Ruth and Sarah.

Wilbur Davis, the father of our subject, was born and educated in Delaware county, N. Y., and followed the occupation to which he was reared. He married Miss Ethel Manchester, and seven children came to bless their union, as follows: (1) William, who was born and educated in the town of Dover, Dutchess county, there engaged in farming, and married Miss Janet Clark. To them were born six children—Walter and Chester, who died in infancy; Mary, who wedded James Wood;

George, who married Emily Tripp; Mina, who married Lewis Waldron; and Harry, who died in infancy. (2) Betsy married William Smith, a farmer of Dover Plains, Dutchess county, and they had two children—Frances, who married Charles Cooper; and Jane, who married James Deacon. (3) Charles, subject of this sketch, was the next in order of birth. (4) Silas, a hat manufacturer, enlisted in a Connecticut regiment, and served all through the war of the Rebellion. He married Miss Margaret Abbott, but no children were born to them. (5) Sarah was never married. (6) Theron was engaged in the foundry business, and married Miss Anna Hart, by whom he had three children—Mary, John and Albert. (7) Henry carried on farming in the West. He married Miss Margaret O'Connors, but they had no children. All of the above-named family were born in the town of Dover, Dutchess county, and were there educated.

The subject proper of this sketch was born in the town of Dover, Dutchess county, in 1824, and like the other members of the family attended the common schools near his home. He early became familiar with the work that falls to the lot of the agriculturist, and made farming his life work. He was a highly-respected citizen, having the confidence and esteem of all who knew him, and many friends mourned his death.

Mr. Davis was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Benson, a daughter of Jefferson and Fannie (Glenn) Benson, of Amenia, Dutchess county, and they became the parents of eight children, namely: George, born in 1849, has for several years been a conductor on the Harlem railroad; he married Ellen Duncan, and has one child—Ed J.; JOHN, born in 1851, was for years conductor on the Harlem railroad, and had his arm crushed in 1891; William, born in 1853, was on the same road for years, and is now on the Brooklyn bridge; he married Eliza Benson, and has eight children—Charles, Albert, Nellie, Anna, Emma, Sophia, Arthur and Lula. Edward, born in 1855, died at the age of nineteen years. Frank, born in 1857, was a conductor on the Staten Island road, and was killed in a collision in 1893; he married Katie E. Spencer. Walter, born in 1859, is a fireman on the Harlem road; he married Jennie Proper, and has two children—Ida and Ethel. Jefferson, born in 1860, is an engineer on the Brooklyn bridge; he married Emily Duncan, and has three children—Edith, Harry and Mabel. Arthur, born in 1862, was a policeman at the time of his death in 1888; he married Georgia Schamerhorn, and had one child—Katie E., who died in infancy.

BENJAMIN N. BAKER, M. D., one of the ablest and most successful medical practitioners of Rhinebeck, Dutchess county, was born October 2, 1833, in Montgomery county, Pennsylvania.

His family is of English origin, and has long been established in Nottingham, England, where his grandfather, John Baker, was a well-known resident in his day. Rev. John J. Baker, our subject's father, was the first of the family to come to America, and fifty years of his life were spent as a devoted minister of the Baptist Church in Philadelphia and in different towns in New Jersey. He married Miss Elizabeth Nicholson, daughter of Benjamin Nicholson, a Revolutionary soldier, who was at one time imprisoned in a man-of-war in New York harbor. Thirteen children were born of this union, of whom the following seven lived to adult age: Benjamin N., William, Lansing B., John J., Catherine, Margaret and Allie. The father died in 1890, and the mother in 1891.

Dr. Baker received a good education in his youth, graduating in 1848 from the Central High School in Philadelphia, to attend which he walked three miles each day. Soon after leaving school he engaged in the drug business in the same city, and later took the general course in medicine in the Pennsylvania Medical College, and was graduated in 1857. He then began the practice of his profession at Lawrenceville, N. J., and remained there twelve years, with the exception of one year in the army, in 1862-63. He entered as second assistant surgeon of the 1st N. J. C., and later became first assistant of the 28th N. J. I., and then first surgeon of the Third Division, Second Corps, Hospital in the field, and was mustered out while holding this rank. He returned to Lawrenceville, but in 1868 moved to Rhinebeck, and has been in general practice there ever since, winning an enviable reputation throughout the surrounding country for the successful and scientific treatment of difficult cases. In his professional work he is naturally a diligent reader, and he keeps well informed also on the topics of the day. Political work he has left entirely alone. He votes the Dem ocratic ticket, though formerly a Republican, and he is interested in all movements for the public benefit, and has been health officer for several years.

On April 7, 1858, he was married to Miss Sarah S. Exton, daughter of Thomas Exton, a well-known citizen of Clinton, N. J., and granddaughter of Hugh Exton, who came from England at an early date and purchased one thousand acres of land, now known as Union farms. They have had eight children, four of whom are now living: Lizzie, who married Edward Holley, of Hudson, N. Y.; Ella, the wife of R. R. Jarvis, of Arlington, N. J.; Harriet, the wife of Thomas J. Sinclair, of Philadelphia; and Mae, who is at home. The Doctor united with the Presbyterian Church in his youth, but he and his wife are now active members of the Reformed Dutch Church. The Doctor takes great interest in the G. A. R., being a member of Armstrong Post, and he also belongs to the Masonic order.

THOMAS W. EMBLEY, M. D., of Fishkill, Dutchess county. Among the talented young physicians of this region, we should name the subject of this sketch as having demonstrated in an unusually short time the possession of native ability for his profession, as well as the thorough training which, however necessary to a successful practitioner, is useful only where the other exists to be developed.

Dr. Embley is a native of Fishkill-on-Hudson, where he was born July 22, 1874. His family originated in England, and for 300 years there has been a Thomas Embley in the direct line of descent. The Doctor's great-grandfather, Thomas Embley, lived in Lancashire, England, and was a mason by trade. He was accidentally killed by the falling of a scaffold, and left a small family, among whom was a son, Thomas, our subject's grandfather, who was born at Clitheroe, in northern Lancashire. He became a carder of cotton goods in his youth, and later followed teaming, but finally engaged in the grocery business. He died in 1857, aged seventy-five years, and his wife, Ann (Tiplady), followed him a year later, aged fifty-eight. Her father, John Tiplady, was a lead miner of Yorkshire, England. Thomas and Ann Embley were devout members of the Church of England. Of their three children, the youngest, Thomas, our subject's father, is now the only survivor. Mary A. married William Fitton, now deceased, and Alice was the wife of the late John Seddon.

Thomas Embley, the Doctor's father, was born at Hyde, Cheshire, England, August 6, 1839, and was the only one of the family to cross the ocean. The first eleven years of his life were spent at his native place, and he then became a switch-tender in a railroad yard at Gorton. At fourteen he went to Manchester to learn the art of decorating interiors, and for several years he was successfully engaged in painting and paper-hanging. In 1873 he came to America, and visited Fishkill and neighboring towns in his search for a suitable location. The prospects there being favorable he began working at his trade, but in 1876 he established a saloon business at Fishkill Landing, and has met with marked success. In 1889 he built the brick block at the corner of Walnut and Main streets, where he has since conducted his business, and until taking possession of that place he was also engaged to some extent at his old trade of decorator. At present he is treasurer of the Liquor and Beer Dealers' Association of Fishkill.

In his political views Mr. Embley is independent, voting for the best men and measures without regard to party. He inclines toward the Episcopal Church, having been a member of the Established Church before coming to the United States. While living in Godley, England, he was active in Church work, and was a teacher in the Sunday-school. He also joined the I. O. O. F. in his native land. He was married in the old country, August 6, 1869, to Miss Lucy J. Fisher, daughter of William Fisher, of Leiston, Suffolk, England. Only one child, our subject, lived to adult age, and to him we will now return.

Dr. Embley was educated in Fishkill, and on completing his course in the local schools he began the study of medicine with Dr. J. G. Dawson, of Matteawan. After eighteen months of preparatory reading he was enrolled in October, 1893, as a student at Hahnemann Medical College at Philadelphia, Penn. He was graduated in 1896, and in July of that year opened his office at Fishkill village, where he is making his way by his own merits. He has already had some difficult cases, and was associated with Dr. Dawson, his former preceptor, in a very important operation requiring intelligence and skill, by which they saved a leg for a man who had been run over by the cars. So far the Doctor has not donned the Hymeneal yoke.

REV. JAMES NILAN, D. D., pastor of St. Peter's Roman Catholic Church, Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, is a native of Ireland, born in County Galway, in 1836. At the age of seventeen he came to this country, and was educated at St. John's College, Fordham, N. Y., from which he graduated with the first gold medal conferred by Archbishop Hughes. Subsequently he pursued his theological studies at Rome, where, in 1863, he was ordained to the priesthood, at St. John Lateran.

On his return to this country he was assigned to missionary service at the Church of the Holy Cross, New York, and in 1868 he was sent by Cardinal McCloskey to the charge of the Catholic Church at Port Jervis, N. Y. Here, during his pastorate, he succeeded in securing the erection of one of the finest church buildings in that diocese. In November, 1877, on the appointment of Dr. Patrick McSweeney to St. Bridget's Church, New York, Dr. Nilan was transferred to the pastorate of St. Peter's Church, Poughkeepsie.

During the pastorate (1844-1870) of Rev. M. Riordan, the present St. Peter's church building was begun and completed, two large school buildings and a rectory being also erected. In 1872, during the pastorate of Rev. Dr. McSweeney, the rectory was enlarged, and arrangements were made whereby the parochial school buildings were placed under the control of the city board of education. The parish of St. Mary's was established in the upper part of the city. During Father Nilan's pastorate the church building has been enlarged, and provided with stained-glass windows at a cost of $10,000. Its Sabbath-school numbers nearly seven hundred. It has five sodalities for the young members of the congregation; a young people's literary society, with a good library; a boys' temperance society of over 300 members; and a total abstinence and benefit society of several hundred men and women. The average income of the church is $8,000, nearly $5,000 of which is from pew rent.

Few churches present a more complete array of parish organizations, in successful operation to-day, than does the Church of St.

Peter's. Dr. Nilan's pronounced temperance principles, his warm sympathies with the humblest of his flock, and his frank acceptance of all the responsibilities of citizenship, have combined to give him an enviable position, not only with the members of his parish, but in the community at large. In the general benevolent, temperance and literary movements of the city, Dr. Nilan has always taken a prominent part, and he possesses in a marked degree the esteem of all classes of the people.

MT. PULTZ, M. D., a prominent physician of Stanfordville, Dutchess county, is a great-grandson of one of the pioneer agriculturists of the town of Rhinebeck, David Pultz, who came from Germany at an early day to make a home in this country. His son, Michael D. Pultz, our subject's grandfather, was reared to the occupation of farming, and also worked at the carpenter's trade. He was a member of the old militia, and took an active part in the local affairs of his day. He and his family belonged to the Lutheran Church, attending at Wurtemberg. By his first wife, who was a Miss Cookingham, he had six children: Julia, Reuben, Mary, Martin, Griffin and Lavina, of whom Mary is now the only survivor.

Martin Pultz, our subject's father, always resided at the old homestead, receiving his education in youth in the neighboring schools. In politics he was a Whig, and in movements of his time and locality he was influential, being especially interested in the early agitation of the temperance question, and an active worker in the Sons of Temperance. He married Catherine Traver, a daughter of Phillip I. Traver, of Milan. His death occurred in 1850; his widow makes her home with our subject.

Monroe Traver Pultz, the only child of this union, was born at the old home farm July 17, 1843. After making the most of the somewhat limited facilities afforded by the local schools, he studied for some time at Rhinebeck Academy, then one year at Wilbraham Academy in Massachusetts, and a year at Fort Edwards, N. Y. He then for a time pursued the scientific course in Union College with the class of '67, and later began the study of medicine with Dr. I. F. Van Vliet, of Rhinebeck, after which he took a three-year course in the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York City, graduating in 1868. In June of the same year he located at Stan-fordville, where he has since practiced with great success, his native abilities and fine scholarship giving him high rank in his profes-sion. He has been twice married, first to Miss Emma Amelia Bailey, a daughter of Richard Bailey, a well-known resident of Rhinebeck. She died in 1877, leaving two sons, Fred A. and Lee, the latter a graduate of the Albany Medical College in the class of '95. In 1878 Dr. Pultz was married, the sec-ond time, in the town of Stanford, to Miss Alice Clark, daughter of Almon Clark.

In politics the Doctor is a Democrat, but he takes no share in party work, although he is a supporter of all measures tending to the public welfare, and has served as health offi-cer of the town of Stanford. He is a member of the Christian Church, and of the F. & A. M., Rhinebeck Lodge; he holds a prominent place in the Dutchess County Medical Associa-tion, in the New York State Medical Associa-tion, and in the American Medical Associa-tion.

EDWIN R. PEASE. Among the old resi-dents of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, probably none were better known than the late Edwin R. Pease. Mr. Pease was born June 22, 1820, and died March 16, 1885. He was a son of Dudley S. Pease, an early settler in the village, who came from the East.

In early life Mr. Pease learned the shoe-making industry, and at the age of twenty-two years he established business for himself, man-ufacturing shoes and running a retail store. He started in business on the north side of Main street, near Bayeau street, where he re-mained for about a year, when he moved to No. 309 Main street, and there continued the busi-ness up to the time of his death. He was one of the most prominent merchants of the city, always identified with all matters of public in-terest. Although one of the most substantial and respected residents, and owner of much real estate, he never aspired to official honors. He was a Democrat, but never held any polit-ical office, except that of police commissioner, which incumbency he was holding at the time of his death. For many years he was a trustee of the old Cannon Street M. E. Church, to which he was a liberal contributor.

Mr. Pease married January 11, 1844, Cornelia Stanton, a daughter of Morris and Eliza Stanton. Morris Stanton, the father of Mrs. Pease, was born in Ulster county, and followed the cooper's trade. Eliza Stanton, the mother of Mrs. Pease (more familiarly known as Eliza Bates, which name she inherited by marriage to her second husband, Joseph I. Bates, in June, 1835), was born November 10, 1798, in a house on Academy street, standing where George W. Scott's livery stable is now located. She built the handsome building now occupied by the Dutchess Restaurant and the Dutchess Club, at No. 309 Main street, where she lived for many years, and died February 25, 1888, honored as the oldest Methodist in Pough-keepsie. She was a member of the first Methodist Sunday-school in Poughkeepsie, holding their meetings in the old church on Jefferson street. She was a daughter of Til-man Seabury, a sergeant in the Revolutionary army, who married Cornelia Kip, a direct descendant of Anneka Jans, of Trinity-Church fame.

Tradition affirms that while the Revolu-tionary soldiers were stationed at Poughkeep-sie, Tilman Seabury, wishing to make the acquaintance of Cornelia Kip, whom he had seen, purchased some handkerchiefs, and asked her to hem them for the soldiers, as the "girls" were all anxious to do work for the soldiers. She accepted, and an acquaint-ance was then formed which resulted in court-ship, and the records of the old Dutch Church at New Hackensack show that on February 27, 1778, Tilman Seabury and Cornelia Kip were married by the Rev. Isaac Rysdyke.

Mrs. Stanton (Mrs. Bates) was a grand-niece of Bishop Seabury, the first Episcopal bishop in America. Mrs. Stanton (Mrs. Bates) was also a direct descendant, through Samuel Seabury, of John Alden and Priscilla Mullens, who came to this country in the "Mayflower." Mrs. Stanton, by her marriage to Morris Stanton, had three children: Sarah, who died August 14, 1873, unmarried; Cornelia (Pease), who lives at No. 117 Academy street, and Mary, who married the Rev. B. D. Palmer, now living at Paterson, New Jersey.

Dudley S. Pease, the father of Edwin R. Pease, came from Connecticut to Poughkeep-sie, where he engaged in the shoe business.

He also kept a grocery store. He was born March 5, 1785, and died March 17, 1855. On November 14, 1805, he married Lewrelly Loomis, by whom he had two children, Charles and Sylvia L. For his second wife he married, June 14, 1810, Maria Seares, by whom he had two children, Maria L. and Albert. For his third wife he married, December 1, 1814, Sarah, daughter of Samuel (and Margaret) Killey, a descendant of Seth Killey, of Yarmouth, by whom he had six sons and two daughters: Richard P., Margaret, Edwin R., Catherine J., Franklin, Albert S., Walter S. and Egbert K., all of whom are now dead except Albert S., who lives at Saratoga, N. Y. Edwin R. and Cornelia Pease had four children—two sons and two daughters—all of whom are now living.

ROBERT SANFORD, a prominent citizen and a lawyer of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, who has been a resident of that city for the past forty years, was born in Albany, N. Y., December 10, 1831.

When he was three years of age, his parents, Nathan and Mary (Buchanan) Sanford, removed from Albany to Flushing, L. I., where they resided four years, or until the death of the father in October, 1838. During the following two years, Mr. Sanford traveled with his widowed mother, and at the age of ten years entered schools at Hartford, Conn., where he remained for five years, then becoming a pupil in the school of the celebrated instructor, Dr. Muhlenberg, at College Point, L. I., where he remained four years. During the next two years he was under private tutors, one of them being Rev. Dr. George H. Houghton, rector of the historical "little church around the corner" on 28th street, just east of Fifth avenue, New York City, who coached him in Greek, and said to him: "Bob, you are the most stupid jackass I ever saw!" After that mental castigation, "Bob" respected his tutor, and improved in that ancient language so much as to write a letter in Greek, into which the asinine still existed, according to the worthy Doctor. For one year after this he was a student at the Kinsley Military Institute, West Point, N. Y., and the next two years were passed by him at Schenectady, N. Y. He then traveled in Europe for a couple of years with his mother.

In 1857 Mr. Sanford located at Poughkeepsie, and began the study of law at the New York State and National Law School, graduating with the class of '58. For two years he was in the law office of Joseph H. Jackson, and during the following two years practiced law for himself. In 1860 he set out on another extended European trip, which occupied two years, during which he attended a course of lectures at the Sorbonne, in Paris, and was presented at the Court of Napoleon III. Returning to the United States, he practiced law in Poughkeepsie for three years, or until 1865, at which time he commenced his third trip across the Atlantic, the winter being spent at Ventnor, Isle of Wight, hunting, and the summer in London, where he was presented at Court by his cousin, Charles Francis Adams, then minister of the Court of St. James. At the end of about two years he returned to the United States, and to Poughkeepsie.

On May 23, 1867, Mr. Sanford was united in marriage with Miss Mary Helen Hooker Stuyvesant, eldest daughter of John R. Stuyvesant, a resident of Edgewood, Hyde Park, Dutchess county, and a great-granddaughter of Petrus Stuyvesant, Colonial Governor of the State of New York. Five children have been born of this union: Mary Buchanan, Henry Gausevoort, Helen Stuyvesant and Désiré McKean. Of these, Stuyvesant died August 13, 1890; the others are at home with their parents.

Mr. Sanford in his political predilections is a Republican, but no partisan, and while a loyal citizen has always declined office. Socially, he is a member of the Sigma Phi Fraternity, the Aztec Society (a Mexican war society); the Amrita Club, of Poughkeepsie; the Dutchess Hunt Club; the Union League Club, of New York City; the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, in which society he has always taken great interest; the American Geographical Society; the Church Club of New York, besides many others. He is a trustee of the Church of the Holy Comforter, at Poughkeepsie; and was a member of the board of education from 1862 to 1866, having to resign on account of his going to Europe.

Physically, Mr. Sanford, who is now (1897) sixty-six years of age, is of about medium height, and of the blonde type; is possessed of a well-knit frame, having from his youth kept up his out-door exercise—skating, riding, walking, etc., as well as fencing—in fact, he is a moderate all-round athlete, without ever excelling in any one exercise. Ventilation, sewerage, and sanitary matters in general, and, above all, pure air, have been his "hobbies," so much so that he has sometimes been called a "crank" on these subjects; indeed, he claims that the foul air of the court rooms finally drove him away from active practice in them.

Mr. Sanford has a delightfully picturesque home in Poughkeepsie, beautified with wide lawns, winding walks, and a romantic little brook; while the house is commodious, and elegantly designed and furnished. Everywhere are seen evidences of cultivated taste and refined associations, while souvenirs of his travels in foreign countries recall to him many pleasant memories of years of sight-seeing. No family stands higher than that of Robert Sanford, and the hospitable home is always open to a large circle of warm friends.

SANFORD FAMILY. The ancient family of Sontford, Sonforde, or Sanford of Sandford, came to England with William the Conqueror, and the name of its founder occurs in every known copy of the "Battle Abbey Roll." [See Burke's "Landed Gentry of Great Britain and Ireland."]

Thomas Sanford, the grandfather of Robert Sanford, was born in Connecticut, married Phœbe Baker and settled on Long Island, at Bridgehampton, where he practiced medicine, and also followed farming, and where he died. He had two children, Nathan, our subject's father, and Phebe, who married Dr. Rufus Rose, a physician.

Nathan Sanford, father of our subject, was born at Bridgehampton, L. I., November 5, 1777, and grew to manhood on his father's farm. He received an elementary education at Clinton Academy, Easthampton, L. I., and in 1793 entered Yale College, but did not graduate. In 1797 he studied law with Samuel Jones, Sr., and was admitted to the bar in 1799. In 1800 he was one of the United States Commissioners of Bankruptcy, and in 1803 was made United States District Attorney for the Southern District of New York, which position he held twelve years. In 1811 he was chosen speaker of the State Assembly, being the last speaker to preside in a cocked hat. The following year he was elected to the State Senate, and his portrait, ordered by the State, is now in the Capitol at Albany.

In 1815 Mr. Sanford was elected to the United States Senate, and soon after relinquished the practice of his profession, devoting himself in his legislative capacity to the interests of his country. In 1821, after the expiration of his term of office, he was chosen a member of the convention for framing a new constitution for the State of New York. In 1823 he was appointed to succeed the Hon. James Kent as chancellor of the State, which position he filled with honor until 1825, when he was again elected to the U. S. Senate, in place of Dr. Rufus King, by a unanimous vote of both branches of the Legislature. He was chairman of the committee on Foreign Affairs, the most prominent of all Senate Committees. In the Presidential election of 1824 Senator Sanford was one of the candidates for the vice-Presidency of the United States. At that period candidates were not formally nominated by their parties as at the present day. In this election there were four candidates for that office: William H. Crawford, nominated by the Democratic members of Congress; Andrew Jackson, nominated chiefly by numerous conventions; the candidate of the people, John Quincy Adams, nominated by the Legislatures of most of the Eastern States; and Henry Clay, nominated by his friends in various States. Mr. Sanford was put on the ticket with Clay, and the other candidates for the Vice-Presidency were: Calhoun, Macon, Van-Buren, Jackson and Clay. Neither candidates received a majority of votes, but Adams was elected when the vote was thrown into the House of Representatives. Calhoun received a large majority for Vice-President.

Among the many eminent men of New York, no one served in more important positions in the same length of time than did Nathan Sanford. He was an educated man, and master of many languages. At the expiration of his senatorial term, he retired to his estate at Flushing, L. I., where he resided until his death, which occurred October 17, 1838. He was married three times, his third wife being Mary Buchanan, who was born in Baltimore, November 1, 1800, a daughter of Andrew and Anne (McKean) Buchanan, the former of whom was a merchant in that city. Mrs. Sanford was the second in a family of four children, the others being Susan, Thomas and Ann.

Dr. George Buchanan, the maternal great-great-grandfather of Robert Sanford, our subject, was born in Scotland in 1698, and emigrated to Maryland in 1723. His son George, also a physician, was born in Baltimore, September 19, 1763, and married Laetia McKean, by whom he had eleven children, Andrew, the grandfather of Robert Sanford, our subject, being the fifth in order of birth. Laetia Mc-Kean was the daughter of Thomas McKean, one of the Signers of the Declaration of Independence, and at one time governor of Pennsylvania and Delaware. The McKeanes were of Irish extraction.

The marriage of Nathan Sanford and Mary Buchanan took place in the White House at Washington, President John Quincy Adams, Miss Buchanan's nearest relative, giving away the bride. But one child, Robert, was born of this union. Nathan Sanford died October 17, 1838, and his wife on April 23, 1879, at Poughkeepsie. [The above historical facts in relation to the Hon. Nathan Sanford are taken from Appleton's Encyclopedia of American Biography, Vol. V, p. 391.]

JOHAN F. MARQUET (deceased), who in his lifetime was a prominent agriculturist of the town of Rhinebeck, Dutchess county, was a descendant of one of the pioneer settlers in that vicinity, and was born July 13, 1828, upon the farm he lately occupied.

His great-grandfather, George Marquet, emigrated from Holland, and at an early date settled upon a tract of land near the present site of Wurtemberg, and it has ever since been the home of his family. George Marquet, our subject's grandfather, passed his life there; he married Anna ———, and reared a family of children: John G. and William H., both farmers in Rhinebeck; David; and Margaret, who married Philip Pultz, a farmer of the same locality.

David Marquet, our subject's father, was born November 8, 1794, and was married November 5, 1815, to Savina Cookingham, born November 13, 1794, a daughter of Frederick Cookingham, of Rhinebeck. They also settled at the old farm where four children born to them, as follows: Anna E., March 30, 1817; Matilda, June 2, 1820; Margaret, April 8, 1824; and John F., our subject. The father of this family died at the old home April 3, 1838, the mother on July 28, 1889.

The youth of John F. Marquet was passed much the same as that of any other healthy country boy, and as he grew to manhood he, too, determined to become a general farmer. He was married October 2, 1851, to Emily Cookingham, whose ancestors came from Holland in the early days, and settled in the town of Rhinebeck, where her grandfather, George Cookingham, was a leading farmer of his time.

Her father, David I. Cookingham, also a farmer there, married Mary Schryver, a lady of German descent, and daughter of John Schryver, of Rhinebeck. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Marquet lived for fifteen years upon a farm near the church, a part of which they then sold for the beautiful Wurtemberg Cemetery. In 1866 they moved to the 118-acre farm at the old homestead. Two daughters blessed their home only to be taken away in early womanhood: Ida, born January 31, 1853, died June 20, 1877; and Mary, born May 19, 1857, died May 10, 1884. The parents are both also now deceased, the father passing away February 15, 1896, and the mother on February 19, 1896. This family was always connected with the Lutheran Church, and Mr. Marquet and his wife were leading members of the congregation at Wurtemberg. In politics he was a Republican, but he never was in any sense a politician, and sought no office.

JOHAN MILLARD (deceased). The subject of this sketch was born in Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, May 21, 1789, and was the son of Charles and Lydia (Pride) Millard, the former of whom was born in Cornwall, Conn., February 19, 1763.

Our subject lived but a short time in Poughkeepsie, moving in early life to Marlborough, Ulster county. He married Miss Sarah Purdy, a daughter of John S. and Elizabeth (Jennings) Purdy, who was born in White Plains, Westchester county, in 1793, where she lived until fourteen years old. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Millard located in New York and subsequently in Brooklyn, where our subject carried on a wholesale and retail grocery business. The following children were born to them: Lydia resides in Poughkeepsie; Elizabeth; Hester lives in Poughkeepsie; Sarah; Charles; Martha J.; John P. is a resident of Poughkeepsie; Samuel N. is a retired citizen of Marlborough, Ulster county; James. Our subject, with his wife, was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and he took an active interest in all public matters. His death took place April 28, 1871, and that of his wife October 6, 1881.

Charles Millard was in the army at Newburgh, N. Y., under Washington, when Arnold, the traitor, fled from West Point. In 1800 Mr. Millard was living in Marlborough, Ulster county, and was engaged in the lumber business. He was married to Miss Lydia Pride, of Poughkeepsie, a daughter of John and Magdaline Pride. The latter couple were proprietors of the half-way house between Albany and New York, on the old post-road north of the City of Poughkeepsie. To Mr. and Mrs. Millard were born the following children: John, our-subject; James, who was a lumber merchant at Catskill, N. Y.; Charles, who was a merchant of New Orleans; William, who was a man of means and traveled extensively; Walter, who was engaged with his father in the lumber business; Cornelia, married to Hackaliah Purdy, a farmer of Ulster county; Catherine, who became the wife of Elam Dunbar, a farmer of Connecticut, who previously had conducted a hat factory in Poughkeepsie; Caroline, who died unmarried; and by a second marriage, Margaret and Franklin. Mr. Millard moved his lumber business to New Hamburg, in 1824, and died there in 1827. John Millard, the grandfather, was born January 15, 1736, in Massachusetts, and died November 22, 1813. He married Miss Christiana Rust, who was born November 21, 1742, and died June 17, 1831. Their children were: Charles; Rufus; Philo, who was a musician; Ira, who was a manufacturer at Wappingers Falls, Dutchess county; Russell, who was a resident of Connecticut. Robert Millard, the great-grandfather, was a native of Massachusetts. His ancestors were of French-Huguenot stock.

John S. Purdy, the father of Mrs. Millard, was born in Westchester county, N. Y., July 11, 1763, and died September 23, 1856. He was a patriot, and when a mere boy served in the Revolutionary war. He married Miss Elizabeth Jennings, a daughter of Peter Jennings, who was born May 12, 1765, and died in 1842. They were married March 21, 1786, and had the following children: Hester, born June 17, 1787, married Dennis H. Doyle, who, in the year 1807, with Robert Fulton, took the first trip up the Hudson, on the "Clermont"; Peter, born January 19, 1789; Elisha, born May 17, 1791; Sarah, born April 17, 1793; Lydia, born December 15, 1795, married William Smith, who was in the war of 1812; Hackaliah, born November 22, 1797; Eliza, born July 1, 1799; Martha, born April 3, 1801; Maria, born March 1803; Dennis, born December 4, 1805; William J., born October 16, 1809. Dennis is the only one living now (1897), at the age of ninety-one. Elisha Purdy, father of John S., was born at White Plains, Westchester county. He married Mehitable Smith, a daughter of Rev. John Smith, D. D., and they reared these children: John S., Thomas, James, Hetta, Challie, Elizabeth, Winfred, Nancy, and Ainee. Elisha was a farmer in Westchester and Ulster counties. Nathaniel Purdy, father of Elisha, was a native of Westchester county, and was an Episcopal minister. His father was John Purdy, a son of Joseph, a son of Francis, who came from Yorkshire, England, in 1658, and settled in Fairfield, Conn. The Purdys were originally from Wales, and settled in England. Two sons of Francis Purdy, Joseph and Francis, were commissioned surveyors by the Crown, and sent to America.

Rev. John Smith, D. D., above referred to, was born in England in 1702. He was educated at Oxford, and for thirty years, until his death in 1771, served as pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Rye, Westchester Co., N. Y. He married Mehitable Hooker, a great-granddaughter of Rev. Thomas Hooker, the founder of Hartford, Conn., in 1636.

PPETER B. HAYT, of the firm of Peter B. Hayt & Co., was born in Poughkeepsie October 8, 1835. In the spring of 1836 his parents moved to a farm in New Hackensack, Dutchess county, where he was reared, early in life attending a private school and later a district school, and finishing his education at Amenia Seminary.

In 1854 Mr. Hayt went to Newburgh and clerked for Stephen Hayt & Co., dry-goods merchants, where he remained until 1862, when he came to Poughkeepsie and entered in the merchant-tailoring business under the firm name of Seward, Vail & Hayt. The firm was subsequently changed to Seward & Hayt, Seward, Hayt & Co., Seward & Hayt, Peter B. Hayt & Co., Hayt & Alley, Hayt & Lindley, and, in 1892, to Peter B. Hayt & Co. The business at present is located corner of Main and Garden streets.

Mr. Hayt is a Republican, but has never held a political office; he is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and is a director and vice-president of the Poughkeepsie Electric Light & Power Co. He is a member of Davy Crockett Hook and Ladder Co., which organization he joined in 1862, and has been treasurer of the company since 1873.

WILSON B. SHELDON. Among the citizens of mark of Dutchess county no one is more worthy of consideration than this gentleman. Although now well advanced in years, he is still one of the most energetic and wide-awake citizens in the town of Beekman. A native of Dutchess county, he was born in the town of Dover, August 3, 1810, and is of English extraction.

Caleb Sheldon, his grandfather, was also born in the town of Dover, and there he learned the blacksmith's trade, which he followed in early life, later, however, turning his attention to farming. He married a Miss Waldo, by whom he had four children—two sons (Agrippa, a cattle dealer; and Luther, father of our subject) and two daughters, all born in Dover township.

Luther Sheldon grew to manhood upon a farm, and was married to Miss Mary Butts, who was also born and reared upon a farm in the town of Dover. Their entire lives were there passed in rural pursuits, the father dying in 1863, and the mother in 1865. They were earnest Christian people, devout members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in politics he was first a Whig and later a Republican. Eleven children were born to this honored couple, as follows: Phœbe, Anor, Delilah, Theodorus and Electa (twins), Ophelia, Albro, Wilson B., Jeremiah, Harrison and Almira, all of whom married and had children, but all are now deceased, except Wilson B.

Our subject received a somewhat limited education, and his boyhood time was much occupied in the arduous work of the farm, so much so that his schooling was limited to about two months during the winter seasons. Later, however, he was a student at the Nine Partners School, in the town of Washington, Dutchess county, and on leaving school he returned to the old farm, where he remained until attaining his majority. In starting out in life for himself, he commenced as a drover, his first experience in that line being in the year 1831, when he loaded one hundred sheep into a boat, to be taken to New York City. Near Tarrytown, the boat sank, but his sheep were taken ashore, and he drove them to the city, which he reached after thirty-six hours. Having sold them for a high price, he was so encouraged that he decided to remain in the stock business, which he continued to follow with good success for twenty-five years, during which time he did an extensive business. In 1842 he purchased his present farm in the town of Beekman, to which he removed four years later, and has since engaged in agricultural pursuits.

On April 1, 1840, Mr. Sheldon was married to Miss Hannah Maria Doughty, who was born upon their present farm, a daughter of Joseph Doughty, whose ancestors came from Holland. Seven children were born to this worthy couple, three of whom died in infancy, and William H. at the age of twelve years and six months. Sophia is the wife of Joseph H. Storm, a leading farmer of the town of Beekman; she has two children—Wilson B. and Jeannette, the former of whom married Mary T. Berry (he is in the coal and lumber business at Storm Lake), the latter being the wife of Frederick Ryer, and living at Mount Vernon, N. Y. Ida first married William A. Storm, a farmer in the town of Lagrange, and her second husband was Augustus A. Brush, warden in the prison at Sing Sing, who is now deceased (she had one child by her first husband, named Susie Sheldon Storm). Allie is the wife of Frank St. John, a farmer of the town of Beekman, and has two children—Sheldon and Ida.

Mr. Sheldon has an excellent farm of 500 acres, all under a high state of cultivation and well improved. He has made a specialty of cattle raising, sometimes fattening as high as eighty head in a season, but now devotes his time to the dairy business. For over fifty-six years he and his wife have traveled life's journey together, and to-day seem as happy and almost as young as when starting out. In their hospitable home they have entertained both friends and strangers in a most praiseworthy manner, and many are the kind deeds which have not only brightened their own pathway, but have contributed to the comfort and happiness of those about them. Although now eighty-six years of age, Mr. Sheldon does not look over sixty, as he has not a gray hair, and is quite active.

In 1831 he cast his first vote for John Q. Adams, and has always taken a prominent part in political affairs, now supporting the Republican party. For four terms he served as supervisor of his township; was elected county clerk in 1858, which position he filled for six consecutive years; in 1867 was a delegate to the Constitutional Convention held in Albany; and in 1880 was again elected county clerk, being at that time seventy years of age.

W B Sheldon

Socially he is a member of the F. & A. M., Lodge No. 166, Poughkeepsie. He has ever been true to the duties devolving upon him, both in public and private life, and is one of the most public-spirited citizens of Dutchess county.

Joseph Doughty, father of Mrs. Wilson B. Sheldon, was born in the town of Beekman, Dutchess county, and was there married to Elizabeth Brill, by whom he had four children, viz.: Hannah Maria (Mrs. Sheldon); Sophia, who married a brother of our subject; Phœbe Jane, wife of James S. Hopkins; and Thomas J. (deceased), who married Mary Tompkins, and had one daughter. The father of this family, who was a lifelong farmer, died in 1833, the mother in 1859.

SAMUEL H. BROWN, M. D., an eminent physician of Dutchess county, is successfully engaged in practice at Madalin. He was born August 4, 1860, in New York City, and he belongs to a family of French Huguenots, who early came to this country to escape religious persecution. His grandfather, Samuel Brown, was born in New Canaan, Conn., in 1786, and was the son of Abram Brown, a native of the same place. On reaching man's estate the former was united in marriage with Abigail Young, also of French origin, and a descendant of one of the Revolutionary heroes. Five children were born to this worthy couple, namely: William, Charles, Jeannette, Samuel H. and Sylvester. All his life the grandfather engaged in agricultural pursuits, and he passed away in October, 1867.

Samuel H. Brown, Sr., the father of our subject, was born at Greenwich, Conn., June 24, 1824, and when a young man began the study of medicine in the University of Harvard, where he was graduated with the class of 1850. He immediately began the practice of his profession in New York City, but on the breaking out of the Civil war was commissioned surgeon of the 174th Metropolitan Regiment, and became one of Gen. Banks' staff officers. While at the siege of Port Hudson, he contracted typhoid fever, which terminated his life, August 1, 1863, he thus laying down his life on the altar of his country. His first vote was cast for the Whig party, but on its organization he joined the Republican ranks, and ever afterward fought under its banner. He had married Miss Sarah Tripp, a native of Westchester county, N. Y., and a daughter of Benjamin Tripp, who was of Holland descent and a farmer by occupation. Her death occurred August 13, 1891.

Our subject spent his boyhood days in New York City until thirteen years of age, when he entered Oakhill Seminary, where he pursued his studies for four years, after which he became a student in St. Stephens College, Annandale, Dutchess county, and graduated with the class of 1881, receiving the degree of A. B. He next took a two-years' course at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York City. On May 9, 1883, the Doctor was united in marriage with Catherine Tanner, a daughter of Henry and Almena (Staats) Tanner, farming people of the town of Red Hook, where her birth occurred. Her paternal grandfather, Job Tanner, was a native of Columbia county, N. Y., and probably of German descent, while her maternal grandfather, Henry Staats, who was of Holland extraction, was born in the town of Red Hook, Dutchess county, and in religious belief his family were Lutherans. On May 17, 1883, only a few days after their marriage, Dr. Brown sailed with his bride for Europe, where he took a two-years' course at Wurzburg, Bavaria, receiving the degree of M. D. on the 11th of June, 1885. Returning to America, he located at Madalin, Dutchess county, where he has since engaged in practice. His thorough knowledge of medicine and skill in surgery have won him the confidence of the people to such an extent that he has secured a large and lucrative patronage. He is a prominent citizen, a member of the Masonic fraternity, and is a Democrat.

Mrs. Brown is an only child. Her father, Henry Tanner, was born in the town of Gallatin, Columbia Co., N. Y., in 1821, and for some time was a leading merchant of Rhinebeck, Dutchess county. He was called from this life March 8, 1872, but his wife is still living.

HOMER WALLER (deceased) was one of the representative agriculturists of the town of Dover, Dutchess county. He was a man of excellent Christian character and of a blameless life, and thoroughly enjoyed the esteem and respect of the community in which he resided. He was a native of Connecticut, born at Gaylordsville, in the town of New Milford, Litchfield county, in 1823, and there attended the public schools, finishing his education at the Amenia Seminary. His training in farm work was under the instruction of his father upon the old homestead. In later life he devoted his time and attention to that occupation. He always took quite an active interest in politics, and held a number of minor township offices, including that of justice of the peace, in which capacity he served for some time.

On the paternal side Mr. Waller traced his lineage in an unbroken line to Samuel Waller, who was born in England in 1702, and was a member of a large family, all of whom were educated and reared in the northern part of that country. Three of these children, of whom Samuel was one, emigrated to America after they had reached their majority. He located in the town of Kent, Conn., which at that time was one of the colonies of England, and from King George III obtained a grant of land three miles long at Kent, running from Warren Pond to Spectacle Pond. There he founded the present Waller family in America, and died at that place in 1797. He married a Miss Ransom, and to them was born a large family of children.

One of these, Peter Waller, grandfather of Homer Waller, Jr., was born at Kent Hollow, in the town of Kent, Litchfield Co., Conn., and received his education in that locality. He followed the occupation of farming, operating the original tract belonging to his father, which descended to him. Most of his life was passed upon that place, he dying at Gaylordsville, at the age of eighty-four years. He was united in marriage with Miss Hannah Baldwin, of Gaylordsville, Conn., and to them were born ten children, namely: Pinina (1) died in infancy; Pinina (2) married John Elliott; Samuel married Sally Taylor; Homer was the father of our subject; Rebecca remained single; Almeda became the wife of Solomon Brown; Love died in infancy; Celestia wedded Theodore Buck; Betsy married David Sterling, and Electa died while young.

The birth of Homer Waller, Sr., occurred on the 29th of March, 1781, at the old homestead in Kent Hollow, and he attended the schools of the neighborhood. He succeeded to the home farm, which he conducted many years; was prosperous as a farmer, and a devout member of the Methodist Church. In 1811 he married Miss Martha Merwin, and the wedding of this couple was one of the great society events of the time, especially in the town of New Milford, Conn., where it was celebrated. All the traveling in those days was by carriage or horseback, and most of the guests came the latter way, with their wives or intended wives back of them. The trousseau, which was considered quite expensive for those days, was purchased in New York, and sent to New Milford by saddle-bags. The wedding journey was made on horseback, from New Milford to Kent, the bride riding behind her husband on what was called a pillion. Forty couples accompanied the pair to their destination. This saddle and wedding outfit are still in the possession of the family, together with a great many other relics of Colonial days. Upon the old homestead at Kent two children were born to this worthy couple: Merwin and Elizabeth M. The former was born January 15, 1813. They removed in 1819 to Gaylordsville, town of New Milford, Litchfield Co., and Homer was born there. Merwin was educated in the public schools at home, and at the "Friends Boarding School" in the town of Washington, Dutchess Co., N. Y. Smith M., his youngest son, now owns and occupies the handsome old Waller home, he being of the fourth generation. He was married April 8, 1896, to Miss Julia S. Coleman, of Dover, N. Y. The Waller family, from the time their ancestor settled in Kent unto the present, have been a respected and prominent family. The old homestead at Kent Hollow is still owned by members of the family, their title still being from the King of England.

Merwin Waller was a prominent farmer of New Milford township, Litchfield Co., Conn. On October 15, 1845, he was united in marriage with Miss Julia Ann Mitchell, by whom he had one son, Edwin M., born July 24, 1848. After the death of his first wife Merwin Waller was married, December 31, 1850, to Miss Julia Morehouse, and they had one son, Smith M., born April 6, 1853. Elizabeth M. Waller, the sister of our subject, was born July 24, 1816, and on January 2, 1856, she became the wife of John Fry, son of William Fry. After his death she married Cornwall Hoag, of Dover, Dutchess county. She had no children.

On January 31, 1850, Homer Waller married Miss Elizabeth Fry, and they became the parents of three children: George S., born May 4, 1851; Martha D., born March 25, 1853, and died December 9, 1875; and William H., born July 21, 1855. The elder son, George

S. Waller, was married in 1879 to Miss Mary A. Beeman, daughter of Edwin Beeman, of New Preston, Conn., and three children bless their union: Martha U., born in 1881; Homer, born in 1884; and Everett, born in 1891. With his family George S. Waller resides in Minneapolis, Minn., where he is engaged in the commission business.

Christopher Fry, the grandfather of Mrs. Homer Waller, was a native of New Bedford, Mass., where he obtained his education, and was one of the heroes of the Revolutionary war. For his services in that struggle he ever afterward received a pension. He married Miss Elizabeth Allen, by whom he had three children: John, Millicent and William, the last named being the father of Mrs. Waller. He was born in Dover, Dutchess Co., N. Y., April 14, 1800, and with his father he learned the trade of a tanner, after which he conducted a plant in his native town for a number of years. He married Miss Deborah Hoag, a daughter of Isaac and Mary Hoag, of Quaker Hill, Dutchess county. Her father lived to the extreme old age of one hundred years, and was ever a very prominent member of the Society of Friends. To William Fry and his wife were born seven children: Harriet and Mary, who never married; John, who wedded Elizabeth M. Waller; Cordelia, who remained single; James, who married Elizabeth Dutcher; Elizabeth, the widow of our subject; and Albert, who first married Sarah Edmonds, and after her death wedded Julia Thompson.

JOSHUA BENSON (deceased), who was so well known throughout Dutchess county, was numbered among the leading and representative agriculturists of the town of Amenia. His father, John Benson, was born in Rhode Island, and there attended the common schools during his boyhood and youth. When quite a young man he accompanied his brother to Dutchess county, N. Y., and they took up land in the town of Amenia, where they successfully engaged in farming. That property is still in the possession of the family. The father of our subject took an active interest in the affairs of his country, and served as a soldier in the war of 1812. He married Miss Rachel Darling, of Rhode Island, and to them were born seven children: Samuel, Joshua, Peltiah, John, Polly, Philadelphia and Abigail. Upon the old homestead in the town of Amenia our subject was born in 1786. When he had reached a sufficient age he entered the public schools of the locality, and there acquired a practical education. He early became familiar with the duties that fall to the lot of an agriculturist, and continued to operate the old home farm throughout life. The place was one of the most noticeable in the township for the air of thrift and comfort that surrounded it, and the evidence of enterprise, taste and skill. Mr. Benson married Miss Amanda Hopkins, daughter of Prince and Jemima Hopkins, of Warren, Litchfield Co., Conn., where her father followed merchandising. Fourteen children were born of this union, as follows: Lodema married Milton Pray; Henry married Annis Ferris; George died in childhood; Vanness married Frances Tompkins; Amanda married Charles Darling; Jeannette married William Dutcher; Zadie is next in order of birth; Dewitt married Susan Bartlett; Rachel died unmarried; Edwin married Emily Ensign; Sarah married Henry Walker; Maria married Henry Morgan; Theresa married Robert Ryan; and Egbert married Sarah Hopkins.

Mr. Benson always took a deep interest in political affairs, and steadfastly adhered to the principles formulated by the Whig party, although not a seeker after official position. He was one of the leaders of his party in the community where he so long made his home, and his opinions were invariably held in respect. He lived to the advanced age of ninety-four years, and when called to the rest and reward of the higher world his best monument was found in the love and esteem of the community in which he had lived for so many years.

DR. FRANCIS M. ROBINSON, a leading dentist of Pawling, N. Y., is one of Dutchess county's most enterprising sons. Born in Matteawan, October 9, 1857, he was educated in the schools near his home, and his success reflects credit upon the section which afforded him his opportunities, as well as upon himself.

His family is of English and French descent, and his great-grandfather was one of the early settlers of the town of Kent, Putnam Co., N. Y. His grandfather, Adonigee Robinson, a man of fine native abilities, was born there and became one of the prominent men of his locality. He was a colonel in the State Militia when they used to train at Boyd's Corners, and his business interests were varied and extensive, as in his early years he carried on a foundry, store and mill at Farmers Mills or Milltown, and later was engaged in business at Matteawan. In politics he was a Democrat, and in religious faith he was an active and influential member of the Baptist Church. His death occurred in 1892, but his wife, whose maiden name was Sophia Russell, is still living in her eighty-seventh year. They had ten children—Keziah, Jane, Peter A., Julia, Levi, Hattie, Coleman, Nathan, Ophelia and Emma, of whom all but two are living.

Peter A. Robinson, our subject's father, was born at the old home in Putnam county, in 1834, and in early manhood engaged in business at Wappingers Falls, and later was interested in broom-making for a short time. He became blind when about twenty-four years old, and, as a consequence of this sad hardship, his life has been somewhat secluded. Although he has been totally blind for nearly forty years, he goes about freely, his memory and sense of touch having become marvelously developed. He married Miss Matilda Badeau, daughter of Isaac and Elizabeth Badeau, who were natives of Putnam county, but have resided in Matteawan since 1845. The Badeau family is noted for energy and mental ability, and has held a high position in this section. General Adam Badeau, well-known as a writer, as well as in military affairs, especially in connection with Grant's Memoirs, is a near relative of Mrs. Robinson. The Doctor was second in a family of five children. Of the others William Badeau is a dentist in Middletown, N. Y.; Lenora died at the age of two years; Lizzie Badeau is at home; and Charles Coleman is a recent graduate from the Pennsylvania College of Dental Surgery.

Dr. Robinson finished his academic course in the schools of Fishkill Landing at about sixteen years of age, and then clerked for a year with C. F. Brett, and for three years with S. G. & J. F. Smith. In 1876 he spent a short time in a dry-goods house in Fulton street, Brooklyn, N. Y., and then began the study of dentistry with Dr. Barlow, of Fishkill Landing, now of Poughkeepsie. After one year with him, and one year with Dr. Cornell in Brooklyn, he began the practice of his profession at Patterson, N. Y., where he remained seven years. During this time a law was passed requiring all practicing dentists to register before the county clerk. In 1885 he removed to Pawling, and has since been actively engaged there in his chosen calling. He has an office in Amenia also, where he spends Monday and Thursday of each week to accommodate his numerous patrons in that vicinity.

In 1876 the Doctor married Miss Henrietta Dodge, daughter of Thomas Dodge, a well-known citizen of East Fishkill. Three children were born of this union: Edwin Dodge, Harry Sanford and Francis Adams. Although a Republican in principle, the Doctor is not active in politics. He is interested in local improvements, and is always ready to take part in any movement tending to progress. Like many professional men, he finds recreation in different forms of work, and for ten years has given much attention to the breeding of Black Langshans. His strain have become famous throughout the United States, England and Canada. The Doctor exhibits his birds annually at the Madison Square Garden, New York City, where they have made a world-wide reputation, winning the grand special prize for best and finest display three years in succession.

JEREMIAH SHELDON (deceased) was a leading agriculturist of the town of Beekman, and as a valued citizen, a kind father, and an affectionate husband, his memory should be cherished and perpetuated by all. He was born in the town of Dover, Dutchess county, December 29, 1812, and was a son of Luther and Mary (Butts) Sheldon. In his native township he spent his boyhood days, and attended the district schools. While yet a young man he became a cattle dealer, driving his stock to New York City, and later followed that business there. In 1849 he returned to Dutchess county, purchasing the farm now occupied by his daughter, Mrs. A. B. ANDREWS, and there continued to make his home up to his death, which occurred May 19, 1882.

On January 11, 1843, in the town of Beekman, Mr. Sheldon married Miss Sophia M. Doughty, daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth Doughty, and of their union were born three children: Amelia B., wife of Kromaline Andrews; Mary J.; and William H., who was engaged in the coal and lumber business at Poughkeepsie, but is now deceased. The mother was called to her final rest February 1, 1886. Mr. Sheldon took an active interest in all affairs tending to the improvement of his town and county, and for several terms he served as supervisor of the town of Beekman. In early life his political support was given to the Whig party, and, on its dissolution, he became a Republican.

Kromaline Andrews is a native of the town of Unionvale, Dutchess county, and is the son of Philip Schuyler Andrews, who is now living at Shaffers Mills, town of Lagrange, Dutchess county. The son attended the district schools near his home in Unionvale, and later was a student in Carey's school in Poughkeepsie, after which he clerked in the dry-goods store of George Van Kleeck in that city for awhile. Returning to the town of Unionvale he operated his father's farm, and while thus engaged was married October 22, 1879, to Miss Amelia B. Sheldon. After the death of her father, they removed to the old Sheldon farm, where they have since resided and are numbered among the highly respected people of the community. In politics Mr. Andrews is a Republican. Mary J. Sheldon, a single lady, and sister of Mrs. A. B. Andrews, makes her home with Mr. and Mrs. Andrews.

CHARLES H. GALLUP, of the firm of C. H. Gallup & Co., which is in the front rank along with the leading art firms of the State, and which in the city of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, is not excelled in the class of work executed, has descended from one of the intelligent and educated families of New York State.

The first representative of the family in America was John Gallup, who came in 1630 from England in the pilgrim ship "Mary and John," and located near Stonington, Conn. One of his sons founded Gallupsville, Schoharie Co., N. Y. Samuel Gallup was the great-great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch, and the latter's grandfather was Nathan Gallup, a millwright by trade, who resided in Schoharie county. Of Nathan's children, Henry Gallup, A. M., the father of Charles H., of whom we especially write, was born in 1811. He was educated at Williams College, from which he was graduated and received the degree of A. M. Subsequently he spent three years at Berlin University, Berlin, and traveled through Europe, crossing the Alps on foot with a friend, and in so doing acquired the language of that section of the continent.

For years Prof. Gallup was principal of the Academy at Monticello, N. Y., as well as of a number of other institutions of learning, and later was principal of New Paltz Academy in Dutchess county for three years. In 1866, retiring from active business, he came to Poughkeepsie, where he died in 1887. In 1849 he had married Julia Stone, who is now living with her daughter in Poughkeepsie. Their children are: Charles H., Ella (Mrs. J. M. Godinez) and Albert C.

Charles H. Gallup was born in the Academy at Monticello, N. Y., on November 17, 1852. He was educated in the schools of which his father was principal, then served an apprenticeship in a machine shop at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., which occupation he followed some ten or more years. In 1879 he went to Cuba, where for five years he was in charge of a large sugar plantation near the center of the island. In 1884 he returned to Poughkeepsie to visit his parents, and was persuaded by his mother to remain. In the following year he purchased the Seeley photograph gallery, which business was established in 1857, and carried on by S. L. Walker, one of the pioneers in the art of photography. Mr. Walker had been a pupil of and was aided by Prof. S. F. B. Morse, who had brought with him from France the ideas of Daguerre, and imparted them to Walker, who introduced the daguerrotype process in the city of Poughkeepsie. Our subject seemed well adapted to the business which he entered upon with his intelligence and his usual energy and snap, and the result is the building up of a first-class art gallery complete in all appointments, where a successful business is being carried on. He and his partner are progressive men, affable and courteous, and have kept abreast of the times. At their art emporium is displayed good work; they employ a number of specialists, and all the work there executed is of the highest order, first-class in every respect. A man of tact, Mr. Gallup has seen what the people want, and has met that want. He has spared no pains in the use of printers' ink, but advertised extensively, and is meeting the popular demand of a good quality of work at a low price. His ten-dollar life-size crayon work, and three-dollar cabinet pictures received the highest medal awarded at the Dutchess County Fair, for superior work. His motto is "Superior Work at Reasonable Prices." It remained for our subject to introduce the process of instantaneous photography into Poughkeepsie.

On September 20, 1893, Mr. Gallup was married to Edna M., a daughter of O. W. Eggleston, assistant general roadmaster of the N. Y. C. & H. R. railroad, now a resident of White Plains, N. Y. Mr. Gallup erected in 1895 one of the most tasty and convenient, as well as attractive, homes in the city, located on Balding avenue. He designed his own plans, and the building was erected entirely under his own supervision.

Many of Mr. Gallup's ancestors fought in the Indian wars, in the war of the Revolution, and in that of 1812, three bearing the rank of captain and two that of colonel. In the history of the family are given the names of over sixty Gallups who fought in the Revolution and in the war of 1812, besides of those who participated in the Indian wars of the colonies. They were rewarded with many grants of land for bravery, etc. Capt. John Gallup, in 1637, off Block Island, had an encounter with a band of Indians who had captured a sloop from Capt. John Oldham, which was the first naval engagement fought in this country. Capt. Gallup captured the Indians, and took them prisoners to Boston. They were of the Pequot tribe, and this was the opening of the celebrated bloody Pequot war of American history.

JOHAN TROWBRIDGE. No family in the city of Poughkeepsie is better known than that of which our subject is a member, and which has held a prominent place in the business community for over half a century, during that time establishing in financial circles an enviable reputation for judicious management, integrity and ability.

John Trowbridge was born in the town of Washington, Dutchess county, July 20, 1829, and traces his paternal ancestry to Thomas, of the sixth generation, who was born in Somersetshire, England, and was the first of the name to settle in America. From him the order of descent was as follows: William, born about 1634, in Connecticut; Samuel, born October 7, 1670; Samuel, born August 26, 1700; Stephen, born in Connecticut January 30, 1726; Stephen, born in Danbury, Conn., January 18, 1756; Stephen B., father of our subject, born in the town of Northeast, Dutchess Co., N. Y., March 19, 1799. The grandfather of our subject was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. [For a history of our subject's father see following sketch of N. C. Trowbridge.]

The subject of our sketch was six years of age when his parents removed from their farm in the town of Washington to Poughkeepsie, in which latter place he attended both the academy and the Poughkeepsie Collegiate School on College Hill. He was married on January 18, 1853, to Miss Eliza Robinson, who was born in the town of Fishkill, Dutchess county, the daughter of Duncan and Mary Robinson, the former of whom was a farmer by occupation. Three children were born of this union, viz.: (1) Mary R., married to John W. Pelton, now a resident of Poughkeepsie, formerly a member of the well-known firm of C. M. & G. P. Pelton, for fifty years manufacturers of carpets in Poughkeepsie. (2) Ella, the wife of S. C. Nightingale, a son of Rev. Crawford Nightingale, of the well-known family of that name in Providence, R. I.; he is head of the firm of S. C. Nightingale & Childs, of Boston, Mass., dealers in railroad and mill supplies. (3) George S., who died when two years of age. When a young man Mr. Trowbridge began in the mercantile business, having a general store on Main street, and for nearly forty years was engaged in that line, handling during that time nearly all kinds of mercantile goods. His establishment became one of the largest and most important in the county, and his reputation as a merchant was of the best. The business in which the Trowbridge family was prominent was founded and conducted as follows: (1) Nathan Conklin, Jr., & Co.; (2) Conklin, Bowne & Co.; (3) Bowne & Trowbridge; (4) Bowne, Trowbridge & Co.; (5) by retirement of Mr. Bowne the firm became Trowbridge & Wilkinson, which continued till 1861, when it became Trowbridge & Co., consisting of the brothers, N. Conklin and John Trowbridge. In 1887 John retired, and in 1888 N. Conklin also retired, and in his elegant home, having amassed a comfortable fortune, our subject is now living a quiet life, in the enjoyment of the results of his early labors.

Until the formation of the Republican party Mr. Trowbridge was a Whig, but since that time has been in sympathy with the latter party, although he has never taken an active part in politics, and has never consented to hold public office. He has, however, always been a loyal citizen, and a generous contributor to all enterprises having for their object the welfare of the city and county. Since 1853 he has been a member of the Masonic fraternity, in which he has held several of the higher offices. Both he and his wife are members of the Reformed Dutch Church, and are prominent members of society.

N CONKLIN TROWBRIDGE, who was one of the oldest and most prominent citizens of Poughkeepsie, and a brother of John Trowbridge (a sketch of whom appears above), was born in the town of Northeast, Dutchess county, July 20, 1821.

Stephen B. Trowbridge, the father of our subject, was also a native of Northeast, and was born March 19, 1799. He married Miss Eliza Conklin, whose birth took place August 29, 1802, in the same town in which her husband was born. She was a daughter of Nathan Conklin, who was a descendant of the East Hampton, L. I., family of that name, formerly spelled Conkling, which came at an early day to Northeast, Dutchess county. After their marriage our subject's parents located on the old farm in Northeast, living there, however, but a short time, when they moved to the town of Washington. Of their eight children the following record is given: N. Conklin is the subject of this sketch; Mary E. married William Wilkinson, a lawyer in Poughkeepsie; Nathan was druggist in Poughkeepsie, and died in early manhood; John is living at Poughkeepsie, retired from business; Phoebe E. married John G. Boyd, a business man of Poughkeepsie; Cornelia B. married Henry Seymour, of New York City; and Julia and Eliza reside at the old home in Poughkeepsie. The parents of our subject remained upon the farm in the town of Washington until 1834, when they removed to Poughkeepsie. Mr. Trowbridge becoming one of the firm of Conklin, Bowne & Co., with whom he continued in business for many years. He died March 25, 1884. Nathan and Mulford Conklin, of the above-mentioned firm, were two brothers who came from the town of Northeast in 1810, and established themselves in business in 1814, the firm name at first being Nathan Conklin, Jr., & Co. In 1835 they built their brick store house, which is still standing, and is one of the old landmarks of the city. They were very prominent men in their day, and Conklin street was named for them. They were the maternal uncles of our subject.

Stephen Trowbridge, grandfather of our subject, was born in Danbury, Conn., and became a farmer. He married Elizabeth Barnum, who was a connection of the well-known Barnum family of Connecticut, and six children were born to them. He enlisted May 12, 1775, as a private in Company 6, of the Artesian Corps, which was recruited mainly in Fairfield county, and took part in the battles of Hubbardston, Bennington, Saratoga and Fort George. While in the army he learned the saddle-making trade, and mended Gen. Washington's saddle.

N. Conklin Trowbridge, the subject of this sketch, was seven years old when his parents moved from the town of Northeast to a farm in the town of Washington, where he spent the following seven years. In 1835, at the age of fourteen years, he went to Poughkeepsie, where he attended school at College Hill for two years, after which he entered the general store of Nathan Conklin, Jr., & Co., as clerk. He steadily advanced in this business, finally becoming the proprietor and carrying on the establishment until 1888, or more than half a century, when he retired from the firm. Mr. Trowbridge died April 19, 1897.

JAMES LYNCH is one of the reliable and progressive young business men of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, where his birth occurred November 20, 1869.

His father, James Lynch, Sr., was a native of Ireland, and on coming to the United States when a small boy located at Poughkeepsie, there being employed by a Mr. Bissell, a sculptor, until 1878. Mr. Lynch then, in that year, established himself in the marble business, which he conducted with success up to his death, which occurred on August 25, 1891. He was a very quiet, conservative man, giving the strictest attention to his business, and well deserved the success which came to him. At Newark, N. J., he had married Miss Maria O'Mera, and they became the parents of five children: Catherine, Annie, James, Mary and Ellen.

Since the death of his father our subject has had complete charge of the business, and has displayed excellent ability in its management. He takes quite an active interest in civic societies in Poughkeepsie, belonging to the Knights of Pythias, the Order of Good Fellows, and to the Fire Department. He enjoys the esteem and confidence of all with whom he comes in contact, and no doubt a brilliant future awaits him.

GEORGE W. LUMB, senior member of the firm of George W. Lumb & Son, proprietors of one of the most important industries of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, was born in Yorkshire, England, September 16, 1837, and when about two years of age was brought to Poughkeepsie by his parents, Thomas and Elizabeth (Beaumont) Lumb, natives of the same country. He is the eldest in their family of three children, the others being Levi and Elizabeth, the latter of whom died in infancy. On his arrival in Poughkeepsie in 1839, the father secured employment in the carpet factory of C. M. & G. P. Pelton, but later opened a grocery store, which he conducted until about two years before his death. He held membership with the Congregational Church, and in politics was first a Whig, later a Republican.

Our subject spent his boyhood days in Poughkeepsie, attending Mrs. Wheeler's school and the grammar schools, after which he worked in the factory where his father was employed. Later he entered the sash and blind factory of William E. Beardsley, where he learned his trade, and there remained eleven years. For three years thereafter he was employed as foreman in the John E. Price Sash and Blind Factory, after which he entered the service of the New York Central Railroad Co., as fireman on an engine, first running between Poughkeepsie and Albany, afterward between Albany and New York. In 1863 he entered the United States navy, was stationed on the Grand Gulf, making three trips to Aspinwall, and was in the blockading squadron at Galveston. The vessel later acted as flag ship at New Orleans, in which city our subject received an honorable discharge.

On his return north, Mr. Lumb again entered the employ of the Railroad Co., but at the end of a year he and his brother Levi started a sash and blind factory in Poughkeepsie, at the corner of Dutchess avenue and Water street, which for two years was operated by horse power. They then removed to the present factory of our subject, and admitted William T. Swart as a member of the firm, it being known as Swart, Lumb &

Brother. This partnership was continued until 1885, Mr. Lumb in that year buying out his brother's interest, and his son Charles L. becoming a member of the firm, which assumed the name of Swart, Lumb & Son. Two years later, however, Mr. Swart sold out, and the name was changed to George W. Lumb & Son. They do an extensive business, and well deserve the liberal patronage which is accorded them. In 1892 Mr. Lumb purchased the old Vassar House property, where he erected a four-story brick building for Mrs. Brazier's knitting mill, which was then conducted by himself, his son, C. W. H. Arnold and Miles Hughes. Mr. Lumb is not now connected with this industry, and has rented the building. Our subject is connected with several of the leading industries of the city, being a stockholder in the new piano factory and the electric-light plant, and also owns about fifty-three houses and forty vacant lots in the city.

In Poughkeepsie George W. Lumb and Sarah W. Dean, a native of Taunton, Mass., were united in marriage, and to them have been born four children, namely: Charles L.; Jessie B., for whom her father has named a boat; George J., a graduate of both the high school and Eastman Business College; and Maud D. In his political principles Mr. Lumb is an unswerving Republican, devoted to the best interests of his party, yet has never sought or desired political preferment, having only served on the water board for one term. Socially he is a member of the F. & A. M., Lodge No. 266, and in religious faith he is a Congregationalist. The family now live at No. 16 Davis place, which residence our subject purchased of Mayor Harloe.

Charles L. Lumb, the eldest son of our subject, is a native of Poughkeepsie, where he secured his education, being a graduate of the high school, and in 1880 he received a diploma from Eastman Business College. After working in the factory of his father for five years he was admitted to partnership, and is now general manager of the business, doing all of the office work. He is also secretary of the Fallkill Knitting Co., and is a director of the Reimer Piano Factory. On October 2, 1889, in Poughkeepsie, he was united in marriage with Minnie E. Lovejoy, daughter of J. Fred Lovejoy, and a daughter graces their union, Ethel Dean, born July 11, 1893. Mr. Lumb is a stockholder in the Electric Light Co., in the Masonic Temple and other enterprises. It religious belief he is an Episcopalian, holding membership with Holy Comforter Church; socially he affiliates with the F. & A. M., Triune Lodge No. 782, with Poughkeepsie Chapter, Commandery and Council, the Mystic Shrine, and the Royal Arcanum, and is a prominent member of the Lincoln League Club. He is secretary and treasurer of the Poughkeepsie Branch of the New York Mutual Savings & Loan Association, also of the Mason Mutual Benefit Association, of Massachusetts, and is now president of the Poughkeepsie Horse Owners Association. A gentleman of fine address and thorough culture, he occupies a first place in society as well as in the commercial circles of Poughkeepsie. Since January, 1895, he has served as president of the water board, and since 1891 has been notary public.

C. M. Lusk

WILLIAM ADRIANCE, for over thirty years one of the most prominent and highly respected citizens of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, and a member of an old and much esteemed family of that locality, was born December 12, 1814, in what was then the village of Poughkeepsie.

Theodorus Adriance, his grandfather, was probably a native of Dutchess county, and was a successful farmer, owning a large tract of land near Stormville. He was one of the early members of the Hopewell Reformed Dutch Church, and was a leader in the various local movements of his day. He married Miss Hacheliah Swartout, and had six children, of whom we have mention of: Elizabeth, who married a Mr. Doughty; Caroline, who married a Mr. Wilson; Theodorus, Jr.; and Charles Platt, our subject's father.

Charles Platt Adriance was born in Hopewell October 12, 1790, and received his first instruction in the district schools there. When he was ten years old he went to Poughkeepsie, to the home of his sister, Mrs. Abram Storm, and he and John Adriance were apprentices together in the shop of Abram G. Storm, a silversmith, learning the mysteries of jewelry making, watch repairing, and all other branches of the trade. On beginning business for himself, he followed the trade for a short time in Poughkeepsie, but in 1816 he went to Richmond, Va., where he found a more profitable field for his efforts in that line. There he remained until August, 1832, when he returned to Poughkeepsie and bought a farm on what is now known as College Hill, comprising eighty acres of land, where he followed agriculture for more than thirty years. Although he never took an active part in politics, he was an interested observer of current events, and in early life was in principle a Henry Clay Whig, later a Republican. In all local movements he was a leading worker, especially in religious movements. He was a member of the First and Second Reformed Dutch Churches when formed, and was one of the organizers of the latter, and an elder until the time of his death. In 1864 he removed to the corner of Mill and Garden streets, Poughkeepsie, where he died November 25, 1874. On June 13, 1813, he was married to Miss Sarah Camp, a daughter of Aaron Camp, a well-known resident of Rhinebeck. Together they spent over sixty years of wedded life, and she survived him but a short time, dying August 22, 1877. Six children were born to them, as follows: William is our subject; Thomas Edward died February 18, 1832; Mary Frances (Mrs. John R. Weeks, of Newark, N. J.) died April 2, 1880; Elizabeth (Mrs. John B. Pudney, of Passaic, N. J.); Harriet Newell, born January 11, 1830, died February 20, 1832; and John Rice, born February 11, 1833, died December 30, 1843. Of these, Mrs. Elizabeth Pudney is now the only survivor.

William Adriance, our subject, received a good education in youth, attending the subscription schools of Richmond, Va., and later studying for some time at Amherst, Mass. He has been a great reader, and has kept well abreast of the times. On leaving school he became a clerk in his father's store, and after a time went to New York City, where he remained two years. In November 1835, he engaged in the jewelry business in Natchez, Miss., carrying same on successfully for seven years. In May, 1843, he went to St. Louis, and opened a dry-goods store, making a success of the venture. In 1864 he disposed of it, and in May of that year moved to Poughkeepsie, where he has since lived a retired life. On July 26, 1837, Mr. Adriance was married to Miss Mary Elizabeth Harrington, whose father was a prominent resident of New York. Nine children were born of this union, as follows: Cornelia Hyde, born May 30, 1838, died December 14, 1847; James Edward, born June 1, 1840, died January 6, 1849; Charles Henry, born October 8, 1842, died in March, 1869; and William Nevins, born July 26, 1848, died July 19, 1849. Of the others, Edward Cornelius, born June 23, 1850, is a dry-goods merchant in Brooklyn; Samuel Winchester, January 9, 1853, is a Congregational minister at Winchester, Mass.; Mary Elizabeth, born December 2, 1855, married Elias G. Minard; and the youngest, John Rice, born February 13, 1858, died March 6, 1858. The mother of this family died August 2, 1860, and September 17, 1862, Mr. Adriance married Miss Abbie Lovell Bond, of Norwich, Conn., daughter of Rev. Dr. Alvan Bond. Mr. Adriance died of heart disease January 2, 1897, after three days' illness.

Politically, our subject was in early years an Old-line Whig, but in 1856 he espoused the principles of the Republican party, to which he afterward adhered. He was no political "wire-puller," but always gave his influence to secure the election of good men for positions of trust. He was a leading member of the Presbyterian Church of Poughkeepsie (Rev. Dr. Wheeler, pastor), and was a strong supporter of many important movements for the benefit of the community.

JAMES M. HADDEN, president of the Poughkeepsie Gas Company, and one of the leading citizens of that enterprising city, to which he came twenty years ago as an assistant engineer, is descended from a sturdy, industrious, intelligent ancestry to which his own career does credit.

The first of the family in this country, of whom there is any knowledge, was Ephraim Hadden, who died at Woodbridge, N. J., January 15, 1725. One of his children, and the one from whom James H. descended, was Thomas Hadden (1) a carpenter and farmer by occupation. He was appointed many times to attend and represent Woodbridge at the Quarterly Meetings of the Quakers held at Shrewsbury; also as a member of various boards, being the medium by which all disputes were settled. His second wife was an Episcopalian, and for this marriage he was disowned by the Quakers. When the Episcopal Church of Woodbridge received its charter from George III in 1769, Thomas Hadden was named as one of the vestrymen. He served as overseer of the poor, 1733-36; as a surveyor of highways, 1736-39; again as overseer of the poor in 1742-1755, and 1770. He was married three times, having issue only by the first marriage to Margaret Fitz-Randolph in 1727, one of whom, Thomas (2), was the great-grandfather of James M. He was born at the old homestead in Woodbridge in 1736, of which upon reaching his majority he became the possessor; married in 1758 Annabel Crowell. He was by occupation a carpenter, farmer and millwright. In 1755 he was captain of the first regiment of Middlesex county militia under Col. Nathaniel Heard; became first major of the regiment, and in 1778 lieutenant-colonel. The militia of New Jersey performed good service at Trenton, Princeton, Germantown and Monmouth, in all of which it is probable the men of Monmouth took part. Thomas Hadden (2) died in 1788 while in commission, and his wife in 1821. Of their children, Nathaniel Hadden, the grandfather of our subject, was born in Woodbridge, N. J., January 8, 1765, and became a prominent ship-builder and lumber dealer. He was a quiet man, of upright life and strong religious convictions, and for many years was an elder in the Presbyterian Church, his honorable and consistent life winning for him the esteem of the entire community. He was three times married: first time, in 1788, to Mahala Martin, to which union three children were born: (1) Annabel, born October 9, 1789, died August 5, 1872, was married three times, first to John Hampton, second to William Ford, and last to Abram Webb; (2) Nancy, born August 15, 1798, died January 10, 1878, married Smith Martin; and (3) Ephraim, born September 28, 1806, died January 12, 1842. The mother of this family, born May 20, 1767, died Nov. 19, 1807, and for his second wife, August 13, 1808, he wedded Sarah Marsh Brown, born March 6, 1776; of this union came Samuel Brown, our subject's father, born June 29, 1809. Sarah Marsh Brown Hadden died on November 23, 1814, and on July 13, 1819, Mr. Hadden was married to Mary Halsey Marsh, born March 26, 1769, and died December 6, 1828.

Samuel Brown Hadden remained at his birthplace, Rahway, N. J., until 1845, and during this time was engaged in ship building with his father. He purchased a farm of 100 acres in the outskirts of Elizabeth, N. J., where the suburban town of Linden now stands, and by subsequent additions became the owner of 200 acres there. He was a practical, thorough going farmer, unusually successful in business and one of the leading citizens of the locality. Although his manner was quiet and retiring he possessed a strong character, and was a man of firm purpose. On May, 12, 1833, he was married to Miss Phœbe Woodruff Winans, born February 20, 1814, and of their nine children seven lived to maturity, of whom James M. Hadden is the youngest. The mother of the latter died February 16, 1882, and the father on May 28, 1892.

James M. Hadden, the subject proper of this review, received his early education at Elizabeth, N. J., where he attended a private school conducted by John Young. At the age of seventeen he left school, but he has ever taken a deep interest in literature and science, and by reading has acquired a fund of information. His first employment was as a clerk for Jeremiah Lambert in the Greenwich block, New York City; but at the end of two years he returned home on account of ill health. After a short vacation he became bookkeeper for the Seymour Manufacturing Company, at Elizabeth, N. J., remaining with them seven years. On April 13, 1875, he went to Poughkeepsie as assistant engineer for George W. Harris (a relative by marriage) in the Citizens Gas Company, and worked in that capacity for two years, when he became chief engineer. On the consolidation of the business with that of the Poughkeepsie Gas Company in December, 1887, he was made superintendent of the works, and in 1891 was elected president of the company, a position which he has filled with distinguished ability.

On April 30, 1879, Mr. Hadden was married to Miss Mary McAdam Hay, who was born July 8, 1852, in Ayrshire, Scotland—about nine miles from the home of Robert Burns. She is a daughter of William and Elizabeth (McKinley) Hay, and granddaughter of Mary (Anderson) McKinley, who was an acquaintance of the poet and familiar with many of the circumstances which inspired his writings. A great-uncle of Mrs. Hadden was the subject of the poem. A great-great-uncle was the inventor of the MacAdam pavement, for which valuable service he was titled by the English government. Mrs. Hadden is, through her mother, a niece of William McKinley, of Elizabeth, N. J., and a distant relative of President McKinley. Two daughters and one son gladden the home of our subject: Elizabeth G., Helen, and William McKinley Hay.

Mr. Hadden and his wife are members of the First Reformed Church, in which he is a leading official. He is a Mason, a member of Triune Lodge No. 782. In local matters he lends his assistance to all worthy measures and movements. He is not a politician in the strict sense, but he is a strong supporter of the Republican party.

FRANK LATSON, D. D. S., a leading dentist of Rhinebeck, Dutchess county, was born in that township, August 26, 1853, his family having been residents of that locality for four generations.

Dr. Latson's ancestors were French Huguenots, who were among the early settlers of this region, and his grandfather, Peter Latson, a native of Rhinebeck, was a prosperous carpenter there. He married Betsey Hannaburgh, and had nine children: Henry; William, a dentist in New York; James, a carpenter; Regina, who married Stephen H. Powers, of Brooklyn; Margaret, the wife of Philip Van-Steenburgh, of Red Hook; Rachel; Amanda; Maria; and Matilda.

Henry Latson, our subject's father, was born in the town of Rhinebeck in 1814, and, after learning the carpenter's trade, engaged in the business of contracting and building, which he carried on successfully for about fifty years. He was a self-educated man, possessed great natural ability, at the same time displaying marked originality of thought and keen analytical powers. He was his own architect, and the many structures designed and erected by him give evidence of fine artistic taste. His business was extensive, four-fifths of the buildings constructed in Rhinebeck and vicinity, during his active life, being his work. The beautiful interior of the M. E. church was designed by him, and was but one proof of his devotion to the welfare of that society, of which he was a member and an official for many years. He was not active in politics, although he was an ardent Republican in principle, and frequently served as trustee of the village. He married Maria Teal, daughter of Peter W. Teal, a well-known resident of the town of Stanford, and had three children, of whom our subject was the youngest. John is a physician, and Norman L. died at the age of twenty-nine years. The father died May 19, 1885; the mother, now at the age of seventy-eight, resides with our subject.

Dr. Latson was educated at De Garmo Classical Institute, and later took a course in the New York College of Pharmacy. In 1878 he entered the New York College of Dentistry, from which he was graduated in 1880. He located in his native place, where he has built up an extensive practice, and ranks among the most successful men of the town. He was married in 1886 to Miss Bertha Bradley, of New York City, daughter of Perry Bradley, and a descendant of one of the old families of Kinderhook. They have two children: Lillian Kirkland and Frank Waldo. Politically, the Doctor is a Republican, but he is not a party worker. He is, however, greatly interested in local improvements, and is a member of the village board of trustees and the local fire department.

BENJAMIN MALTBY FOWLER, a prominent attorney of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, was born at Durham, Conn., April 27, 1854. He comes of pure New England stock.

William Fowler, of whom he is a direct lineal descendant, arrived at Boston from England in 1637, with Rev. John Davenport. He was one of the prominent founders and officials of the New Haven Colony, which was afterward annexed to and became a part of Connecticut. Many of the early ancestors of Mr. Fowler (the subject of this sketch), took an important and conspicuous part in public affairs in the early days of the colonies; one of the most prominent among them being John Read, who was Queen's attorney for the Colony of Connecticut in 1712, and later attorney-general of Massachusetts for several years, and also a member of the Governor and Council. Robert Treat Paine, one of the Signers of the Declaration of Independence, was a member of the family from which he also traces descent.

Jonathan C. Fowler, his grandfather, was a highly-respected resident of Northford, Conn. He married Eliza Maltby, a descendant of a large and influential family of that name in Connecticut.

Dr. Benjamin M. Fowler, our subject's father, was born at Northford, Conn., in 1821. After practicing his profession for awhile at Durham, Conn., he in 1856 moved to Poughkeepsie, where he died two years later (September 8, 1858) full of promise and greatly beloved and respected by a large circle of acquaintances, which he had formed in the short time that he resided there. On September 11, 1850, he married Mary Payne, whose ancestors were among the early settlers of America. Three children came of this marriage: William S., born May 31, 1852, died February 7, 1871; Benjamin M., our subject; and Harriet J., born March 16, 1856, married Julius Maltby, of Waterbury, Conn. Thomas Payne, the father of Mary Payne, was a leading resident of Amenia. Dr. John C. Payne, her brother, has been for many years a leading physician in Poughkeepsie. Although the Paynes early settled in Amenia, Dutchess county, yet they also came from New England. Thomas Payne (or Paine, as the name was then spelled), the first one of that branch of the family to arrive in America, landed at Plymouth in 1621, having emigrated from the County of Kent, England. Most of his descendants settled in Connecticut.

Thomas Payne, grandfather of our subject, married Sarah Bartlett. The Bartletts were a distinguished family of Redding, Conn., but many members of which settled in Amenia. Daniel C. Bartlett, the father of Sarah Bartlett, was a valiant soldier of the Revolutionary war; her grandfather, Rev. Nathaniel Bartlett, second pastor of the Congregational Church in Redding, Conn., served as such for fifty-seven years—the longest pastorate, it is said, known to the New England Churches. He was an ardent supporter of the Revolutionary cause, as appears from the local histories of Redding, Conn.

Benjamin M. Fowler has lived in Poughkeepsie since boyhood. After graduating at the high school there, he took a special course at Riverview Military Academy, and shortly afterward began the study of law with Thompson & Weeks, with which firm, and its successor, Thompson, Weeks & Lown, he spent most of his clerkship, although for a time he was with Anthony & Losey and Robert E. Taylor. He was admitted to the bar May 13, 1875. While studying law Mr. Fowler also took up the study of shorthand. As he was the pioneer stenographer in Dutchess county his services were in constant demand in the various courts in that locality, and he was frequently called upon to report speeches and lectures of various sorts, as well. He was official stenographer of the Dutchess County Court, Surrogate's Court and State Board of Assessors, for a number of years. Many important cases were reported by him during this time. His experience in the surrogate's court and his connection with Thompson & Weeks, who were largely employed in the settlement of estates, gave him unusual opportunities for acquiring a knowledge of the procedure in that line of legal business.

In 1889 he gave up the practice of stenography to give attention to the settlement of the late John Guy Vassar's estate; he having been appointed by Mr. Vassar an executor of his will. As the estate was an unusually large one, and was the subject of considerable litigation, it attracted much public attention. Notwithstanding the litigation was carried through the various courts, including the court of appeals, the estate was finally settled and distributed within three years, a remarkable record, which reflected great credit on Mr. Fowler and his associates. In 1891 he was appointed one of the administrators of the estate of the late Hon. Homer A. Nelson, and since 1888 he has been secretary and assistant treasurer of Vassar Brothers' Hospital. While he has never sought or held public office, the fact that these and other large interests have been committed to his care, indicates the esteem and confidence which his energetic and conscientious discharge of duty has won for him.

On December 15, 1881, at Jersey City, N. J., Mr. Fowler married Miss Ada M. Douglas, daughter of the late M. S. Douglas, a New York merchant. Of this union three children were born: Douglas P., August 11, 1883; Maltby S., July 18, 1886; and Benjamin M., Jr., September 1, 1890.

DR. W. E. ACKERT, a well-known veterinary surgeon in the town of Rhinebeck, Dutchess county, and an agriculturist of prominence, was born in that town October 5, 1840.

Like so many of the substantial and prosperous citizens of this country, his family was of German origin, the first of the Americans here coming from the Fatherland at an early date. The grandfather of our subject, John I. Ackert, born about 1784, in the town of Rhinebeck, was a leading farmer in his day; his son William, our subject's father, also a native of Rhinebeck, was born in 1809, and married Maria Pultz, of the same town, born in 1812, a descendant of an old Holland family. In politics Mr. Ackert was a Republican; and in religious faith was a devout and consistent adherent of the Lutheran Church, as is also his wife. They were the parents of four children: John H., a farmer of Rhinebeck, now deceased; Virgil A., a farmer near the old home; Sarah A., who married Egbert G. Traver, also a farmer of that vicinity; and W. E., the subject of this review. The mother is still living and makes her home with her daughter, Mrs. Traver.

Reared as a farmer's boy, the Doctor enjoyed the educational opportunities afforded by the public schools, and his natural abilities have enabled him to improve upon them by private reading, until he is an unusually well-informed man. In his specialty, the treatment of that noble animal—the horse—he has made thorough study of all the related branches, and stands at the front of his profession. He owns a farm of fifty acres, of which his sons assume the active work, while he devotes his time to his extensive practice.

On November 24, 1864, Dr. Ackert was married to Miss Sarah Hanaburgh, a daughter of Peter H. and Eliza Ann (Montfort) Hanaburgh, of Rhinebeck, the former born in 1812, in the town of Rhinebeck, of German descent, and the latter born October 2, 1849. Four children have been born to the Doctor and his wife, as follows: Edward E., who died March 5, 1891; David H., Jennie and Raymond P., who are all at home. Mrs. Ackert has in her possession a quilt made from the dress of an old slave—Aunt Betta—in the Montfort family. "Aunt Betta" was at least one hundred years old at the time of her death, and had worked in the Montfort family when Mrs. Ackert's mother was a child. In politics the Doctor is a Republican, and takes an active interest in all movements of the day.

REV. DOCTOR CORNELIUS VINCENT MAHONY, pastor of the Catholic Church at Wappingers Falls, Dutchess county, is a native of New York City, where his birth took place December 1, 1851, and he is a son of Cornelius and Anna O'Connell Mahony, both natives of County Cork, Ireland, the former born on January 18, 1818. After their marriage they emigrated to the New World, and in New York City the father engaged in mercantile pursuits for about thirty years. He then lived retired until his death in 1893. His wife had long preceded him to the other world, dying in 1869. In their family were two children:

Michael Joseph, who was born in 1849, and Cornelius Vincent, subject of this sketch.

Doctor Mahony spent his boyhood days in New York City, attending the public schools until eleven years of age, when he entered the Jesuit College, where he remained for seven years. After graduating there he became a student in the Troy Seminary, completing the theological course there at the age of twenty-one; but being too young for ordination he went to Rome, where he took the entire theological course, receiving the degree of D. D. He then traveled through Europe with Dr. McGlynn for three months, after which he returned to America, and was located for one year at St. Stephens, in New York City. During the following five years he was professor of mental philosophy and ethics in the Troy Seminary, which position he then resigned, and in 1884 came to Wappingers Falls, where he has since been located.

His force of character, talent and ability are phenomenal, and he possesses great power for good among his people. Father Mahony is himself a very intelligent and cultured man, and has done much toward instilling into the minds of his parish children a taste for literature.

EGBERT VAN WAGNER (deceased). The subject of this sketch was born July 21, 1821, in Pleasant Valley, Dutchess county, where he passed his youth, following farming. On May 31, 1848, he was united in marriage with Miss Cornelia B. Pulver, who was born in the town of Pine Plains August 3, 1826, a daughter of Andrus Pulver, a native of the same place. He married Miss Margaret Thomas, and the following children were born to them: Mary, who became the wife of Lewis D. Hedges, a merchant of Pine Plains (now deceased); Frances, who married Henry Myers, a farmer and speculator (now deceased); Cornelia B., our subject's widow; Elizabeth, and Nicholas, who died in infancy. Andrus Pulver was a farmer and hotel keeper. Both he and his wife are deceased.

Our subject and his wife, after their marriage, lived a few years on the farm in Pleasant Valley, and five years in Pine Plains. They then moved to Poughkeepsie, in 1856, and bought the farm on which Mrs. Van Wagner now resides. The following children were born to them: Henry, a farmer here, married to Miss Ruth Brown; Margaret, married to Eley R. Deyo, a merchant, who died August 4, 1887; Albertson, who died October 19, 1855, at the age of twelve years; Walter, who died March 7, 1880; and Elizabeth, who became the wife of John J. C. Howe, a farmer. Mr. Van Wagner was a Democrat, and held the office of commissioner of highways for several terms. He took an active part in politics. He was public-spirited, and took a deep interest in all matters pertaining to the town and its affairs. He donated the site of the present depot, and was postmaster of the Van Wagner station for about twenty years. His wife was a member of the Presbyterian Church.

John Van Wagner, the father of our subject, was a native of Pleasant Valley, where he was reared, and where he was married to Miss Elizabeth Albertson, born in Pleasant Valley. These children were born to them: Sarah, who became the wife of David Doty, a farmer of Pleasant Valley; Isaac, married to Sally Ann Vincent; Hiram, a farmer, who married Mary Badgley; Elsie, who became the wife of Tunis Conklin, a farmer; Mary A., who died unmarried; Willett, married to Catherine Sill (he was a farmer and merchant); Egbert, our subject; Susan, who died unmarried; and Eli, who died in infancy.

Nicholas Van Wagner, the grandfather, came from Long Island and settled on the farm in Pleasant Valley, where he reared the following children: John, our subject's father; Jacob, a farmer in Pleasant Valley, where he lived and died; Evert, who farmed for a while in Clinton, and then went to the western part of the State, where he died; Solomon, who farmed in Schoharie county; and Esther, married to John Van Wagner, a farmer in the town of Poughkeepsie. The Van Wagners were in the war of 1776.

GEORGE W. CANNON, a prominent resident of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, was born July 31, 1834, in New York City, which had been the home of his ancestors for many years.

His grandfather Cannon was a man of note in his day, a soldier in the war of 1812, and at one time the sheriff of New York City. The late Arnout Cannon, our subject's father, was a prominent contractor and builder in Poughkeepsie. He was born July 13, 1805, in New York City, and there learned the trade of a mechanic, in 1836 coming to Poughkeepsie and engaging in the building business, in which he continued until his death, September 12, 1882. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity, Lodge No. 266, Poughkeepsie, and held a leading place in many of the progressive movements of the day in his locality. He was married in New York City to Miss Naomi Chilson, a native of Orange county, N. Y., born June 11, 1812, and eight children came to this union: Hester (deceased); George W., our subject; Charles H., a well-known carpenter of Poughkeepsie; Arnout, Jr., a prominent architect there; William H., a resident of Chicago; Maria, widow of James Gifford; Cornelius L., a leading contractor and builder of Poughkeepsie; and Emma Kate, the wife of Charles E. Schon. The mother of this family is still living in Poughkeepsie.

George W. Cannon, the subject of this review, attended the public schools of Poughkeepsie until he was twelve years old, and then entered the Dutchess County Academy on South Hamilton street. After completing his course there he learned the carpenter's trade in his father's shop, serving an apprenticeship of seven years. His first independent business venture was the establishment of an art store with a photograph gallery attached, which he conducted successfully for six years in the building now occupied by W. H. Van Keuren. He sold this, giving up the artistic surroundings of oil paintings, and bronze and marble statuary for the prosaic business of a coal dealer, which he followed for three years on Hooker avenue. In this as in all his projects he displayed great enterprise, and he thought and operated the first wood-splitting machine ever seen in the city. After disposing of this business Mr. Cannon traveled through the West for twenty years, and then returned to Poughkeepsie to reside. In 1890 he purchased the old Hicks place, with a mansion now known as River Villa, the building of which cost over $35,000. Here he entertains his friends with lavish yet elegant hospitality. During the triangular boat race on the Hudson in June, 1895, between Cornell, Pennsylvania and Columbia, the Cornell crew made their home there; also in 1896. Mr. Cannon has been married three times, first me, in the city of Poughkeepsie, to Miss Harriet Hall, who died leaving three children: Gene, now Mrs. Charles Wells, of Indianapolis; Julia, who resides in Indianapolis; and Arnetta, a trained nurse in New York City. Mr. Cannon's second wife was Miss Elizabeth Wyley, of Detroit, Mich., who lived less than a year after their marriage. At Detroit he subsequently married Mrs. Emma Rich, a native of Deep River, Conn., but at that time a resident of Bay City; she has one daughter, Mary B. Rich, a graduate of the School of Music of Vassar College, and now the wife of David Gibson, of Indianapolis, Indiana.

Mr. Cannon has a high standing in financial circles, his business abilities being widely recognized. He owns the patents for the New York Safety Dumb Waiter, also for the Diamond Point Nail Set, and derives a large royalty from each.

Charles H. Cannon, a younger brother of our subject, was born in Poughkeepsie November 6, 1826, and was educated in the city public schools and the famous old Dutchess County Academy. He learned the trade of sash and blind making with Harry Seaman and Joseph Irish, and after an apprenticeship of two and one-half years he opened a shop of his own on South Hamilton street, where he did well for a few years. But the breaking out of the war bringing "hard times" to his line of work, he gave it up and became foreman of a large carpenter shop at Providence, R. I., having charge of over forty workmen. After three years there he went to Detroit and spent five years, when he returned to Poughkeepsie and embarked in the saloon business on Main street, but was burned out in 1871, since which time he has been engaged in the carpenter's trade.

On June 24, 1855, at Buffalo, N. Y., Mr. Cannon was married to Miss Margaret O'Connor, and in 1860 he built his residence on Hooker avenue, Poughkeepsie, where the family still resides. Of his ten children five are living: Ettie (Mrs. Albert Jenks); Fannie, wife of William Brown, of New York City; Emma Kate (Mrs. Fred Rogers); William, a resident of Pittsfield, Mass.; and Minnie, who married Clarence Martens, of Mt. Vernon.

BURTON A. SNYDER (deceased) was born in 1867, in the town of Gallatin, Columbia Co., N. Y., and died on Easter eve, April 18, 1897.

Henry Snyder, paternal grandfather of our subject, was born in the town of Livingston, Columbia Co., N. Y., received a commonschool education, and at an early age began farming, which occupation he continued to follow throughout life. When quite a young man he married Miss Eliza Robison, who was the daughter of a farmer of the town of Livingston. To this worthy couple were born five children: Celia, who married Charles Moore; Mary, who became the wife of William Finger; Catherine, who wedded Theodore Hapeman; Annie; and Charles. The last-named, who was the father of our subject, was born in the town of Livingston, Columbia county, and after completing his literary training in the public schools he took up farming as a life work. He married Miss Mary Warehouse, daughter of John Warehouse, a farmer of the same township, and one child graced this union, Burton A., our subject.

Burton A. Snyder, like his ancestors, received only a common-school education. At the early age of twelve years he began farming with his uncle, and afterward followed that occupation. In 1889 he married Miss Gertrude Snyder, a daughter of Albert Snyder, a farmer of the town of Red Hook, Dutchess county. The farm, which belongs to Mrs. Snyder, has been in the possession of her family for many years. It contains 225 acres of as fine farming land as is to be found anywhere in the locality, and is supplied with all the accessories and conveniences to be found upon a model farm of the nineteenth century.

William Z. Snyder, the grandfather of Mrs. Snyder, was a native of the town of Rhinebeck, Dutchess county, where he acquired his education in the district schools, and he also followed farming as a life work. He wedded Miss Margaret Traver, of the same township, and to them were born two children: Albert; and Anna, who became the wife of Edgar L. Traver. The former was also born, reared and educated in the town of Rhinebeck, but he later purchased the farm in the town of Red Hook, which his daughter now occupies. He was united in marriage with Miss Gertrude M. Burger, of Rhinebeck town, and their only child is Mrs. Gertrude M. Snyder.

WARREN P. LASHER was one of the most straightforward, energetic and successful business men who ever lived in Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, where he departed this life in March, 1890. In his death the community was deprived of one of its best, most useful and public-spirited citizens, and rich and poor alike mourned his departure from their midst, for he was beloved by men in every walk of life.

Mr. Lasher was born at Tivoli, Dutchess county, April 8, 1841, and was the only son of Philip and Catherine (Millham) Lasher, though he had one sister, Carrie C., now the wife of R. C. Brewster, who resides in Brooklyn, N. Y. His father was a merchant of Tivoli, and quite a prominent man in the locality, who served as brigadier-general in the State Militia in the old training days, as postmaster of Tivoli, and as a member of the General Assembly in 1858. He was twice married, his second wife being the mother of our subject.

The education of Warren P. Lasher was obtained in the schools of Tivoli and Claverack, N. Y., and when only sixteen years old he served as Assemblyman's Clerk, while his father was a member of the Legislature. Three years later he became a clerk in the general store of Faulkner Brothers, at Wappingers Falls, where he remained until he was twenty-three years of age, when he came to Poughkeepsie and secured a position in the dry-goods store of Cornwell & Elting. He was afterward with Spring & Thalheimer, whom Saunders & Lasher bought out in 1871, and the firm later became Lasher, Haight & Kelley. They also began the manufacturing business, making ladies' skirts; and after selling out the retail dry-goods business, the firm was changed, Mr. Lasher associating with Luckey & Platt, while still later it became Forbey & Lasher. In the manufacture of skirts and overalls they ran forty machines by water power. The new firm had been in existence about a year when Mr. Forbey, the silent partner, died, and his interest was purchased by Frank Hull, the name being then changed to Lasher & Hull. At the end of eight years our subject sold out his interest to Mr. Hull, and formed a company composed of Lasher, Eastmead & Osborne, for the manufacture of overalls. Mr. Lasher was also a member of the firm of Hermance & Hance, manufacturers of shirts, but later Messrs. Eastmead & Osborne purchased Mr. Hermance's interest, and the name was changed to Hance & Co. On account of failing health, in 1889, Mr. Lasher disposed of his share in the company of Lasher, Eastmead & Osborne, but retained his interest in Hance & Co. up to the time of his death.

While clerking at Wappingers Falls Mr.

W. P. Lasher

Lasher met Miss Almira J. Hermance, who was visiting a cousin there, and on January 19, 1870, they were united in marriage. They began their domestic life in Poughkeepsie, where were born to them two sons: Claude, a member of the firm of Lansing & Lasher, real estate and insurance; and Frank H. Mr. Lasher was a conscientious, earnest Christian, a trustee of the Baptist Church of Poughkeepsie, and an active worker in the Young Men's Christian Association. His benevolence was unostentatious and genuine, and there is nothing in the story of his life to show that he ever, for a moment, sought to compass a given end for the purpose of exalting himself, as he was a man of retiring disposition and averse to making any show. He was a member of the Amrita Club, and as a man held the honor and esteem of all classes of people.

Richard M. Hermance, the father of Mrs. Lasher, was born at Clifton Park, Saratoga Co., N. Y., June 3, 1817, and was the son of Cornelius and Anna (Westfall) Hermance, the former a native of Red Hook, Dutchess county, and the latter of Claverack, Columbia Co., N. Y. For many years her father carried on farming in Saratoga county, and, on disposing of his land, went into the foundry business, manufacturing stoves and plows at Stillwater, Saratoga county; he patented many articles, among which was the low reservoir used on cooking stoves. He wedded Emeline Du Bois, daughter of Richard Du Bois of Round Lake, Saratoga county, and they became the parents of six children, namely: Almira J.; Theodore; Albert; George C.; Mary; and Emma J., wife of Henry Richmond. The mother of this family died in 1886.

OBED W. VINCENT (deceased). The Vincent family, which is one of the oldest and most prominent in Dutchess county, is of English origin, the ancestors of the subject of this sketch having come to America at a very early date, settling as pioneer farmers in the town of Unionvale.

Isaac Vincent, our subject's grandfather, was a farmer and merchant in Unionvale, and his son, David D. Vincent, the father of our subject, followed the same pursuits, in which he proved an unusually successful business man. He was always a Republican, and took great interest in local politics, holding various offices, including that of supervisor. He married Phœbe Preston, whose ancestors were leading farmers in the town of Dover, where he died in 1888. He and his wife had three children: Isaac, who was a farmer and storekeeper at the Clove, and died in 1889; Martha (deceased), who married Stephen Moore; and Obed W., who died July 14, 1892.

Our subject was reared by an aunt on a farm at Chestnut Ridge, and was married April 15, 1880, to Miss Mary Ella Vincent, a granddaughter of Jonathan Vincent. Her father, John W. Vincent, was born in the town of Unionvale, and was a school teacher in early life, later removing to Poughkeepsie and becoming an influential politician. He was county clerk and justice of the peace for a number of years, and was otherwise prominent in political affairs; he died in 1881. He attended the M. E. Church, and was interested in various progressive movements. He married Rhoda Butler, who was born at Chestnut Ridge, and is still living. This family is of English descent. Her father, Peter L. Butler, was a well-known farmer in the town of Dover. Of the four children born to John and Rhoda Vincent our subject's wife was the eldest; Minnie married Charles Andrews, of Lagrangeville; Walter, who married Julia O'Brien, is in business at the stock yards in Chicago; and George E. resides with Mrs. Vincent.

After their marriage Obed Vincent and his wife lived at Chestnut Ridge with his aunt, where their only child, Hazel Blanche, was born. Mr. Vincent was a man of influence in his locality, a Republican in politics, and ably sustained the high reputation which was his birthright. Since his death Mrs. Vincent has managed the large fortune with great ability. In May, 1895, she bought a beautiful residence at Manchester Bridge, three miles from Poughkeepsie, where she now resides, her home being the center of a refined and gracious hospitality.

WILLIAM THOMSON, a wealthy retired merchant of New York City, now residing upon a fine estate near Rhinebeck, was born at No. 92 Watt street, New York, September 11, 1836. His family had long been prominent in that city, and his father, William A. Thomson, was born there on Cedar street, May 29, 1808. He served during his life as president of the Mercantile Fire Insurance Co., also serving for many years as president of the Merchants' Exchange National Bank. He was one of the last of an old Knickerbocker family for which New York was noted years ago. As an architect and builder he caused to be erected in the lower part of the city some elegant structures, which remain to this day a monument to his skill, notably the present Assistant Treasurer's office, corner of Wall and Nassau streets, formerly the United States Custom House, including the present magnificent building of the Merchants' Exchange National Bank, on lower Broadway.

Samuel Thomson, our subject's grandfather, was an early director in the Merchants' Exchange Bank, and was also concerned in the establishment of the New York Life and Trust Co., in which he was a trustee until his death in 1850. He was one of the oldest builders in the city. He built the Rev. Dr. John M. Mason's church in Murray street as early as 1812, and was the architect (in connection with his son, William A.) of the New York Custom House (now the Treasurer's office), and many other fine buildings.

The subject of our sketch was educated at William Forrest's Collegiate School and the New York Grammar School, and at the age of nineteen became a clerk with Ivison & Phinney. In 1860 he left this employment to engage in business with his brother Samuel, as dealers in books and stationery at 1107 Broadway, the firm being known as Thomson Bros. In 1873 the brother retired and Mr. Thomson continued alone until 1879, when he sold the business to Messrs. Dempsey & Carroll. During this time Mr. Thomson built up an extensive trade, especially in engraving, being for a time one of the three principal engravers of the city, Tiffany and Gimbrede being his rivals, and later he shared the honors with Tiffany only. Among his customers were the Astors, Livingstons, Rheinlanders, and other people of note, and he designed and engraved the cards for the reception given to Gen. Grant by Marshall O. Roberts. His unusually successful career was interrupted by his failing health, and, after disposing of his business, he came to Rhinebeck and purchased the beautiful farm upon which he has since resided, its management affording him healthful and pleasing recreation.

On May 13, 1863, Mr. Thomson married Julia Laura Clearwater, daughter of Rickerson Clearwater, a well-known resident of Red Hook, who, for over fifty preceding years, had been a merchant in New York City, and who was born at Pleasant Valley, March 15, 1796. Her grandfather, Philip Clearwater, came from Holland. Her mother, Mrs. Clearwater, passed away August 20, 1891, at the age of ninety-three years, eight months and ten days.

The union of Mr. and Mrs. Thomson has been blessed with one daughter: Nettie, born April 30, 1864, who married Eugene Cookingham, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and treasurer of the Crandell & Godley Co., New York City, one of the largest companies for the manufacture of bakers' and confectioners' supplies in the United States. Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Cookingham have two sons: William Thomson, born March 20, 1893, and Joseph Thomson, born March 21, 1896. The Thomson family have been connected with the Presbyterian Church from early times, and in politics were Whigs until the organization of the Republican party, when they gave it their allegiance, but they have never taken an active share in partisan work.

FRANK HOWELL, one of the best-known drivers and horse trainers in Dutchess county, was born in Niagara county, N. Y., June 28, 1861.

The Howell family is of English origin, coming to this country from their old home in Plymouth, England. Joseph Howell, the grandfather of our subject, was a shoemaker, and lived and died in England. He married Miss Rebecca Smith, and they became the parents of a large family of children, of whom four are yet living, namely: Jennie; William, still residing in Plymouth, England; Elizabeth, who also makes her home in England; and Joseph, the father of our subject.

Joseph Howell was born in Exeter, England, and, like all English boys, his early education and reading were particularly adapted to inspire a longing to go to sea. When quite young Joseph was apprenticed on a merchantman and started for the West Indies. The captain was coarse and brutal, and the young apprentice had a hard struggle. For three years they sailed along the English coast, and then again crossed the Atlantic, this time coming to New York. The fabulous stories concerning the New World had much impressed the youth, and, on landing, he, in company with three other boys, ran away, and by working his way on the Erie canal finally reached Buf falo. This was in 1849, during the great epidemic of Asiatic cholera that swept over almost the entire country. Buffalo was suffering from this dread disease, and while on the canal Mr. Howell was stricken with the scourge, and was laid out on the bank to die, whence he was taken to the hospital. Hundreds died of the disease; but Mr. Howell, after a long illness, finally recovered, and on gaining his strength started for New York; he, however, engaged again on the canal for a few months.

After some years he became interested in horses, and was superintendent of the Samuel Townsend stock farm in Niagara county, where he continued for nine years. In 1871 he came to Dutchess county, and for twenty years managed the large stock farm of Edwin Thorne, well known as Thorndale Stock Farm, located near Millbrook, Dutchess county. The horse department here has from 100 to 150 horses all the time. Since 1891 he has engaged in the hotel business, first at Hopewell Junction, and later in Arlington, at the edge of Poughkeepsie. Mr. Howell married Miss Sophia Barton, and they have become the parents of fourteen children, eleven of whom are living.

Frank Howell came with his parents to Dutchess county, where, surrounded by fast horses, he developed a taste for handling and breaking them, assisting his father in his work until he gradually learned by actual practice all the work of a practical trainer. He developed unusual skill in his undertaking, and Mr. Thorne selected him as his trainer. Then, assisted by his former employer, he started out for himself, working his horses on the Poughkeepsie track. Mr. Thorne at one time owned the Poughkeepsie Driving Park, which Mr. Howell superintended until it was sold, in 1888, to the present owner, Jacob Ruppert. His training stables are finely equipped and conveniently located near the tracks. Among the horses he has driven or owned may be mentioned: Kate C., record 2:15 $\frac{1}{4}$; Elber, 2:15 $\frac{1}{4}$; Mithra, 2:17; Prince, 2:20 $\frac{1}{4}$; Niel Whitbeck, 2:21 $\frac{1}{4}$; Carlton Chief, 2:21 $\frac{1}{4}$; Marksman Maid, 2:21 $\frac{1}{4}$; Kentucky Blanch, 2:26; Edwin Thorne, 2:16 $\frac{1}{4}$; Daisy Dale, 2:19 $\frac{1}{4}$; Oxford Chief, 2:22 $\frac{1}{4}$, and Miss Murray, 2:28.

On June 24, 1882, Mr. Howell was married to Miss Julia Webb, daughter of Edward and Lucy (Clarke) Webb, of English origin. Mr. Webb was a skilled florist and landscape gardener by occupation, and after selling out his business in England, came to America with his family in 1868, making his home in Dutchess county, where he spent the remainder of his life. He expired suddenly from heart disease, December 5, 1892, but his wife still survives. In their family of children were: Jonathan Edward; Julia E.; Marie C., and Louise A. To Mr. and Mrs. Frank Howell have been born the following children: Lucy Clarke; Julia Webb; Nellie Viall and Louise Webb. Mr. Howell is a very public-spirited man, and takes an active interest in all movements for the advancement of the community.

JOHAN HAUPT, the proprietor of a well-known bakery situated at the corner of Church and Gate streets, Poughkeepsie, is one of the thrifty German-born citizens of the county. His present success is emphatically due to hard work and economy, and reflects great credit upon him.

Mr. Haupt was born August 24, 1845, at Gross-hen Zog, um Hessen, a son of Jacob Haupt, also a native of Germany, born in 1801. The father was the owner of a stone quarry, and was engaged all his life in the business of taking out rough building stone. He and his wife, Magdalena (Uthink), both died about the year 1887. Of their ten children, nine grew to adult age: Barbara (the eldest); Mattice, now living in Germany; Agnes, who lives in New York City; Jacob, in Germany; Lizzie, in East New York; Mary, in Germany; Sybilla, in Brooklyn; Frank, whose whereabouts are not known; and John, our subject.

John Haupt came alone to America when a boy of thirteen years. He made his home with a sister in New York City for a short time in 1857, while looking for employment, and as he had already acquired a common-school education, he devoted his thoughts from that time to making his way in the business world, a sufficiently difficult task as it proved. He has always been engaged in the baker's trade, his first work being with a baker in Williamsburg at $3 per month, with whom he remained six months, and from that time was employed by various parties at increasing wages, working one year at one place for $5 per month, and six months at another for $7. He became third helper in a large establishment at $3 per week, and then going to New York secured a place as second hand at $4 a week, remaining during one winter. His next employer, Mr.

Feltz, gave him $9 a week, and after seven months he entered the service of Mr. Reinhardt at the corner of 11th avenue and 45th street, for $12 a week. Here he injured his eyes so that he gave up the position in four months, and went to work in 9th avenue for $9 a week. In December, 1865, he came to Poughkeepsie as head baker for Mr. Bice, at $12 a week and his board, and in July, 1866, he began to work for P. S. Rowland as a cake maker. With him he remained fourteen months, and then returned to New York as foreman for Mr. Doring at the corner of 3rd avenue and 46th street, at $15 a week and board; after three months, however, he went back to Poughkeepsie and worked for Charles Arras a little over a year. In 1869 he spent five months in Hoboken, N. J., as foreman for Mr. Weidner on First street, and then engaged in business for himself in East New York; but the venture proved unprofitable, and after five months he returned to Poughkeepsie and again worked for Charles Arras for six years. In August, 1876, he bought his present establishment of George Mallmann, and has successfully conducted same for over twenty years, building up a large and profitable trade.

On June 9, 1867, Mr. Haupt was married to Miss Barbara Bieber, daughter of John and Mary Bieber, highly respected residents of Poughkeepsie. Four children were born of this union: John, born September 26, 1868, is a clerk in his father's establishment; Raimund, born January 25, 1871, assists as a cake baker; Alfred E., born December 2, 1872, died at the age of sixteen; and George W., born July 26, 1879, is in school. The family attend the Lutheran Church, but Mrs. Haupt is an Episcopalian. Mr. Haupt has won the respect of the people wherever he is known, and is prominent among the self-made men of his locality. He has taken an active interest in politics, voting the Republican ticket as a rule, and in 1895 was elected supervisor of the Second ward. Socially, he is a member of the I. O. O. F.

GEORGE H. BONTECOU. The first ancestor of the Bontecou family, of whom we have a definite account, was William Isbrand Bontekœ, who lived in the early part of the seventeenth century. In 1618 he was captain of the "Nouvelle Hoorn," a ship of 1,110 tons burden, and a crew of 206 men, which in that year set sail for the East Indies. He had touched at the uninhabited island of Mascaruque and at Madagascar, and was nearing Batavia when a fire broke out in the vessel, and while making efforts to extinguish it he was deserted by sixty-six of his men, who escaped in a shallop and a small skiff. He was unable to subdue the flames, and when they reached the magazine the ship was thrown into the air and totally destroyed, but Bontekœ in falling had the good fortune to grasp a spar, which supported him until he was picked up by the shallop. At another time, while in command of a ship of thirty-two guns, Bontekœ took part in the expedition in which Cornelius, with eight vessels, ravaged the coast of China.

Bontekœ wrote an account of his voyages, and the incidents referred to have been utilized by Alexander Dumas in a story entitled "Bontekœ," the first in his volume—"Les Drames de la Mer." Unfortunately no known record exists relating to this man's ancestors or descendants, but his family was doubtless of Dutch or Flemish origin, and it is probable that one of his sons crossed the line and settled in France, where we next hear of the name in connection with the events attending the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, October 18, 1685, by which Louis XIV put an end to the exercise of Protestant forms of worship in France, and compelled all who would not adopt the Catholic faith to leave his realm. Among the refugees who fled to England at this time were Pierre Bontecou and his wife, Marguerite Collinot, and five children: Marguerite, Peter, Sara, Daniel and Susanne. According to the "Archives Nationales," at Paris, they left the Isle of Ré in 1684 for "La Caroline" [a general term used to designate the continent of North America]. Their residence had previously been in the city of La Rochelle, a place of great commercial importance and a stronghold of Protestantism. It is certain that one of the children, Daniel, was born there in 1681, and doubtless the others were natives of that place. Pierre Bontecou and his little family found refuge in England for a few years, but in 1689 they came to America and settled in New York City, where three children were born, Marie and Rachel (twins), July 21, 1690, and Timothy, June 17, 1693.

Timothy Bontecou, our subject's great-grandfather, no doubt spent his boyhood in New York, but in early manhood went to France to learn the silversmith's trade, and remained, it is supposed, about twenty years. We have no history of him during this period; but he was probably married in France, as his wife, Mary, died in New Haven, Conn., November 5, 1735, at the age of thirty-three years, according to the inscription on her monument in the old cemetery in that city. On September 29, 1736, he married his second wife, Mary Goodrich, daughter of David and Prudence (Churchill) Goodrich, of Wethersfield, Conn. His death occurred in New Haven, February 14, 1784, at the age of ninety. By his first marriage he had one son, Timothy, born in 1723, probably in France. There were five children by the second marriage: Peter, who was born in New Haven, 1738; Daniel, born 1739, died 1778; David, born 1742, died 1766; James, born 1743, died 1760; and a daughter, Mrs. Lathrop, of whom all trace is lost.

Peter Bontecou, the great-grandfather of our subject, was married November 14, 1762, by Rev. Chauncey Whittlesey, to Susanna Thomas, daughter of Jehiel and Mary Thomas, of New Haven. They had nine children, whose names, with dates of birth and death, are here given: Polly Augusta, August 13, 1763, died March 28, 1849; James, August 6, 1766, died July 12, 1806; David (1), August 23, 1767, died in 1767; David (2), September 9, 1768, died January 26, 1769; Susannah (1), 1769, died in infancy; Susannah (2), 1770, died December 25, 1777; Peter, 1770, died June 12, 1794; Sarah, July 30, 1775, died January 9, 1861; and David (3), March 17, 1777, died May 5, 1854.

David Bontecou, the grandfather of our subject, was married October 1, 1769, to Polly Clark, daughter of Samuel and Anna (Hawley) Clark, and reared a family of eight children, of whom the first four were born at the old home of the family in New Haven, and the remaining four in Coeymans, N. Y. Their names with dates of birth are as follows: Peter, January 26, 1797; Elizabeth, October 4, 1798; Susannah, July 25, 1801; James Clark, July 11, 1803; Sarah, May 19, 1805; David, October 25, 1807; Samuel Stover, January 23, 1810, died July 11, 1812; and George, our subject's father.

George Bontecou was born June 23, 1812. He was married September 6, 1838, to Lydia Ann Whipple, who was born May 28, 1818, the daughter of William and Hannah (Adams) Whipple, of Troy, N. Y. She died in Troy, February 20, 1864, and July 1, 1869. Mr. Bontecou married Margaret Dustin, daughter of Ananis and Margaret (Hunter) Dustin, of Waterford, Erie Co., Penn. The family moved from Troy, N. Y. to Vineland, N. J., in 1866, and he died there August 7, 1893. There were ten children by his first marriage, their names with dates of birth being as follows: Mary Hannah, August 19, 1839; William Whipple, August 17, 1841, died October 14, 1842; Susan, May 29, 1843; William Wright Whipple, June 19, 1845; Elijah Whipple, June 27, 1847; George Henry, May 17, 1849; Philip Dorlon, January 23, 1853; Abby Whipple, April 12, 1856; and Reed and Francis (twins), December 26, 1858 (of whom the latter died July 24, 1859). By the second marriage there were two children: Lydia Ann, born April 5, 1870; and John, born February 20, 1876, and died April 4, 1879.

As will be seen by the above record, George Henry Bontecou, the subject proper of this sketch, is of the sixth generation in direct descent from the brave Huguenot pioneer, Pierre Bontecou. A native of Troy, N. Y., he was educated in the common schools there, and at the age of thirteen entered the employ of the New York Central & Hudson River railroad. In 1867 he went to Minnesota as an employe of the Southern Minnesota Railroad Co., and remained until 1872, when he became station agent at Dutchess Junction for the N. Y. C. R. R. and the N. D. & C. R. R. This position he has held ever since, his able management giving entire satisfaction to the companies which he represents, and to the traveling public. For the last five years he has also been engaged in the manufacturing of common building brick for the New York market, his yards being located at Dutchess Junction. His excellent judgment in business affairs has made him a valued worker in different enterprises, among them the Matteawan Savings Bank, of which he is a trustee. His counsel is sought in political matters also, and he is secretary of the Republican committee of the town of Fishkill, and was a delegate to the Republican State Convention at Saratoga in 1895. He is foreman of the Willar H. Mase Hook and Ladder Co., of Matteawan, also a member of the State Firemen's Association, and he is also secretary of the Matteawan Club. In the Masonic fraternity he is an active worker, belonging to Beacon Lodge No. 283, Highland Chapter of Newburg, Hudson Commandery,

K. T. of Newburg, and Mecca Temple of New York City.

He has a pleasant home at Matteawan, and he and his wife (formerly Miss Emma Mase) are leading members of the M. E. Church, in which he holds the office of secretary of the board of trustees. They have had four children: George died at the age of fifteen; Howell is a student in the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania; Edna and Pierre are at home. Mrs. Bontecou is a daughter of Sylvester H. and Almira (Cornwell) Mase, and a descendant of a family which has been distinguished in several generations for patriotism, her great-grandfather, Peter Mase, having been a soldier in the Revolutionary war, while her grandfather, Peter Mase, served in the war of 1812. Her father was second lieutenant in the 128th N. Y. V. I. during the Civil war. He was one of the most prominent men of Matteawan, engaging in hat manufacturing, in the dry-goods business, also in the wholesale and retail leather business, and he held the office of sheriff of Dutchess county for two terms.

CHARLES G. BAUMANN, a prominent saloon keeper of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, was born in that city November 23, 1863.

The home of his ancestors was in Waldurn Baden, Germany, where his father, John Baumann, was born March 16, 1812. The latter attended the school of his birthplace during boyhood, and later learned the shoemaker's trade, serving an apprenticeship of five years. He afterward traveled through Switzerland as a journeyman cobbler, and in 1853 came to America, where he followed his trade in Cincinnati, but shortly afterward returned to Poughkeepsie and engaged in the manufacture and sale of cigars in a wholesale way. He was cautious and conservative, and made a success of the enterprise, accumulating a fine property. An independent voter, he thought more of securing good men for office than of party ties, and he never sought political preference for himself. He was a prominent member of the Church of the Nativity (Roman Catholic), and was a leader among the German-born population. In 1842 he was married in Germany to Eva Catharine Spieler, who died July 16, 1889. In the following year he disposed of his business, and on May 1, 1891, he, too, departed this life. Of the nine children of this union five lived to adult age and four are still living: August; Josephine, the wife of Adam Messerschmidt, of New York; Mary Louisa, the widow of Robert Farley; and Charles G., our subject.

Charles G. Baumann was educated in the German Catholic school at St. Michael, and attended the public schools for one year. He became familiar with both English and German, and has been quite a reader of current literature. After leaving school he tended bar for three years for Albert Von Der Linden, on Market street, and then took a similar position with Charles Matheis, at No. 116 Main street. On his employer's death six years later, Mr. Baumann continued the business for the widow for one year, and then on May 1, 1885, bought the business and the building. He has been the agent for Jacob Ruppert's beer for twelve years. As a business man he has been remarkably successful, and he takes a prominent part in various local movements, being a member of the Germania Singing Society, the Phoenix Hose Co., the Young American Hose Co. No. 6, the Veteran Fire Association, the Dutchess Social Club, and he is an honorary member of the Knights of St. George, and a charter member of the Elks. In religion he follows the faith of his father, and adheres to the Roman Catholic Church.

On October 8, 1889, Mr. Baumann married Miss Anna M. Haidlauf, the only child of Dr. John and Rosalie Marie Elizabeth Haidlauf, the former of whom (now deceased) was one of the leading German physicians of Poughkeepsie. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Baumann two children have come: Rosa Helena and Katie Josephine, the latter being now deceased.

LEWIS PINCKNEY, an industrious and progressive agriculturist of the town of Pawling, Dutchess county, was born January 1, 1851, in the town of Carmel, Putnam Co. N. Y., where his forefathers were among the most prominent of the early settlers. His grandfather, Gen. Stephen Pinckney, was a native of that place, and passed his life there in agricultural pursuits, to which, in late years, he added mercantile business. He held the rank of general in the militia of his day and was a leader in many important local movements. His first wife, Miss Hill, died not long after their marriage, and he formed another matrimonial union, this time with Miss Ann Hager. Eight children were born to them: William; Ira, who never married; Mrs. Arabella Pircle; Mrs. Nancy Smith; Perry; Michael; Alva and Stephen. Most of the members of this family settled near the old home, and the others located at Norwalk, Connecticut.

Perry Pinckney, our subject's father, was a carpenter by trade, but was also engaged at times in farming. He was an energetic man, successful in business, especially in early manhood; a member of the Baptist Church and a leading supporter of the Democratic party. A large portion of his life was passed near Lake Mahopac and in his native town, but his last years were passed in Luddingtonville, where he died November 25, 1879. His wife, Eleanor Lockwood, daughter of Daniel Lockwood, departed this life January 1, 1868. Of their seven children, six lived to maturity, namely: Sarah, who married Robert Lee; Lewis, our subject; Sophia, the wife of Walter Tompkins; James S., who resides west of Pawling; Lorainy, who is not married; and Carrie, the wife of John Pattison, of White Plains, New York.

The subject of our sketch received his education mainly in the district schools of the town of East Fishkill, and after his mother's death began working by the month for farmers in the locality during the summer season and attended school during the winter at Peekskill, Pawling and other places, obtaining as good schooling as the locality afforded notwithstanding many discouragements. He was employed at farm work until he was thirty-eight years old, working at Hurd's Corners for many years, with one winter in Scrub Oak Plains, one year in East Fishkill, one year with Jeremiah Mead, eight months with Albert Corbin, eight with Arnold Brothers, below Pawling, and then after a winter in Mr. Allen's school in that village he worked for Allen Light for a few months and for his father-in-law at Cold Spring for two years, returning again to Mr. Light's for a short time. His next employer was Theodore Wheeler, of Dover, with whom he stayed nine years and eight months, and he then went West, spending some months in Kansas and Iowa. On his return in the following spring he again engaged in farm work, spending one year each with Mr. Ferguson,

B. Dutcher, John Arnold and John L. Maynes. In 1890, after twenty-two years in all at this work, he rented his present farm of 664 acres near Pawling from Hooker & Hammerlies. He has thirty-seven cows and is largely interested in dairying.

His sterling qualities of character and the indomitable perseverance that has enabled him to make his way without the aid which helps so many men to a prosperous career, have won for Mr. Pinckney the respect of all who know him. He has so far passed his life in single blessedness. He is a member of the Methodist Church in Pawling, and supports the principles of the Democratic party without taking an active share, however, in political work.

PPETER MILLER. This gentleman worthily illustrates the commonly-accepted view of the character of the enterprising German citizen, who has made his own way in this country, and is now at the head of a good retail boot and shoe business. A native of Westphalia, he was born September 28, 1848, and is the son of John J. Miller, who was also born in the same place, in 1815, and by trade was a shoemaker, which occupation was followed by his father and grandfather.

In his native land John J. Miller was united in marriage with Miss Anna C. Heller, also a native of Westphalia, and to them were born five children, namely: John, a shoemaker of Germany; Peter, of this sketch; Regina, wife of Mathew Zeigen, of Poughkeepsie; Catherine, who died in infancy; and Carl, a shoemaker, of Germany. The father never left the Fatherland, where he continued to follow his trade until he was called from this earth in 1861. His wife had passed away in 1850. They were devout members of the German Catholic Church.

Mr. Miller, of this sketch, was an enterprising, ambitious boy, and after working at the shoemaker's trade in Germany until he had reached his majority, he determined to seek his fortune on this side of the Atlantic. Accordingly he set sail in 1871, and has since been one of the worthy citizens of Poughkeepsie, where he was first employed at shoemaking, and also as a clerk in the store of Frank Marks for about a year and a half. After filling a similar position with Michael Timmins for nine years, he in 1883 started in the shoe business on his own responsibility at No. 123 Main street, where he carried on operations for five years, and then purchased his present store at No. 131 on the same street.

In January, 1876, Mr. Miller led to the marriage altar Mrs. Mary C. Muckenhoupt, a widow lady who had nine children by her first union, and they became the parents of one son—Charley T. Both our subject and his wife are members of the Roman Catholic Church, and in politics he gives his allegiance to the Democratic party. He is a progressive, wide-awake business man, enjoying a liberal patronage and is held in high esteem in both business and social circles.

SIMON J. KELDER, one of the leading young merchants of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and a most respected and useful citizen of that city, is a native of the town of Rochester, Ulster Co., N. Y. His great-grandfather was a resident of Marbletown, Ulster county, he being one of the leading farmers of his day. His grandfather was a resident of the same place, he also being a farmer, and he held several public offices. To him and his wife, Susan Christian, were born seven children, one of whom, George Kelder, was the father of Simon J., the subject of our sketch.

George Kelder was born in the town of Rochester, Ulster Co., N. Y., January 15, 1840. On October 9, 1861, he was married to Miss Martha A., daughter of Jacob and Nancy Roosa, of the town of Rochester, Ulster county, and they had one child, Simon J. The father was a bright and capable young man, with a promising future, but whose life was taken at the early age of twenty-four years—when but at the threshold of his active career—he dying from brain fever in 1864. His widow subsequently married Edward L. Rymph, of Hyde Park, Dutchess county, this State, of which place she is still a resident.

Simon J. Kelder passed his early boyhood in Ulster county, and at the age of five years, on his mother's re-marriage, went with her to Hyde Park and there lived, making his home with his parents until seventeen or eighteen years of age, working on a farm; in the meantime he attended the common schools, and for a period the seminary at New Paltz. He then went to Poughkeepsie and engaged in the hat and cap business, being located at No. 283 Main street, which business he continued to follow some six years, when he disposed of it and purchased the grocery business of J. Craft, at No. 521 Main street, in the same city. In 1894 he removed to No. 396, on the same street, from which house his retail business is done, and the wholesale department is at No. 391. Mr. Kelder began his business life at an early age, and with small means, but from an humble beginning and in a limited way he has steadily forged ahead until to-day he stands among the foremost young business men of Poughkeepsie. He is one of the self-made men of our times, and by close application to business, coupled with wise judgment and business tact, he, though yet a young man, has made for himself a position in business circles of which he may well be proud. In politics Mr. Kelder is a Republican, and has served in several official relations. He is now one of the aldermen of Poughkeepsie, serving from the Sixth ward, to which office he was elected in 1897. He takes an active interest in all movements looking to the advancement of morals and religion in the community; is a member of Trinity M. E. Church, of Poughkeepsie; also is identified with the K. of P.

On November 19, 1884, Mr. Kelder was married to Miss Jennie S. Sutton, a daughter of Henry and Louisa Sutton, of Newburg, N. Y., and to the union were born: Florence George T., who died in the eighth year of his age; Louisa; and Stanley M., who died in his infancy. Their home, one of the comfortable ones of Poughkeepsie, is located on Hooker avenue, designated as No. 5.

NICHOLAS HOFFMAN. Among the many worthy citizens of German birth who have made their fortunes in this State and who have been residents of Poughkeepsie Dutchess county, stood prominent the gentleman whose name opens this sketch, and who left many friends to cherish kindly remembrances of him when death called him hence.

Paul Hoffman, the father of our subject was a native of Aschaffenburg, Bavaria, Germany, and was a shoemaker by occupation. He married, and had the following name children: Nicholas, our subject; Frank, living in St. Helena, Cal.; Valentine, who died in Poughkeepsie; Philip, who died in Norfolk, Va.; and Margaret and Caroline, who still live in their native town in Germany.

Nicholas Hoffman was born at Aschaffenburg, Bavaria, Germany, February 28, 1832. He received a limited education in his native land, and served a three-years' apprenticeship at the shoemaker's trade. In 1851, when nineteen years of age, he came to this country, landing at New York City, where he worked as a journeyman for a year, and then set up a shop of his own, in a room in the tenement house where he lived, on Third street, near Avenue A. After a year and a half spent in this way he left New York for Whiteport, Ulster county, where he followed his trade for the succeeding two years. He then purchased a team, and was engaged in teaming some ten years, at the end of which time he purchased a canal boat and went to canaling for himself on the D. & H. canal, continuing several years.

A. J. Kelder

In 1866 he sold his canal boat and moved to Kingston, and entered into partnership with a Mr. Sturgis in the brewing business, but soon afterward, owing to his illness, he sold his interest to his partner, and in 1868 came to Poughkeepsie, where he purchased a saloon at No. 403 Main street, remaining there until 1872, when he purchased the building on the corner of Main and Hamilton streets, built by Philip Goldstein, and moved his saloon to that part thereof in 1875. From 1875 until his death Mr. Hoffman was proprietor of the "Hoffman House," which is one of the finest buildings of its kind in Poughkeepsie, and which, under his judicious management, became a very popular hotel. In 1878 he opened, in connection with his other business, a shoe store, which was conducted by his two sons, Henry and Nicholas, until 1886, when he sold the shoe business and opened his saloon in the room where it had been, named it the "Hoffman House," by which name it is at present known.

Mr. Hoffman was a man of considerable business ability, possessed of excellent judgment and great perseverance and enterprise. He landed in this country among strangers, an unsophisticated lad, with only ten cents in his pocket, and totally unacquainted with the language. He taught himself to speak, read and write English, and became a generally well-informed man in English literature, not only became prosperous financially, but succeeded in making friends among the best class of citizens who appreciated his generous, whole-hearted nature, and admired his sterling qualities. Among his business associates he had the reputation of being careful, thrifty and thoroughly honest, and in public matters he was liberal and always ready to assist in any way desired. A Democrat in politics, he was not a partisan, and in local affairs was willing to see the best men put in office regardless of their party affiliations. In religious faith he was a member of the German Catholic Church, and prominent in its councils. His death occurred August 28, 1877.

In 1851, in New York City, Mr. Hoffman was married to Elizabeth Kunney, daughter of Andrew and Margaretta Kunney, and who had come to America on the same ship with him, and seven children blessed their union, namely: Frank and Katherine died in early childhood; Caroline, at home; Henry and Nicholas (both deceased); Katherine and Frank, both living at home. The family are highly esteemed and respected by all who know them.

MULFORD WHEELER, one of the active, prominent and enterprising agriculturists of the town of Pine Plains, Dutchess county, was born April 27, 1840, in the town of Amenia, that county, a son of B. Hampton Wheeler, who was born in the town of Northeast, in 1813. Eben Wheeler, paternal grandfather of our subject, was born in 1750, also in the town of Northeast, where he continued to follow farming up to the time of his death, which occurred about 1860. The family was first founded, however, in Connecticut by English emigrants, and the grandfather aided the Colonies in their struggle for independence. He wedded a Miss Conklin, and they became the parents of ten children, namely: B. Hampton, Albert, Edmond E., Emeline, Harriet, Betsy Ann, Julia, Cornelia, Mariette (Mrs. Story) and Alma, wife of Robert Rowe.

The father of our subject was an extensive farmer and one of the leading citizens of the town of Amenia, his place being located about one mile south of the village of Amenia. He was a strong man, of more than ordinary ability, possessed excellent business judgment and great energy, and accumulated a handsome property, having at one time three large farms in the town of Amenia, all the result of his own enterprise and diligence. He took quite an active part in political affairs, voting the Democratic ticket and held several offices in the locality, including that of assessor, which he filled for several years. He was prominently connected with the Amenia Fair Association, being its president for several years, and was identified with everything that would promote the welfare of his town or county. He married Emeline Clark, daughter of Dugass Clark, of the town of Northeast, and they became the parents of five children: Mulford; Mrs. Sarah Bartholomew; Elizabeth; Clark D. (of the town of Northeast) and Collin, who died at the age of ten years.

Mulford Wheeler acquired an excellent education in the Amenia Seminary, which at that time was one of the first schools of the county, and in later years he supplemented the knowledge there acquired by extensive reading. After the age of twelve he was able to attend school only in the winter season, as his services were needed upon the home farm, where he remained until 1865. After operating one of his father's farms in the town of Amenia for some time, in March, 1871, he removed to his present place in the town of Pine Plains, having purchased it of the Eli Collin estate. It comprises 309 acres of rich and arable land, which he has converted into one of the best farms of the township.

In January, 1867, Mr. Wheeler was married to Miss Sarah F. Collin, who was born June 24, 1847, a daughter of Eli Collin, who was born February 23, 1805. Her great-great-grandfather, John Collin, was born in France in 1706, and on coming to the New World located at Milford, New Haven Co., Conn., where his son, Daniel Collin, was born February 19, 1734. The latter became the father of James Collin, the grandfather of Mrs. Wheeler, who was born April 15, 1777. He was a large land owner of Dutchess county, having at one time about 1,000 acres, and the family was one of the most prominent in the county. Eli Collin was born in the town of Northeast, where he continued to make his home until 1828, when he removed to the farm now owned by our subject, and was one of the most successful agriculturists of the locality. On February 20, 1830, he married Betsy Finch, and they had nine children: Almira, Julia, James and William, all now deceased; Henry, living in the town of Northeast; Lydia and Myra, both now deceased; Sarah, wife of our subject; and Bryan, living in New York City. Mr. Collin was originally a Whig in politics, later becoming a Republican. He died in 1861, his wife eight years later.

Mr. Wheeler has always been an ardent Democrat in political sentiment, taking an active part in local political matters, and was elected to office before he had reached his majority. He served as assessor for three years, and was commissioner of highways in the town of Amenia. Always public-spirited, every worthy enterprise for the benefit of the community receives his support, and he and his wife attend and contribute liberally to the Presbyterian Church, of which Mrs. Wheeler is a member.

JAMES E. WAITE, a well-known conductor on the New York Central & Hudson River railroad, and one of the most trusted employes of the company, was born July 6, 1843, in the town of Unionvale, Dutchess county, where his father, Joseph Waite, and his grandfather, Joseph Waite, were also born. The latter engaged in farming there, and married a Miss Draper, by whom he had seven children: Joseph, George, Patience, Mary, Sarah, Katie A. and Valley.

Joseph Waite, the father of James E., was a prominent citizen in his day. He acquired a good practical education in the schools of his native town, and then put his fine talent and skill in mechanical work to good use as a carpenter and builder. In this business he was regarded as an expert, and his work is to be seen in many of the best houses of that region. He built many of the substantial residences of Dover Plains, including the one now occupied by our subject. He was held in high esteem by all classes and took great interest in town affairs, but he never aspired to political distinction and many times refused to become a candidate for public office, although strongly urged to do so. In early manhood he married Miss Amelia Applebee, of the town of Washington, Dutchess county, and they had ten children, of whom the following five are now recalled: John, who married Catherine VanWagenen; William, who married Louisa Rozell; Charles, who married Susan J. Bortem; Nehemiah (deceased); and James E.

The subject of our sketch availed himself of the educational advantages to be found in his native place, and then learned the carpenter's trade with his father, for whom he worked for some time. Finding the business un congenial, he engaged in farming, but soon afterward began driving a stage, and continued this business for sixteen years, when he entered service on the Harlem railroad as a brakeman. After eleven years he was promoted to conductor, which position he has now held for twelve years to the entire satisfaction of his employers and the public. He is an active worker in the Masonic fraternity, a member of the Mutual Benefit Association, and of Lodge No. 666, of Dover Plains, in which he has held most of the offices. He has twice served as junior warden, and is master at the present time. He married Miss Carrie Rozell, who was also a native of the town of Unionvale, Dutchess county, where she received an excellent education. Two children were born to them, neither of whom is now living: (1) Clarence J. Waite was born in Unionvale, in 1863, and after acquiring a good education there engaged in mercantile business at Pawling, Dutchess county. Later he entered the service of the Harlem Railroad Co., and remained until his death, which occurred December 30, 1890. In 1887 he was married to Miss Kittie Brusie, daughter of Wesley Brusie, a leading farmer of the town of Northeast, and his wife Helen. One child blessed this union, Clarice J. Waite, born March 14, 1891. (2) Irving Waite, the second son of our subject, was born in Unionvale in 1865, and attended the district schools of that vicinity till death terminated his bright and promising life at the age of twelve years.

The Rozell family has been prominent in Unionvale for many years. Albert Rozell, Mrs. Waite's grandfather, was born and educated there and later became a leading farmer of the town. He married Miss Betsy Horton, of the same place, and had twelve children, of whom only five are now known: Beekman, Albro, James, Mary and Albert (Mrs. Waite's father). Albert, like his father, was educated in the common schools of the town, and then engaged in farming. As a politician he wielded great influence in town and county affairs, and he held the office of sheriff for many years, as well as various positions in his township. He and his wife, Tamar Orton, reared a family of eight children, all but one of whom married. The names, with dates of birth and their respective partners in matrimony, are as follows: Emma, 1837—John Schafer; Henry, 1838—Lizzie Van Black; James, 1841—Annie Green; Carrie, 1843—James Waite; Rhoda, 1845—Rennselaer Lane; George, 1852, is not married; Celia, 1854—Elias Fleet; and Alice, 1856—Benjamin Squires. The younger children of our subject's grandfather Waite all married and settled in Dutchess county.

George Waite was born in Unionvale,

Dutchess county, in 1789, and received a common-school education there. He then learned the shoemaker's trade, at which he worked for some thirty years, when he engaged in farming. He was a Democrat in politics, and held numerous town offices, serving as justice of the peace for a number of terms. He married Miss Lucinda Bently, daughter of William Bently, a farmer of Beekman, and his wife, Susanna Spencer. Eight children were born to George and Lucinda Waite: (1) Joseph died in infancy. (2) George W. Waite was born in 1812, in the town of Beekman. After his school days were ended he learned the carpenter's trade, at which he worked all his life. He married Almira Van Wike, daughter of Theo. Van Wike, a farmer of Unionvale, and had four children: Frank Waite married Mary Hayte; Fred O. married Annie Frier; Cornelius married Ida Waite; and Kate married William Voce. (3) Neilson was born in the town of Beekman in 1816, and engaged in farming, teaching and merchandising. He married Miss Annie White and had two children: Dwight and Emma J. (4) Cornwell Waite was born in the town of Beekman in 1818, and was educated in the common schools of Unionvale. Early in life he engaged in farming in that town, and continued until he was thirty-five or forty years old, when he moved to South Dover, purchasing the Harrison Sheldon farm, containing 160 acres of land, where he has now resided for a number of years. His first wife was Miss Silby Cornwell, daughter of James and Cloey (Sherman) Cornwell, farmers of the town of Beekman, Dutchess county. By this marriage he had one child, Harriet A., who married Mr. Aldridge, of Pawling, and had three children: Allie and Cornelia (who are not married), and Morton (the latter dying in infancy). The mother of this family died in 1850. Mr. Waite afterward married Mrs. Hannah (Ward) Sheldon, widow of Harrison Sheldon, of Dover. They have had four children: Minnie Waite, who was educated in the Poughkeepsie Normal School, is not married. Henry C. Waite, who was born in Dover town, and was educated at Mt. Union (Ohio) College and at Wilberham, Mass., graduating at the latter place. He taught school for a few years, and is now connected with the Erie railroad, in the mail department, in New York City. He married Addie Kingsbury, but has no children. Irving P. was educated at Prangs, Dover Plains, and De Garmo Institute, at Rhinebeck. He has always been engaged in farming, and is not married. William A. was educated at Wilberham, Mass., and at Mt. Union (Ohio) College. He taught school for a number of years, and then took a clerical position at New York with the Erie railroad; he is now engaged in the express business in New York City. He married Anna Davis, and has two children: Stewart D. and Eleanor. (5) Helen is not married. (6) Harriet married Moses Waite, a carpenter of Dover, and had one child, George S. White. (7) Catharine remained unmarried. (8) Sarah was born in the town of Unionvale, and married Isaac D. Tripp, a farmer and miller of that town. They had no children.

Patience Waite, the third child of Joseph Waite, Sr., was born in the town of Unionvale, and married Richard Cornwell, a farmer of the town of Beekman. They had one son, Joseph Cornwall, who died at an early age.

Mary Waite, also a native of the town of Unionvale, married Baria Austin, a farmer of that town. They had three children: Aaron B., who married Julia Lane; Sarah, Mrs. David Amie, and Jane, Mrs. William W. Abel.

Sarah Waite married John Hall, a farmer of Unionvale, and had thirteen children: Platt, De Peyster, Jay, Katie (who married David Hawer), Polly, Phœbe (who married Henry P. Amie), Ellen, Jane, Mary, and four others, whose names are not known.

Katie A. married William McDowel, a farmer of the town of Warrington, Dutchess county, and had two children: Joseph (who married Miss Van Wagenen) and Katie Ann.

Valley Waite married William Hall, a farmer. He was a cripple, but filled a prominent place in the community, and during the greater part of his life was collector of the town of Unionvale. They had two children, Joseph and George.

UNDERHILL BUDD, the subject of our sketch, one of the most progressive and intelligent agriculturists of the town of Wappinger, Dutchess county, is a descendant of one of the oldest Colonial families in this country. He is the seventh son of Elijah Budd, a prominent farmer of Dutchess county in his day. Elijah Budd was born in the year 1781, on the same day that Lord Cornwallis surrendered his army to Gen. Washington at Yorktown, at the close of the Revolution. Elijah's father, Gilbert, came from Westchester county, and settled in the Highlands, north of Cold Spring. From there he came to Fishkill, and purchased a farm just west of the village on the old post road, known as the Old Budd homestead, and owned at the present time by Frederick Haight. Here Elijah was born. After the death of his father, Elijah came into possession of the farm. In 1806 Elijah married Abigail Sebring, daughter of Isaac Sebring, an extensive and prosperous farmer of Dutchess county. Isaac Sebring married, December 31, 1776, Catherine Van Benschoten, a daughter of Tunis Van Benschoten, of New Hackensack, Dutchess county. Isaac Sebring died in his seventy-eighth year, his wife, Catherine (Van-Benschoten) in her seventy-seventh year. Tunis Van Benschoten died in his eighty-first year, his wife, Annie (Sleight), in her ninety-first year. Elijah Budd sold the old homestead, and bought a farm of John Brinckerhodd, on the Hudson, now Low Point, and moved there in the year 1822.

On this farm Underhill Budd was born August 3, 1823. On October 12, 1852, Mr. Budd married a daughter of Matthew I. Snook, whose ancestors emigrated from Holland in the early part of the seventeenth century. His father was in the American army through the Revolutionary war. After his marriage Mr. Budd went west to the State of Illinois, to look after the estate of a deceased brother who left a large landed estate, and lived there three years. Mr. Budd became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church at the age of sixteen years, and while in Illinois he received a license as a local preacher, and was associated with a regular Conference preacher, on the Sabbath preaching sometimes twice, and riding from ten to twenty miles. He has sustained his relations to the Church for forty years, and has been a member thereof some fifty-six years. During that period he has filled almost every position of trust in the Church, and has never received or solicited any compensation for his labor whatever, giving his time and labor freely for the cause of Christianity, and also paying liberally toward the support of the Church. At the end of three years he returned to Dutchess county, and took charge of his father's farm. His elder brothers having all left home, he felt it his duty to look after them during the period of fifteen years in the faithful discharge of his duty. His mother died in the year 1866 at the age of eighty-one years. His father lived until 1869, and died in the eighty-ninth year of his age. Mr. Budd stayed on the farm until the estate was sold and settled up, and then, in 1875, moved to the farm of his father-in-law, who died in that same year in the eightieth year of his age. On this farm Mr. Budd still lives, and although in his seventy-fourth year he is active, both physically and mentally. Mr. Budd lays his activity to the fact that he has always abstained from the use of tobacco and spirituous liquors in any form. Mr. and Mrs. Budd have two sons: Prof. I. S., a graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music at Boston, and is now residing in the city of Newburgh, engaged in the profession of music; and Matthew V. B. Budd, who owns a farm adjoining his father, and is living at home at the present time.

SKETCH OF ENGLISH HISTORY OF BUDD FAMILY.—Baron Gene Budd, a great soldier and commanding officer under Charles the Great, who established the great empire. Charles gave him a large body of land on the coast of what is called Normandy. Here he ruled like a freeman, and he and his descendants were in many battles. They were called French when the Normans invaded that part of France, and they fought till they were overcome and slain, only a few men left, and their land taken by the conquerors. Some scattered; but William Budd remained and worked on the seashore, at a place called Rye. His sons and grandsons were in time allowed their land, and they became soldiers. Here William the Great came when his barons wished to slay him; but Richard Budd gathered his men and protected him till the Duke, through his assistance, was able to check the insurgents and bring them to a better understanding. During the Norman Conquest three sons of William Budd crossed over to England, and are supposed to have named the town of Rye, County of Sussex, England, leaving men there for certain occasions. The father of Richard settled back in Normandy, and inherited his father's feudal rights.

The Duke rewarded Richard Budd by giving him greater possessions. His son John inherited them, and when Edward of England died he was the first to muster his knights and soldiers and land at Rye, England, to defend the claim of William of Normandy to the throne of England, and in the great battle which took place it is claimed by our ancestors that his valor turned the tide of battle, in which the Saxons were defeated. After this battle William the Great was made king of England. John Budd married a sister of William the Great, and was made Earl of Sussex. John Budd and his descendants built up Rye, but the town and all the records were burnt in the wars which followed. They held positions of soldiers and knights. They married in the Nevils, Brownes, and Montagues, and during the war of the Red and White Roses many of them were slain with the brave Earl and Lord Montague, their cousins, who fell at Barnet with axe and sword in hand after piling heaps of slain around them. Edward the Fourth having secured the crown, the descendants of the Nevils, Budds and Brownes found no favor with him or his reigning heirs, and many of their large estates were confiscated.

John Budd resolved to find freedom in America, and made the first settlement in Rye, Westchester county. It was on the past renowned history of the Budd family in France that Joseph Bonaparte, Count Survillers, ex-King of Spain, while visiting Col. John Budd, at Budds Lake, Morris Co., N. J., claimed the aged sire to be of high French blood, and everything went along smooth enough with them until Joseph's daughter happened to find a picture of Napoleon on horseback, being led by the Russian bear, which had been placed in some room unknowingly to the Colonel. The Countess brought the picture to her father, in tears, and Joseph, finding the Colonel in the dining-room, threw the picture at his head, and soon the blood was high on both sides, Bonaparte claiming the Colonel a traitor to his great French ancestors, and the Colonel claiming Joseph to be a coward by deserting his brother Napoleon in his great trial; and that he knew nothing of the picture, it having been placed in the room by some summer visitor who had recently left. The hot blood did not abate in the quarrel, and the Colonel ordered Joseph Bonaparte to leave the house and premises without delay, which he did and returned to Bordentown, never to visit the lake again.

PROMINENT MEMBERS OF THE BUDD FAMILY IN THE EARLY HISTORY OF THE COUNTRY. Thomas Budd was blown up in the "Randolph," while engaging a British frigate during the Revolutionary war. John Budd, the first son of Daniel Budd, was born April 5, 1762, in the town of Chester, and at the age of sixteen years entered the Continental service under George Washington. He had charge of a battery when the British were advancing on Springfield, and kept the enemy in check until the militia gathered in force, which was about the time the "Red Coats" (as he called them) made a charge on his guns. Seeing that he could not save them, he ordered his horses to be cut loose, and under their fire and shouts of Yankee curses to halt, made good his retreat. The militia having gathered, the British got the worst of it, and the guns were recovered. At the battle of Monmouth he took part on that hot day, and was made colonel. Joseph Budd was a captain in the war of 1812, commanding his company at Sandy Hook, N. J., and other places of defense. Daniel Budd, born July 27, 1722, was assessor of the township of Roxiticus, N. J., and a captain in the reserves of the Revolutionary war. James Budd resided in Burlington, and was a member of the Colonial Assembly in 1668. He was drowned in the Delaware at Burlington, N. J., in 1692. Gilbert Budd was a surgeon in the British navy for thirty years. He returned to this country after the Revolutionary war, and lived with his cousin, Col. Gilbert Budd, of Mamaroneck, N. Y., till his death, which occurred in 1805, when he was aged eighty-five years.

AMERICAN HISTORY OF BUDD FAMILY FROM 1632.—John and Joseph Budd came to this country in the year 1632. They arrived in New Haven in 1639 as one of the first planters of that place [New Haven Col. Rec., Vol. 1-7-425.] He removed to Southhold, L. I., from there to Rye, Westchester Co., N. Y., in 1661. In 1663 John Budd was deputy from Rye to the General Court of Connecticut. He was the first proprietor of Apawquamus, or Budd's Neck, purchased of the natives Sachem, Shamrocke and other Indians. The original conveyance is on the records of Westchester county, dated November 8, 1661, and was so large a grant of land that the other proprietors of Rye were jealous, and they petitioned the General Court assembled at Hartford (now Connecticut) not to confirm; but John Budd's influence was such that he retained his purchase. He left sons, John and Joseph, and his will dated October 13, 1669, bequeathed to his son John all his portion of the mills on Blind brook, and to Joseph all of Budd's Neck. Joseph Budd's influence with the Crown obtained a patent dated the 20th of February, 1695; but, owing to deficiencies in the boundary line between New York and Connecticut, the Courts refused to act on this patent, and it was not until 1720 that it was confirmed under the great seal of the Province of New York. The patentees then yielded yearly to the Governor, on the fast day of the Blessed Virgin Mary, the annual rent of one pound and nineteen shillings. This was under George I.

Lieut. John Budd married Catherine Browne, a descending relative of Sir Anthony Browne, the founder of the Montague family and Henry V of England. Lieut. John Budd left two sons, John and Joseph, and two daughters, Judith and Jane. Lieut. John Budd died 1670. [M. 3 Hartford, Vol. 1-425 contains his will.]

Joseph Budd, the second son of John Budd (1), was known as Capt. Budd in 1700. He was a prominent officer in 1701, and justice of the peace from 1710 to 1716 and from 1720 to 1722. In 1720 he obtained a patent for the tract purchased by his father known as Budd's Neck. He died in 1722, and left children: John, Joseph, Elisha, Underhill.

John Budd, son of Joseph, is mentioned in the records of Rye, from 1720 to 1745. He inherited the estate on Budd's Neck, which he sold in 1745, mostly to Peter Jay. Gilbert Budd, born in Westchester county, in 1736, grandfather of Underhill Budd (subject of our sketch), married Deborah Searls, born June 14, 1738; children: Underhill, Seeley, Elijah (1), Mary P., William, Gilbert (1), John, Gilbert (2) and Elijah (2). Elijah Budd, father of Underhill, married Abigail Sebring; children: Isaac S. (died in his seventy-fourth year), Van Benschoten (died in his eighty-fourth year), John J., Jacob (died in his eighty-fifth year), Tunis G., Matthew, Margaret (died in her seventy-eighth year), Maria M. (died in her seventy-sixth year), Underhill, Amelia A. and Edward. The father, Elijah Budd, died in his eighty-ninth year; the mother, Abigail (Sebring), died in her eighty-first year.

PROMINENT MEMBERS OF THE FAMILY OF TO-DAY.—James H. Budd, who was congressman, and is now Governor of California; Joseph Budd, judge of Superior Court, Stockton, Cal.; Oliver H. Budd, who is now serving his second term in the Legislature; James Budd, president of the Agricultural College of Iowa; W. H. Budd, lawyer, New York City; William Budd, lawyer and senator, Mt. Holly, N. J.; Joseph K. Budd, banker, St. Louis; Dr. Henry Budd, Geneva, N. Y., and others.

HENRY B. BEVIER. The Bevier family has been so long and so prominently identified with the leading interests of this region that to be ignorant of its history "argues one's self unknown." From the days of the Huguenot pioneer, Louis Bevier, one of that little company of exiles who came to America in 1660, to the present time, the bearers of this name have been distinguished for the possession of those qualities which constitute good citizenship, and many have held positions of honor in the public service.

Henry B. Bevier, our subject, is a well-known druggist and apothecary of Matteawan, Dutchess county, born August 31, 1857, at Napanoch, N. Y., the son of Dr. Benjamin R. Bevier and his wife, Ellen M. Bange. His education was obtained at his native place, in the public schools, and at the Van Vleck Seminary. At an early age he entered the employ of Alexander A. Taylor, a druggist at Summit, N. J., and while there he passed the examination before the State Board of Pharmacy, obtaining a license to follow his chosen calling. Later he was employed as a clerk in Newark, N. J., and other places; but in 1877 he went to Matteawan, where he purchased the drug store of Daniel Y. Bayley, which he has since conducted. His business is now very extensive, and he is the proprietor of Bevier's Expectorant and Bevier's Malaria Pills, remedies whose effectiveness has given them an immense sale, especially in the eastern and middle States.

Like all of his family, he is public-spirited and takes great interest in local progress. He was elected coroner on the Republican ticket in November, 1894, for a term of three years, having a majority over his competitor of more than 2,000 votes. As a member of the board of education he has done much to maintain the efficiency of the Matteawan schools. He is a trustee of the Matteawan Savings Bank, and a member of various social and fraternal societies—the Matteawan Club, the F. & A. M., Beacon Lodge No. 283, Newburg Chapter, and the order of Foresters, "Court Queen," of Hudson.

On September 14, 1887, he was married to Miss Kate Brown, a member of a leading family of Matteawan, and daughter of the late Monroe Brown and his wife, Mary Jones Brown. They reside on the corner of Schenk avenue and Ackerman street, and their pleasant home is gladdened by two sons, Benjamin, born in 1888, and Monroe, born in 1893. Mr. and Mrs. Bevier attended the Presbyterian Church, and are prompt to lend their sympathy to any worthy cause.

Mr. Bevier is of the tenth generation in direct descent from the Huguenot exile, and Conrad Bevier, his great-grandfather, who was an officer in the Revolutionary army. Dr. Benjamin R. Bevier, his grandfather, one of the most prominent physicians of his day, was born September 10, 1782, and died at Napanoch, New York, June 17, 1866. As a practitioner, he was distinguished for the rapidity and accuracy of his diagnoses in difficult cases, his fidelity to his patients, and his genial manner. The latter excellent quality both his son, Dr. Benj. R. Bevier, Jr., and his grandson, Henry B., inherit to a remarkable degree. He traveled mostly on horseback, and may be said to have lived nearly forty years in the saddle. In a civil capacity, his life was full of labors, and honors. He had a remarkably sound judgment, abundant executive resources, unflinching integrity, and correct and systematic business habits. When only thirty years of age, Gov. D. D. Tompkins signaled his respect and esteem for him by making him one of the judges of the Ulster county court, which office he soon resigned, as it interfered too much with his professional work. He was twice a candidate for Congress in his district at times when the Old Whig party, with which he was connected, was some 3,000 in the minority, and was defeated in one instance by only one hundred and fifty, and in the other by only six votes. He subsequently served the county several terms in the State Legislature, and was also supervisor of his town.

On February 5, 1807, he married Catharine E. Ten Eyck, and reared a family, among whom was Dr. Benjamin R. Bevier, Jr., our subject's father, who was born January 21, 1828, at Napanoch, and after completing his literary studies at New Paltz Academy and the Dutchess County Academy, studied medicine in Poughkeepsie with Drs. Cooper and Hughson, and later at the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York City, graduating in 1849. He has ever since followed his profession in his native town, and is still in active practice. He is a leading member of the Ulster County Medical Society, and takes a prominent share in local progress, having represented his town in the board of supervisors, and served two terms as county coroner. On June 12, 1850, he was married to Miss Ellen M. Bange, and has had six children, of whom two died in infancy. The surviving four are: Mary B., the wife of Prof. Brainard G. Smith, of Hamilton College; Henry B., the subject of this sketch; Conrad B., a licensed pharmacist, now in his brother's employ; and Irene, who is at home.

The maternal grandfather of our subject, the late Frederick Bange, was born in Holland in 1801, and came to this country when he was ten years old. Immediately after his arrival he was apprenticed to Squire White, of Hartford, Conn. He was afterward a clerk for Mr. Solomon Porter, and while in his employ accumulated $1,000, with which he engaged in the crockery business, importing his goods from England. In time, he made a large fortune, and then began a shipping business between New London, Conn., and the West Indies, sending out horses and mules, exchanging them for sugar and molasses. While in this business, he became involved through the failure of those whom he had assisted, and with that strict integrity that had always characterized him, he paid every cent of his indebtedness, and began a new financial life as a poor man. In striving to obtain what was due him from a sea captain who had defrauded him, he was obliged to go to Mexico, and while there formed the plan of engaging in the hide and wool trade. Assisted by friends in New York, he fitted out a vessel, and later several vessels, of which he became the owner. Thus began a trade which has made many fortunes. Mr. Bange regained his lost competence in this trade, and then retired, buying a country seat on the Passaic river at Newark, N. J., where he resided for several years. He was induced to buy the tannery at Lackawack, Ulster county, N. Y., and this was conducted several years by his son Henry. Then he purchased real estate and water power at Napanoch, N. Y., upon portions of which Forges were built, where railroad axles and bar-iron were manufactured. He made the iron for the Niagara and Ohio suspension bridge. In 1852 he built the Napanoch Blast Furnace, and opened the iron-mine, which he operated for four or five years, but the iron trade becoming much depressed he was obliged to make an assignment for the benefit of his creditors. The entire property was sold, and he was left in his old age, after a life of unremitting toil, with very little means. He was one of the kindest, best and most unselfish of men, always considerate in regard to the welfare and happiness of his family and friends. He was honest and upright in all his transactions, and set an example in his life which all would do well to imitate.

JOHNS SCUTT, a prominent business man and manufacturer of Millerton, Dutchess county, is a native of the county, born at Pine Plains, February 21, 1821. His ancestors on the paternal side came from Germany in the early part of the last century, settling in Columbia county, N. Y., where his grandfather, John Scutt, and his father, William Scutt, were born, the latter in the year 1777.

William Scutt, our subject's father, was a farm laborer by occupation, and the greater part of his life was spent in the towns of Pine Plains, Northeast and Amenia, Dutchess county. Always industrious, thrifty and steady in his habits, he was held in great esteem by all who knew him, and without being a member of any Church he gave evidence in his daily life of high morality. Politically he was a Democrat. He married Hannah Strever, a descendant of an old Holland-Dutch family, of Columbia county. Fourteen children were born to this union. The father died in 1887, in his ninety-first year, and the mother in April, 1840.

The subject of our sketch attended the schools of Amenia during boyhood, acquiring a good education for the time, and he devoted to his studies the same energy which has made his business career such a notable success, while his subsequent reading has kept him well informed on current topics. At the age of nineteen he left school and began work on a farm; but after four years of this, having decided to learn the blacksmith's trade, he went to Chenango county to work with John Tryon, to whom he hired for one year at $4 per month. In the following year, 1844, they formed a partnership which lasted one year, when Mr. Tryon moved to the West. A new firm was then organized under the name of Moon, Dodge & Scutt, Mr. Scutt paying fifty dollars and becoming an equal partner. After three years with this firm he moved to Chenango Forks, and formed an equal partnership with Myron Hollister, remaining one year. In 1849 he opened a shop of his own at Gallatinville, and in the spring of 1854 moved to Northeast Center, where he engaged in the same business for two years. In September, 1856, he purchased his present shop at Millerton, from Paine & Fuller, and began the business of wagon-making and blacksmithing, employing three wagon-makers and five blacksmiths. In 1861 he built a furnace for the manufacture of plows and castings, and for general custom work, and as this was the only furnace in the vicinity he speedily secured a large trade. He bought the patterns of the Eddy plow, of the "Rough and Ready," in Washington county, and has since manufactured and sold several in all parts of the county. Success has attended all his enterprises, and he has won a high standing in business circles.

In 1843, Mr. Scutt married Miss Julia Ann Eddy, of the town of Pine Plains, and has had six children: Charles, a prosperous young painter of Millerton; Jane, who married Edgar Drum; and four who have died—Melinda, John R., Adelbert and William—the latter passing away in infancy. The mother died April 8, 1890, and is buried at Pine Plains. Mr. Scutt is one of the pioneer members of the Republican party, voting that ticket in 1856, and has been an influential worker in local affairs. He held the office of supervisor in 1886, 1887 and 1890, has been justice of the peace for thirty-two years, and has lately been re-elected for another term. He became a Freemason in 1858, and has taken great interest in the work of the order, having held every office in Webatuck Lodge, No. 480.

CHARLES S. VAN KLEECK. The Van Kleeck family originated in Holland, and the first of the name to emigrate to this country was Baltus (the great-great-grandfather of our subject), who came to New York City in the seventeenth century, locating on the land whereon Trinity Church now stands. It is not known in what year he came to Poughkeepsie, but he built the first house in 1702, and was the largest landholder in the country. He represented the county in the 16th and 17th Colonial Assembly, and died in the spring of 1717. He had six children: Barent; Johannis, born in 1680; Lawrence, who died in 1769; Peter, Sarah and Elizabeth.

Col. Barent Van Kleeck (who was a colonel in the French and Indian wars) married Antoinette Palmatier, and six children were born to them: Baltus (born in 1707), Michael, Ahazuerus, Peter, Catherine and Sarah. Peter married Antoinette Frear, the daughter of a French Huguenot, and their family comprised eleven children: Barent, Simon, Antoinette, Levi, Jeremiah, Henry, Peter P., Deborah, Mary, Trientje and David. Three sons were soldiers in the Revolutionary war, two of them being killed in the battle and buried in unknown graves. Barent, the father of these, bought 1,640 acres of land in the town of Lagrange.

Peter P. Van Kleeck, youngest child of this branch of the family, was the grandfather of our subject, and was born in the town of Lagrange August 21, 1757. He was the youngest son, and when the other boys enlisted in the army he remained at home to work the farm and care for his aged parents. At that time many farmers in the town were called on to carry provisions to the troops, and he among the rest was engaged in that occupation. On one occasion he was sent with his load to Washington's headquarters at Newburg, and it being a severely cold day Gen. Washington came out and invited him to go into the house and get warm. He did so, and the General gave him a glass of wine, after which they spent nearly two hours together in conversation. He afterward fought in the battle of White Plains in the Revolution.

Peter P. Van Kleeck was married three times. His first wife was Miss Meddaugh, who bore him two children: Deborah and Sarah; Sarah died. His second wife was Emily Sabin, whose children were: John, Simon and Syrena; for his third wife he married Charlotte Sickles, of Albany, whose father, John Sickles, was a captain in the Revolutionary war. Of this union four children were born: Catherine, Levi, George and Andrew J.

Andrew Jackson Van Kleeck, the father of our subject, was born May 22, 1829, on the old homestead in the town of Lagrange, which had been the birthplace of his father and grandfather before him. When he was four years old his parents removed to Poughkeepsie. Here he lived until thirteen years of age when he commenced sailing on the ocean. At the age of eighteen he was fireman on the "Christian City," and when twenty-eight he became engineer on the "Empire," a vessel plying between New York City and Albany. This occupation he followed until he was thirty years of age, when he returned to Poughkeepsie and worked at the mason's trade for ten years. He then bought the homestead farm in Lagrange town, and there remained the rest of his life. When a boy he attended the old Dutchess County Academy at Poughkeepsie, and was a man of much intelligence, well posted in current events. For nine years he was a member of the volunteer fire department at Poughkeepsie, and he was a member of the Mason's Union. The old homestead farm was surveyed in July, 1768, and the father of Andrew helped to drive the stakes. This property, which originally contained 1,640 acres, was later divided up into four farms.

Andrew J. Van Kleek was married November 6, 1851, when he was twenty-two years old, to Abigail A. Alverson, and the following children were born to them: Susie E., Edgar (who died January 14, 1857), John P., Mary, Gaius Andrew, Minnie (who died December 15, 1866), Charles Swift, and Katherine Ethel (who died August 15, 1875). Of these, Susie E. is the wife of Fred Mulcox; John P. married Florence Teats, and they have three children—Raymond, Clifton and Leola, only one of whom is living.

M J. LYNCH, florist, Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, is a native of Ireland, born June 8, 1846, in county Limerick, and is a son of Matthew and Margaret (Fitzgerald) Lynch. They had a family of five children: John, Patrick, Thomas, Bridget and M. J., all now deceased except the last named. The father, who was a gardener by occupation, died when our subject was but six months old.

In 1847 or '48 the widowed mother came to America, bringing her infant boy (M. J.) with her; but two years later they returned to Ireland, where he remained until he was eighteen years old, attending school up to the age of eleven. At that early time of life he took an engagement with the Earl of Clare, whose estate lay on the river Shannon, to work on the farm and in the garden, at fivepence a day. During his service of seven years on this estate his wages were increased from time to time, and when he left he was in the enjoyment of a pretty fair income for a boy. In 1864, in company with his mother and brother, Thomas, he set sail for America, his brother Patrick having preceded him in 1862 (the other brother, John, and sister, Bridget, had both died). On arriving in New York our subject soon became impatient to find work, and it so chanced that one day he met a lady on the street with whom he engaged to go to Staten Island to take charge of her greenhouse.

Without waiting to apprise his mother of his intentions, the lad set out at once and landed on the island with just twenty-five cents in his pocket, which he invested in peaches. His pay to commence with was to be $8 per month, and at the end of a fortnight he asked for a part of his wages, but did not get it then, nor since. However, he succeeded in borrowing enough material to enable him to write to his mother to let her know of his whereabouts. He now threw up his somewhat unprofitable situation and engaged with a C. G. Genoux at $14 per month, at Clifton, Staten Island; but a year and a half later we find him in the employ of Timothy Ryan, florist, at Yonkers, N. Y., at $18 per month. Receiving, however, an offer of $20 a month as assistant gardener under William Chalmers, Mr. Lilenthal's gardener, Mr. Lynch soon made a change, and with this gentleman remained one year. The next engagement was with W. H. Aspinwall, of Tarrytown, N. Y. (now the Rockefeller place), as foreman of the greenhouse department; but after twelve months he went to Col. Babbit, of Newton, N. J., laid out his grounds and built extensive greenhouses for him. In 1868 he again made a change, this time accepting the position of head gardener to William B. Dinsmore, of "The Locusts", on the Hudson, having charge of the greenhouses and ornamental grounds, and here he remained two years. At the expiry of that time he went to Belleville to lay out J. B. Harvey's grounds and one year later came to Poughkeepsie, where he commenced his present business as florist at the corner of Academy street and South avenue, which property he had previously purchased. He began in a small way, having at first only one greenhouse, 12 x 50 feet in dimensions, a modest nucleus to his present mammoth establishment comprising ten greenhouses, ranging from 100 to 160 feet, employment being given to five men all the year 'round. In addition to this he owns valuable property at No. 256 Main street, where he has his seed and flower store. All seeds sent out by him are tested before shipment, and parties desiring plants, bulbs, shrubs or seeds may order as safely by mail as though they were on the grounds to make their own selection.

In 1870 Mr. Lynch was married to Catherine, daughter of John and Mary (Murphy) Powers, of Rhinebeck, Dutchess county, and natives of County Wexford, Ireland, but both now deceased, as is also Mr. Lynch's mother. The children of John and Mary Powers were: Patrick and James, both liverymen of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Edward, of Chicago; Thomas, who was a veterinary surgeon, and is now deceased; John, who was a liquor dealer, and is now deceased; and Catherine. The children born to our subject and wife are: Thomas and John, associated with their father in business; Mary; Maggie, a bright, happy girl, who died at the age of sixteen; James and Kate. All the family are members of St. Mary's Catholic Church at Poughkeepsie, and in politics Mr. Lynch is neutral.

AUGUST KOCH. The subject of this sketch is a well-known merchant tailor of Poughkeepsie, N. Y. He was born at Leutnitz, Fuerstenthum Schwarzburgh-Rudolstadt, Germany, March 2, 1834, and is the youngest of nine children, four sons and five daughters, of Nicolaus Casper Koch and his wife, Anna Barbara, a Miss Fridrich, also of said place, now both deceased.

The early life of A. Koch was spent in his native town. At the age of six years he commenced his schooling, and was a regular scholar up to the age of fourteen, when he received as good an education as the average children at that time.

At the age of fifteen he left his home, going to Stadt Remda, Sachs Weimer, to learn his trade with Ernest Heinze, one of the best, if not the best, master tailors in that city. At the age of nineteen Mr. Koch came to America, landing in New York May 21, 1853, where he remained, working at his trade, until July, 1854. He then went to Albany, still working at his trade in that city. In November, 1855, he came to Poughkeepsie, and was engaged as cutter by the late Jacob Bahret, then a well-known merchant tailor and clothier.

In 1856 Mr. Koch married his estimable wife, Miss Julia Caroline Bahret, a daughter of his employer; their married life has been a very pleasant one. Four children were born to them, three sons and one daughter, as follows: Charles Henry, William Edward, Julia and Augustus Wesley. The eldest died when an infant. William is a plumber and tinsmith by trade; he married Miss Sadie S. Karcher, three children being born to them—Ernest Harrison, Ethel J. and Florence C.

In 1866 Mr. Koch formed a co-partnership in the merchant-tailoring business with J. J. Bahret, a brother of his wife, and took full charge of the cutting department. This partnership continued up to 1883, when poor health made it necessary for him to retire from the business, selling his interest to his partner. No sooner had he gained his health and strength than he again took up the business he always liked so well, and started in merchant tailoring at No. 146 Main street, where he still handles his tape, square and shears. His son Augustus assists him in the business.

Mr. Koch has been an active member of the German M. E. Church since 1854, and has been a hard worker in the Sunday-school for nearly forty years. He is a self-made man, starting in life with no capital, and what he has accumulated has been through his individual efforts, energy and perseverance.

STEPHEN SCOFIELD, one of Poughkeepsie's most prominent, industrious and progressive citizens, who for the past thirty-seven years has been engaged in the business of stair-building, is a native of Wayne county, N. Y., born April 13, 1828.

Lebbens E. Scofield, father of our subject, was born in Dutchess county, in 1801, a son of Ephraim S. Scofield, who in an early day moved from Connecticut to New York State. Lebbens during his lifetime was a resident of three different counties in the Empire State—Dutchess, Wayne and Tompkins—and a portion of his earlier manhood was passed in the town of Fishkill, near the village of Glenham. His first occupation was that of a farmer, he afterward serving as a watchman in factories, etc., this change being occasioned by an accident, whereby he lost the fingers of one hand, thus incapacitating him for manual labor. He married Susan Van de Water, who was born, in 1797, in the town of Fishkill, Dutchess county, of Holland-Dutch ancestry, and eight children bless this union, viz.: Abbie, married to Walter C. De Golyier, and living in Danbury, Conn.; Julia, wife of John Spalding, a florist of New London, Conn.; Stephen, our subject; Edmund, accidentally drowned in a pond at Glenham; Hannah (widow of Horace Crocker), living at Payne, Ohio; Phœbe, deceased wife of Daniel Smith, of Wappingers Falls; Susan, single, a dressmaker, comfortably situated at 103 Pine street, Poughkeepsie; and Harmon C., who died in infancy. The father of this family was called from earth in 1848, and the mother in 1886.

Stephen Scofield, the subject of these lines, received a liberal education for the times, first attending the common schools of Tompkins county, later, when a young man, receiving instruction in a night school in Wappingers Falls, while he worked in a cotton factory. He has always been a great reader, especially of ancient history and mechanics, becoming on most topics a well-informed man. His first occupation in life was farming, and in 1841 he removed with his parents from Tompkins county to Dutchess county, where, in the village of Glenham, he secured work in a cotton factory. After three years engaged in that line, he went to Wappingers Falls, and there worked in a cotton factory until 1847, in which year he commenced learning the trade of carpenter with Stephen Armstrong, in Poughkeepsie. Returning to Wappingers Falls, he continued in that line of work as journeyman until 1859, when he took up the specialty of stair-building—his present business—in Poughkeepsie, where he has since resided, meeting with unqualified success in his occupation, which is a branch of carpentry requiring the highest grade of skill. For many years he was the only exclusive stair-builder in Poughkeepsie—in fact in his section of the country—and his services in buildings have extended from fifty to one hundred miles in all directions. He has done work in Great Barrington, Mass., also in Staten Island, N. Y., in Providence, R. I., and in New York City.

In 1850 Mr. Scofield was united in marriage with Miss Letitia Mott, daughter of Abram and Margaret Mott, of Bangall, Dutchess county, and two children have been born to them: Isabella, married to J. Frank Clark, of Norwich, Conn., who has charge of Osgood's drug business in that city; and Frank L., a musician, leader of an orchestra and band, who married Miss Florence Eastmead (daughter of Charles and Janet Eastmead), by whom he has four children. Mrs. Florence Scofield died in 1890, and for his second wife Frank L.

married Maud Rounds, daughter of Charles F. Rounds.

Mr. Scofield in his political preferences has been a Republican ever since the formation of that party, prior to which he was a Whig, and has always been most pronounced in his views, as well as an active worker in the party. In religious faith he is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Socially, he is a charter member of the K. of P., Armor Lodge No. 107, Poughkeepsie; and of the I. O. O. F., Fallkill Lodge, No. 297, Siloam Encampment No. 36, and Excelsior Rebekah Degree Lodge No. 7, all of Poughkeepsie. He has always taken a zealous interest in fraternal work, and in the K. of P. he is past chancellor, while in the I. O. O. F. he has passed all the chairs and been a delegate to the Grand Encampment.

One act in Mr. Scofield's life, for the betterment of his fellowmen, is his determined and uncompromising fight against the use of tobacco in any form, contending that it is an incentive to the worse habit of drinking. He, himself, is strictly temperate, a man of bright understanding, and an excellent conversationalist. A firm and enduring friend, it may also be said of him that he has never been a bitter or vindictive enemy, and he enjoys the respect and esteem of all with whom he comes in contact.

GEORGE W. KIDDER is a successful coal and lumber dealer of Staatsburg, Dutchess county. From researches that have been made it has been ascertained that the Kidder family is one of the ancient families of England. Some account relating to a transfer of land there dated as early as 1370, in which the name of Kydder is a party, is said to be still extant. Tradition says that they are of the stock of ancient Britons, and existed as a family previous to the incursions of the Saxons, Danes, or Romans, and were not disturbed at the Conquest.

Nelson Kidder, the father of our subject, was born at East Alstead, N. H., August 22, 1803, was a man of more than ordinary ability, well-informed, and highly successful in his chosen occupation—that of farming. On December 22, 1829, he married Sophia George, daughter of Ezra George, of Acworth, N. H., where she was born July 22, 1803, and they became the parents of five children: Clarissa.

Geo. W. Kidder

deceased wife of Mr. Roys, of Alstead, N. H.; Miranda (Mrs. Sawyer), deceased; Erastus E., engaged in the lumber business at Alstead; Valaria, the wife of Andrew Morrison, a large farmer of Alstead; and George Wilder, the subject of this sketch. The father was a strong Democrat, but did not take an active part in political matters, though he was naturally one of the leading men of the community. He was a great Church worker, belonging to the Methodist denomination, and was one of twelve who built the Brook church at East Alstead, where his death occurred December 21, 1871. There his estimable wife also died, May 26, 1883.

At East Alstead, Cheshire Co., N. H., George W. Kidder was born April 10, 1845, and in the common schools of the place acquired a good English education. He remained upon the home farm until he had reached his majority, when he purchased a half-interest in a machine shop at Alstead, being a member of the firm of Roob & Kidder for two years, selling out in the fall of 1869, and coming to Staatsburg, Dutchess county. Until the following spring he worked as a carpenter for William Densmore, and then began dealing in lumber and building material, as a member of the firm of Herrick & Kidder, which connection was continued for five years, or until after the fire in April, 1875, when the partnership was dissolved. Going to New York City, he was for ten years employed by the Mutual Benefit Ice Co., being weighmaster in the summer and superintendent on the river during the winter season. In 1887 he bought out the coal business of James Roach, at Staatsburg, to which he immediately added a stock of lumber and building material, since when he has carried on business very successfully, having a large and paying trade.

In December, 1874, Mr. Kidder was married to Miss Julia Rersley, daughter of William H. Rersley, of Staatsburg, and to them have been born one son and one daughter: Bertha M. and George Nelson. Mr. and Mrs. Kidder attend the Methodist Church, and in social circles hold an enviable position. Mr. Kidder's sterling integrity and general urbanity of manner have won him a large number of friends in his community. In politics he is a stanch and true Democrat, at National or State elections, but on local matters he votes independently. Socially, he is connected with Rhinebeck Lodge No. 432, F. & A. M.

MYRON SMITH, a well-known citizen of Millbrook, town of Washington, Dutchess county, and who at this writing is holding the office of superintendent of the poor, was born in Amenia, Dutchess county, May 12, 1851, a son of John H. and Maria (Reed) Smith. His early days were spent in the district school, which he attended until fifteen years of age, and in assisting his father at wagon-making. His schooling he finished in a private school at Dover, and for the following three years he clerked in stores at Dover and Wassaic. He then was employed as book-keeper for the New York Condensed Milk Co., at Wassaic, for three years.

On February 18, 1875, Mr. Smith was united in marriage with Mary E., daughter of Henry and Mary H. (Arnold) Tripp. Mrs. Smith's father was a farmer in the town of Washington, but she was born in Amenia April 5, 1854. Of this marriage three children have been born, as follows: Howard, deceased; Edna L. and Frank. After his marriage Mr. Smith located on a farm in Washington town, which he carried on until January 1, 1889, at which time he was made superintendent of the poor of Dutchess county, and has held that position ever since. In this responsible office he has given general satisfaction by his excellent management, and has shown himself to be a man of good business ability, integrity and kindly disposition.

Mr. Smith has always been a stanch Republican, and cast his first Presidential vote for Gen. Grant. He takes a leading part in political affairs in his locality, and has served as assessor of the township for two terms, and has also been inspector of elections. He belongs to the Masonic fraternity and the K. of P., and is a prominent member of the Millbrook Club, at Millbrook, where his social qualities are highly appreciated. In public matters he has always been on the side of progress, ready to assist in all worthy enterprises, and commands the respect and esteem of his fellow citizens.

The Smith family of which our subject is a member is said to have descended from the Rt. Rev. Dr. Smith, who was born in the parish of Prescott, Lancashire, England, about 1460. He was Bishop of Lincoln and Litchfield, and with Sir Richard Sutton, was the founder of Brazenose College, Oxford University. Nehemiah Smith and his brother John came to America about 1638, and located at what is now New London. Conn. Fourteen years later he obtained a grant of land for a homestead on the other side of the river, at what is now known as Poquonock, in the town of Groton. The first house on the land was built by Nehemiah Smith about 1652, on the east side of the road, and was burned down during the Revolutionary war. The second house was built by Nathan Smith, the grandfather of our subject. From Nehemiah Smith the line of descent is as follows: Nehemiah (2); Isaac, born December 29, 1707, married Esther Denison; William, born October 26, 1749, was married, in 1772, to Sarah Smith; Nathan, born at North Lyme, Conn., November 12, 1788, married Nancy Waterman, of Salem, in 1810. To this last named couple five children were born, namely: Sarah M., Gilbert B., Nathan W., Nancy L. and John H.

John H. Smith, father of our subject, was born near New London, Conn., June 1, 1821. He spent his boyhood on his father's farm, and when fifteen years of age left home to learn the wagonmaker's trade. He was married on June 1, 1847, to Maria Reed, a daughter of Myron Reed, of Amenia, N. Y. For some time after his marriage Mr. Smith lived at Amenia; but subsequently removed to Wassaic, where he followed his trade until his death, which occurred in October, 1892. The father was a Republican, and a prominent man in his locality, holding various town offices, such as justice of the peace, etc. He and his wife were consistent members of the Baptist Church and were estimable people. Their children were seven in number, of whom the following record is given: Nathan is a merchant in Amenia Union; Sarah M. married Charles M. Hoyt, a hatter in Danbury, Conn.; Myron is the subject of this sketch; Belinda is a school teacher and has never married; Esther M. married William S. Tripp, a butcher in Millbrook, and is deceased; Edwin D. is a farmer in Poughkeepsie town; and John H. is a wagon maker in Wassaic.

The following short history of the family of our subject's mother will prove of interest. "The Reeds of Amenia were from Norwalk, Conn. In 1759 James Reed was one of a company of Connecticut troops who passed through Amenia on their way to Canada to the aid of Gen. Wolfe in the siege of Quebec. While on their way the company received news of the capture of Quebec, and were ordered to return. Mr. Reed was so pleased with the Oblong Valley through which he leisurely returned, that he induced his father, Daniel Reed, of Norwalk, to purchase for him some land, fifty-three acres in all. The brothers of James Reed, who removed here a few years later were: Ezra, Elijah and Eliakim. The emigrant ancestor of this family was John Reed, who came from England in 1660. He had been an officer in the army of the Commonwealth, and came away at the time of the Restoration. He died in Norwalk in 1730, aged ninety-seven years. He was a good specimen of a Puritan soldier, who held his 'sword in one hand, and his Bible in the other.'"

ERNEST HOCHSTADTER, one of the most prominent contractors in eastern New York, is a notable instance of success in life attained solely by diligence, thrift and judicious management, having risen from a humble position, where hard toil was repaid with but meager wages, to a high rank in the business world.

Mr. Hochstadter was born in Lauenburg, Prussia, Germany, April 11, 1838, the son of Henry Hochstadter, a native of Hohenhorn, born in 1801, and a successful teacher who occupied a responsible position in the public schools for many years previous to his death in 1839. He married Wilhelmina Turnow, a native of Hagenow, Mechlenburg-Schwerin, and had three sons, of whom our subject was the youngest; August, who was for some time in business with the latter, died in Poughkeepsie in 1873, and Henry is a prominent grocer in Brooklyn. The mother came to America in 1865, and in 1882 passed away at the home of her son in Poughkeepsie.

Ernest Hochstadter received an excellent education in the schools of his native village, and being also fond of reading has become unusually well-informed. He was only one year old when his father died, and as he grew older was obliged to make his own living at such employment as could be obtained, being an errand boy at Lauenburg and in Hamburg for about two years and a half. He then secured a clerkship in Hamburg, where he remained until 1862, at which time he came to this country. Locating in Brooklyn, he bought a horse and cart and engaged in trucking, and in 1867 he obtained a contract from the city for grading and paving a part of Sixth avenue quite an achievement, all things considered

He then began the business of constructing sewers in partnership with his brother August, and did $200,000 worth of work in Brooklyn alone. In 1871 they came to Poughkeepsie to take contracts on sewerage, and built all these sewers in the city except the one in Main street and a few collateral lines. They employed from four hundred to five hundred men for two years, and on the completion of the work in 1873 they went to Hudson and laid all the pipes for the water works there. Returning to Poughkeepsie, they laid all the pipes for the new Gas Company, and then transferred their base of operations to Sandusky, Ohio, where they laid twenty-two miles of water pipe in rock, and constructed three miles of sewer. Other important works were the construction of the Phœnicia & Hunter railroad in the Catskill Mountains; the work in the Wallkill Valley with a steam shovel, and the work on the West Shore east of Rondout creek, about one and one-half miles; in addition, the building of the tunnel at Rosendale. They also performed part of the work on the Poughkeepsie Bridge. Mr. Hochstadter is very systematic in all that he does, and doubtless his success is due largely to his careful attention to detail.

In 1863 Mr. Hochstadter was married to Miss Margaret Grimm, a native of Barmbeck, Germany, and has had five children, all of whom died in infancy. In politics he was a Republican until the attempt to nominate Gen. U. S. Grant for a third term, since which time he has been a Democrat. He was street supervisor under Mayor Ellsworth for two years; but has been usually too busy with his own affairs to take an active share in party work, although his influence has often been exerted in a quiet way to further beneficial movements. Among the German-born citizens he is regarded with pride as a worthy representative of their race. He is a member of the Lutheran Church.

SAMUEL SLEE was born in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., in 1854. His father, Robert Slee, was born in Poughkeepsie in 1818, educated at Willets' Academy, at the old Nine Partners, and soon after completing his studies became a successful merchant, retiring from business in 1866 to become vice-president, and, shortly after, president of the First National Bank of Poughkeepsie, of which he had been an incorporator, remaining president until his death in 1893.

Robert Slee was interested in many public enterprises and in all movements for the advancement of his native place, and was largely instrumental in securing the location in Poughkeepsie of the Hudson River State Hospital for the Insane, the construction of railways and the Hudson River bridge. He was of studious disposition, and read largely, keeping in touch with the progressive thought of the time and cultivating the friendship of men of like spirit; he passed the greater part of his time in the enjoyment of his home and the entertainment of his intimate friends, among whom were many prominent in the professions, especially the ministry. Mr. Slee's paternal grandfather, from whom he was named, was born in Gloucester, England, in 1771; came to America in 1792, bringing his bride, Esther, and household goods. Esther died in 1804, and was buried in Christ churchyard.

The elder Samuel Slee was admitted to citizenship in 1802. During the State administrations of George Clinton and Daniel D. Tompkins the elder Mr. Slee held successively appointments of coroner, sheriff and judge. He was also trustee of the village of Poughkeepsie, and acted as its president. He engaged in the manufacture of woolen goods, importing machinery and workmen from England, encouraged by the policy then in force of protection to home productions. Upon the conclusion of the war of 1812, and before the news of the signing of the Treaty of Ghent arrived in this country, English ships loaded with woolens entered our harbors, and the rising industry, left without protection to compete with foreign makes, was swamped, and Mr. Slee became financially involved and forced into litigation which only found its end in the Supreme Court of the United States, where the principles for which he contended became the law of the land. He subsequently engaged in the manufacture of boots and shoes, and accumulated a fortune the second time after he was forty years of age. Mr. Slee was universally known as "Major" Slee, and was in actual service six months in the war of 1812, stationed at Plattsburg. His military career commenced in 1804 when he was appointed first lieutenant (Capt. Nathan Myers) of a company of artillery attached to the brigade commanded by Brig. Gen. Theodorius Bailey, by Gov. George Clinton; in 1806 Gov. Morgan Lewis appointed him captain of the same company, in 1808 he became second major of the 3rd Regiment of artillery on appointment of Gov. D. D. Thompkins, by whom he was in 1809 promoted to be first major. In 1815 Major Slee received his commission of lieutenant-colonel commandant of 4th Artillery.

Major Slee died November 9, 1852, a much honored and respected citizen. He had married the present Mr. Slee's grandmother, Isabella Newby, in July, 1812. She was also born in England, in Westmoreland, in 1788, coming to America in 1797 with her father, Robert Newby, and his family. She was unusually beautiful intellectually, and was the "Queen" to seven sons and many of their intimate friends. She died July 4, 1869. Mr. Slee's mother was Emeline Gregory, born at Sand Lake, Rensselaer Co., N. Y., in 1820. She was one of nine children, each one of whom was either a preacher or an instructor, several of whom have become eminent in letters. Her father, Joseph Gregory, was born at Dover Plains, Dutchess county, in 1787. He served two terms in the State Assembly. During this time he was engaged in an agitation for the amelioration of the law of land tenure which was known as the anti-rent war, and largely through his efforts and the expenditure of his private fortune a reform was effected which removed this question from the politics of the State. In 1816 Gov. D. D. Thompkins appointed Joseph Gregory lieutenant of a company of light infantry in the 43d Regiment, and Gov. DeWitt Clinton, in 1818, promoted him to be captain of the same company. He came of sturdy English stock, as did his wife, Rachel Bullock, one of the early American women noted for her mental gifts, of whom one said: "She was the first citizen of Rensselaer county."

Our subject was admitted to the bar in 1877, practicing law in Poughkeepsie and New York City until 1888, when with his family he settled at Washington Hollow, Dutchess county, and engaged in farming. In 1892 he removed to Poughkeepsie and resumed the practice of his profession. He takes an active interest in politics and agriculture, and finds his greatest pleasure in his home and family. Like his father, he is an extensive reader, and is fond of out-of-door life. In 1878 he married Marie Louise, daughter of the late William Tryon, of Katonah, N. Y., and has two sons: Ralph Burton (1885) and Robert Donald (1892). Mr. Slee's only brother, John

WILLIAM BEDELL ranks among the progressive and enterprising farmers of the town of Clinton, Dutchess county. His residence is pleasantly situated near Clinton Corners, where he is engaged principally in general farming.

Jeremiah Bedell, grandfather of our subject, was born February 22, 1751, and for some time lived in Dutchess county, previous to his removal to Greene county, N. Y. He wedded Marian Gildersleeve, who was born in Dutchess county, January 13, 1756, and their union was blessed with twelve children, seven sons and five daughters, all of whom but two lived to advanced ages, and were respected and upright citizens. One son held the office of supervisor over twenty successive years, in Greene county, N. Y. The father of these died August 12, 1815, the mother on October 3, 1807.

Jacob, the father of our subject, was born March 16, 1801, and died February 25, 1865. He, the youngest in the above family, was a native of Greene county, N. Y., where he spent his boyhood days, and after completing his education he taught school there. He was married in the town of Clinton, Dutchess county, February 21, 1821, to Hannah H. Cornell, who was born in that town September 22, 1802, daughter of Matthew and Sarah (Halsted) Cornell, and died January 15, 1877. Three children graced their union: David, who was born January 22, 1822, was married to Elizabeth D. Wing, January 26, 1843, and died June 25, 1877; William, the subject of this review; and Mary, who was born March 5, 1838, and is now the widow of George P. Smith. After his marriage the father located on a farm two miles west of Clinton Corners where he operated his land until the spring of 1855, at which time he laid aside business cares, living retired up to the time of his death. He belonged to the Society of Friends and was widely and favorably known throughout the county.

William Bedell, our subject, was born April 8, 1833, in Dutchess county, and his boyhood days were passed in the manner of most farmer lads in those days—between school ing and working on the home farm. Besides attending the district school, he also received a part of his education in the Jacob Willets school, in the town of Washington, Dutchess county. On September 13, 1854, Mr. Bedell was united in marriage with Mary Elizabeth Doty, daughter of Thomas Sands and Maria (Wing) Doty, and a native of the town of Clinton, Dutchess county. By this union there are two sons: George Doty, who was born April 27, 1868, married Etta Hicks, a daughter of Walter D. Hicks, and Jay Sands, born August 16, 1870. The mother of these died April 10, 1890, and at Yorktown, Westchester Co., N. Y., May 17, 1892, our subject was again married, this time to Henrietta (Hallock) Irish.

Upon the old home farm, Mr. Bedell remained until 1866, when he removed to Poughkeepsie, N. Y., where the following three years were passed, and then for eight years he lived near Morgan Lake, N. Y. He has been engaged in the crockery, gas and steam-fitting businesses, and for a few years was interested with A. M. Doty in a drug store; but in the spring of 1877 he purchased his present farm near Clinton Corners, and has since made that place his home. He is one of the directors of the First National Bank of Poughkeepsie, and has been executor of many important estates. He takes quite an active interest in the welfare of his town and county, but has always refused to accept public office, as his time has been fully occupied by his own business affairs.

JAMES DENN BURGESS, a prominent contractor and builder of Poughkeepsie, was born September 27, 1843, at Kingston, Canada, the son of James and Elizabeth (Denn) Burgess.

John Burgess, the paternal grandfather of our subject, was a native of Somersetshire, England, born in the town of Shepton Mallet, where he spent his entire life. He was a carpenter by trade, and had a family of four children: John, Michael, James and Sarah; the latter married a Mr. Brown, of England.

James Burgess, the father of our subject, was born in Shepton Mallet, Somersetshire, 1815, and obtained a good common-school education. He was a great reader all his life and became a well-informed man. In 1830, when a lad of fifteen, he came to America with his brother John, and settled in Kingston, Canada, where he spent the remainder of his life. He learned the trade of carpenter, serving an apprenticeship of five years, and for some years after worked as a journeyman. He then became a contractor and builder, and for twenty years prior to his death was foreman of the government works at Kingston. He was an able man, and one of the foremost in his vocation. He was very successful in his business affairs, and his prosperity was due entirely to his own exertions, as he began life dependent on his own resources.

James Burgess married Elizabeth Denn, daughter of William Denn, of Kingston. Her father came from England about 1812 in connection with the Dock Yard and Naval Store Department, established in Kingston. He was a prominent citizen, both in Church and business matters. Three children were born of this union: William, who died in infancy; James Denn, the subject of this sketch; and Sarah Ann, who died when three years of age. Mr. and Mrs. Burgess were members of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, in whose work they took an active interest. In politics Mr. Burgess was a Conservative, and a staunch follower of Sir John A. MacDonald. He never aspired to office, but held a high place in the esteem of his fellow citizens. He died in Kingston, Canada, on April 4, 1887, his wife surviving him until 1889.

James D. Burgess attended a private school in Kingston, Canada, until about sixteen years of age, when he learned the trade of a machinist, at which he worked two years. Being compelled on account of ill health to give up this occupation, he took up carpentering with his father, and after working one year as a journeyman he went into business for himself. Four years later he married Annie M. Foote, the daughter of a confectioner in Kingston, and removed to Napanee (Canada), where he established himself in the bakery and confectionery business, and carried that on for seven years. His wife died about this time, January 29, 1872, and he returned to his old trade of carpenter, in which he was engaged for the following six years.

At the end of this time Mr. Burgess removed to Deseronto, Hastings Co., Ont., Canada, and became connected with the Rathburn Company, a large corporation, and was given charge of all their building operations, a very responsible position. In 1885 he went to Hyde Park to take charge of the erection of the Archibald Rogers buildings, and remained with Mr. Rogers for two years. He then went to Poughkeepsie as superintendent for Powers & O'Reilly in the erection of the second lot of buildings for the Hudson River Hospital. Some years later he had the contract for the building of the third set of cottages for the hospital. For the past eight years Mr. Burgess has been carrying on business on his own account, and is considered one of the leading contractors and builders in the city. Among other large structures which have been built by him are Trinity church and a large addition to the Gallandet House for Deaf Mutes.

Mr. Burgess, for his second wife, married Miss Southwood, of Belleville, Canada, and for his third wife wedded Mrs. Dowling, whose maiden name was Ellen Bogert. She died in Deseronto, in 1883. In 1884 Mr. Burgess was united in marriage with Miss Eva Chambers, a daughter of Charles Chambers, a native of Yorkshire, England, and a retired farmer of Deseronto, who has been one of the leading men of the county.

The children of our subject are: Harry, who is a bookkeeper for the Rathbun Co., Oswego, N. Y.; Laura, who married Rev. Robert Knapp, of Walton, N. Y.; Ada, who married Rev. Merrick E. Ketcham, of Cincinnati, Ohio; William, who graduated from the Syracuse University in June, 1895, and now practicing law in Buffalo, N. Y.; and Lillian, Charles and Denn Maltby, at home.

Mr. Burgess is a self-made man, one who has achieved his success by his own industry and enterprise. He has always been a reader, and is well-posted on all topics of the day. He is a Republican in his political views, although he sympathizes with the Prohibitionists on the temperance question. He is quite a worker for his party, but has never been an office-seeker. As a citizen he is public-spirited, and is always at the front in matters relating to the welfare of his community. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and takes an active interest in Church work; is one of the trustees, and has been superintendent of the Sunday-school for five years.

SAMUEL CARPENTER BARIGHT, one of the substantial farmers of Dutchess county, is a native of the same, having been born in the town of Pleasant Valley, July 5, 1826. There are several branches of the family in this country, one in Columbia county, N.

Y., one in Lockport, N. Y., and one in Canada. The Columbia county and Canada branches spell the name "Boright." The Barights were of the Quaker faith, though some were Presbyterians.

The old Baright homestead was in the family for several generations, and was sold by Elijah Baright to A. R. Bartholomew, who is its present owner. Our subject's great-grandfather settled on the tract of land which he received as a grant from the English crown, when it was all wilderness. There his son John (born October, 1763, died January, 1813) grew up, and married Miss Eleanor Drake, and they continued their married life on the old farm, where they reared the following family: Sarah married Jacob Stringham, and went to Michigan, where he farmed, and where they both died. Augustin was a farmer in Pleasant Valley, where he embarked in the mercantile business; he died at Batavia, N. Y. Susanna died unmarried. Elizabeth became the wife of Daniel Stringham, a farmer in the town of Lagrange. John died young. Elijah, who was the father of our subject, married Amy Doty Carpenter, daughter of Samuel Carpenter, of the town of Clinton, born 1763, died 1844. His pedigree dates back to Timothy Carpenter, born in Wales, 1698, subsequently settled on Long Island, N. Y., and his descendants are supposed heirs to a large estate, held by the Bank of England.

Our subject grew up on the farm in Pleasant Valley, and November 12, 1850, was united in marriage with Miss Frances Dean, who was born in New York City, February 18, 1827, and in 1853 they came to their present home, where they have since resided. The following children have been born to them: Arthur Garwood is a horticulturist in the town of Poughkeepsie. Anna founded the School of Expression in Boston, Mass.; she subsequently married S. S. Curry, Ph. D., of Boston, where they are engaged in teaching the Art of Expression. Helen Dean, specialist in the Art of Expression, married Charles D. Craigie, of Boston, Mass., who is engaged in the mercantile and publishing business. Genevieve is an artist and specialist. Elijah Kirk is a salesman in one of the houses of the Armour Packing Co., Poughkeepsie. Mary Louise is professor of the Art of Expression and Literature, in the University of Oregon, at Eugene, Ore. Mr. Baright has a farm of 120 acres one mile north of the city of Poughkeepsie, where he does general farming. Politically he is a Republican, and takes an active interest in the affairs of the party; in religious faith he is a member of the Society of Friends.

Joseph C. Dean, the grandfather of Mrs. Frances Dean Baright, was a member of the Society of Friends of the town of Pleasant Valley, and was a land owner and merchant. His mother's father was Joseph Castin, one of the "Nine Partners" of a portion of Dutchess county. Joseph C. Dean married Sarah Mabbett of the town of Washington, and several children were born to them: Jonathan, their eldest son, and the father of Mrs. Baright, married Helen, the daughter of Gen. S. A. Barker, of the town of Lagrange; Edwin, the second son, was engaged in the theatrical profession (he married Julia Drake, of Louisville, Ky., and Julia Dean, the celebrated actress, was their daughter).

Mrs. Frances Dean Baright's grandfather on her mother's side was Samuel A. Barker, who was a general in the war of 1812, and a private in Capt. Brinkerhoff's regiment, of the Dutchess county militia in the Revolutionary war. He owned an estate in the town of Lagrange, and held slaves; was active in public affairs, and was an assemblyman at Albany. His second wife was Meriby Collins, and they had several children, one of whom, Helen Barker Dean, was the mother of Frances Dean Baright.

CORNELIA VAN KLEECK was born in Poughkeepsie, and has resided there ever since.

The Van Kleeck family came originally from Holland, and settled in Dutchess county at a very early day. Baltus Van Kleeck, grandfather of our subject, was born in Dutchess county, N. Y. He left two children: Margaret, who married John G. Vassar (a brother of Matthew Vassar, the founder of the college that name, and who was in the brewing business with him); and Leonard, the father of our subject.

Leonard B. Van Kleeck was born in Poughkeepsie, April 18, 1785, and there married Elizabeth Phillips, who was born in the same city, in 1791. Her father, James Phillips, was a native of Poughkeepsie, and was a farmer. He was of English descent. He married Cornelia Van Vlack, and to their union were born children as follows: John was a grocer in Poughkeepsie, and died in the West; Abram was a hotel-keeper in Poughkeepsie; Mary married John Wyley, a farmer in Dutchess county; Catherine married Robert Green, and lived in New York City; Jane married Jacob Harris, a farmer in Dutchess county; Sarah married Isaac Griffin, a butcher; Barbara married Isaac Cubney, a farmer and blacksmith in Poughkeepsie; and Elizabeth became Mrs. Van Kleeck. The parents both died at Poughkeepsie.

After his marriage Leonard Van Kleeck took charge of a hotel in Poughkeepsie, and at one time owned a large amount of city property. Six children were born to him and his wife, namely: Margaret, who died in infancy; Henry, who was a clerk for his father, and died in 1850; James was city librarian, and died in 1894; Alfred was a merchant in Mobile, Ala., and died in 1849; Cornelia is the only surviving member of the family; Edgar A. became a Baptist minister, and died in 1889. Leonard Van Kleeck died in 1854, and his wife in 1828. They were members of the Baptist Church, and most estimable people. Mr. Van Kleeck was a strong Republican, and prominent both in his party and in all public affairs.

Cornelia Van Kleeck, our subject, is a devoted member of the Mill Street Baptist Church in Poughkeepsie, to which church in the last seven years she has contributed large sums of money. She is very generous and charitable to all in distress, and is always ready to assist every philanthropic or religious enterprise.

PHEBE THORNE WILLIAMSON, M. D. Among those who devote their time and energies to the practice of medicine, and have gained a leading place in the ranks of the profession, is the lady whose name introduces this sketch. She makes her home in Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, having an office at No. 13 Liberty street, but also spends a part of each week in New York City, where she has an office at No. 1244 Broadway, and in both cities she has secured a large and lucrative practice.

Dr. Williamson is a native of Dutchess county, born at Millbrook, where her early life was passed, and attended the old Nine Partners Boarding School, there acquiring her literary education. Judge Stephen Thorne, her paternal grandfather, practiced law in Poughkeepsie, and also made his home in Milan, Dutchess county. In his family were five children, all of whom died within six years of each other, namely: Benjamin, a physician of Milan; Herrick, who was given the maiden name of his mother; Stephen; Cynthia; and John S.

The last named was the father of our subject. He was born at Milan in 1823, and was there reared and educated. After studying medicine with his brother for some time he entered the medical college at Castleton, Vt., and later graduated from the medical department of the New York University, after which he engaged in practice at Bangall, Stanford town, Dutchess county. There he was united in marriage with Frances C. Barlow, daughter of Cyrus Barlow, and to them were born two daughters—Georgie, wife of James T. Haight, of Stanfordville, Dutchess county; and Phebe Anna. After following his profession in that village for several years, he removed to Millbrook, where he was engaged in practice for thirty years, and was very successful in his chosen calling. He was a very influential man, and for many years served as county physician. He belonged to the Knights of Pythias lodge of Poughkeepsie, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Masonic fraternity of Washington Hollow, Dutchess county. Though not a member of any religious denomination, he gave liberally to the support of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was called from life in 1880, and his death was widely and deeply mourned.

Phebe Thorne began the study of medicine with her father, whom she assisted in his practice, and after attending a four-years' course of study in the Woman's Medical College and Infirmary of New York, she was graduated in 1878. The year previous she had married Albert Williamson, and they have a daughter who was born in 1882. After her father's death our subject was county physician at Millbrook for a year and a half, and in 1882 removed to Brooklyn, where she was engaged in practice for three years, during which time she was the first woman appointed on the Brooklyn Eastern District Hospital staff. She was compelled to leave that city on account of ill health, and came to Poughkeepsie, where she confines her practice to the diseases of women, and obstetrics. She stands high among the members of the medical fraternity, is a close student, and, being thoroughly in love with her profession, her success is assured. Dr. Williamson purchased the "Windsor Hotel," on Hooker avenue, which she converted into a sanitarium and summer hotel; but as it was so difficult to secure competent help, and so much responsibility rested upon her, that she gave up the sanitarium and now rents the place to Vassar College for an extra dormitory and class rooms. She holds membership with the Dutchess County Medical Society and the Kings County Medical Society. The Doctor not only holds a leading place in the medical profession, but is also a valued and prominent member of society, being held in the highest regard by all who know her.

JAMES EDWARD DEAN, of Fishkill, Dutchess county, treasurer of the Fishkill Savings Institute, and for many years its president; proprietor of Monumental Works, and one of the founders of the Fishkill Weekly Times, is among the prominent citizens of that village.

He is the son of William George and Phebe Ann (Van Nostrand) Dean, and his ancestry is a notable one, his paternal grandfather, Ephraim Dean, and great-grandfather, William Dean, having been soldiers in the Revolutionary army, enlisting in Westchester county in 1775, and serving until the close of the war. During the winter of 1776-77, they were both with the troops that were encamped at Fishkill. On the maternal side his great-grandfather Alexander Mead, and great-grandfather Michael Rogers, were also participants in the struggle for independence; while another ancestor, Aaron Van Nostrand, was granted a service of plate by the Colonial Assembly for bravery in the French and Indian war; and still another, Jacobus Swartwout (father of Gen. Jacobus Swartwout), served in one of the Colonial wars. The elder Swartwout was the first judge of the court of common pleas of Dutchess county, and at the time of his death was the first supervisor of Rombout Precinct. Mr. Dean's mother died April 14, 1896, aged ninety-five years, four months and fifteen days, having seen eight generations of her family, including two of her great-grandfathers, who lived until she was seventeen years old, and her own great-great-grandchildren. Of her seven children, all lived to maturity, the first to pass away being Helena Du Bois Dean, who died March 19, 1896, at the age of sixty-one.

Jas. E. Dean

James Edward Dean was born in Fishkill, May 10, 1830, the third child and eldest son of his parents, and his education was obtained in the public schools of the village, later in the academy which was then conducted by the Rev. Dr. Pingry. In the spring of 1848 he went to Rochester, N. Y., to learn the marble-worker's trade, but was called home in August, 1850, by the death of his father, and for several years he worked as a journeyman for Roswell Lamson, of Fishkill. On May 10, 1854, he married Miss Jerusha Powell Hilliker, daughter of Samson and Mary (Gilder-sleeve) Hilliker, and soon afterward moved to Glens Falls, N. Y., where he and his brother engaged in the marble business under the firm name of J. E. & G. W. Dean. Returning to Fishkill in the spring of 1855, he purchased the yards of Roswell Lamson, and has carried on the business ever since, the making of monuments, headstones, vaults, enclosures, and and everything pertaining to that line of work. In 1870 he was elected president of the Fishkill Savings Institute, and held the office twenty-one years, when he resigned and was chosen treasurer. In 1862, Mr. Dean, in company with Milton A. Fowler, now of Poughkeepsie, purchased the Fishkill Journal, which they sold in 1866 to George W. Owen, who removed it from Fishkill to Matteawan in 1882. Not long after this, Mr. Dean and several other gentlemen established the Fishkill Weekly Times, still conducted by Mr. Dean and his son Herman.

The Deans were prominent adherents of the Democratic party for generations previous to the Civil war, and Mr. Dean's first vote was cast for Franklin Pierce in 1852; but in 1855 he joined the Republican party at its organization, and has held to it ever since. In 1859 he was elected town clerk, and the following year justice of the peace, holding each office one term, and declined a renomination. For twelve years he was postmaster at Fishkill, previous to November, 1885, his commission, which was signed by President Grant, bearing date of June 16, 1873. Since 1863 he has shown his interest in educational advancement by continuous service as a trustee of Union Free School, District No. 6, town of Fishkill.

Mr. Dean was one of the earliest promoters in the organization of the Fishkill Rural Cemetery, of which he was made trustee and treasurer, and held both positions for thirty years, but declined re-election as treasurer in 1895. His father held the positions of justice, postmaster and school trustee in the same village for many years before him, and his son, Herman, is now the successor of both, as justice.

Mr. and Mrs. Dean have four children: William Edward is a well-known lawyer in Fishkill; Anna is at home; Herman is justice of the peace, and the editor of the Fishkill Weekly Times; and Robert Edo is in the monument business with his father. Mr. Dean's ancestors have been identified with the Reformed and Episcopal Churches for generations, and most of the family are now members or regular attendants of Trinity Episcopal Church, Fishkill. By virtue of his ancestry Mr. Dean is a member of the Society of the Sons of the Revolution, New York branch, and is also eligible to membership in several other similar societies. Mrs. Dean's grandfather served in the same regiment (the 3d Westchester) that Mr. Dean's ancestors did in the Revolution, and from both sources his daughter derives her claim to membership in the Society of Daughters of the American Revolution.

WILLIAM BOSTWICK, one of the best, most energetic, and most enterprising men of Pine Plains, Dutchess county, is now the president of the Stissing National Bank, the history of which is here given:

A meeting was held at the home of Henry C. Myers, in the village of Pine Plains, February 15, 1839, at which Aaron E. Winchell was chosen chairman, and F. J. Curtiss, secretary, for the purpose of forming a bank under the general banking law passed April 18, 1838. At this meeting Aaron E. Winchell, R. W. Bostwick, Backus Culver, Justus Booth and Cornelius Husted were appointed a committee to report a board of directors, which was as follows: Aaron E. Winchell, R. W. Bostwick, Walter Reynolds, Justus Booth, Backus Culver, Cornelius Husted, Frederick I. Curtiss, George W. Barton, Henry Hoffman, John Ferris, William W. Pulver, Abram Dibble, William Winchell, Samuel Deuel, Niles Hartwell, William Eno, and Leonard Rowe. At a meeting of the directors held March 16, 1839, Reuben W. Bostwick was elected president; William Eno, vice-president; and Walter Reynolds, attorney for said bank; and April 15, following, Frederick W. Davis was called as cashier. The bank was located in the Dibble store March 23, 1839. At a meeting held August 26, 1847, F. W. Davis resigned, and John F. Hull was appointed. The latter resigned at the meeting of May 4, 1852, and Reuben Bostwick was appointed cashier. This organization was known as the "Pine Plains Bank."

At a meeting appointed for the organization of a bank held May 29, 1858, the subscribers to the stock thereof voted the name should be "Stissing Bank," and Justus Booth was made president, with Reuben Bostwick as cashier. The lot was purchased June 19, 1858, and contract for building the banking house was made July 10, following. Justus Booth declining re-election for another year, William S. Eno was elected president May 14, 1864. At a meeting held March 4, 1865, the name of the bank was changed to "Stissing National Bank." Reuben Bostwick continued as cashier until July 11, 1870, when, at a special meeting, Fred Bostwick, his oldest son, was elected cashier, and William Bostwick was chosen clerk. This continued until the resignation of Fred Bostwick was accepted May 9, 1885, and William Bostwick was appointed cashier by the board and officers. On May 16, 1885, William M. Sayre was appointed assistant cashier, and, after his death, J. H. Bostwick was elected asst. cashier May 21, 1887. On Jan. 14, 1896, William Bostwick was elected president in the place of William S. Eno, who retired, and J. H. Bostwick was appointed cashier. The bank is now in a flourishing condition, for which great credit is due its efficient officers.

The Bostwick family was founded in America by English immigrants. Reuben Bostwick, the father of our subject, was a native of Dutchess county, born in 1821, and was the son of Reuben W. Bostwick, who for many years was a general merchant of Pine Plains. The son was reared in that village, and there spent his entire life, being associated with his father in the store until he was elected cashier of the bank, in 1852, which position he continued to fill until 1870. He was an able business man, possessed of more than ordinary ability. He was married to Elizabeth Hunting, daughter of John Hunting, of the town of Pine Plains, and their family included seven children: Fred, of Pine Plains; William, subject of this review; Ida; Hattie; Walter and Walker, both of whom died when young; and J. Hunting. The father did not take an active part in political affairs, but voted the Republican ticket, which is also supported by his sons, and in religious belief the family are Presbyterians.

On December 28, 1851, William Bostwick was born in the town of Pine Plains, where his primary education was received. Later he was a student at College Hill Military Academy, and also at Riverview Academy. At the age of fifteen years he left the school room, and soon afterward obtained a position in the bank, where he served as clerk until 1884, and was then cashier until elected president, in 1896. The banking interests of Pine Plains have for many years been well-represented by members of the Bostwick family, and our subject has been one of the most discreet and able officers of the Stissing National Bank. He has a remarkable faculty for the conducting and dispatching of business, and his ability to fill the important position which he now occupies has been well proven by his faithful service as cashier.

Mr. Bostwick has been twice married, his first union being with Miss Belle Eno, who died in 1883. The lady who now shares his name and fortunes was in her maidenhood Miss Eugenia Covey, daughter of Lyman Covey, and to them have been born three sons: Walker, Harry C. and Ralph. Although only interested in politics as a citizen anxious to have good government, Mr. Bostwick has made a careful study of political matters, and casts his ballot in support of the Republican party. Socially, he is identified with the Royal Arcanum. Courteous, genial, well informed, alert and enterprising, he stands to-day one of the leading representative men of his county—a man who is a power in his community.

HENRY A. ALDEN (deceased). The history of the privations, anxieties and struggles of the Pilgrim Fathers after the landing at Plymouth Rock is brightened by one beautiful strain of romance, the story of John and Priscilla Alden, who were the direct ancestors of the subject of this sketch. John Alden was one of those (the seventh) who signed the compact in the cabin of the "Mayflower" in 1620, and was the last male survivor of the devoted band of voyagers. He was not of the Leyden Church, but, as Bradford in his "History of the Plymouth Plantation" informs us (the spelling in the original being preserved), "was hired for a cooper at Southampton, where the ship victuled; and being a hopful yong man was much desired, but left to his own liking to go or stay when he came here; but he stayed and maryed here."

He was distinguished for his practical wisdom, integrity and decision, and early acquired and retained during his long life a commanding influence over his associates. He was much employed in public business; was an assistant to the Governor for many years, and in every position he fulfilled his duties promptly and to the satisfaction of his employers. His ancestors in England have not been traced, so far as is known. He was born in 1599, and died at Duxbury, Mass., September 12, 1687. His marriage took place probably in 1621. Priscilla was the daughter of William Moline (or Mullins), who with his wife came also with the "Mayflower," and both died in February succeeding their landing. Tradition represents Priscilla as being very beautiful in her youth, and John also was a comely person and considering his other accomplishments is not surprising that when he was sent by Capt. Standish, after the death of his wife, to solicit her hand for the Captain in marriage, she preferred the messenger to the message. "As he warmed and glowed, in his simple and eloquent language, quite forgetful of self and full of praise of his rival, archly the maiden smiled, and, with eyes overrunning with laughter, said, in a tremulous voice, 'Why don't you speak for yourself, John?'" Their residence after a few years was in Duxbury on the north side of the village, on a farm still in the possession of their descendants of the seventh generation, having never been alienated. He made no will, having distributed the greater part of his estate among his children during his lifetime.

Jonathan, his third son, with whom he resided on the old homestead, administered on his estate and made a final settlement with the heirs, June 13, 1688. The settlement is as follows: "We, whose names are subscribed, personally interested in the estate of John Alden, Sr., of Duxbury, Esquire, lately deceased, do hereby acknowledge ourselves to have received, each of us, our full personal proportion thereof from Jonathan Alden, Administrator thereof, do by these presents for ourselves, our heirs, and executors, acquit, discharge fully, the said Jonathan Alden, his heirs, forever of and from all right, dues, demands, whatsoever relating to the aforesaid estate. In witness whereof we have hereunto subscribed and sealed this 13th day of June, Anno Domini 1688."—John Alden (seal), Joseph Alden (seal), David Alden (seal), Priscilla Alden (seal), William Paybody (seal), Alexander Standish (seal) in the right of Sarah, my wife, deceased, John Bass (seal) in the right of my wife Ruth, deceased, Mary Alden (seal), Thomas Dilauno (seal). As only eight children are named in this instrument it was supposed, until recently, that he had no more. Bradford, however, states in his history, that, at the time of his writing, John Alden and his wife Priscilla were both living and had eleven children, and that their eldest daughter was living and had five children. In the document copied above her name is written Priscilla. According to this account the children were: John, born about 1622; Joseph, 1624; Elizabeth, 1625; Jonathan, Sarah, Ruth, Mary, and David, the names of the other three being unknown.

Second Generation: Joseph Alden, of Bridgewater, farmer, son of John (1), was born 1624, died February 8, 1697. He married Mary, daughter of Moses Simmons, Jr., and had five children, viz.: Isaac, Joseph (born 1667), John, Elizabeth and Mary.

Third Generation: Deacon Joseph Alden, Bridgewater, farmer, son of Joseph, was born in 1667. He married Hannah, daughter of Daniel Dunham, of Plymouth, who died June 13, 1748. Their children were, viz.: Daniel, born January 29, 1691; Joseph, August 26, 1693, died December 9, 1695; Eleazer, September 27, 1694; Hannah, in February, 1696; Mary, April 10, 1699; Joseph, September 5, 1700, died October 5, 1700; Jonathan, December 3, 1703, died November 10, 1704; Samuel, August 20, 1705; Mehitabel, October 18, 1707; and Seth, July 6, 1710.

Fourth Generation: Samuel Alden, of Titicut, son of Deacon Joseph, was born August 20, 1705, and died in 1785. He was married in 1728 to his first wife, Abiah, daughter of Capt. Joseph Edson, and had nine children, viz.: Abiah, born 1729; Mehitabel, 1732; Sarah, 1734; Samuel, 1736; Josiah, 1738; Simeon, 1740; Silas died aged twenty-one years; Mary; Hosea, killed by the kick of a horse. Samuel Alden married, in 1752, his second wife, who was a daughter of Josiah Washburn.

Fifth Generation: Josiah Alden was a farmer at Ludlow, Mass. He was married, in 1761, to Bathsheba Jones, of Raynham, and had nine children: Elijah, Azel, Abiah, Bathsheba, Charity, Josiah, Lucy, Rebecca and Benjamin.

Sixth Generation: Josiah Alden, of Ludlow, a farmer, was born September 3, 1773, and died in 1833. He married Olive Brown, and had ten children, viz.: Azel, Justin, Charity, Zenas, Washington Brown, Charles, John, Mary, Oramus, Eunice.

Seventh Generation: Zenas Alden, of Ludlow and Springfield, Mass., was born November 1, 1795, and died in January, 1840; he married Betsey Taylor, of Hartford, Conn., and had six children, viz.: George Washington, who died at Springfield in 1863 or 1864; Henry A., our subject; Charles, a resident of Hartford, Conn.; Jane; Caroline married a Mr. Taylor, of Hartford, Conn.; and William.

The late Henry A. Alden was born March 10, 1823, at Springfield, Mass., where his father was engaged in manufacturing rifles for the U. S. Government. During his boyhood he attended the public schools of his native place, and at eighteen he became associated with Charles and Henry Goodyear, the well-known inventors, in the manufacture of India-rubber goods. After several years with them, he opened a factory on Staten Island in 1847, under the name of the New York Rubber Co. In 1857 the works were removed to Fishkill-on-Hudson, and, as Mr. Alden had become familiar with the rubber-goods trade in all its branches, he was made superintendent. Having become a leading stockholder in the company, he was elected president, and held this position until his death, which occurred December 6, 1882. His business cares prevented him from taking an active part in public affairs, but he was a staunch Republican in politics, and was always ready to encourage any measure for local improvement.

On July 16, 1847, he was married to Miss Mary M. Bishop, of Woodbury, Litchfield Co., Conn., and two sons were born of this union. The elder, Henry Bishop Alden, was born at Newtown, Conn., February 17, 1850, and died September 30, 1875. He was married June 20, 1872, to Miss Susie B. Van Liew, daughter of Henry and Mary (Fitzgerald) Van Liew, of Sing Sing, N. Y. They had one daughter (posthumous), Mary, born February 3, 1876, at Sing Sing. The youngest son, George Fuller Alden, was born March 10, 1853, at Newtown, Conn., and died March 7, 1886. He was married June 14, 1877, to Miss Cornelia DuBois, daughter of Henry and Adelia (Van Voorhis) DuBois, of Fishkill, N. Y. She survives him with one daughter, Edith, who was born at Fishkill, December 15, 1881.

Mrs. Henry A. Alden was the second in a family of four daughters, the others being Fannie, Emily M., and Elsie M., who is the wife of George C. Smith, of Fishkill. The father, Miles Bishop, was a soldier in the war of 1812, and his regiment was stationed at London, Conn., to guard Fort Griswold, when Roger Griswold was governor of Connecticut. Mrs. Alden's paternal great-grandfather was Miles Bishop, and her grandparents were Luther and Sybil (Long) Bishop, who had nine children: Charles, Salmon, Julia, Raney, Thyrza, Seth, Sallie, Garwood and Miles. Her maternal great-grandparents were Aner Ives, who was born January 13, 1740, and his wife Rachel, born June 11, 1744. Their son Asael, Mrs. Alden's grandfather, born June 25, 1764, married Elsie Foote, who was born October 19, 1756. They had eight children, whose names with dates of birth are as follows: Amasa, October 15, 1784; Asael W., August 31, 1787; Fannie, February 16, 1790; Garrett, March 19, 1792; Cynthia, January 23, 1795; Harmon, March 31, 1797; Nancy, January 17, 1800 (died in infancy); and Nancy (2), April 16, 1804.

Elsie Foote Ives, Mrs. Alden's grandmother, was a daughter of Abraham and Lucy (Wilmot) Foote; her father was a captain in the Revolutionary army, and also served in the French and Indian war.

GEORGE W. OWEN, the well-known editor of the Fishkill Journal, which has been for many years a powerful aid to the best interests of the community, is one of the most prominent citizens of Matteawan, Dutchess county.

On the paternal side Mr. Owen is descended from a family which has long been held in esteem in Putnam and Westchester counties, his ancestors having been among the earliest settlers in the vicinity of Peekskill. He first saw the light in Orange county, N. Y., near the southwestern border of the town of New Windsor, and his youth was spent upon a farm. Possessing an active and inquiring mind, he devoted his evenings and the few moments of leisure that he could find, amid the exacting duties of farm life, to reading and study, thus supplementing the limited educational advantages afforded by the brief winter terms of the country schools. In this manner he mastered not only the ordinary branches but the higher mathematics and the natural sciences, and made a thorough study of the English language and literature, giving also some attention to Latin, on account of the assistance which it would give in the analysis of English. Saving something from his earnings, he managed to take a course in a large academical institution, where his time was chiefly spent in reviewing the studies that he had pursued in private. He had feared that some erroneous conclusions might have been made by him, but it is hardly necessary to state that he found that his thorough work in the seclusion of the farm enabled him to take a high rank among the pupils to whom "Dame Fortune" had apparently shown more favor.

The employment which first became avail able was that of teaching school, and this he followed for about eight years. In 1865 he purchased the Fishkill Journal, then a small weekly published in Fishkill Village. It was printed upon an old-fashioned hand press, as were most of the similar papers of that time; but after working for a year with this antiquated plant, he procured a cylinder press and new type, and brought out the Journal in a new dress. He also enlarged it, and, as he was a Republican, he could not refrain from making the paper, which had previously been neutral, reflect his own views upon the stirring issues of the Reconstruction period. Andrew Johnson, raised to the Presidency through the death of Abraham Lincoln, was then setting himself at variance with the party that elected him, and the Fishkill Journal, with its earnest discussions of the problems of the hour, became a power in Dutchess county politics. In the fall of 1877 Mr. Owen purchased a job-printing office in Matteawan, and for several years conducted this, as well as the Journal office in Fishkill Village. In August, 1882, he removed the Journal plant to Matteawan, and combined the two establishments. On September 14, 1885, he started the Fishkill Daily Journal, which he conducts in connection with the weekly edition.

In his journalistic work Mr. Owen has been identified with all that is enterprising and uplifting to the community, encouraging philanthropic movements and endorsing every effort for advancement in whatever line. Some substantial advantages gained of later years could no doubt be traced to his influence exerted either personally or through the columns of his paper, and his power for good has been none the less real for being quietly used. Mr. Owen has also devoted some time to literary work, and is the author of two works of fiction of a somewhat practical nature, which were well received by the public, and had a large sale.

Although Mr. Owen has never sought public office, he was for several years a member of the Matteawan board of education, and his fine abilities make him a valued adviser in various enterprises, notably the Matteawan Savings Bank, of which he is a trustee. He has been for many years a member of the F. & A. M., Beacon Lodge No. 283.

During his journalistic career, Mr. Owen's recreations have consisted chiefly in making tours through various parts of the United States. Having a passion for natural scenery, he has most frequently visited the regions whose features were picturesque, grand or beautiful. The wilderness of the Adirondacks; the grand cataract of Niagara; the picturesque St. Lawrence river, with its Thousand Islands, its rushing rapids, where the steamboat, with its human freight, plunges down between the rocks as if to certain destruction, the quaint old city of Quebec; also the rugged White mountains of New England, with their snow-capped Mount Washington; the orange groves of Florida; the far West; the grand Sierra Nevadas; California, with all its marvelous beauties and resources—these have all been scenes of his travels and themes for his pen, wherein he entertained his readers with many a well-written article. Thus he combined business with pleasure and profit to his readers.

The most important of these travels was an extended tour across the continent, when the Pacific railroad had been completed but a comparatively short time, and the country opened up by this great thoroughfare was still in almost its native wildness. Going by rail, he took plenty of time, stopping at various points of interest along the way, writing, graphically, descriptive articles for his paper. The unique features of the desert plains, then roamed over by the buffalo, the antelope, the lively coyote, and other wild animals in their native freedom, were set forth in entertaining articles. He visited Salt Lake City, when Brigham Young was living and reigning in all his glory, and had an interview with the great Mormon. Continuing his journey by rail to California, he passed over the Sierra Nevadas in the month of June, when the snow in huge banks still lay in the gorges, and the scene was one of wild and rugged grandeur. Arriving in San Francisco, he remained in that city for a considerable time, and then started out in excursions through various parts of that remarkable country. Railroads were not as numerous there then as now, and a large part of the travel was done in stages over thoroughfares which could only be termed roads by courtesy; and on horseback through trackless forests. He reached the famous Yosemite Valley in this manner, part of the way by stage, and when a point was reached where no trace of a road existed, the remainder of the journey was performed on the back of a mustang, the only paths being simply trails where previous traveling parties had left footprints. Here, also, he visited the famous Mariposa grove of big trees, the greatest known giants of the forest, and performed the oft repeated feat of riding on horseback through a hollow log which lay prostrate on the ground.

After establishing himself for a time in the Yosemite Valley, and familiarizing himself with its grand and wonderful features, he made frequent excursions on horseback among the lofty mountains of the Sierra range in the vicinity, among snow banks in summer, the intrepid mustang climbing cliffs where a man alone would find it difficult to keep his footing.

Mr. Owen's articles on the Yosemite Valley and the big trees were pronounced to be fine literary productions, highly entertaining to his readers; and after his return he embodied some of these in a lecture, which he delivered free on several occasions. These articles are preserved now only in the old files of the Journal.

HENRY TIEDJE, a leading confectioner of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, was born August 27, 1858, in the village of Ringstead, Province of Hanover, Germany, the son of Henry and Bertha Tiedje.

Our subject was educated in the schools of his native place, and at the age of seventeen started out to make his way in the world, with with no capital but his own abilities. He came to America to find a better field for his energies than the Fatherland afforded, and located first in New York City, where a brother secured him employment in a small confectionery store. In New York he remained seven years, engaged in various occupations, and then went to Poughkeepsie to work as a candy-maker for Charles H. Gerdes. On May 24, 1883, Mr. Tiedje bought the business of his employer, and has continued it since at the old stand, No. 358 Main street, with the exception of three years at No. 366 Main street. In 1893 Mr. Tiedje bought the building in which his store is located. His success has been remarkable, and is based solely upon industry, economy and good business management. He manufactures his own plain candies, soda water and ices, in which he has an extensive trade.

On October 23, 1889, he was married, by Rev. F. B. Wheeler, to Miss Mary E. Warren, daughter of Albert Warren, a well-known citizen of Poughkeepsie. They have one child, Estelle E., born September 20, 1890. Mrs.

Tiedje is a true helpmeet for her husband, and her energy and business ability have been important factors in her husband's advancement, and he takes manly pride in acknowledging the fact. Mr. Tiedje is a naturalized citizen of the United States, but he does not take any active part in politics, his attention being given to his business interests.

BENJAMIN A. SLEIGHT (deceased), formerly a prominent business man and agriculturist of the town of Wappinger, Dutchess county, was a member of one of the oldest and most highly esteemed families of that vicinity, and as a substantial citizen of his own day he sustained well the reputation won by his forefathers. He was born in 1786, in the town of Poughkeepsie, and his active life covered a period of great importance in the development of that region.

Abraham Sleight, father of Benjamin A., and a native of Kingston, Ulster county, was a prominent citizen of the town of Fishkill during the latter part of the eighteenth century, and served as a soldier in the Revolutionary war, a grateful country awarding him a pension in his later years. He followed farming all his life, settling in Fishkill shortly after his marriage with Miss Ruth Roe, a native of Dutchess county. Both became active supporters of the Reformed Dutch Church in Fishkill. They had eight children: Sarah, who married James M. Jones, of Dutchess county; Abraham, a farmer, who died in early manhood; Benjamin A., our subject; Ann Ruth, John (an invalid), and Nellie (none of whom ever married), and Sophie E. (Mrs. R. D. E. Stoutenburgh). Among other representatives of the Sleight family in that locality was Peter R. Sleight, a cousin of our subject, and the father of Alexander Sleight, of Lagrange.

Benjamin A. Sleight was reared upon the farm, and attended the schools of Kingston where he acquired a good academic education. After leaving school he engaged in mercantile business in the town of Poughkeepsie. He married Miss Caroline Ackerman, daughter of James Ackerman, a native of the town of Poughkeepsie, and a leading farmer of the town of Lagrange, where she was born. Her grandfather, Gurloyn Ackerman, was a leading resident of the town of Poughkeepsie in his time, and her ancestors were among the most highly esteemed of the Holland-Dutch settlers.

of Dutchess county. Not long after his marriage Mr. Sleight settled in the town of Fishkill, where his well-known integrity of character and judicial mind caused him to be elected to the office of justice of the peace, and his faithful discharge of the duties in that position occupied most of his time for many years; but later he devoted himself to the management of his farm. In politics he was a Democrat, and like his parents he adhered to the old Reformed Church. His wife died in 1854, and four years thereafter he, too, passed away.

Eight children were born to their union: Edgar, who died in 1892, was a farmer in the town of Wappinger; Louise is at home; Frank, a hardware merchant in Poughkeepsie, died in 1877; Amelia was married to Francis B. Pye, the famous inventor; Anna married M. V. B. Schryver, of Rhinebeck, and died in 1894; Eliza is at home; John is a resident of Greenbush, N. Y.; and Sidney died there in 1873.

The late Francis B. Pye, whose name is known in all parts of the civilized world as the inventor of the time lock, was a native of Newark, N. J., and a descendant of an old English family. His grandfather, Thomas Pye, was the pioneer lock manufacturer of America, while he (Francis B.) was the first to manufacture cast-iron locks in this country, and was the head of the Trenton Lock Co., one of the most important firms engaged in that line of business. Since his death, which occurred in January, 1877, Mrs. Pye has lived at the old homestead near Fishkill Plains, a fine estate with a tasteful and commodious brick residence. She possesses unusual executive ability, and manages the farm of 167 acres with great skill. Her specialty is horticulture, and she has 1,200 apple trees in her orchards, which are among the most extensive in the locality.

THOMAS I. STORM (deceased), who in his lifetime was a wealthy and influential citizen of the town of East Fishkill, Dutchess county, residing near Stormville, was one of the leading agriculturists there, as were several generations of his ancestors.

John Storm, his great-grandfather, was one of three brothers who came from Holland at an early period and settled upon a large tract of land in the wilderness—Goris in Westchester county, N. Y.; Isaac in York county, Penn., and John at our subject's present farm in East Fishkill.

Thomas I. Storm, our subject's grandfather, was born and reared there, and after his marriage to Dianah Adriance, November 9, 1788, made it his permanent home. Seven children were born to him: Isaac, a wholesale merchant in New York City; Thomas, a speculator in New York City, and the owner of a farm in Orange county; Charles, a tobacco merchant in New York City; Gallette, who married Gilbert Wilkinson, of Poughkeepsie, a boatman by occupation; Catherine, the wife of Henry Teller, a farmer in Orange county; Theodorus, our subject's father; and Emeline, who married George Doughty, a farmer.

Theodorus Storm settled upon the old farm, and married Susan Storm, a native of Fishkill, and the daughter of Col. John Storm, a descendant of one of the three brothers above mentioned. Seven children were born of this union: Susan, who married John T. Storm, now living in retirement in Beekman; Maria L., the wife of William Humphrey, a farmer in Pleasant Valley; Catherine (deceased); Theodore, who is blind; Cornelia, who married Henry Wooley, a farmer in Beekman (both now deceased); Thomas I., our subject; and one child that died in infancy. The father of this family died August 10, 1865. He was a Democrat in principle, though not especially active in political affairs, and he and his wife were both prominent members of the Reformed Dutch Church.

Thomas I. Storm was born April 14, 1827, and passed his entire life upon the old estate to which the residence of so many of his family have lent pleasant associations. On June 10, 1857, he was united in wedlock with Susan Maria Arthur, a lady of Irish descent, and a native of Dutchess county. Her father, John Arthur, a well-known agriculturist, was a cousin to ex-President Chester A. Arthur; her mother was a daughter of Major Abram Adriance, of East Fishkill. Of the four children by this marriage, all are residents of the town of East Fishkill. Arthur is a horticulturist; Walter follows agriculture; Adriana married Eugene Storm, formerly a merchant of New York, who died January 9, 1890, leaving a widow and one child, William T. Storm, born September 2, 1885; and Doretha, married to Benjamin D. Haxtun, a farmer, and has two children: Maria Arthur Haxtun, born October 22, 1894, and Adriana Storm Haxtun, born February 22, 1897.

Thomas I. Storm died very suddenly June

17, 1896. He took an active part in the local Democratic organization, and served as town assessor. He was a leading adherent of the Reformed Dutch Church, of Hopewell, as is also his widow.

JOHAN G. DUNCAN (deceased) was born in the town of Unionvale, Dutchess Co., N. Y., in the year 1793. He received a good common-school education, and while yet a young man entered the general store of Jacob Fowler as clerk. By strict attention to business he rose rapidly, and soon became owner of the store at Hoxie Corners. By degrees he acquired several farms in the vicinity, among them being the Oakley and the Stryker places. His health failing, he retired, when about thirty-four years of age, to his farm at Verbank, where he passed his declining years, dying December 19, 1857. Shortly after his death his widow removed to Poughkeepsie, and died there January 4, 1875.

Mr. Duncan in his political preferences was first a Whig, afterward a Republican, and served as justice of the peace for many years. He was fond of reading, and for a long time was custodian of the circulating library known as the Franklin Library, and he was also in charge of the District School Library.

He was progressive, being quick to appreciate and advance whatever pertained to the welfare of the community, and his sterling qualities earned for him the respect and confidence of his fellow townsmen. In his domestic relations he was a kind husband and father, always preferring the quiet seclusion of home to the more bustling activities of his business life. He suffered not a little from rheumatism, and was also quite deaf, which latter infirmity accounted for his absence from many public assemblages.

The old house on the Verbank farm (which is still in the possession of the family) was considered unusually handsome in its day, its architectural features being admired by many from a distance. The walls, which were hard finished, are still well preserved, and the past seventy years have made little impression on the solid timbers. The land now covered by the Verbank station, as well as a good portion of the Verbank Rural Cemetery, originally belonged to "Ingleside," the farm owned by the subject of our sketch.

The Duncan family, of which John C.

Duncan was a member, originally came from Scotland, first locating in Canada, thence moving to Boston, and from there to Dutchess county. William Duncan married Mary Wooley, their son George marrying Lucy Reynolds, leaving a son John G.

In 1814 Mr. Duncan married Mary Vail, second daughter of Platt Vail. To Mr. and Mrs. Duncan were born seven children as follows:

(1) Maria Jane was born in Unionvale in 1816. She attended Miss Proctor's school at Poughkeepsie. She was married to Leonard B. Sherman, of the town of Washington, and died in 1847, leaving two daughters, (a) Mary and (b) Matilda. (a) Mary married Lewis Germond; (b) Matilda married Chauncey Colwell.

(2) Ovid was born December 1, 1819, in the town of Unionvale. He spent his boyhood on his father's farm, attending school at Amenia Seminary in Dutchess county. He early became associated with his father in mercantile pursuits, and later purchased the Alonzo Haight farm. For many years he was widely known as a dealer in cattle. He married Ann Davis, leaving two daughters, Caroline (now deceased) and Annie Kate; also four sons—John, Jesse (deceased), Everett and Theron. All those who are living reside in Dutchess county.

(3) Antoinette died in infancy.

(4) George Platt was born June 23, 1825. His school days were passed at Amenia Seminary. On the death of his father, the homestead came into his possession. In 1864 he married Anna Brown Downing, of Lagrange, and took up his residence in this town, dying there March 23, 1874. He was honorable in his business affairs, faithful in his friendships and respected by all. He left two sons, Charles Henry (born July 11, 1866) and George Richard (born February 14, 1868), both of whom attended private schools in Poughkeepsie, and later St. Stephens College, Dutchess county. The former was graduated from St. Stephens in the class of '87, and from Gen. Theological Seminary in 1890. His first charge was in Geneva, N. Y., from which place he was called, in 1891, to St. James Church, Watkins, N. Y. After spending five years there he was elected to the rectorship of Grace Church, Millbrook, N. Y. As the tastes of the latter inclined toward business, he left school at an early age to take up newspaper work, which he followed with success until his health became affected. He now resides in North Granby, Massachusetts.

(5) Catherine Amelia was born at the homestead, Unionvale, June 1, 1827. She joined the Methodist Church at an early age, attending school at Nine Partners and Amenia Seminary. In company with her mother and sisters she removed to Poughkeepsie in 1864, becoming a communicant of St. Paul's Church in 1877, where she continued a devoted member up to her death, which occurred March 26, 1897. She was unmarried.

(6) Rebecca Matilda was born at the homestead, town of Unionvale. She attended Nine Partners School and Amenia Seminary, and was a member of the M. E. Church in her youth. Removed to Poughkeepsie and was married June 22, 1864, to Lewis F. Streit, an elder in the Presbyterian Church, of which Church she subsequently became a member.

(7) Frances Emma, the youngest child, was born at the homestead in Verbank, town of Unionvale. She was a member of the Methodist Church at that place. Attended school at Tookers Female Academy, Poughkeepsie. In 1864 she came to Poughkeepsie to reside, and in 1877 she was confirmed in St. Paul's Church, Poughkeepsie. She is living at her home in the above-named place, and is unmarried.

The father of Mary (Vail) Duncan was Platt Vail (born 1769, died 1822), who was married to Catherine Reynolds (born 1767, died 1852). His father was Capt. Israel Vail, of Beekman Precinct, who served with distinction in the war of the Revolution, and whose record appears as follows, according to the secretary of the New York Society, "Sons of the Revolution:" "Captain Israel Vail, 5th Regt., Dutchess Co., N. Y., Militia. (Col. James Vanderburg) March 10th, 1778."

GEORGE SCHLEGEL. There is no element which enters into our composite national fabric which has been of more practical strength, value and utility than that furnished by the sturdy, persevering and honorable sons of Germany, and in the progress of our Union this element has played an important part. The subject of this review, who comes from staunch German stock, was born at Carlsruhe, Grand Duchy of Baden, April 20, 1823.

There he was educated, and learned the shoemaker's trade.

Hoping to benefit his financial condition, Mr. Schlegel, in 1844, sailed for America, and on landing at New York secured work there at his trade for five years, at the end of which time he came to Poughkeepsie. Here he opened a retail shoe store, and also engaged in the manufacture of boots and shoes, conducting his business on Main street, near River street, until 1870, when he disposed of his stock. He then came to his present location at Nos. 544 and 544½ Main street, where he has since successfully carried on a variety store, and has built up an extensive trade.

In 1846 Mr. Schlegel was united in marriage with Johanna Reinhard, a lady of German birth, who died in Poughkeepsie in 1867. Four years later he was again married, his second union being with Emma Meyerhuber, a native of Carlsruhe, Germany, and to them have been born two children, George C., born August 23, 1873, a druggist of Poughkeepsie; and Emma, born June 5, 1876. Mrs. Schlegel is the proud possessor of a medal and cross given her by King William I, of Germany, for the services she rendered during the war of 1870, while in the hospital taking care of the sick and wounded. In religious belief both she and her husband are Protestants, and they have made many warm friends in their adopted country. Politically, Mr. Schlegel uses his right of franchise in support of Democratic principles, and has maintained a lively interest in the advancement of the industrial and popular interests of the city of his adoption. He is a man of genial, social nature, a member of the Germania Society, and is a representative German-American citizen.

PETER ADRIANCE, senior member of the firm of Peter Adriance & Son, plumbers, tinnern, steam, hot water and gas fitters, whose place of business is No. 393 Main street, Poughkeepsie, was born in the town of East Fishkill, Dutchess county, April 19, 1843, on the farm where his great-grandfather, Ram I. Adriance, located, the first of the family to come to Dutchess county.

There also was born, in 1787, Peter Adriance, the grandfather of our subject, and there his entire life was devoted to agriculture. He married Catherine Storm, and they reared a family of three children: Thomas, the father of our subject; Mary A., who wedded James Wilkinson, of Dutchess county; and Amelia, who married Willett Culver, a farmer of Dutchess county. The parents of these were both faithful members of the Reformed Dutch Church.

Upon the old homestead Thomas Adriance (father of our subject) was born in 1811. He married Catherine Culver, a native of the town of Hyde Park, Dutchess county, and a daughter of a farmer of that locality. Her people were members of the Society of Friends. Five children were born to this union: Peter; Edgar, who deals in fancy goods in Poughkeepsie; Amelia, wife of S. A. Walker, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Robert, a merchant of Fishkill, Dutchess county; and Mary A., who died in infancy. The father followed farming exclusively through life; in his political sentiment he was an ardent Democrat. He died in 1861, his wife in 1885.

Like most farmer boys Peter Adriance passed his early life, and the education he acquired in the old district school of the neighborhood was supplemented by a course in the Dutchess Academy, and at the Hudson River Institute at Claverack, N. Y., after which he returned to the home farm, where he continued to work until twenty-five years of age. In 1861 he married Miss Alice Adriance, who was born in the town of Fishkill, a daughter of John V. Adriance, an agriculturist. One child was born to them, Eugene, who is now in business with his father. After living upon the farm for about four years, Mr. Adriance entered the grocery store of Dart & Co., at Glenham, Dutchess county, as clerk, but soon after came to Poughkeepsie, where he was similarly employed by D. O. Smith for about a year. For two years he then clerked in the hardware store of Budd & Trowbridge, and then for the same length of time was with L. T. Mosher, in the pork-packing industry, after which he returned to the hardware store, which was then owned by Trowbridge & Sherrill. He soon secured a third interest in the firm, the name being changed to Trowbridge, Sherrill & Adriance; but at the end of three years Mr. Sherrill sold out. The firm of Trowbridge & Adriance did business until 1893, when our subject purchased his partner's interest, and his son was given a share in the business, which has now grown to extensive proportions. The liberal patronage which they receive is well deserved, as they strive to please their customers, and their work is all first-class in every particular.

Mr. Adriance is public-spirited in an eminent degree, and has done much in behalf of the general welfare of the community. He is popular, and is the center of a large circle of friends and acquaintances who honor and esteem him for his many virtues and genuine worth. He is largely interested in the Co-operative Savings and Loan Association, and prominently identified with the Masonic Order and the Royal Arcanum. He and his estimable wife contribute to the Reformed Church, which they attend. The line of descent of which our subject is a member, is as follows: (1) Adrian Reyersz, emigrated from Holland, 1646; (2) Abram Adriance, born 1680, settled in Flatbush, N. Y.; (3) Ram I. Adriance, born 1753, was the first to come to Dutchess county; (4) Peter Adriance, born 1787, in Dutchess county; (5) Thomas Adriance, born in 1811, in Dutchess county; (6) Peter Adriance, our subject.

GEORGE SCHLUDE. A brilliant example of a self-made American citizen, and a grand exemplification of the progress that an ambitious foreigner can make in this country of unbounded opportunities, is shown in the case of our subject, one of the leading German-American residents of Poughkeepsie. His singular success is due to his own energy and the high ideal which his lofty and laudable ambition placed before him. Success in any walk of life is an indication of earnest endeavor and persevering effort—characteristics that Mr. Schlude possesses in an eminent degree.

Our subject was born in Hochberg, Hohenzollern, Sigmeringen, Prussia, Germany, February 2, 1832, and is the elder of the two children of Boletus and Elizabeth (Grazer) Schlude both natives of the same locality as is George where the father died in 1834. The younger child, Josephine, wedded John Rumsburger, a merchant of Germany, but both are now deceased.

In the Fatherland George Schlude grew to manhood, securing the usual education afforded by the public schools of that country, and there learned cabinet-making. Hearing much of the splendid opportunities afforded young men in the New World, he at the age of eighteen years sailed for the United States, and in New York City and Philadelphia worked at h trade for about two years, when he returned to Germany, and there spent a similar period. However, in 1854, we again find him in America, and this time he located at Poughkeepsie, where he was employed at his trade until 1872. He then began the furniture business, which he has since continued, at the present time located at Nos. 150 and 152 Main street, the firm being now George Schlude & Sons. For the past five years he has occupied his present store, where he carries a full line of furniture and pictures, and in connection conducts an undertaking department.

In 1855 Mr. Schlude married Miss Caroline Hummel, a native of Baden, Germany, and eight children bless their union: Caroline, Charles, Emma, Frederick, Ida, George, Lillie and Leonard. Charles, Frederick and George are in business with their father. As a Democrat in politics, Mr. Schlude takes great interest in all political questions, although not an aspirant for political preferment. He has done much for the upbuilding of Poughkeepsie, and in his varied relations in business affairs, and in social life, has impressed all with his sincere and manly purpose to do by others as he would have others do by him.

ABRAM STORM HUMPHREY, a member of the well-known wholesale and retail drug firm of Doty & Humphrey, Poughkeepsie, was born in the town of Beekman, Dutchess county, October 12, 1848.

Thomas Humphrey, his great-grandfather, was a farmer in Dutchess county, and members of the family served in the Revolutionary war. Abram Humphrey, grandfather of our subject, was born in Beekman, July 1, 1785, and followed the occupation of a farmer until his death, which occurred February 9, 1821, in Dutchess county. He married Miss Letitia Adriance, also a native of the county, and their three children were as follows: Catharine, who married Alexander Hasbrouck, a farmer of East Fishkill; Sarah, who married Jacob Pudney, a farmer in Dutchess county; and John (our subject's father).

John Humphrey, father of our subject, was born in Beekman, Dutchess county, June 2, 1818. He was reared upon a farm, and married Miss Catherine E. Storm, who was born in East Fishkill, June 25, 1814. Her father, Abram Storm, who was a native of the same place and a farmer, was the son of Isaac and Elizabeth Storm, the former of whom was born in Tarrytown, N. Y., October 1, 1772, and with four brothers—Jacob, John, Abram and Thomas—came in an early day to Dutchess county. They took up a very large tract of land, some of which is still in possession of the family. The Storm family lived on Long Island in 1620, or thereabouts, and their coat of arms has been handed down to the present generation.

Our subject's parents after their marriage located on the old farm in Beekman, where they reared a family of six children, two of whom died in infancy. The others were Helen; Letitia, who married William Quintard, of the firm of Quintard Brothers, jewelers, of Poughkeepsie, and died July 18, 1887; John V., a wholesale and retail druggist of Poughkeepsie; and Abram S., our subject. The father of this family died October 20, 1853, the mother on August 24, 1885. He was a Democrat in his political views, and both were members of the Reformed Dutch Church.

Our subject spent his younger days, after 1856, in Poughkeepsie, where he attended the Dutchess County Academy, and at the age of sixteen he entered the drug store of Elias Trivett as clerk. There he remained for about four years; then went to Kingston, N. Y., and clerked for Van Dusen Brothers for some five years. His next location was Providence, R. I., where he engaged in the drug business for himself for one year, after which he returned to Poughkeepsie, and a year later formed a partnership under the firm name of Humphrey & Bowne. This continued two and one-half years, when Mr. Bowne sold out his interest to John V. Humphrey, and the business was then conducted under the name of Humphrey Brothers. Eight years later Abram S. sold out his interest, and became secretary and treasurer of the Storm Spring Company, holding these offices for eight years. In 1890 he became a member of the present firm of Doty & Humphrey, which does a large wholesale and retail drug business.

On October 8, 1873, Mr. Humphrey was united in marriage with Miss Mary Vignes, who was born in Kingston, May 20, 1850, a daughter of John Vignes, of that city, who was of French descent. Mr. Humphrey is a staunch Republican, and takes an active interest in all matters relative to the welfare of his community. In 1884 he was elected alderman for the Sixth ward, and served two terms; also two terms on the water board, and at the present time represents his ward in the board of supervisors. Socially, he belongs to the Royal Arcanum, and both he and his wife are members of the Reformed Dutch Church, of which he is also a member of the Consistory.

ISAAC VINCENT, SR., father of Mrs. Phœbe A. Wing, was born January 26, 1781, in the town of Unionvale, Dutchess Co., N. Y., son of Gilbert and Phœbe (Vail) Vincent, both also natives of Dutchess county, and highly respectable farming people. In religious faith they were members of the Society of Friends. They had a family of thirteen children, named respectively: Isaac, Absalom, Rebecca, Lavina, Jonathan, Leonard, Thomas, Margaret and Elizabeth (twins), Richard, Michael, Phebe Ann, and Hepsibeth. Of these, Margaret married John Potter, and had two children—Jane, who married Theron Thompson, and Thomas, who was a soldier in the war of the Rebellion, and died of wounds received at the battle of Antietam. Elizabeth married Jonathan Huestis, and had two children—Egbert, married to Mariette Williams (they had three children, and both are now deceased), and Jane, married to Isaac Mabbett (they have no children; Mr. Mabbett is deceased, and his widow resides in Chicago).

Isaac Vincent, the eldest in the above mentioned family of thirteen children, in 1807 married Martha Duncan, who was born at Dover, Dutchess county, in 1788, and died October 30, 1873. Isaac was a merchant, and opened the first store at Chestnut Ridge; he was also a farmer, and accumulated a considerable amount of property. Altogether he was a man of no small influence in his day, too busy to accept office, though a strong Whig and Republican. He was the first postmaster at Chestnut Ridge, and when advanced years came upon him he handed the office over to his son Edgar, at whose death Mrs. Phœbe A. Wing took charge thereof; it has been in the family the long period of eighty years in all. The record of the children born to Isaac and Martha (Duncan) Vincent is as follows:

(1) Horatio N. was born September 16, 1808, and died unmarried, May 27, 1862.

(2) David was born March 10, 1810, and died February 5, 1887. He married Phœbe Preston, who was born November 3, 1817, and died September 20, 1856; they had three children—Isaac, born May 16, 1847, died January 25, 1889; Martha, born July 13, 1849, died July 16, 1874; and Obed, born in 1855, died July 13, 1892 (he married Ella Vincent, and had one daughter, Hazel). Obed was a Republican in politics. Isaac, Jr., son of David, married Mary E. Albro, and had three children—Phœbe Ann, David D., and Martha A. (now Mrs. John A. Gaffney). Martha, daughter of David, married Stephen Moore, and had one son—David, a merchant and farmer at Cloe Valley; he married Minnie Vincent, and they have two children—Edna M. and Vincent.

(3) Gilbert, born March 14, 1812, married Mary Van Wyck, October 2, 1856, and they had two children—Horatio N., born January 1, 1859, died March 14, 1860; and Phœbe A., born May 1, 1861 (she married John L. Belding, and had two children—Vincent, born August 26, 1879, died June 26, 1880, and John L., born April 16, 1882; their mother, Phœbe, died August 26, 1884). Gilbert Vincent died September 23, 1875.

(4) Edgar, born December 1, 1813, received a liberal common-school education, and became a leading business man, was a Republican in politics, and a leader in his party. In 18— he was elected to the State Assembly was also county clerk six years, and, as already stated, was postmaster at Chestnut Ridge, in addition to which he filled many minor offices all with the same degree of ability and integrity characteristic of him. No man had a wider acquaintance than Edgar Vincent, and none was more deserving of the high esteem in which he was held by all classes in the community. He died unmarried, May 14, 1874, deeply regretted by all who knew him.

(5) PHŒBE A., the youngest daughter and child of Isaac and Martha (Duncan) Vincent was born at Dover, Dutchess county, November 4, 1818. She was married in 1840 to Obed Wing, who was born August 2, 1817, and died January 17, 1882. They had no family but reared from childhood Martha Pray, daughter of George and Nancy (Baker) Pray, who, at their death, gave Martha to Mr. and Mrs. Wing, and she became as dear to them as if she was their own daughter. She has three brothers: Elias N., George and Sewar and one sister, Ida (now Mrs. Charles Duncan). Mrs. PHŒBE A. WING is in many ways a remarkable woman, there being few of her age who can boast of her wonderful vitality and brightness. To-day, with the assistance of Miss Pray, she is conducting a large farm with all the ability and acumen of many a man of half her years, and ever since her brother Edgar's death, up to September, 1895, she was the efficient and courteous postmistress at Chestnut Ridge. Far and wide she is known and respected, and the wish of all is that she may be spared many years of usefulness and beneficence.

JEDEDIAH I. WANZER. The Wanzer family, which has held an influential position in this region for many generations, is of old pioneer stock, and the hardy virtues of their ancestry are well exemplified in their numerous descendants.

The first of the line was Abraham Wanzer (1), who lived at Horse Neck, on Long Island Sound, in the town of Greenwich, Conn., about 1700. He was married first to Abigail Husted, of that place, who died several years before him. He afterward married Deborah Classon, who survived him several years. He had two children by his first wife, Anthony and Moses (1), and by his second wife, one child, Deborah. Later in life he moved with his family to the town of Sherman, Fairfield Co., Connecticut.

Moses Wanzer (1) was born at Horse Neck, about the year 1722. He married Elizabeth (Benedict) Knapp, of Danbury, Conn., and lived and died on the farm in Sherman owned, in 1870, by Abram Wanzer, their grandson. They had eight children: (I) Abram (2), (II) Nicholas, (III) Moses (2), (IV) Ebenezer, (V) Abigail, (VI) Husted, (VII) Elizabeth, and (VIII) John.

(I) Abram Wanzer (2) lived in New Milford, Conn., and had a large family. His eldest son, Zebulon, married Sybil Wing, whose father was killed at a raising of a sawmill at Abington. They lived on a farm near New Milford, Conn., and had four children, as follows: (1) Michael went to Iowa when a young man, married and had two children, who, being orphaned at an early age, were taken in charge by their uncle Elihu, living at Macedon, N. Y., but later returned to the West. (2) Elihu, son of Zebulon, married Tammy Eddy at Quaker Hill, and removed to Macedon, N. Y., where they resided in 1873. They have no issue. (3) Elizabeth married Ward Bryant, and lived in Amenia, Dutchess county. They had eleven children: Laura, Calvin, Elihu, James, Amos, Sarah, Jane, Ezra, Phebe, Reuben, and Coralie. (4) Jane married Luther Bencroft, and lived near Macedon Locks, New York.

Moses Wanzer, the son of Abram (2), married Sally Akin, daughter of Benjamin Akin, of Pawling, Dutchess Co., N. Y., they lived in Sherman, Conn., and had fifteen children—Nicholas Akin, Phebe, Benjamin, Elizabeth, Martha, Jane, Anna, Sarah, Lydia, Moses, Margaret, Edward, Mary, Harriet, Martha—of whom, Sarah Wanzer married Mr. Congdon, and lived in Beekman; her son James attended Cornell University, and died about the year 1872. Lydia married James Haight, lived at Chappaqua, N. Y., and had two daughters. Margaret married Dr. Holcomb, of New York City, where they were living in 1873; Moses, Jr., a farmer, married the daughter of Ezra Haight, of Chappaqua, N. Y.; Edward A. married a daughter of Akin Taber, a farmer of Pawling; Harriet lived to maturity; (the others died young).

(II)—Nicholas Wanzer, son of Moses, Sr., married Phebe Miller, and lived in the town of New Milford, Conn. He had no children.

(III)—Moses, son of Moses, Sr., married Sarah Hill, and moved to Vermont. They had seven children: Hill, Nicholas, Moses, John, Amy, Betsey and Sarah. Of these, Moses lived at Bath, Long Island, and later moved to Illinois, where he died about 1879. He was engaged in the clothing business in New York City. He had several children, among whom was a son named Moses, who, when a young man, went to Illinois, married and had several children. He lived in or near McHenry county.

(IV)—Ebenezer, son of Moses, Sr., married Betsey Hendrick, and lived in or near Brookfield, Conn. He had seven children: David, Phebe, Anna (3), Ebenezer, Ira, Hiram and William. Of these, David never married, and lived and died in the old homestead. Phebe married Lewis, son of Thomas Haviland, and lived in the town of New Milford, Conn.; they had two children: Ebenezer Wanzer Haviland and Betsey P. Ebenezer married Betsey S. Wheeler, and a daughter of theirs, Betsey P. Haviland, married Robert Post, of Long Island, and settled at Quaker Hill, in Pawling, N. Y., where they now live. They have three children—Edmond Phebe and Isaac. Anna (3) married David Merritt, and lived on Quaker Hill, N. Y.; she died young; they had two children, who died in infancy. Ebenezer married Lucy, daughter of William Leach, settled near Brookfield, Conn., and had three children—William L., Phebe L. and Betsey. Ira married Laura Hayes, of New Fairfield; he was the author of an arithmetic, which was esteemed as a valuable work; they had five children—David, Levi, Mary, Flora and Betsey. Hiram died young. William married Hannah, daughter of Zachariah Ferris, of Jerusalem, Conn., and lived in or near New Milford, Conn.; they had four children—Charles, Hannah, Ellen and Anna; of these, Charles married Carrie Treadwell, and had three children—William D., Minnie and Alice.

(VI)—Husted Wanzer, son of Moses, Sr., born March 3, 1762, for his first wife married Lucy Leach, daughter of Ebenezer and Mary (Marsh) Leach, of Sherman, Conn. She died 25th of 12th month, 1797, and for his second wife he married Mary, daughter of Stephen Osborn, of New Milford, Conn., who did not live long. He then married, for his third wife, Florilla Pepper, daughter of Dan and Sarah Pepper, of Sherman, Conn. Husted Wanzer had five children—three by the first marriage, (1) Daniel, (2) Elizabeth, (3) Ebenezer, one by the second marriage, (4) Nicholas, and one by the third marriage, (5) George. (1) Daniel married Hannah, daughter of Daniel and Sarah Haviland, of Oblong, or Haviland Hollow, and they had seven children—Husted, Haviland, John, Richard, Henry, Isaac and Ann. (2) Elizabeth Wanzer was born 12th of 5th month, 1793, married Henry, son of Edward Briggs, of Quaker Hill, and had four children—Annan, who married Polly Akin; Edward, who died single; Husted, who married Elizabeth Wanzer, and Henry, who married Almira Haws. (3) Ebenezer, born December 20, 1795, married Sarah, daughter of Amos and Esther Irish, of Quaker Hill, Dutchess county, in 2d month, 1820. She died on the 20th of December, 1823, and in 6th month, 1825, he married Esther Irish, sister of his first wife. She died on 3d of 10th month, 1838; and on 20th of 8th month, 1842, he married Eliza Boughton, daughter of Thaddeus and Lucy Boughton, of Victory, Cayuga county. He had nine children, of whom, two were by the first marriage: Lucy, born 15th of 8th month, 1821, died 22d of 2d month, 1842; and Elias, born 12th of 12th month, 1823, died in September, 1896 (he married Hannah Haight, and had two sons). The children by the second marriage were: Sarah, born 7th of 6th month, 1826; Charles J., born 26th of 2d month, 1828; James M., born 9th of 9th month, 1829; Elizabeth B., born 12th of 7th month, 1831; Caroline, born 29th of 4th month, 1835; Daniel H., born 3d of 12th month, 1837; and Mary, who only lived to be some thirteen years of age. (4) Nicholas, born January 8, 1804, and died 27th of 10th month, 1875; married Almira, daughter of Jedediah and Lydia Irish, of Quaker Hill, N. Y., and settled in New Fairfield, Conn. They had the following children: Jedediah I., our subject; Ebenezer H., born December 24, 1831, and died unmarried October 31, 1855; Mary Jane, born June 21, 1834, married Harvey H. Barnum, February 6, 1854; Gilbert, born April 27, 1836, died October 11, 1861, unmarried; Henry B., born July 9, 1839, first married April 3, 1861, Sylvia D. Sheldon, who died August 21, 1863, and he married for his second wife Phœbe J. Haynes; John L., born August 8, 1843, died January 13, 1844; and Elizabeth B., who was born October 11, 1847, and died December 6, 1879, married Perley M. Cummings, and had three children, one of whom died in infancy; Cora Emily, born June 13, 1876; and Ralph H., born October 4, 1877. (5) George Husted Wanzer, born February 8, 1820, was the only child of the third marriage of Husted Wanzer, and lives on the homestead at Sherman, Connecticut.

(VII) Elizabeth, the seventh child of Moses, Sr., married Thomas Haviland, a resident of Leach Hollow. They had eight children—Horace, Willis, John, Jane, Elizabeth, Phebe, Nancy and Sophia. Of these, Horace married Eunice, daughter of Ichabod Leach, of Leach Hollow, and settled in that place, where he followed the blacksmith's trade; he had one son, Israel, who married Abby, daughter of Zachariah Ferris. Willis Haviland, for his first wife, married Phebe Searing, and settled at Hartsville, Dutchess county, where her death occurred; they had three daughters, Sarah Eliza (married to Philip (son of Isaac) Merritt of Millbrook, N. Y.); Mary, who never married, and Harriet. Willis Haviland, for his second wife, married Elizabeth, daughter of Philip Hart. John Haviland married Mary Ann Ferris, daughter of Zachariah Ferris, and lived near New Milford, Conn.; they had one child—Jane Ann, who married Gersham Gid dings, but nothing is known of their issue. Jane Haviland married Simeon Hinmon, of New Milford, Conn.; nothing is known of their issue; she died and he afterward moved to Seneca county, N. Y. Eliza Haviland married Ira Leach, son of William Leach, and lived and died at Leach Hollow, Conn.; they had two children, whose names are not known. Phebe Haviland remained single.

(VIII) John Wanzer, youngest son of Moses and Elizabeth (Knapp) Wanzer, lived in New Fairfield, Conn. He married Grace Swords, and their children were: Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Ithamar, Abigail, Amittai, Elizabeth, John Jay, Francis D. S., Abbie Jane, and Willis H. Of these, Abraham married (first) Anna Leach, and (second) Phebe (Haviland) Hathaway. Isaac Wanzer married (first) Eliza Treadwell, and (second) Cornelia Treadwell; children by first marriage: Jabez, Grace, Jane Ann, John, Lucy Eliza, and Andrew; children by second marriage: Elizabeth, Margaretta, George Munson, Sarah C. and Grace. Jacob Wanzer married Phebe Leach, and had children: Lucy Ann, Mary, Abigail, Merritt L., Jane and Julia. John Jay Wanzer married Ann Eliza Dennison. Francis D. S. Wanzer married Lucia S. Osborn, and had children: Harriet A., Sarah, Mary E., Abbie Jane, Richard D., Franklin, Thalia Grace, George and Lottie E. Willis H. Wanzer lived on his father's homestead in New Fairfield, Conn.; he married (first) Lydia Ann Leach, and (second) Sarah Ann Kellogg, and had children: Henry J., Hanford Kellogg, Willis H., Jr., Lydia Ann and Rachel Sophia. (Willis Wanzer represented New Fairfield in General Assembly of Connecticut in 1855, 1858 and 1873). Amittai Wanzer married Homer J. Leach, and had children: Daniel Francis and Abbie Jane. Elizabeth Wanzer married Andrew A. Skidmore, and had children: Elizabeth, Jane S., Andrew A. and James W.

Amos Irish, the maternal great-grandfather of our subject, was a son of Joseph, who was a son of Jedediah, of one of the early families of Rhode Island. Amos was born in Pawling, May 20, 1757, was educated there and engaged in farming. He was a birthright Friend. He married Esther Irish, a cousin, who was born May 2, 1757, and they had ten children, whose names with dates of birth are as follows: Jedediah, 31st of 8th month, 1780; Ruth, 4th of 7th month, 1782; Rachel, 27th of 5th month, 1784; Joseph, 22d of 3d month, 1786; Charles, 14th of 4th month, 1788; Cynthia, 20th of 5th month, 1790; David, 20th of 6th month, 1792; Jonathan, 23d of 8th month, 1794; Esther, 22d of 2d month, 1797; and Sarah, 13th of 9th month, 1799. Of these children all lived to a good old age, excepting Cynthia, who died young. They married as follows: Jedediah—Lydia Hoag; Ruth—Abram Wing; Rachel—Warren Giles; Joseph married (first) Miss Dorland, and (second) Jane Stevenson; Charles—Rhoda Ketcham; David—Martha Titus; Jonathan married (first) Ruth Chase, and (second) Hannah Tallman; Esther—Ebenezer Wanzer; and Sarah—Ebenezer Wanzer.

Jedediah Irish, grandfather of our subject on the maternal side, was born in or near the town of Pawling, Dutchess county, and spent his lifetime there, dying September 4, 1818. He was educated in the common schools of that town, and taught school for many years. He married Lydia Hoag, who was born September 20, 1792, and they had seven children, who married as follows: Amos—Matilda Giles; Cynthia—Nathan O'Banks; Almira—Nicholas Wanzer; Martin—Mary A. Haviland; Rebecca—Gilbert Jennings; Jane—John Lawrence; and Willis—Phœbe Haviland.

Almira Irish, mother of our subject, was born January 13, 1807, in the town of Sherman, Conn., educated there, and married Nicholas Wanzer, of Pawling. She died September 21, 1861.

David Irish, father of our subject's present wife, was born in the town of Pawling, and educated in the common schools. He was always engaged in farming, and also followed surveying. He was a Friend, and a minister in the Friends Society. He married Martha Titus, daughter of William and Mary (Cock) Titus, farmers of Orange county, N. Y. He died October 2, 1894, at the age of ninety-two, and his wife passed away February 22, 1873, aged eighty-four. They had three children: (1) William Irish, born in Pawling, April 16, 1820, engaged in farming. He married Miss Annie Quimby, who was born on the 1st of 2d month, 1825, daughter of Aaron and Phebe Quimby, and had one son—David A. Irish, born 3d of 8th month, 1850, in Pawling, where he engaged in farming. He married first Miss Phebe M. Hallock, by whom he had no issue. For his second wife he married Miss Henriette Hallock, a sister, and by her he had one child, who died in infancy. (2) Mary Irish was born in Pawling, June 7, 1824, and married David I. Wing, a farmer in that town. They had four children: Elizabeth, born 12th of 5th month, 1848; Martha T., 3d of 2d month, 1850; Phebe P., 27th of 7th month, 1853; Caroline, 25th of 7th month, 1860; Elizabeth married Edward Ryder; Martha remained single; Phebe married Edward Wilcox; Caroline remained single. (3) Phebe T. Irish (present wife of our subject) was born in Pawling, September 1, 1828, and educated there. She married (first) Joseph Pierce, Jr., a farmer of Westchester county, N. Y., by whom she had four children: (1) William, born June 12, 1853, died in infancy. (2) Annie S. married Charles Irish, and they have two children—Mary S. and Frederick. (3) Joseph D., born June 27, 1857, died March 6, 1893; became a farmer; he married Jennie L. Jones, daughter of Edward and Caroline Jones, and they had one child—Edward H. Pierce. (4) Henry, born in Pawling, June 7, 1859, was educated there, graduated at Cornell College, and became a civil engineer; he is now in the employ of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Co.; he married Miss Mary L. Hyatt, of Ithaca, and they have no issue. The father of this family, Joseph Pierce, Jr., died in November, 1858, and his widow, seven years later, married our subject.

Jedediah I. Wanzer, the subject proper of this sketch, is a native of New Fairfield, Conn., born May 13, 1829. He grew up on a farm, and had such schooling as fell to the lot of the average farmers' sons of that day. At the age of twenty-one he joined a surveying party as chain-bearer in making the survey for the Danbury & Norwalk railroad. In this capacity he worked for two years, and in that period prepared himself for the position of a civil engineer, which for ten years he followed as an occupation. In the spring of 1852 he went west and engaged in surveying in Illinois and Iowa, through the spring and summer, and that fall he had charge of and completed a division of the C. B. & Q. R. R., west of Aurora, Ill., the work requiring one year; was next engaged in similar work on the C. N. W. R. R., west of Dixon, Ill. In 1856 he returned to Western, N. Y., and, as assistant engineer, superintended the widening of the Erie canal, west of Albion, N. Y. On the completion of this work in 1859, he again went west, purchased a farm in Clinton county, Iowa, on which he settled. In the winter of 1864-65 he sold the farm and returned east (to Knowlesville, N. Y.). Later he went to Danbury, where he again engaged in surveying, and in 1867 purchased the farm upon which he now resides, and which comprises 300 acres of valuable land.

On May 6, 1858, Mr. Wanzer was married to Miss Frances Arabella Sawyer, daughter of John F. and Mary J. (Gilbert) Sawyer, both natives of Vermont, the former born June 2, 1802, and the latter on March 25, 1823. John F. Sawyer had five brothers, who were Baptist ministers. The Sawyers trace their ancestry back to one Thomas Sawyer, who was born in England in 1615, and in 1639 came to America, settling in Lancaster, Mass., in 1647, in which year he married Mary Houghton. His death occurred September 12, 1706. To our subject and wife were born: Henry S. (at Lyons, Iowa), May 28, 1859, who married Lillie Jones (they have two children—Helen, born April 18, 1883, and Harry Jay, born February 28, 1889); and Helen A. born (at Lyons, Iowa) August 29, 1860, died June 16, 1885; she married Frank E. Cole, May 25, 1882. (They have two children: Emery, born April 30, 1883, and Esther W., born December 30, 1884). On February 2, 1865, Mrs. Wanzer died, and on May 14, 1866, Mr. Wanzer married (for his second wife) Phœbe T. (Irish) Pierce, the widow of Joseph Pierce, Jr.

Our subject is one of the substantial men of the community; is the possessor of a fine tract of land above referred to, and has a fine home. In 1870, on the organization of the Savings Bank at Pawling, he was one of the original members, was made secretary of the same, and served as such until 1888, when he was made president, which position he now sustains with the bank. In politics he was a Republican through the Civil war; in 1872, he voted for Horace Greeley, and has since affiliated with the Democratic party.

NEWTON HEBARD, cashier of the First National Bank of Amenia, has for many years been connected with the financial interests of that place. He is a native of Dutchess county, born at Poughkeepsie, October 14, 1837, and is descended from Capt. Robert Hebard, who was born in England in 1737, at an early date becoming a resident of Dutchess county, where he died May 17, 1798. He married Miss Lydia ———, who was born in 1737, and died August 21, 1819. They became the parents of seven children: Reuben; Benjamin, who was born April 1, 1765, and died April 24, 1837; Daniel, the grandfather of the subject of this review; Robert, who died May 24, 1855, at the age of eighty years, ten months and four days; Ruth, who died January 28, 1808; Sarah; and Lydia, who died January 6, 1788, at the age of eighteen years.

The birth of Daniel Hebard occurred June 1, 1766, and on reaching manhood he was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth, daughter of Capt. Colbe Chamberlain. She was born June 25, 1769, and died August 27, 1796. They had three children: Salina, who was born April 1, 1790, and died May 22, 1847; Aurelia, who was born August 17, 1792, and died June 27, 1858; and John J., the father of our subject. After the death of his first wife, Daniel Hebard married her sister, Letitia Chamberlain, and they became the parents of eight children: Frederick, born January 20, 1798, died February 13, 1799; Henry, born October 16, 1800, died October 20, 1885; Edward, born November 22, 1807, died September 28, 1880; Susan, born May 14, 1809, died January 10, 1810; Charles, born October 17, 1810, died December 15, 1845; Elias Nixon, born January 14, 1814, died August 7 of the same year; Frederick, born September 5, 1820, died May 21, 1896; and Susan, born February 17, 1824, is the widow of Col. Henry Rundall (deceased). The father of this family died January 6, 1841.

John J. Hebard, the father of our subject, was born in the town of Amenia, April 27, 1794, and during his boyhood days attended school at Sharon, Conn. On November 1, 1818, he was married to Miss Harriet E. Deano, who was born March 19, 1795, and died September 5, 1857. Their family consisted of six children, namely: Elizabeth, born July 3, 1820, died July 17, 1869; Jethro Delano, born May 7, 1822, died February 21, 1864; George, born May 8, 1824, died December 29, 1847; John, born July 14, 1827, died February 3, 1849; Harriet Salina, born January 21, 1831, died April 29, 1881; and Newton, subject of this sketch, the only one now living. By trade the father was a silversmith and clockmaker, and was thus employed at Amenia Union at the time of his marriage. Removing to Poughkeepsie, he engaged in the same business there for a time, later engaging in the manufacture of soap, and then conducted a store at that place. In 1862 he returned to the town of Amenia, where his death occurred in 1874, when he was aged eighty years. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, under Capt. Judson, New York State Militia.

The early school days of Newton Hebard were passed at Williamsburg, N. Y., and after graduating from the academy in that city, he clerked there in a store for four years. He was engaged in farming near Newburgh, N. Y., for the same length of time, after which he went to Brooklyn, and clerked in a hat store for two years, and then for two years and a half he was in the real-estate office with G. W. Kelsey. Coming to the village of Amenia in 1862, he was employed in the store of C. M. Benjamin until 1865, when he started a private bank under the firm name of N. Hebard & Co. In February, 1867, the bank was blown open and robbed; but his good friends put him on his feet again, and in the following fall the First National Bank was purchased by the people of Amenia. Mr. Hebard then closed out his business to become clerk in that institution, and four years later he was made cashier, which important position he is still filling to the satisfaction of all concerned.

In Amenia, on October 5, 1864, Mr. Hebard was married to Miss Harriet E. Per Lee, daughter of Walter P. Per Lee. In 1858 our subject was initiated into the mysteries of the Masonic Order, and now holds membership with Amenia Lodge No. 672, F. & A. M.; in religious faith he is a member of the Baptist Church; politically he has always been an uncompromising Republican on National issues, although at local elections he votes for the one he regards as best qualified for the office to be filled. Personally he has no ambition for political preferment. He is vigorous and well-preserved, with a remarkable faculty for the conduct and dispatch of business, and in social as well as in business life stands deservedly high.

OLIVER WELDON BARNES, civil engineer, is a well-known resident of the village of Fishkill, Dutchess county, having settled there in 1867 while he was engaged in the construction of the Dutchess and Columbia railroad, of which he was the chief engineer. His ancestors came from England in the seventeenth century, settling in Boston, and later generations resided in Marlboro, Mass., where his father, Henry Barnes, was born in 1790. His mother, Marilla (Weldon), was a native of Connecticut, born in Hartford county in 1796. In 1825 they moved to Philadelphia.

Our subject was born in the town of Berlin, Hartford Co., Conn., May 15, 1823, and his education was begun there in early life. At sixteen years of age he was sent to Burlington College, Burlington, N. J., and he subsequently went to Europe to complete his engineering studies. On his return, in April, 1847, he was appointed an assistant engineer in the first corps sent out from Philadelphia to survey the western division of the Pennsylvania railroad, extending from the summit of the Alleghany Mountains to Pittsburg. He became the principal assistant engineer in charge of the field parties, and made the final location on the bold lines that distinguished that division as the first engineering work on this continent at that time, and remained in charge of his division until its construction was completed in 1854. He was then appointed chief engineer of the Pittsburg & Connellsville railroad, extending from Pittsburg to Cumberland, now the Pittsburg division of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, and remained on that work until 1857, when he took charge of the construction of the last eighty-four miles of the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago railroad, and completed it to Chicago in December, 1858. He then returned to Philadelphia, and built some branch lines for the Pennsylvania railroad. In 1866 he came to Dutchess county, surveyed, located and constructed the Dutchess & Columbia railroad, from Dutchess Junction to Millerton, fifty-eight miles in length, and subsequently was chief engineer on the surveys for the extension of the Boston, Hartford & Erie railroad, from Waterbury, Conn., to Fishkill-on-Hudson, superintending the construction of the work near the River Terminal until the suspension of operations consequent upon the financial difficulties of that company in 1869. Leaving the service of the Boston, Hartford & Erie Railroad Co., in 1870, he became the promoter and chief engineer of the Connecticut Western Railroad Co., the surveys and location of that line from Hartford to the State Line of New York, near Millerton, being made under his personal supervision, and the work was subsequently constructed under his charge in 1870 and 1871.

He then became the president and chief engineer of the New York City Central Underground Railroad Co., which was authorized by a special charter to construct a line of underground railway for rapid transit through the city of New York from City Hall Park to the Harlem river. He prepared the surveys and plans for the construction of the line; but the political obstructions of the Tweed combination rendered it impossible to secure the capital for its construction at that time. In 1872 the control of the company was transferred to influential capitalists interested in the proposed New York & Montreal Railroad Co., who were intending to use its corporate rights for an entrance into the heart of the city, but were compelled by the financial panic of 1873 to abandon the scheme; the enterprise remained dormant until the Rapid Transit Commission was appointed in 1891, when the plans of the New York City Central Underground Railroad Co. were presented to the commission by Oliver W. Barnes, who had again been appointed the chief engineer of the company. These plans were favorably considered by the commissioners, but they finally adopted a more elaborate and enormously expensive four-track system, so costly, in fact, that the Supreme Court in May, 1896, refused to sanction its construction, and declared it contrary to public policy for the City of New York to undertake it. In 1882 Mr. Barnes was appointed chief engineer for the proposed South Pennsylvania railroad, which William H. Vanderbilt and his associates undertook to construct as an extension of the Philadelphia & Reading railroad system, from Harrisburg to Pittsburg—a distance of 218 miles, through the southern tier of counties. The line was located on a bold direct route, which required the construction of seven tunnels, each a mile or more in length, and a large amount of other heavy work; construction was commenced, and the tunnels well advanced, when the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. persuaded Mr. Vanderbilt to abandon the completion of the line, and set the financial control of the enterprise to the company. Litigation and opposition by the people of the State of Pennsylvania prevented the transfer of the property to the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. for several years; but it is now fully under its control and ownership, and will be completed when the policy of that company requires it as a part of its system.

In 1884 Mr. Barnes was appointed the chief engineer of the New York, Lake Erie

Western Railroad and Coal Co., and built a line of railroad from the Erie railroad to the company's coal lands in Elk and Jefferson counties, Penn. It was a work of great engineering difficulty for the most part in the Alleghany Mountain range; on it was constructed the celebrated Kinzua Viaduct, a steel structure 2,240 feet in length and 301 feet high. It has been a very successful line, and now carries a very large tonnage from the company's mines to its main line. On completion of this work Mr. Barnes became the chief engineer of several other lines in Maryland and Virginia, which were prepared for future construction; in 1885 he was appointed a commissioner of the New Croton Aqueduct and chairman of the Construction Committee. This position he held until 1887, when political changes caused a reorganization of the commission, and new men were appointed by the mayor of the city of New York.

Mr. Barnes was chosen, in the same year, as Chief Engineer of the New York & Long Island Railroad Co., a corporation chartered by the State with authority to construct a double-track tunnel and railway from the west side of the City of New York at the Hudson river, eastwardly along Forty-second street at a depth of one hundred feet under the surface, to and under the East river to Long Island City, and thence to Brooklyn. The line has been surveyed, located and construction commenced, and financial arrangements are now in progress for the active construction of the work. He is also chief engineer of the New York Connecting Railroad Co. (which will be a continuation of the New York & Long Island railroad), from Long Island City to the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad, and other lines in and near Port Morris in the Twenty-third ward of New York City. This line is now nearly ready for construction, and will be consolidated with other lines so as to connect all the trunk lines which now terminate in Jersey City with the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad on a terminal property near East Bay, at the Bronx river. Mr. Barnes is a member of the American Society of Civil Engineers, the Union League Club of New York, the New England Society, also the Engineers Club of Philadelphia, and his distinguished abilities and high character as a man have won for him an enviable standing wherever he is known.

Mr. Barnes was married, while he was Resident Engineer on the western division of the Pennsylvania railroad, to Miss Elizabeth Denny Harding, of Pittsburg, the ceremony being performed January 7, 1851, at Allegheny Arsenal, where her father, Major Edward Harding, of the United States Army, was in command as ordnance officer. Her mother's maiden name was Nancy Denny, and her family was one of the oldest in Pennsylvania; her father, Ebenezer Denny, when a young man, went from Carlisle in Cumberland county to reside in Pittsburg, prior to the Revolution. He was an aid on the staff of Gen. Arthur St. Clair during the whole period of the Revolutionary war, and frequently met Gen. Washington. When the city of Pittsburg was incorporated in 1816, he was chosen as mayor of the city. Mr. and Mrs. Barnes have two daughters, and one son, Edward Harding Barnes, a civil engineer, in the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., near Pittsburg.

ELI H. COLLIN, a prominent merchant of Red Hook, Dutchess county, was born January 22, 1860, in the village of Pine Plains, which had been for several generations the home of his family.

His grandfather, Eli Collin, was born there, and, with a brother, once owned and cultivated about 1,000 acres of valuable farm land in the vicinity. He married Miss Betsy Finch, of Pine Plains, and reared a family of eight children: James, William, Henry, Bryant, Lydia, Myra, Sarah and Julia. William Collin, our subject's father, was reared upon his father's farm and educated in the neighboring schools, and in later life followed, like his ancestors, the calling of agriculture. He married Miss Catharine Conklin, a daughter of — Conklin, a leading citizen of Mt. Ross.

The subject of this sketch was the only child of this union, and at two years of age was taken by his parents to the town of North Easton, where he received his elementary education. Later he attended the Amenia Seminary at Amenia, and after graduating he managed his father's farm, relieving his later years of care. After his father's death he turned his attention to mercantile pursuits, first in Hudson, where he remained two years, and later in Red Hook, where he established a millinery and fancy-goods store, of which he has made a success, ranking among the substantial business men of that locality. He was married, September 21, 1887, to Miss Marian Rider, a daughter of Oliver D. Rider, a wealthy mason of Red Hook, and has two sons—William O., born in July, 1889, and Henry B., born in June, 1893.

Mr. Collin is an active member of the fraternal order of Odd Fellows, and is now past grand of Christian Lodge No. 379, of Red Hook, and financial scribe of Shiloh Encampment No. 68.

ANDREAS VALETTE HAIGHT, a leading printer and publisher of Poughkeepsie, whose original and artistic work in color printing has won recognition among his craft both in Europe and America, is a native of Ellenville, Ulster Co., N. Y., born February 4, 1842.

Eburn Haight, from whom our subject's branch of the family comes in direct line, was a descendant of one Jonathan Haight, who was born 1670-1684, and lived at Rye, Westchester Co., N. Y. He was a man of prominence in his day, and served as high sheriff of Westchester county. One of his descendants, David, born in 1701, also lived at Rye, and died about 1798. Eburn Haight, above mentioned, was born some time prior to 1754, and was a resident, like his immediate forefathers, of Westchester county, N. Y. His son, also named Eburn, was born about 1744 in that county, and married Joanna Fowler, of Ellenville, Ulster Co., N. Y. Of their eight children David was the father of the subject of these lines.

David Haight was born March 31, 1801, in Plattekill, Ulster Co., N. Y., and on February 20, 1831, married Anna Barbara Valette, daughter of John J. Valette, of Plattekill, Ulster county. They were the parents of seven children, as follows: Caroline Adelia, married to George Warren, and living at Ellenville; Susan Van Wyck, wife of William H. Deyo, of Ellenville; Ruth, who died young; Phoebe Jane, married to William Warren, and also living in Ellenville; Andreas Valette, our subject; and Eburn Fowler and George Emory, both residents of New York City.

After completing his education in the schools of his native town, our subject began to learn the printer's art in the office of the Ellenville Journal, going thence to Rondout, and from that place to New York City, where he found employment, which, however, he gave up to enter the army. He enlisted in the Ninth Regiment, N. Y. S. M., and soon afterward was transferred to the 20th Regiment, N. Y. S. M., and on finishing his three-months' term of service he re-enlisted in the Fourth N. Y. Cavalry, from which he received an honorable discharge in 1863. On his return from the field he went to California, where for some time he worked in the office of the San Francisco Call, and later had charge of the job-printing department of the State printing works at Sacramento. In 1868 he returned to the East, and became a partner in the publication of the Ellenville (Ulster county) Journal, and began to make a reputation as a typographic artist. Of the quality of his work the "American Art Printer" says: "He (Mr. Haight) was the first of our more modern printers to depart from the sometimes over-delicate tint work of pioneers like William J. Kelly (exquisite though the latter's was), and combine therewith more daring tones and even full brilliant dashes of rich coloring, that shot his work straight into admiring notice." In an article by John Bassett in an English journal, his work, in general, is highly praised, and made the text of a brief exhortation to the English artists in this line: "To wake from their period of Rip Van Winkleism, and put into their pages a little 'go,' which should stimulate the coming generation of English Caxtons to emulate their cousin across the pond." He mentions especially Mr. Haight's new designs for type faces, several being among the most popular productions of the type foundries.

In 1874 Mr. Haight became superintendent of the Rondout Freeman, and later was promoted to its entire control, becoming a shareholder in the company and holding the offices of secretary and treasurer. In 1878 he resigned his position on the Freeman, and opened an office in Poughkeepsie, where he has developed an extensive business. He was a large exhibitor of specimens of printing at the Caxton Celebration in 1877, and also in the first two Printing Trades Exhibitions held in London, England. His "Specimens of Printing," published yearly, has won the praise of experts in his line, and reflects great credit upon the capabilities of his workmen as well as upon the designer. In 1886 the Public Printer at Washington officially invited Mr. Haight to give expert opinion on matters in connection with the government printing office. At the time of the opening of the new bridge at Poughkeepsie the

A. W. Cright.

Eagle of that city published a souvenir edition consisting of forty-four pages, concerning which the proprietors gave notice that they intended to eclipse all previous efforts of the kind. The work occupied some months, and was executed in the Eagle office under the direct supervision of Mr. Haight. The frontispiece covered a superficial area of 216 inches, and was the largest which has ever appeared in a paper, and the entire paper, which contains many portraits, one of Mr. Haight being among them, was an artistic success. As a contributor to various trade papers Mr. Haight has furnished many practical and original ideas to his brethren of the craft. Among other articles may be noted the following in the "Inland Printer:" "Does Good Printing Pay?" "About Job Composition," and a series on "Colors and Color Printing."

Notwithstanding his activity in business, Mr. Haight finds time to take part in the social and political life of his city, and has served two terms as alderman and three as supervisor, displaying his characteristic energy and ability in his public duties. He is a member of the G. A. R., D. B. Sleight Post, of which he is past commander, and also belongs to the Masonic order, being a past master of Triune Lodge, F. & A. M.; past high priest (two terms) of Poughkeepsie Chapter, R. A. M.; deputy master of King Solomon Council R. & S. M.; eminent commander for five consecutive terms of Poughkeepsie Commandery No. 43, K. T., and a member of Mecca Temple, Mystic Shrine, in New York City.

A M. DOTY, of the well-known drug firm of Doty & Humphrey, Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, was born in the town of Clinton, near Clinton Corners, Dutchess county, February 5, 1850. Until about sixteen years old he lived upon the old farm, attending the district school, at which time, his parents moving to Poughkeepsie, he there finished his education, at the Riverview Military Academy.

On September 17, 1869, Mr. Doty entered the drug store of Varick & Gerard, Poughkeepsie, where he remained less than one year, and then accepted a position with Van Valkenburgh & Brown, who were also in the drug business in that city. Here he worked for six months, and then took charge of a branch store at the corner of Main and Bridge streets, which he conducted for some time, purchasing a one-third interest in the business on November 1, 1872. On November 25, 1873, with William Bedell, Mr. Doty bought out the firm of Van Valkenburgh & Vreeland, at the old main store, taking Mr. Brown in as a partner, under the firm name of Brown, Doty & Co. This partnership lasted about two years, at the end of which time Mr. Bedell sold his interest, and the firm name became Brown & Doty, which lasted until 1881, when the partnership was dissolved, and Mr. Doty continued the business in both the main and branch stores for several years. During the time he purchased the drug store of L. P. Hatch, of Millerton, N. Y., which was run by him successfully in connection with the above. When the firm name was Brown, Doty & Co., they bought out Peter M. Howard, at No. 265 Main street, and moved their stock from No. 249 Main street. In 1889 Mr. Doty took in his present partner, A. S. Humphrey, and in 1890 they moved from No. 265 Main street to the corner of Main and Crannell streets, which is much larger and better adapted to their rapidly-increasing business. The store is handsomely fitted up, and the firm deals wholesale as well as retail in drugs, medicines, sundries, paints, oils, glass, seeds, etc.

On September 8, 1880, Mr. Doty was united in marriage with the only daughter of R. W. Wing, of New York City. While on the streets of Poughkeepsie, viewing a firemen's parade, September 22, 1890, Mr. Doty was struck by a stray bullet fired from a revolver in the hands of some unknown drunken Eastman student. Mr. Doty was carried to his young wife unconscious, and remained in bed several weeks, having had a marvelous escape from instant death. One child, Herbert A., born January 7, 1884, has blessed the union. Mr. Doty is an independent Democrat, and a public-spirited citizen. He has served as trustee of the Baptist Church at Poughkeepsie over fourteen years, and Mrs. Doty is a member of that organization. He has repeatedly refused many offers of public trust.

Thomas S. Doty, father of our subject, was born in 1810, in the town of Clinton, Dutchess county, where he married Miss Maria Wing, also a native of Clinton, born in 1815, a daughter of George and Mary Wing, who were also born in Dutchess county. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Doty settled on the old homestead farm, he following farming and stock raising until seven years before his death, when he lived a retired life in the city of Poughkeepsie, and died January 18, 1873. To him and his wife were born the following children: David, who is in the hotel business at Mound City, Kans.; Mary E., married to William Bedell, a farmer in the town of Clinton, once our subject's partner in the drug business at Poughkeepsie, she died in 1893; George, a farmer and stock dealer in Dutchess county; Carrie, wife of Frank E. Whipple, cashier of the First National Bank of Poughkeepsie; Amelia Devine, residing in Poughkeepsie; Alexander, who died in May, 1870; Agrippa Martin, our subject; Maria, the wife of Frank Palmer, of Princeton, Kans.; Lavinia, wife of James Cookingham, the leading grocer of Clyde, N. Y.; and Thomas S., in the agricultural-implement business in Manchester, Iowa. In politics, Mr. Doty was a Democrat, and in religious faith he and his wife were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He died in 1873; his widow is still living in Poughkeepsie.

David Doty, the grandfather of our subject, was born in Clinton, May 13, 1787. He married Miss Elizabeth Sands, who was born May 31, 1785, and they settled on the old homestead, where he followed farming up to his death, January 29, 1828; his wife passed away November 26, 1826. They were members of the Society of Friends, and he was an enthusiastic Democrat. The following children were born to them: Hannah, who became the wife of Alexander Wing, a farmer of Dutchess county; Mary, who became the wife of Moses Sands, at one time sheriff of Dutchess county, but now deceased (her present husband is George Howell, who is in the real-estate business in Jersey City); Esther, married to Jacob Smith, formerly a farmer, later a liveryman in Poughkeepsie, and now deceased; David A., our subject's father; and one that died in infancy. The Dotys are of Scotch descent, and the first of the family in this country came over in the "Mayflower."

JOHAN CORCORAN, a prominent business man of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, a leading retail grocer and an active member of the Board of Trade, is a native of that city, born January 13, 1842.

He is of Irish parentage, and was named for his grandfather, a lifelong resident of the Emerald Isle. His father, William Corcoran, was born there about 1815, and in early manhood came to America with his wife, Ellen (Ryan), locating at Poughkeepsie, where he became a prosperous gardener and florist. He died in 1853, and his wife survived him until 1875.

John Corcoran, our subject, attended the public schools of his native place until he was thirteen years old, and, with the exception of one winter in a night school at Norwalk, Conn., his education was mainly self-acquired. His habits of reading and close observation have enabled him, however, to secure a range of practical information which some men of wider opportunities might well envy. At thirteen he began working in a brass foundry, and later followed the trade of florist for twelve years. He spent three years in that business in Norwalk, Conn., but since 1868 he has been engaged in the grocery business in Poughkeepsie, first at the corner of Mansion and Bridge streets, and for eighteen years past at the corner of Mill and Bridge streets. His success is substantial, and, as he believes in making the most of life and its good gifts, he has invested some of his gains in a pleasant home for his family, his residence on Bain avenue being one of the finest in the city.

He has been twice married, first, in 1866 to Miss Mary Ann Delaney, who died, leaving three children: William, Catherine and Ellen. Mr. Corcoran's present wife was Miss Mary Oldfield, a daughter of Michael and Ellen Oldfield. Eight children were born of this marriage: John (deceased), Clarice, Frances, Mary Joseph, Elizabeth, James L. and Edward. The family are leading members of St. Peter's Catholic Church, and Mr. Corcoran is prominent in the work of the Catholic Benevolent Society. In fact, he has taken an active part in many enterprises—civil, religious and political, as well as those which have pertained to finance alone. He has been president of the Retail Merchants Association for two terms; vice-president of the Board of Trade for two terms, and a member of that body for many years. While he is an ardent supporter of the principles of the Democratic party, he does not seek political office. About 1886 he was appointed alderman from the First ward, and was elected to the position about 1887, but resigned before the expiration of his term. About 1890 he was appointed member of the board of water commissioners, by Mayor Ellsworth, and he has given to the discharge of the duties of each place the ability and energy and fidelity which have distinguished his business career.

FREDERICK WORMSLEY, a successful and enterprising grocer of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, was born in Prussia, Germany, November 30, 1842, and is the son of Jacob and Catherine (Otto) Wormsley, the former of whom held the office of tax collector under the German government. Both the parents died in Germany.

Our subject spent his early days in Prussia, and at the age of fourteen came to Poughkeepsie with his sister, making his home first at East Poughkeepsie. He worked for his board, taking care of fourteen horses, milking five cows, and going to school in the winter. Later he clerked for Mr. Baker in a grocery store, on Main street, and then for James Husted, on Market street, for several years. In 1869 he started a grocery store where Wallman's bakery now is, and then conducted a store where Mr. Bloomer's place now stands. This he ran from 1882 to 1887, when he sold out and lived a retired life until September 21, 1895, when he again went into business on Main street.

Mr. Wormsley was married May 10, 1868, to Annie, a daughter of John Munsell. She was born in Germany, but has been a resident of Poughkeepsie since she was six months old. They have no children. Our subject was confirmed in the Lutheran Church before leaving Germany. He is a member of the Improved Order of Red Men; a Veteran Fireman, life member of Steamer Company No. 2; and a member of Freigangrath Lodge No. 549, D. O. Haragari. He has been a lifelong Democrat, but has never sought public office. He began life as a poor boy, and has succeeded in accumulating a comfortable property. Mr. Wormsley is a straightforward business man, and is highly respected by his neighbors and associates.

EDWARD HUNTTING BEDFORD (deceased). The Bedford family has been prominent in the vicinity of Glenham, Dutchess county, for many years, and by intermarriage it is related to several other distinguished families of this section. The subject of this brief memoir was a worthy descendant of such an ancestry, and although his life was passed in the quiet calling of agriculture he displayed, on all occasions, characteristics which would have adorned any sphere of life.

He was born at Glenham, July 14, 1835, the son of John and Sarah H. (Waldron) Bedford, and grandson of John Bedford, a jeweler and watchmaker at Fishkill. His father was born May 16, 1791, and died February 24, 1845, after spending his later years as a farmer at Glenham. His wife, whom he married February 20, 1828, was born April 28, 1800, survived him many years, dying January 15, 1882. She was a daughter of Peter Waldron (who was born April 23, 1754, and died May 10, 1827) and his wife, Edea Swartwout (born October 9, 1764, died January 1, 1847). Their marriage took place February 21, 1796.

Edward H. Bedford was one of two sons, his brother Andrew, who was born March 15, 1830, being the elder. Our subject attended the district schools at Glenham, and the academy at Fishkill, then conducted by Rev. Dr. Pingree, and later entered Yale College, but was obliged to leave on account of ill health before his course was finished. Returning home, he assumed the management of the farm, which he continued until his death, which occurred January 20, 1872. He was prominent in the varied activities of his locality, being one of the leading officials of the Fishkill Savings Bank, and an earnest supporter of the Republican party. In the Reformed Dutch Church at Glenham he was an active worker, holding the offices of deacon, treasurer and superintendent of the Sunday-school.

On October 13, 1859, he was married to Miss Anna Bevier, daughter of Rev. John H. and Margaret (Van Wyck) Bevier. Her father was at that time the pastor of the Reformed Dutch Church at Glenham, and he performed the ceremony in the parsonage there. On the maternal side her grandparents were Cornelius C. and Letitia (Adriance) Van Wyck, of Fishkill. To Mr. and Mrs. Bedford eight children were born, as follows: Edward Huntting, Jr., December 25, 1860, died August 11, 1864; John Bevier, February 27, 1862 (of whom further mention is made); Andrew Wortman, August 11, 1863, died December 30, 1882; Wilhelmus, January 24, 1865, died January 3, 1894; Sarah Van Wyck, May 21, 1866; Anna Huntting, July 12, 1868, was married at "Glen-villa," Glenham, May 23, 1894, to the Rev. Peter Stryker Beekman, by the Rev. Benjamin E. Dickhant; Charles Van Wyck, March 14, 1871, is a minister of the Reformed Dutch Church; and Edwin Rapelje, August 19, 1872, is a physician at Brooklyn, New York.

JOHN BEVIER BEDFORD was educated in the public schools of Glenham and Matteawan, also in a private school at Fishkill Landing and a boarding school at Poughkeepsie. After leaving school he settled on the old homestead, where he has ever since resided. In 1888 and '89 he passed a year in the West and Southwest, spending part of the time at Omaha, Neb., and Wichita, Kans. After his return home he was appointed postmaster at Glenham, beginning with the administration of President Benjamin Harrison, and which position he held for five consecutive years. He is now clerk of the school board, having held the office for nearly three years. In politics he is a Republican.

Genealogy of the Bevier Family—First Generation: Louis Bevier and Maria Lablane emigrated from France between the years 1672 and 1675. Children of Second Generation: Maria, born July 9, 1674; John, January 2, 1676; Abram, January 20, 1678; Samuel, January 21, 1680; Andries, July 12, 1682; Louis, November 6, 1684; Ester, 1686; Solomon, July 12, 1689. Third Generation: Abram Bevier was married to Rachel Vernooy, 1707. Their son Samuel was baptized in 1715, and they had nine other children beside him. Fourth Generation: Samuel Bevier, Jr., was married to Sarah Le Fever. tember 14, 1803, died March 8, 1864; (3) John H., born July 21, 1805, died August 14, 1880; (4) Maria, born August 29, 1807, died June 1, 1885; (5) William, born August 29, 1809, died June 14, 1834; (6) Benjamin H., born March 1, 1812, died September 7, 1880; (7) Sarah, born June 24, 1814, died March 20, 1863. John H. Bevier married Margaret Van Wyck and had the following children: Cornelius Van Wyck, born April 19, 1833, died September 28, 1889; Anna, born March 24, 1835 (widow of Edward H. Bedford), resides at "Glenvilla," Glenham; Wilhelmus, born April 23, 1840, died January 26, 1844; and Laetitia Van Wyck, born April 19, 1842, resides at "Glenvilla."

Genealogy of the Van Wyck Family: Cornelius C. Van Wyck, born April 25, 1763, died December 9, 1832. Letitia Adriance, his wife, born February 5, 1766, died May 22, 1858. They were married May 3, 1786. To them were born the following children: Isaac, born January 31, 1787, died April 16, 1858; Letty, born October 26, 1788, died June 9, 1835; Peter Schenck, born January 19, 1790, died September 28, 1875; Susan, born July 30, 1791, died July 2, 1878; John C., born March 24, 1793, died June 2, 1867; Sally, born February 5, 1795, died February 18, 1860; Maria, born December 15, 1796, died March 18, 1879; Ida Eliza, born May 16, 1799, died September 2, 1800; Charles, born April 7, 1801, died March 28, 1880; Albert, born February 25, 1803, died November 23, 1806; Caroline, born January 22, 1805, died August 16, 1875; Margaret, born July 3, 1810, died November 20, 1868 (she was the wife of the Rev. John H. Bevier).

JOHN SUTCLIFFE, one of the best known and most successful business men of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, was born in Stainland, near Halifax, Yorkshire, England, July 29, 1837, a son of Eli and Mary (Lumb) Sutcliffe. His grandfather John, and great-grandfather Eli Sutcliffe, were natives of the same locality, the former of whom carried on a woolen business, the latter conducting a paper-mill.

Eli Sutcliffe, the father of our subject, was born April 7, 1815, also in Stainland, near Halifax, England, grew to manhood in his native country, and there married Miss Mary Lumb, who was born in Barkisland, near Halifax, England, September '23, 1815. Her father, John Lumb, a weaver of woolen goods, was also born in that part of the country. About four years after their marriage the young couple came to the United States, and in 1840 settled in Poughkeepsie, where Mr. Sutcliffe at first worked in a woolen-factory, afterward engaging in teaming. In 1851 he opened a grocery store at the corner of Union and Clover streets, which he carried on some eighteen years. In 1855, in partnership with David Scott, he went into the manufacture of soap and candles, later, however, disposing of this business, also, in 1867, of his interest in the grocery store to his son William H., after which he retired from active business. In politics he was originally a Whig, and for many years since has been an active member of the Republican party; he has served as assessor for the city of Poughkeepsie. In religious faith he is a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, as was also his wife, who departed this life September 10, 1894. Five children were born to this worthy couple, as follows: John, the subject of this sketch; Sarah E., who married Benjamin F. Brinkerhoff; William H., a grocer in Poughkeepsie; Eli D., an Episcopalian minister in Oregon; and George T., who died in infancy.

John Sutcliffe, our subject, was three years old when his parents came to this country, and was reared in Poughkeepsie, where he attended the public schools, and also the Dutchess County Academy. His business career he began as clerk in his father's store, and in 1861 went to Peekskill, where he became assistant manager of the Peekskill Blast Furnace, a position he filled for two years. He then drew the plans for a new furnace to be established at Coldspring, Putnam Co., N. Y., known as the Phillips Iron Works, and which he also built and started. After getting this well under way, owing to some disagreement with the management, he resigned his position and went to England in order to post himself more thoroughly in the details of the iron business. In the fall of 1864 he returned to the United States, and began the building of new iron works at Verplanck's Point, N. Y.; but owing to the financial panic in 1865 they were not completed. In the latter year he erected the building on the corner of Union and Clover streets, Poughkeepsie, for his father, and became interested in a woolen business with an uncle. In the following spring he went to Hyde-ville, Vt., to take charge of the works of the Eagle Slate Co., and remained with that company for four years, managing the business with great success, and making many improvements in the establishment. In 1868 he went to Wales and England, where he made a study of the manufacture of slate, and on his return built the machinery for working up refuse stock into billiard tables, mantels and other slate work. He also built the mill which he successfully operated until 1870, when he left the company on account of a difference of opinion. In the summer of 1870 he remodeled a slate mill at the Chapman slate quarries in Pennsylvania, and in the winter of 1870-71 returned to Poughkeepsie to build the filter beds, docks, etc., for the city water works, and spent the year 1871 in constructing the same. The filter beds were the only successful ones of the kind in the United States at that time, and are still in operation.

Mr. Sutcliffe spent a portion of the following year traveling through the South and West, studying and looking up the large iron fields, etc. In the fall of 1872 he again returned to Poughkeepsie and built the Hudson River Iron Works, and the docks now known as the Phoenix Horse Shoe Works. In 1873 he took contracts to build sewers and lay water pipes in the city of Poughkeepsie; but before the contracts were finished, owing to the stringency in the money market, in the fall of 1873, the city could not raise sufficient money to meet its obligations, and requested Mr. Sutcliffe to suspend work. However, he obtained the necessary funds from private sources, and finished the work. He also managed the Franklin Iron Works near Utica, N. Y., which had two blast furnaces, and in addition to his other enterprises built a row of brick buildings in Poughkeepsie.

In the spring of 1874 he was called to Pennsylvania to settle up the business of the Pond-Eddy Blue Stone Company, which was located on the Erie railroad, in Pike county, in which affair he displayed much ability, and matters were satisfactorily arranged. He was next employed by the Vallecillo Silver Mining Co., to look up their mines in Mexico, and if he thought they could be run with profit, to take the management of them, and if not, to return and receive one year's pay for his services. His investigation proved so satisfactory that he took charge of the mines and operated them for ten years, during which time he succeeded in placing them on a good paying basis without any cost to the company. In the fall of 1884 he returned home and took a year's rest after his arduous labors, at the end of which time he was engaged by the receiver of the Steel Company of Canada, Nova Scotia, to take charge of its affairs as general manager, and owing to the success attending his management a new company was organized under the title of the Londonderry Iron Company, Limited, in which he took an interest, and of which he became general manager. In the fall of 1889 he resigned his position as manager, consenting, however, to act as consulting engineer, with his residence at Poughkeepsie instead of Nova Scotia. Since that time he has made his home in Poughkeepsie, and has been engaged in various contracts, and acting as consulting engineer.

On July 26, 1876, Mr. Sutcliffe was married to Miss Sarah E. Swart. Her father, William Beekman Swart, was of Dutch descent, a descendant of Anneke Jans, and an old settler of Dutchess county, whose father, Maj. Thomas Swart, served in the Revolutionary war, and was an officer in the war of 1812. Three children have been born of this union, Paul, Allen and John W.

Mr. Sutcliffe is a strong Republican, and served as police commissioner for two terms. In religious matters he is not a sectarian, but has a kindly feeling for all denominations. He was formerly an Odd Fellow, and is now a member of the Masonic fraternity; is a member of the Canadian Society of Civil Engineers, and the American Institute of Mining Engineers, also of the Engineers Club of New York City. In the various responsible positions that he has filled he has earned the reputation of a man of integrity, good judgment and keen business ability, and is everywhere respected and esteemed for his many sterling qualities.

WILLARD C. VAIL, of Poughkeepsie, was born in Verbank, Dutchess county, May 17, 1856, and is a descendant of Holland ancestors. He spent his boyhood on the old farm, and attended the district schools, from which he went to the Oswego Institute, and spent one year at the Poughkeepsie Military Institute. Later he entered the hardware store of Valentine & Coleman, in Poughkeepsie, holding the position of clerk and book-keeper. Next he commenced the study of law in the law office of Tristram Coffin, with whom he remained two years, and then entered the Albany Law School, graduating with the class of '76. Returning to the old homestead, he has here been engaged in farming ever since.

On January 14, 1885, Mr. Vail was married to Miss Gertrude B. Flagler, who was born at Overlook in the town of Lagrange, a daughter of Philip D. Flagler, a farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Vail have two children: Elias C. and Lavina C. In 1895 our subject purchased a house on the corner of South Hamilton and Barclay streets, Poughkeepsie, which is one of the finest residences in Poughkeepsie. He is a Republican, and one of the foremost citizens of the place.

Elias D. Vail, the father of our subject, was also born at Verbank, as was also Isaac, the grandfather, and Elias, the great-grandfather of our subject. Isaac, the grandfather, was the father of thirteen children, of whom Elias D. was the youngest. The latter grew to manhood on the farm, and married Miss Lavina Cornell, who was born in the town of Beekman, a daughter of George Cornell, a farmer. The Cornell family was also of Holland stock. To Elias D. and his wife children as follows were born: Willard C.; George E. and Edwin G. (twins), the former of whom died at the age of sixteen years, while the latter is a farmer on the old homestead. The mother died October 22, 1861; the father lives on the old homestead; he is a Republican in his political preferences.

JOHN VINCENT HUMPHREY. Among the prominent business men of Poughkeepsie few names are better known than that of the subject of this sketch, who, since 1874 has successfully conducted a drug business there. He is a native of Dutchess county born in the village of Beekman, October 20, 1853, and is a son of John Humphrey, whose birth also occurred at that place, in 1818. There the father engaged in farming until he was called from this earth, when our subject was only a few days old. At Stormville he was united in marriage with Catherine F. Storm, a daughter of Abram Storm, and to them were born four children: Helen R. Latitia C., deceased wife of William M. Quitard; Abram and John V. The paternal grandfather, who bore the name of Abram Hurphrey, also engaged in agricultural pursuits at Beekman.

The boyhood days of our subject were passed in Poughkeepsie, where he attended, and completed his literary education in, the Dutchess County Academy. He began his business career as a partner in the drug store of his brother, Abram S. Humphrey, who was then conducting the drug business, and in 1882 purchased his brother's interest, since which time he has been connected with the drug trade in Poughkeepsie. His first place of business was at No. 384 Main street, where he remained two years, and then removed to No. 386, there carrying on operations for five years. He then purchased his present store at No. 388 Main street, where he carries a full and complete line of drugs, patent medicines, etc. As a business man he is enterprising, energetic, always abreast with the times, and has been rewarded with a well-deserved success.

Mr. Humphrey was married at Poughkeepsie, October 3, 1877, to Miss Sarah Millard, daughter of John P. Millard, and four children grace their union: John Huson Millard, born November 29, 1878; Abram Storm, born April 16, 1880; Ogden Hoffman, born July 16, 1883, and Olive, born January 28, 1897. Mr. Humphrey is a man of generous impulses, giving liberally of his time and money to all worthy causes, and in everything he does he tries to make the world brighter and better. He holds membership with the Second Reformed Church of Poughkeepsie.

JAMES EDGAR SADLIER, M. D. Among the young followers of Æsculapius who have won their way unaided and attained prominence in their profession, is James Edgar Sadlier, of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county. He was born at Walden, Orange Co., N. Y., March 28, 1865, of French ancestry.

James Sadlier, Jr., the father of our subject, was a native of France, the son of James Sadlier, Sr., also a native of France, who, at the time of his son's birth, was visiting with other members of his family in England. When James Sadlier, Jr., was five years old, his parents removed to the United States, and located in New York. His education was received at the public schools of that city, and on leaving school he at once entered the business world. He established himself in the tobacco business at the corner of Broadway and Maiden Lane, where he remained until 1873. In Orange county, N. Y., he was married to Miss Ann Jeannette Woodruff, daughter of Richard and Charlotte Woodruff, prominent residents of that county. Six children were the result of this union, three of whom died in infancy; the others are: Charles Whittemore, secretary and treasurer of the Walden Savings Bank, and teller of the Walden National Bank; James Edgar; and Augustus, who is at the old home in Walden, N. Y. The father of this family passed to his final rest January 4, 1876, at the age of fifty-one years. He was a man highly esteemed for his many sterling qualities, and well liked by all who knew him for his genial nature, a characteristic of the French nation.

James Edgar Sadlier, the subject proper of this review, received an unusually good education, first attending the public schools of his native town, later attending an academy at Montgomery, Orange Co., N. Y., and also one at New Paltz, Ulster Co., N. Y. He decided to enter the medical profession, and accordingly went to Pine Bush, Orange county, and began the study of medicine under the careful tuition of his uncle, Dr. William H. Woodruff; after studying with him for some time our subject, in 1884, was enrolled as a student in the Medical Department of Union College at Albany, N. Y., completing his course in 1887. His advantages had well disciplined his mind, and his careful attention to detail had given him a reputation before leaving the class room that years of practice often fail to acquire. On leaving school he was appointed on the staff of the Albany City Hospital for the period from October, 1887, to April 1, 1889. After his term at the hospital had expired he came to Poughkeepsie, and began the regular practice of his profession. His untiring and unceasing labor, coupled with his skill, soon won recognition, and he, by his own exertions, had, in a short time, built up a large and lucrative practice. In July, 1891, he was appointed one of the attending physicians of Vassar Brothers Hospital, which position he is still holding. He is also physician for the pension department of this district.

On June 18, 1891, Dr. Sadlier was united in marriage with Miss Hattie C. Millspaugh, daughter of Theron L. Millspaugh, of Walden, N. Y. No children have been born to them. Socially the Doctor is a member of Armor Lodge, Knights of Pythias, and in the social life of the city he and his charming wife are well-known and important factors. He served as secretary of the Dutchess County Medical Society from January, 1891, to January, 1897, when the society elected him delegate to the New York State Medical Society for the ensuing three years, which necessitated his resignation as secretary.

SHERMAN NICHOLAS HAIGHT. The subject of this sketch is a representative of the ninth generation of the Haight family in America. Simon Haight, the founder of the family on this side of the Atlantic, came from England to Massachusetts in 1628. His son Nicholas (1) married Susanna Joyce, and had a son, Samuel, whose son Nicholas (2) married Patience Titus, and, purchasing land from the Nine Partners, came to Dutchess Co. from Long Island. Jacob (1), son of Nicholas (2), was born on Long Island and married Sarah Hicks; they came from Poughkeepsie in an ox-cart, and settled on the farm where Clement Haight now lives. The place was then a wilderness, and wolves were numerous; they built a log cabin, the door of which was bark. To this pioneer couple were born the following children: Elizabeth, John, Stephen, Nicholas (3), Jacob (2), Patience, Sarah, Samuel (2), and Phœbe. Nicholas (3) married Miss Margaret Vincent, and in their family of several children was Nicholas (4), who married Phœbe Skidmore, and followed the occupation of a farmer exclusively. Both he and his wife were Quakers, and they reared the following: Andrew, the father of our subject; Sally, who died unmarried; Elias, who married Lavina Vail, and was a farmer in the town of Washington; James, who married Eliza Smith, and was a farmer on Chestnut Ridge; and Louisa, who died unmarried.

Andrew Haight, the father of our subject, was born in the town of Washington, May 16, 1805. He married Sarah Ann Sherman, a daughter of Jedediah and Catherine (Gage) Sherman, born October 17, 1803, either in Dutchess or Saratoga county. After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Haight settled on a farm, and two children were born to them: Nicholas, who died in infancy, and Sherman, our subject. The father died September 10, 1877, and the mother on April 8, 1869. In politics he was a Republican, and, religiously, both he and his wife were followers of the Quaker faith.

Jedediah Sherman, the maternal grandfather of Sherman Haight, was a prosperous farmer in the town of Washington, born February 26, 1781. His first wife (whose name is not now known) was born June 8, 1780. By her he had five children, of whom the following is the record: (1) Mosher B., a miller at Little Rest, first married Miss Barton, by whom he had two children—Kate and Isaac—and for his second wife wedded Miss Phœbe Conklin, a sister of Isaac Conklin, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere. (2) Howland R., a dyer, who married Caroline Innis, by whom he had one child—Kate. (3) Jeremiah D., a merchant at Mabbettsville and later a farmer, who married Hannah Tabor, and they had children as follows—Elizabeth, Sarah, Caroline, Philip J., Martha, George, and Kate. (4) Leonard, who first married a Miss Duncan, by whom he had two children—Mary and Matilda; after the death of his wife he again married, and three children were born of this union—Jane, Henrietta, and Charles. (5) The mother of our subject.

Sherman Haight, the subject proper of this sketch, was born in the town of Washington, May 27, 1841. He spent his boyhood on the home farm, and on December 7, 1869, was united in marriage with Miss Sarah E. Sisson, a native of Washington town, and a daughter of Henry and Eliza (Bryan) Sisson. After their marriage our subject and his wife located on their present large dairy farm, which is one of the finest in Dutchess county. The following children have graced the union of Mr. and Mrs. Haight: Sarah Eliza, Anna Sisson, Andrew Henry, Sherman David, and Samuel Moore, all of whom are living and unmarried. Politically, our subject is a Republican, and he and his wife are prominent in social circles.

Henry Sisson, the father of Mrs. Haight, was born in Washington township, April 10, 1807, a son of Lemuel, Jr., and Sarah (Sutherland) Sisson, the former of whom was a native of Rhode Island, a son of Lemuel, Sr., who in turn was a direct descendant of old Huguenot stock. The other children in the family of Lemuel Sisson, Jr., were: Jacob, Job, William, Anna, Richard, Lydia, Phœbe, Sally, Isaac and Marah Deborah. On reaching manhood, Henry Sisson was united in marriage with Miss Eliza Bryan, who was born March 16, 1810, in the town of Northeast, a daughter of Amos and Elizabeth (Flint) Bryan, and to them were born four children, namely: Emily, who married Walter F. Conklin, a merchant and musician; James B., a farmer and auctioneer, who married Miss Helen Titus; Anna, who became the wife of Samuel H. Moore, for many years associated with Adriance Platt & Co., manufacturers of harvesting machinery; and Sarah E. (Mrs. Haight).

Amos Bryan, the maternal grandfather of Mrs. Haight, settled on the Bryan homestead farm, in Northeast town, after his marriage with Elizabeth Flint. They had a family of nine children: David, Isaac, Ward, Ezra, James, Laura, Mary, Sarah E. and Eliza. William Cullen Bryant was related to this family.

CHARLES KIRCHNER, the well-known proprietor of a large meat market at Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, and one of the most extensive real-estate holders of that city, is a native of Germany, born May 31, 1835, in Otterberg, Rhenish Bavaria.

His ancestors were prominent residents of that place for many generations, and William Kirchner, his great-grandfather, was Dominie in the First Reformed Church there. Frantz Kirchner, our subject's grandfather, a butcher by trade, had six children: Catherine Goodhart; William and Henry, who came to Philadelphia at an early date; Jacob, who was an unusually fine specimen of physical manhood, being over six feet in height, and was a member of Napoleon's famous body-guard of three hundred men in the ill-starred Russian campaign, from which he never returned.

Conrad Kirchner, our subjects' father, born in 1800, succeeded to his father's business, and remained at the old home, where he died in 1877. In 1825 he married Elizabeth Godel, who was born in Otterberg in 1800, and died in 1880. They had ten children: Elizabeth, the wife of Charles Nunce, of Newark, N. J.; William, who inherited his father's house and business, and died in 1892; Caroline, who remained in Germany and married John Hubing there; Jacob (deceased), formerly a butcher at Otterberg; Charles, our subject; Conrad, who was a butcher in Otterberg for many years, and died in Poughkeepsie in 1892; Wilhelmina, who married (first) Christian Strause, and (second) Baron Von Gutterman, both prominent men in Germany; Louis, a butcher in Poughkeepsie; and Philip and Henry, both in the butcher business at Newark, N. J. The brothers have all been successful in business. The parents came to America in 1869 to visit their sons, and the father, who was a man of fine presence and genial nature, made many friends among the leading people of Poughkeepsie. In the summer of 1875 Mr. and Mrs. Conrad Kirchner celebrated their golden wedding at their home in Otterberg, Germany, for which occasion eleven members of the Kirchner family in America proceeded to Germany to be present at the event; there were eighty members present.

Charles Kirchner, the subject proper of this review, attended the schools of his native town until he was fifteen years old. He made good use of these opportunities, and has since kept well informed on the topics which interest all intelligent people. At the age of eighteen he began to assist his father in business; but soon after, in May, 1854, he came to America, being the first of the sons to leave the old country. After a short stay in Newark, N. J., he went to Poughkeepsie, arriving there on July 5, same year. He secured a position as clerk with Jacob Petillon, remaining six months, when he returned to Newark and clerked in a butcher shop for a year and a half. During this time he learned the trade, also familiarized himself with the English language, and in August, 1856, he engaged in business for himself in Newark, continuing it successfully until October, 1862, when he removed to Poughkeepsie and opened his market at No. 156 Main street, which he has now conducted for more than thirty-four years. His success in this line has been marked, and he has also made some judicious investments in real estate, which have proven profitable. At one time he owned the Poughkeepsie Driving Park, which he sold to Edwin Thorn, and at present he pays the largest taxes on real estate of anyone in the city. In 1872 he built "Kirchner's Hall" for a State Armory, which is allowed to be one of the best buildings in the city, and in 1891 he converted it into a public hall, for which purpose it is one of the finest in the State. His rare judgment and business skill have been widely recognized in financial circles, and he is often consulted in important enterprises.

In 1867 Mr. Kirchner married Miss Caroline C. Petillon, daughter of Jacob Petillon, his first employer in this country. They have no children. Mr. Kirchner has thirty-five nephews and nieces in Germany and America, to whom he is most generous and affectionate, being especially interested in their education. One he has sent to the Bishop School; one to the Bisbee Military School; one to the Theological Seminary, at Rochester, while a niece graduated from Vassar in 1893. He is always ready to risk something to help another, has been bondsman for many city officers and bank officials, and has never lost a dollar. As a lover of horses, he delights in owning and driving a fine team.

Mr. Kirchner has made four visits to the Fatherland, one for four months, in 1861, while he was in business in Newark; one of seven months in 1874, and one in 1880 at the time of his mother's death, when he re-interred his father's remains by her side in a new burial plot, and erected a handsome monument. His last visit was in 1890, when his wife accompanied him, and they traveled some eight months, visiting many points of interest. He and his wife are leading members of the Reformed Dutch Church, and in local affairs, he is regarded as a friend of every progressive movement. He is an influential worker in the Republican party, and has been urged to become a candidate for the office of mayor, but he has never permitted his name to be used in such connection.

VAN WYCKS. The ancestor of the Van Wycks in Dutchess county was Cornelius Barents Van Wyck, who, in 1650, came to New Netherlands from the town of Wyck, Holland, and in 1660 married, at Flatbush, Kings Co., N. Y., Ann, daughter of Rev. Johannis Theodorus Polhemus, the first Reformed Dutch minister in that county.

The Van Wycks, of Holland, are an aristocratic family, and continue to use the same coat of arms as those brought here by the American Van Wycks upward of two and one-half centuries ago. From the beginning of the history of Dutchess county the Van Wycks have been prominent in the professions, and in the public service, as judges, legislators, congressmen, senators, and soldiers of all the wars of our country, including that for American independence.

Theodorus Van Wyck, son of Cornelius Barents Van Wyck and Ann Polhemus, was born in Flatbush in 1667. He married Margaret Brinckerhof; took oath of allegiance at New Amsterdam in 1687.

Theodorus Van Wyck, son of Theodorus Van Wyck and Margaret Brinckerhof, was the surveyor and original purchaser of a tract of 900 acres of land in the town of East Fishkill. He was a very prominent man of his time. Together with Col. John Brinckerhof, he was appointed one of the first judges of the Court of Common Pleas, on the 24th of February, 1752, by George Clinton, Captain General Governor, and Chief of the Province of New York, and the territories thereon depending in America, under King George II. [This old document is now in the Armory Museum at Poughkeepsie.] He married Elizabeth Creed.

Theodorus Van Wyck, son of Theodorus Van Wyck and Elizabeth Creed, was born in 1730, and died in 1797. He married Altje, daughter of Col. John Brinckerhof and his wife, Janetje Van Voorhees. He was a physician, and the earliest in the county; he was among the first to renounce his allegiance to King George, and because of his outspoken sentiments was compelled by his Tory neighbors, in 1775, to leave Fishkill. He removed to New York City, and was elected a delegate to the Second Provincial Congress in that year. The patriots becoming more bold and outspoken throughout the county, he returned to his farm in the early part of 1776, and was again elected to Congress in that year from Dutchess county. During the Revolution he was an active patriot. His family have from time to time held many offices of trust. The sons of Dr. Theodorus Van Wyck and Altje Brinckerhof, his wife, were Abraham Van Wyck, John Brinckerhof Van Wyck, and William Van Wyck.

Abraham Van Wyck held the commission of major-general in the war of 1812; he was a large landowner in Fishkill. William Van Wyck was elected to Congress from Dutchess in the early part of the century. John Brinckerhof Van Wyck married (first) Gertrude Brinckerhof, and (second) Susan Schenck; his sons by his second wife were: Alfred, John, William and Edmund. He was a large landowner in Fishkill, and was a general in the State militia. He was elected to the Assembly of this State in 1812 and 1816; was a successful breeder of Merino sheep, and made a fortune in wool and land. Old documents in possession of the family show that he held several civil appointments from Governors John Jay and Dewitt Clinton.

Alfred Van Wyck, eldest son of John B. Van Wyck and Susan Schenck, was a farmer in the town of Fishkill, occupying the old homestead. In 1860 he moved to Illinois, buying a tract of land that afterward became a part of the town of Clifton. He died in 1894, aged ninety-two years. He married Miss Charlotte Viets, by whom he had one son, John B., and two daughters, Mary and Charlotte.

John Van Wyck, second son, had an inclination toward a mercantile life; he became a partner in a large dry-goods house in New York City, and remained there for some years. He afterward retired from business, and, returning to Dutchess county, purchased a handsome place at New Hamburg, where he died in 1878. He married Miss Sarah Mesier; their family were ten in number: four daughters—Kate, Cornelia, Sarah and Mary; and six sons—Mesier, Abraham, Henry, Edmund, John and William.

William Van Wyck, third son, studied law and was admitted to the bar. He died from an accident in 1854. He married Miss Augusta Forman; they had no family.

Edmund Van Wyck, fourth son, was born January 31, 1818; he was a farmer, and always lived in Dutchess county. After attending private schools in Poughkeepsie and New York City he traveled to some extent through the West. He married, January 9, 1845, Miss Josephine Barnes, a daughter of the late David Barnes, and the following children were born to them: William (died in 1870 unmarried), David Barnes, Stephen, Paul Schenck, Joseph, and Alex. W. Mr. Van Wyck lived upon a farm in the town of Poughkeepsie. In 1852 he moved to the town of Lagrange, where he resided until his death, September 10, 1888. Mrs. Van Wyck died in 1861.

DAVID BARNES, second son, a physician of Lagrange, was born in that town April 24, 1852. His early education was received at the little "Red School House" near Manchester Bridge, and later he attended the Cary Institute, a Quaker school in Poughkeepsie. Upon leaving school he entered the drug store of Van Valkenburg & Brown, where he remained several years. He was also with Hopkins & Arnold, Chas. S. Bowne, and Webb & Herwood. He next went to Kansas, remaining there nine years; studied medicine in the Omaha Medical College, and then went to the Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York, from which he was graduated in 1889. He is a member of Stissing Lodge, A. F. & A. M., and Poughkeepsie Chapter No. 172, R. A. M.; also of the Dutchess County Medical Society.

Stephen, third son, was born June 28, 1854; his education was obtained at Pelham Institute and at Manchester. He lived at home until 1881, when he removed to Kansas to enter the sheep business with his brothers, David and Paul. He gave this up after a few years to enter upon the study of law, and was admitted to the Bar in the State of Kansas. In 1886 he was elected Probate Judge, and re-elected in 1888. On December 25, 1890, he married Miss Helen Dicken, and they have three children: Edmund, William and Harlan.

Paul Schenck, fourth son, was born May 19, 1856. He was educated at the district school and Pelham Institute. In 1880 he went to Kansas, where he began sheep breeding. He returned to Dutchess county in 1886, and here remained until 1895, when he entered into business in the city of Buffalo.

Joseph, fifth son, was born October 8, 1858; was educated at the same institution as was Paul; and has always resided upon the old homestead in Lagrange. On January 1, 1880, he married Miss Charlotte Bartlett, and they have the following children: Jennie L., Josephine, Edmund, and Paul Schenck. Mr. Van Wyck is a Republican, and in 1896 he was elected supervisor of the town of Lagrange for two years; he has always followed the occupation of farming.

Alex. W., sixth son, was born March 5, 1861; was educated with his brothers, and in 1881 went to Nebraska, where he remained a year. He then went to Washington Territory (now State), settling at New Whatcom, and was elected city treasurer. On July 21, 1888, he married Miss Annie Kalloch, daughter of the late Hon. I. S. Kalloch, mayor of San Francisco, Cal. In 1896 he was elected county auditor after one of the hottest political battles in the record of the county. He is a Republican. He and his wife have two children: Phillip and Catherine.

Other well-known members of the family, descendants in the same line, and residents of Dutchess county, are: S. Miller Van Wyck, lawyer, residing at Fishkill-on-Hudson; B. W. Van Wyck, of Poughkeepsie; Abraham Van Wyck and James Van Wyck, of East Fishkill.

An examination of the family coat of arms shows that an ancestor was in the Crusades, which commenced about the year 1096 under Pope Urban II.

ISAAC HAIGHT, JR. (deceased). For several generations the family name of the subject of this sketch has been a familiar one in this locality. The first of the family in direct line to emigrate to America was Simon Haight, who arrived in the New World in 1628. Originally the Haight's lived in Wales. Simon Haight was the father of Nicholas (1) Haight, who in turn had a son Samuel. Samuel Haight resided on Long Island, and there his son Nicholas (2), the great-great-grandfather of our subject, was born.

Nicholas (2) became the father of Jacob Haight, who was born on Long Island in 1705. Jacob, the great-grandfather of our subject, was united in marriage with Miss Sarah Hicks, and to them the following children were born: Elizabeth, born in 1734; John, 1736; Stephen, 1738; Nicholas, 1740; Jacob (2) 1742; Patience, 1744; Sarah, 1746; Samuel, 1748; and Phœbe, 1750.

Jacob (2) was married to Miss Phœbe Haviland, who was born in 1745, and they reared the following children: Charity, born in 1769; Patience, born in 1771; James, deceased in infancy; Sarah, born in 1775; John, the father of our subject, born in 1777; Elizabeth, born in 1779; Jacob, born in 1782, and Isaac, born in 1784.

John Haight was born in Hart's Village, where he married Miss Elsie Thorne and settled on a farm on which a part of Millbrook now stands. Four children were born to him and his wife, namely: William, who was a farmer on the old homestead; Isaac, our subject; Jacob, who died in 1845; and Anna, who married Jacob H. Allen, a farmer at Skaneateles, Onondaga Co., N. Y. The father was a farmer; in religious faith he and his wife were Quakers. He died April 26, 1836.

Isaac Haight, the subject proper of this sketch, was born June 26, 1807, in what was then called Hart's Village, town of Washington. After passing his youth on his father's farm, he clerked in a store in Poughkeepsie, and also at Hart's Village.

In 1835 he was united in marriage to Miss Hannah L. Wintringham, who was born in New York City in 1812, a daughter of Thomas and Ruth (Lawton) Wintringham. After their marriage our subject and his wife located on a farm on the present site of Millbrook. Four children were born to them: William Ed., who died in the Civil war; Sidney W., who died in 1882; Frances; and Emily R. Mr. Haight was a Democrat, and held the office of supervisor of his town; he was a substantial and progressive citizen, a leader among men, and is well remembered as a kind and generous citizen. His death occurred November 15, 1864; his wife survived until February 15, 1893.

Thomas Wintringham, the father of Mrs. Haight, was born in Holmpton, Yorkshire, England, in 1775. He came to America and located in New York City, where he was a vintner. He married Miss Ruth Lawton, and they became the parents of the following children: David L.; Hannah W., wife of our subject; Sidney, deceased in infancy; Sidney (2); Jeremiah; and Ruth. Of these, David was a retired citizen of Jersey City; Sidney lived in Brooklyn, retired; Jeremiah was also a retired citizen of Brooklyn; Ruth married Henry Clement, a merchant of Flushing, L. I. Mrs. Wintringham came from Rhode Island, where her family were Quakers.

CHARLES A. STORM (deceased) was a man of the strictest integrity, whose honorable, upright life won the commendation of all. His birth took place in the town of East Fishkill, September 16, 1846, and he belonged to a family which had for many years been prominently identified with the history of Dutchess county. His grandfather was Col. John G. Storm, a native of Dutchess county, and the son of Charles G. Storm.

Charles G. Storm, the father of our subject, was also born in Dutchess county, and here devoted his entire life to agricultural pursuits. He wedded Mary Adriaance, a daughter of Isaac Adriaance, and after their marriage they located upon a farm in the town of East Fishkill, where they reared their family of five children: Susan M., the widow of William P. Storm, who was a merchant of New York City, but in later life engaged in farming; John, a resident of White Plains, N. Y., who married Henrietta Albro, a native of New York City; Margaret, who died unmarried; George, who married Emma Haight, a native of White Plains; and Charles A., of this review. The father always turned his attention to farming, was an unfaltering Republican in politics, and with his family held to the belief of the Reformed Dutch Church.

Like most farmer boys, our subject passed his childhood, in assisting his father in the work of the home farm, and in attending the district school; later he was a student in the Bisbee school at Poughkeepsie, N. Y. After finishing his education he returned to the farm, and January 24, 1872, was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth B. Storm, a daughter of John V. Storm, and a sister of Abram J. Storm, Joseph H. Storm and W. J. Storm. They began housekeeping upon his father's place, which he operated for five years, and the following two years were spent upon her father's farm. In 1879, he purchased the farm on which Mrs. Storm now resides, and where Mr. Storm's death occurred June 22, 1892. His attention was devoted exclusively to his farming interests, and his political support was ever given the Republican party, which had in him a most earnest advocate. No man in the town of East Fishkill gained and retained more friends, or was held in higher esteem by his fellow citizens than Charles A. Storm.

CHARLES DOUGHTY (deceased) was one of the representative and honored citizens of the town of Beekman, where his birth occurred, April 1, 1841. He was a descendant of Rev. Francis Doughty, who about the year 1633 emigrated from England and located at Taunton, Mass., which places him among the earliest of the Puritan fathers following in the footsteps of the "Mayflower" pioneers. The Doughty family in England is of ancient origin, dating back before the Norman conquest. The name was originally spelled Doghtig, and the family motto was "Palma non sine pulvere."

Joseph Doughty, the great-grandfather of our subject, was a native of Long Island, and was the first of the family to come to Dutchess county, locating upon the farm in the town of Beekman, between Greenhaven and Poughquag, now occupied by John Brill. Upon that place he erected a log house, and spent the remainder of his life. He was united in marriage with Miss Psyche Wiltsie, who was born September 16, 1736, and they became the parents of twelve children, whose names with dates of birth are as follows: Mary, March 23, 1754; John, June 8, 1757; Thomas, April 27, 1759; Jane, July 4, 1761; Joseph, October 14, 1763; Psyche, March 6, 1766; Martin, March 14, 1768; William, November 5, 1770; Jacob, October 20, 1772; Elizabeth, October 18, 1774; Cornwell, October 28, 1776; and Nehemiah, October 14, 1780.

William Doughty, the grandfather of our subject, was born in the town of Beekman, and there carried on farming throughout his life. He married Mrs. Sarah (Van Wyck) Vanderburg, and in their family were six children: Phebe, born August 18, 1805; John J., April 12, 1807; Psyche, July 9, 1809; William, June 7, 1811; Sarah, June 22, 1813; and George T., October 26, 1815. The father of these died in 1854, at the age of eighty-four years; the mother died in 1865, at the age of ninety-four years.

William Doughty, Jr., the father of our subject, spent his entire life in the town of Beekman, and after reaching years of maturity devoted his time and attention to agricultural pursuits. He was united in marriage with Jane F. Brock, also a native of the town of Beekman, and to them three sons were born: Charles, subject of this review; Walter, who was born in 1844, and is now secretary and treasurer of a company at the Union Stock Yards at Chicago, Ill.; and Edgar, who died in 1865. The mother's death occurred in December, 1874, that of the father on June 1, 1893. In religious belief he was a member of the Society of Friends.

In the district schools near his home Charles Doughty secured his education, and he always remained upon the homestead farm in the town of Beekman, dying there November 13, 1884. He took a lively interest in political affairs, being one of the most earnest supporters of the Republican party, and after the civil war served as revenue collector of Dutchess county. He also held the office of justice of the peace of Beekman township, and discharged his duties, whether public or private, with promptness and fidelity which won him the commendation of all. Socially he affiliated with Hopewell Lodge, F. & A. M. He was universally respected, and his word was considered as good as his bond. By his death the county lost one of its most honored and useful citizens.

On May 23, 1865, Mr. Doughty was married to Miss Mary E. Brown, a lady who is greatly respected in the community. Two children blessed this union: Morton B. and Christopher Brown. The former was born January 10, 1868, was educated in the district schools, also in the Pingry school, at Elizabeth, N. J., and was reared on a farm. On August 14, 1895, he married Miss Lillian Tormoehlan, daughter of William and Louise (Sherbourne) Tormoehlan, the former of whom was born in Germany, the latter in Cincinnati, Ohio. The mother died December 9, 1882, the father on June 5, 1892. The family reside in Chicago, where Mrs. Morton Doughty was born. Christopher Brown, the second son of Charles and Mary E. Doughty, was born June 30, 1871, and at the present time is steward of the "Garden City Hotel," New York City.

Christopher Brown, the father of Mrs. Doughty, was a native of Germany, where he learned the trade of a miller, and in early manhood he came to America, locating in the town of Beekman, Dutchess county, where he made his home for forty-five years, during which time he followed milling at Greenhaven. At Fishkill, Dutchess county, he was united in marriage with Miss Nancy Griffen, and they had two daughters: Mary E. and Phebe, the latter of whom married Homer Chapman. The parents were both widely and favorably known, and enjoyed the confidence and respect of all. The father died March 5, 1883, the mother on February 18, 1896.

ALBERT J. AKIN, of Pawling, Dutchess county, one of the ablest financiers which this section has produced, has rendered important service to his community by promoting various enterprises which have developed its commercial relations, and led the way to the expansion of its business interests.

He is descended from a long line of Quaker ancestry, the head of the American branch of the family being John Akin, who was born in Scotland in 1663, and about the year 1680, or earlier, on account of religious persecutions, emigrated to America. He located in Dartmouth, Mass., when about seventeen years of age. He married Mary Briggs, who was born August 9, 1671, the daughter of Thomas Briggs, and they had eight sons and seven daughters. Their eldest son, David Akin, born September 19, 1689, was the next ancestor in direct line of descent, and the first of the name to settle at Quaker Hill, where he probably occupied the property now owned by the family of Mr. Gould. He had a record for good service during the Revolutionary war, and his death occurred in 1779. In 1711 he married Sarah Allen, of Portsmouth, R. I., and removed to Quaker Hill (formerly called the Oblong), in 1741. Six sons and four daughters were born to them, and their son, John Akin, born September 15, 1718, became the next in line of descent. He married Margaret Hicks, who was born in Portsmouth, R. I., January 12, 1713, and they had three daughters and one son, as follows: Anna, Mary, Abigail and John.

John Akin was born November 11, 1753, and December 27, 1775, married Molly Ferris, who was born April 20, 1759, daughter of Reed Ferris. They had two sons and four daughters: Albro (our subject's father), Sarah, Margaret, Ann, Daniel and Amanda.

Albro Akin was born March 6, 1778, at Quaker Hill, and became one of the most influential and distinguished citizens of his day in this section, a contemporary of Taber, Kirby and others of note. He was a successful merchant and agriculturist. On March 24, 1815, he was appointed judge of the court of common pleas of Dutchess county by Gov. Daniel D. Tompkins. On the organization of the Poughkeepsie National Bank, he became a member of its first board of directors. He was married three times, first in 1801, to Pauline Vander Burgh, who was born in 1783, and they had three children: Albert John, born August 14, 1803, married Jane Williams; Almira, born February 3, 1806, married Joshua L. Jones; and Helen M., born July 4, 1810, married John W. Taylor. The mother of this family died in 1810, and Mr. Akin married Sarah Merritt, who died leaving no children. On December 4, 1818, Mr. Akin married a third wife, Miss Jemima Jacacks, and their pleasant home at Quaker Hill was brightened by seven children, as follows: Mary J.; William Henry; Cornelia; Gulielma Maria; Amanda who married Dr. C. W. Stearns; Annie E. who married W. H. Ogden; and Caroline who married Adolph Wilm-Beets.

Albert John Akin left home when nineteen years of age, going to New York City, where he served a clerkship of two years with William and Charles Underhill, and then commenced business on his own account under the firm name of Seaman & Akin. After continu-uing successfully for several years he was compelled, on account of ill health, to retire to the country under advice of his physician. With health restored, he re-entered business life, at the age of thirty, engaging in farming upon 200 acres of land which his father had given him, continuing in this calling exclusively until about 1849, when he began to give his attention to railroading. The Harlem railroad was projected at that time, and Mr. Akin helped to secure the right of way, and was one of the committee appointed to raise $100,000 for the road, John Ketcham being also a member. Later Mr. Akin was appointed to pay out the installments of money received, and his own high reputation did much to assist the credit of the road. Two years were occupied in this work, and, no one being willing to furnish ties or timber for the road, Mr. Akin advanced money for the same. It was also through his influence that the present refreshment house was located at Pawling, which contributed much indirectly to the growth and prosperity of the town. After the road was finished, December 30, 1849, there being no depot building, Mr. Akin put up the first one, and also, in company with other business men, furnished money for a small hotel. In 1849 he organized the Pawling National Bank, and was elected president of the institution, which prospered under his management. This position he held until January, 1895, when he resigned on account of his advanced age. Business has been a pleasure to him. He has been a director of the Harlem railroad for fifteen years, when Commodore Vanderbilt was connected with it, and has also been a stockholder in the Utica & Schenectady railroad, and in the New York Central. His enterprise and foresight have done much for Pawling and Quaker Hill, and he owns 500 acres of land at the latter place. He built Akin Hall, and endowed the Akin Hall Association with $150,000, and erected the "Mizzentop Hotel," which helped to develop the place as a summer resort, also erected four or five cottages for renting purposes.

In religion Mr. Akin is non-sectarian, with strong inclination toward the faith of his forefathers. Politically he is an Independent, has eschewed partisan work, but served as a Presidential elector in the electoral college which placed the lamented Garfield in the White House. On December 21, 1835, he married Jane Williams, who was born in New York City. They have no children. For the last thirty years his winter residence has been in New York City.

CORYDON WHEELER. Among the self-made men of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, who have attained a high rank in their various callings by their own unaided exertions, may be found this gentleman, who has become widely known as an architect of ability. He was born December 21, 1837, in the town of Boonville, Oneida Co., N. Y., and is the son of Albert and Mary (Hitchcock) Wheeler, the former of English descent.

Albert Wheeler, our subject's father, was born in New Hampshire, in 1803, and was reared upon a farm. Removing to Oneida county, he there carried on farming during his entire life, becoming one of the thrifty and well-to-do men of that locality, and highly respected in his community. He was possessed of literary tastes, and was well informed on all current topics. In politics he was an Old-line Whig. He married Miss Mary Hitchcock (daughter of Pownell Hitchcock), who was born in Schoharie county, N. Y., in 1812. Five children were born of this union, as follows: Almarine, who became the wife of Nathan W. Jones; Mary Ann, married to Austin Walcott; Corydon; Elbridge, who died when nineteen years old; and Caroline, married to Francis M. Reed, of Boonville, Oneida Co., N. Y. The father died in 1859, and the mother in 1873.

Corydon Wheeler had but limited opportunities for an education in his early days, his only schooling being obtained in the common schools of his locality, which he attended until fourteen years of age. He was, however, very fond of reading, and when a young man began collecting a library, at present owning a fine assortment of books. He has improved every opportunity of acquiring an education, and is to-day one of the well-informed men in the county. On leaving school he worked on his father's farm until eighteen years of age; but his tastes inclining to mechanical pursuits he took up the carpenter's trade, and later became a contractor and builder, erecting some of the large stores and residences in Poughkeepsie. During this time he had been studying the profession of an architect, and since 1884 has devoted himself to that line of business. He has made the plans for some large buildings in various places, among these being a large structure in Chicago, an extensive hotel in Sheffield, Ala., and Trinity Methodist Church in Poughkeepsie. In all his work he shows intelligence, artistic taste and careful attention to the purposes for which the buildings are to be used, making his work satisfactory, both ornamentally and practically—consequently he has been successful in his enterprises, and is among the foremost in his profession.

On October 8, 1860, Mr. Wheeler was married to Miss Celia A. Kellogg, of Trenton, Oneida Co., N. Y., and four children have been born to them, two of whom survive: Jessie L., the wife of William P. McNeil, of Poughkeepsie; and Winthrop R., a carpenter, residing in Poughkeepsie. Chester A. died when a little over two years old, and Lauretta at the age of seven months. Mr. Wheeler was for some years a Republican, and cast his first Presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln, but in 1874 joined the Prohibition party, his sympathies being with the advocates of total abstinence. He is a man of strong convictions, and is governed by principle in all his actions. He is a member of the Trinity M. E. Church, and one of its official board. He has also been a member of the Church choir for many years, and is always ready to assist in Church work. In public matters he is a worthy citizen, and may be counted on to do his share in whatever is proposed for the welfare and progress of the community.

REV. TERENCE F. KELLY. The powers of a consecrated life extend far beyond the reach of the spoken word, setting at naught all differences of creed, and Rev. Father Kelly, of St. Joachim's Church, Matteawan, while working quietly in his appointed sphere, has gained the esteem and regard of all classes in the community. The history of this devoted worker will be read with interest, and will convey its own lesson.

Father Kelly was born in New York City, December 26, 1855, the son of William and Ann (Dowling) Kelly, who were natives of Dublin, Ireland. The father was a carpenter by trade, following that occupation in the old country, and, for a short time, in New York City, but later, on moving to Montreal, Canada, he engaged in mercantile business, in which he was very successful, owning several stores. His last days were spent in New York City, to which place he and his wife returned when the subject of this sketch was about eleven years old. They reared a family of children, among whom was a son, Michael, who was a mechanical genius, and was famous throughout the United States for his work in that line, being employed by the Goulds and others. He died February 1, 1895, at his residence in Charleston, South Carolina.

Until the age of fourteen Father Kelly attended the public schools of his native city, and he then entered St. Francis College, in Brooklyn. A first cousin, Bishop Phelan, of Kingston, Canada, first awakened in the young lad's mind the consciousness of his vocation, and the long course of preparation was pursued by Father Kelly with the same ardor which has since characterized his pastoral work. At nineteen he became a student at St. Lawrence College, Montreal, Canada, and on May 30, 1878, he was ordained to the priesthood. Since that time his lot has been cast in this section, his first appointment being at Matteawan as assistant pastor to Father Henry. He had been there about two years when the Dominican Fathers resigned the charge of the New York Catholic Protectory, and Father Quinn, the Vicar General, appointed Father Kelly to the post, with an assistant. About a year later came an appointment to a charge which included Staatsburg, Hyde Park, and Clinton Corners, and while there Father Kelly built churches at Staatsburg and Clinton Corners, and enlarged and improved the parsonage at Hyde Park. Six years after his transfer to this post Archbishop Corrigan added the care of the parish of Rhinecliff, which had become financially embarrassed, and gave Father Kelly two assistants, Fathers White and Fagan. His present appointment dates from December 1, 1890, when he succeeded Father McSwyggan, and during that time he has done much to build up and strengthen his congregation in both numbers and influence. In the refurnishing and decoration of the church edifice, and in various improvements in the other property of the parish one may see the results of his wise management; but to rightly judge of his work one must visit the schools where the Sisters of Charity and the Franciscan Brothers train the children of the parish, and must view the unceasing labors in the pastorate through which the spiritual life of the people is quickened and developed. Modest and unassuming in manner, and ever ready to give to his efficient assistants the credit for the work which is being done, Father Kelly's personality reveals the quiet strength which unobtrusively yet effectively inspires, directs, and molds the lives of all whom his influence touches. By his people he is greatly beloved, and on the occasion of the fifteenth anniversary of his ordination they presented him with a handsome purse, in token of their affectionate appreciation.

Outside of his own fold Father Kelly is known and honored in a remarkable degree, and he numbers among his friends Gov. Morton of this State. During his stay at Rhinecliff he was elected trustee of the local schools, a fact which speaks more loudly than words could do of the impression which his worth makes upon all who know him, and since going to Matteawan he has been appointed a director of the village hospital. In his clerical work Father Kelly is efficiently assisted by Rev. James A. White and Rev. P. C. Cary.

A MASA DAKIN COLEMAN (deceased), after whom Coleman Station was named, and who for a number of years was a leading agriculturist of the town of Northeast, Dutchess county, was a descendant of one of the oldest families in this country, the record reaching back to the year 1635. In Hinman's Catalogue of Early Settlers of Connecticut we find the following: "Thomas Coleman, of Marlborough, England, farmer, embarked at Hampton in the 'James,' of Lundon, about April, 1635. Thomas Coleman died at Hadley, Mass., in 1674. The births of children are not recorded at Westfield, but Noah and John are his sons. Noah died at Hadley in 1676." John had sons, Noah and Ebenezer, who removed to Colchester, Conn., about the year 1700. Ebenezer married Ruth Niles, of Colchester, in 1705, and they had a son, Niles, who had a son, Josiah, born at Hebron, Conn., April 4, 1733, who married Elizabeth Root, of Hebron, November 6, 1755, and removed to Sharon, Conn., about 1771, and represented that town in the Legislatures in 1783, 1784 and 1788. He was a farmer by occupation. On November 6, 1755, he married Elizabeth Root, of Hebron, and had five sons: Josiah, who served in the Revolutionary war, died in Milford, Conn., in 1777; Aaron, a physician at Warren, Conn.; Elihu; Jesse; and Amasa, our subject's father. The latter was born in Sharon, Conn., March 21, 1772. He was a farmer at the old homestead there until his death, which occurred March 23, 1805, when he was but thirty-two years old, before his fine capabilities had an opportunity for full development. He was married December 25, 1799, to Achsa Dakin, who survived him many years, dying December 2, 1846. She was a daughter of Caleb Dakin, and a granddaughter of Simon Dakin, a pioneer settler of Northeast, N. Y., who had much to do with the early history of the town. Of the two children of this marriage, our subject was the younger. Myra C., born October 16, 1800, married Gerard Pitcher, of Northeast, New York.

Amasa D. Coleman was born June 28, 1804, at Sharon, but owing to his father's death, his home from the age of nine months was with his grandfather, Caleb Dakin. Here he received a fair education for those times, in the district schools, and as he possessed good mental ability and was fond of reading, he in later years acquired a large fund of information. He came into the possession of the Dakin homestead before the death of his mother, buying out the other heirs, and continued to cultivate it until his death. This tract consists of more than 150 acres of land, and is one of the best in the town. As a farmer he was very successful, securing his estate largely through his own efforts. In all movements for local improvements he was among the leading supporters, and he was always greatly interested in the success of the Republican party, which he joined in the first years of its existence, having previously been an ardent Abolitionist. His interest in politics was wholly unselfish, as he never sought official preferment. His family had been adherents of the Congregational Church, although few were Methodists, and it is probable that his father belonged to that body; but Mr. Coleman united with the Presbyterian Church at Amenia, and remained throughout life an active and consistent member.

On September 28, 1843, Mr. Coleman married Miss Elizabeth Rugg, daughter of Seth Rugg, a prominent resident of New Marlboro, Berkshire Co., Mass. They had two children, of whom the elder, Josiah, born July 23, 1848, died July 31, 1872. Elizabeth, born June 19, 1850, married a Mr. Welsh, October 8, 1896. Mr. Coleman's death occurred October 7, 1876, and brought a serious loss to the community, his excellent judgment, public spirit and manly character having gained the esteem and confidence of all who knew him. His widow passed away May 12, 1896.

CAPTAIN ISAAC H. WOOD, the well-known steamboat agent at Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, and the proprietor of the "Exchange Hotel" of that city, enjoys in a remarkable degree the esteem and affection of all classes of people, his heroism as a life-saver gaining friends for him far and near. He and his four sons have saved 123 persons from death by drowning in the Hudson river, and in recognition of their courage and unselfish devotion the citizens of Poughkeepsie presented each of them with a diamond medal a few years ago, the tokens being of great value and beauty.

The family originated in Holland, but Stephen Wood, our subject's grandfather, was probably born in Dutchess county. He was for many years a resident of Poughkeepsie, where he reared a family of five children, of whom our subject's father, Stephen Wood (2), was the only son. He grew to manhood in Poughkeepsie, and after establishing himself in business as a shoemaker married Eliza Disbrow, a native of New York City, and the daughter of a leading detective there. This family is also of old Holland-Dutch stock. On the breaking out of the Mexican war Stephen Wood enlisted, and he met his death in the battle of Buena Vista. His widow survived him until 1878. Of their three children the youngest died in infancy, and the eldest, Mary J., married the late George Valentine, of Poughkeepsie.

Capt. Wood, the second member of this family, was born in Poughkeepsie, October 23, 1822, and after passing his boyhood there went to New York City and lived with an uncle for some time, and later spent four years in Yonkers, N. Y. In 1840 he returned to his native city to make his permanent home. He started the first express business in the place, known as Wood's Original Express, and then entered the employ of the American Express Co. for a time. About 1856 he engaged in the steamboat business, and is now the agent for the daily lines of boats. For many years he has been the proprietor of the "Exchange Hotel" also, and he has won a high reputation for business ability.

In 1854 the Captain formed a matrimonial union with Miss Maria Rodman, daughter of William Rodman, a prominent boat builder and leading Democrat of New York City. The Rodmans were among the early settlers of Dutchess county, and were probably of Holland-Dutch descent. Six children were born of this marriage, and the four sons are all in business in Poughkeepsie, where they are held in great esteem as worthy descendants of their honored father, as well as for their individual excellence. Edward A. is a machinist by trade; Rodman H. is in the express business; George is a commission merchant, and Amarr is a barber. Of the two daughters, Eliza married Hiram Wood, a commission merchant of New York City, and Ida M. (deceased) was formerly the wife of John Westfall, of Syracuse, New York.

Capt. Wood is an active worker in the Democratic party; was alderman for one year, and supervisor of the First ward for three terms. He has been a leader in the fire department for many years, serving as chief engineer for four years and assistant for three years. He was vice-president of the Veteran's Dept., for some time, and is now the president of the Veteran Fire Association, an insurance order. In fraternal society work he has also taken an interest at times, and he belongs to the Knights of Pythias, as well as to other orders of less note.

MORGAN L. MOTT (deceased). "No man in an unofficial position was more widely known in this city or county or by the past and passing generation in the metropolitan portion of the State. No man was more deeply respected wherever known for his admirable simplicity of character and sterling honesty. He was the very embodiment of integrity. His habits were those of a thorough self-respecting man, and in speech and action he was irreproachable." These words of well-deserved praise appeared in a leading journal of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., concerning the subject of this memoir at his death, which occurred April 24, 1891, and to those who knew him they convey but a faint impression of the qualities of mind and heart which bound them to him in the ties of friendship and esteem.

Mr. Mott was of English descent, his a cestors being among the followers of the Quaker faith who found freedom of conscience in this country at an early period. His father, William B. Mott, was a native of Long Island, but his life was spent mainly in New York City, where he engaged in mercantile business. He married Miss Mary Milton, who was born in that city January 14, 1790, and died at New Hackensack, the home of her son, Morgan, November 26, 1894, at the age of 105 years. Her father, a Hollander by descent, was a man of great importance and influence during the rule of Petrus Stuyvesant. Her mother was a member of the famous Cox family of Long Island. Shortly after their marriage, our subject's parents came to Dutchess county, and located, in 1813, on a farm in the town of Hyde Park, where their five children were born. After a few years they returned to New York to reside. Their children all settled there. Jehu was a butcher by occupation; Mary, the only surviving member of the family, married (first) Robert Wilson, a merchant in New York, and (second) John Francis; John was a wheelwright; and William B. was a painter.

Morgan L. Mott, the fourth in order of birth, was born April 14, 1818, and was only a few years old when his parents moved to New York. On leaving school he engaged in the grocery business, and before many years became prominent in the Democratic party there. He was warden at Blackwell's Island for several years. In 1849 he went to California with a party, among whom was Senator Broderick, of New York, who was afterward assassinated. Mr. Mott was in business in San Francisco until 1853, during which time he was active in promoting order, being one of the first aldermen, and serving for several months as president of the board and as acting mayor of the city. He also made a trip to San Diego, and brought back nearly 2,000 horses and cattle. On his return to New York he conducted a hotel there until 1863, when he moved to a farm at New Hackensack, where he spent his remaining years.

Mr. Mott married Miss Jane McIntosh, a native of New York City, whose father was a Scotchman. Of their several children, two died in childhood; William B., a farmer, died at the age of forty-five; MORGAN L., JR., is a farmer at the old homestead; Edmond died at fifteen; Robert lives at home, and with his brother manages the farm; Mary Elizabeth, a lovely girl of beautiful character, died when just budding into womanhood. The home farm is a fine estate of about 200 acres of level land, beautified by trees, and the buildings and other improvements speak well for the enterprise and good taste of its owners.

LOUIS C. FEIERABEND. Among the prosperous and popular citizens of foreign birth who made their homes in Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, will be found the gentleman whose name introduces this sketch, and who was born at Wimpfen-on-the-Neckar, Hessen-Darmstadt, Germany, July 13, 1849.

Jacob Feierabend, grandfather of our subject, was born at Wimpfen, Hessen-Darmstadt, Germany, July 4, 1780, and died September 20, 1846; was a farmer by occupation; he married Johanna Bramminger, who was born June 1, 1786, and died March 20, 1847.

Fredrick Feierabend, father of our subject, was born April 16, 1811, also at Wimpfen, and learned the business of comb-making, which he followed all his life. On September 6, 1838, he married Miss Eva Christina Hess, who was born June 20, 1818, at Biebrach O. A. Heilbrom, Wurttemberg, Germany, and children, as follows, were born to them: (1) Christoph F., born February 19, 1840, married Miss Louisa C. Weying, of Wimpfen, December 18, 1866. (2) Christina Johanna, born February 14, 1841, married Carl Speer, a locksmith, of Wimpfen, March 14, 1865. (3) Christoff Ludwig, born June 6, 1842, died July 17, 1842. (4) Christina Louise, born September 10, 1844. (5) Elizabeth Louise, born October 31, 1846, came to America, October 15, 1872, and married William Kraft, of Laufen O. A. Heilbrom, Wurttemberg, Germany, April 20, 1874; and (6) Louis Christian, our subject. The father of this family died November 19, 1892; the mother is still living.

Louis Feierabend, the subject proper of this review, learned the comb-making business with his father, but afterward took up butchering as an occupation, following same for two years in Germany. On September 1, 1868, he came to the United States and located in Poughkeepsie, where he had an aunt living. Here he worked for various persons in the butchering business until May 1, 1874, when he started a meat market of his own, on the corner of Jefferson and Church streets. As a partner in the concern he received William Kraft, which connection lasted until 1877, when Mr. Feierabend took entire charge. In 1881 he formed a partnership with Charles Haberman, which continued for four years. His present partner is William Knauss, and the firm is well known as an enterprising and reliable one. They do a large retail business in meats of all kind, also some wholesaling.

On May 6, 1874, Mr. Feierabend was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Miller, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., daughter of Valentine Miller, and four children blessed their union: Peter C., born August 29, 1875, died July 8, 1896; Louis Frederick, born July 22, 1877; William Henry, born June 11, 1882; and Louisa Elizabeth, born March 29, 1885. Mr. Feierabend has been very successful, financially, and owes his prosperity solely to his own hard work and good management. He came here a poor young man, working at first for eight dollars a month; to-day he is the owner of a good business, and much valuable property, comprising his brick business block and handsome brick residence, two stores adjoining his meat market; and two tenement houses on Jefferson street. He stands high in business circles, and is popular with all classes of people. In politics he has always been a staunch Republican, and in religious faith is a member of the German Lutheran Church, in which he has been a trustee for ten years. As a loyal citizen he takes an active interest in all matters of public improvements, and whatever is projected, tending to the welfare of the city and county, receives his ready support.

REV. EDWARD J. CONROY, pastor of St. Mary's Church, Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, was born July 10, 1853, in New York City. His primary studies were made in St. Bridget's Parochial school, and his grammar course in the old school on West 24th street, and in the new school house on West 20th street. In 1866 he entered St. Francis Xaviers College, West 15th street, and after a full collegiate course graduated in 1873.

On October 4, 1873, our subject sailed for Europe on the Cunarder "Batavia," and November 5th entered the American College, at Rome, Italy, where, after attending the lectures in the Propaganda four years, he was raised to the priesthood May 26, 1877. After several months "doing" Europe, he returned to America on the then crack Cunarder, "Russia."

Rev. Father Conroy's first missionary work was in the Cathedral on Mott street, New York (now St. Patrick's Church), and after filling, temporarily, a few missions was assigned permanently to St. Michael's Church, West 32nd street, under the charge of Rev. Arthur J. Donnelly, afterward the vicar-general. After three years' duty in St. Michael's, Father Conroy was assigned to St. Monica's, East 79th street, at that time a new parish under the charge of Rev. James J. Dougherty, LL. D. Almost ten years were spent by him in this new field of labor, when he was assigned to the rectorship of the Church of St. Francis of Assissi, Mt. Kisco, N. Y. After the completion of the church building, which was effected in five months, he was transferred to the charge of St. Joseph's Church, Kingston, N. Y. Three years were spent by him in the spiritual and temporal labor of that parish, about the end of which time he received word to take up his present charge, and finish the new church building that had been commenced under the administration of Father Earley.

The congregation of St. Mary's was organized in 1873, when the edifice on Cannon street, for many years occupied by the Universalists, was purchased. This building, now torn down, was erected by the Presbyterians in 1826. The building was purchased for the Catholics by the Rev. Patrick F. McSweeney, D. D., then pastor of St. Peter's Church, of this city, now pastor of St. Bridget's Church, New York City.

The first pastor of St. Mary's was the Rev. Edward McSweeney, D. D., now of Mount St. Mary's College, Emmittsburg, Maryland. The old building was dedicated by His Grace Archbishop (afterward Cardinal) McCloskey. The clergymen who assisted the Archbishop were Rev. John M. Farley, his secretary, now assistant Bishop and Vicar-General of the Archdiocese of New York; Rev. Edward McGlynn, D. D., then of St. Stephen's Church, New York; Rev. R. L. Burtzell, D. D., now of Rondout; Rev. P. F. McSweeney, D. D.; Rev. Edward McSweeney, D. D.; Rev. J. C. McSweeney; Rev. Patrick Rigney; and Rev. Fathers Sheehan and Briody.

In 1879, all the church property belonging to St. Mary's was transferred by the Archbishop to a corporation, consisting of the Archbishop, his Vicar General, the pastor, and two laymen.

Edward J. Conroy Rector

In 1880, the pastor, Rev. Edward McSweeney, being absent in Europe, the Rev. Michael McSwiggan, then acting pastor of St. Mary's, superintended the erection of a new parochial school, on South Hamilton street, which was opened in September of that year, with one hundred pupils. Up to the year 1881, the pastor had no regular assistant. In that year, the Rev. John B. Creeden, now pastor at Sing Sing, began his mission in the priesthood as the first assistant pastor of St. Mary's. In 1883, the Decennial was celebrated, and it was then, after ten years of steady growth, and prosperity, that the nucleus for a new edifice was commenced. In 1885, the Rev. Edward McSweeney resigned from parish work to accept a professorship in Mt. St. Mary's College, Emmitsburg, where he has since been, with the exception of a short time spent in St. Paul, Minnesota. Then came the Rev. Cornelius Donovan (since deceased), who acted as pastor for a short time. On May 13, 1887, the third pastor of St. Mary's was appointed, the Rev. Terence J. Earley. It was under the administration of Father Earley that the present new edifice was begun. He labored for four years with incessant industry, and was then promoted to the charge of the parish of St. Peter's, at New Brighton, Staten Island.

The present pastor, the Rev. Edward J. Conroy, whose portrait appears here, was appointed pastor of St. Mary's, on April 23, 1891, and under his management the work of completing the new church edifice has been brought to its present satisfactory state. Thus, after a quarter of a century, the congregation of St. Mary's takes possession of one of the handsomest church edifices in the city.

The general design of the building is of the Gothic order, of the simple rather than the ornate style. The principal façade is faced with Indiana limestone, treated in the rock-faced order, with just sufficient dressed stone trimming to relieve the monotony of the general rough stone. The front has been extended to embrace porch and tower entrances, and from the tower access to the organ and choir gallery is had by means of a solid ash staircase, trimmed in cherry. On the choir level, or second floor of porch, is a choir meeting room, lighted by a system of small Gothic windows which extend continuously across the entire front. The ceilings of the porches, tower, and under side of organ gallery have been finished in the old English style of exposed rafter and deep panel-work. The main church ceiling has been treated in the open-work type of truss, the surfaces between trusses laid off in deep panels, diagonally sheathed and heavily molded. Each truss is finished with cherry-molded tracery work, and bracketed cornice. The aisle ceilings are treated to match main roof, but of a more simple style. The entire body of the church has been wainscoted nearly six feet high with Gothic panel work, in combination of cherry and white wood, with neat molded capping and base. The columns are wainscoted to match the walls, as also the face of the gallery. The entire floor surface of the church has been laid, first with one and one-eighth-inch white pine flooring, and on top of this a two-inch thick floor of the best clear long-leaf, comb-grain Georgia pine.

The plaster work of the church is one of its principal merits. It is done in a pearl gray tint stucco plaster, tracery moldings over all windows and other openings, as well as over the interior arches. The iron columns were first encased in fire-proof clay tile, and the finished plaster work then applied. Each column is surmounted by an ornate Corinthian capital, from which the clere-story arches spring in succession. Owing to the large number and size of the windows, it was deemed advisable not to assume the expense at this time of ornamental figured windows in leaded glass work, and for this economic reason the windows have been temporarily glazed with plain amber-tinted glass of several shades, the foliated tracery work of the upper parts being treated in brighter color effects. The building is heated by steam by means of handsome radiators. The gas fixtures, of polished brass, are very handsome, and the gas is lighted from an electric battery placed under the gallery. Any required number of the fixtures may be lighted, one, a dozen, or the entire complement, as may be desired—by a simple turn of the battery crank. There are over three hundred lights in the church. Taken in its entirety, the Church of St. Mary's, so near to completion, is a grand tribute to the untiring zeal and ability of its pastor, Rev. Edward J. Conroy.

STEPHEN A. PERKINS, a well-known merchant, holds a leading place among the enterprising and prominent men of Poughkeepsie, where his birth occurred May 1, 1846, having always identified himself with its interests. He belongs to a family of English origin, whose members mostly belonged to the Reformed Dutch Church. His paternal grandfather, Warren Perkins, was a farmer of the town of New Paltz, Ulster Co., N. Y., and his family included two sons: Alexander W., the father of our subject; and Stephen, a carriage maker, of Washington, Pennsylvania.

The former was born March 1, 1818, upon a farm in the town of New Paltz, Ulster county, where the first seventeen or eighteen years of his life were passed. He then came to the town of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, and entered into agricultural pursuits, which he has followed, with very few years exception, his entire life; he has held several town offices. He enjoys in a marked degree the confidence and esteem of his neighbors; his vote always being cast with the Democratic party. He was twice married, his first wife, the mother of Stephen A. Perkins, was in her maidenhood Miss Rebecca M. Ackerley, a native of the town of Poughkeepsie, where her father, Lemuel Ackerley, engaged in farming. She was of English lineage, and was called to her reward in 1856. By her marriage she became the mother of six children: Jacob A., a business man of Poughkeepsie, who is interested with our subject in the ice business; Sylvester, who was a carpenter, of Pine Plains, Dutchess county, and died in November, 1893; Stephen A., of this sketch; Jane A., who became the wife of J. L. Donaldson, of Ulster county, who died in March, 1894; Elizabeth H., who died unmarried; and William J., a resident of Poughkeepsie, who is interested with our subject in the coal business.

Upon a farm about three miles outside the city limits of Poughkeepsie, Stephen A. Perkins grew to manhood, attending the district schools of the neighborhood, and finished his education at the Dutchess County Academy. For one year he was then employed as teacher of a district school, after which he learned the carpenter's trade, following that occupation for about five years. He next became connected with the Poughkeepsie & Eastern railroad, serving in a number of different capacities for about eighteen years. In 1888, in connection with his brother Jacob A., he entered into the ice business, leasing the Morgan Lake. He conducted this business very successfully and made many friends for himself and brother. In May, 1894, he formed a co-partnership with his brother, William J.

Perkins, and Herman King in the coal trade, under the firm name of Perkins, King & Co. They now do a flourishing business, their courteous treatment of customers, and upright, honorable dealings, having won them a liberal patronage.

In 1875 Mr. Perkins was married, the lady of his choice being Miss Charlotte Holmes, who was born in the town of Pleasant Valley, Dutchess county, and is a daughter of George Holmes, also a native of that county, and a farmer and merchant by occupation. He died about 1886. One child blesses the union of our subject and his wife: Bertram R., who is now a dentist by profession. They are members and contribute to the support of the Presbyterian Church, while socially, Mr. Perkins is a prominent member of the Masonic Order, and politically votes the Democratic ticket.

SAMUEL HILTON AMBLER, who is now practically living retired in the village of Stissing, Dutchess county, was for a quarter of a century a prominent merchant of the place. The Ambler family, of which he is a worthy representative, was founded in America during its early history. The first to locate in New England was Richard Ambler, who was born in Somersetshire, England, in 1609, and was one of twenty-four men who organized the town of Watertown, Conn., taking deed for the same from the Indians, and he became a leading resident of that town. He was twice married, and became the father of three children: Sarah, Abram and Abraham. His death occurred in 1699. Of his family, Abraham who was a Baptist minister in Bedford, Conn. was born in 1642, and he was also twice married, his union with Mary Bates being celebrated in 1662; they made their home in Stamford, Conn. Their son John was born in 1668 and in his family were three children: John, Stephen and Martha. The birth of John Ambler, of this family, occurred at Stamford, Conn., in 1695, and he became a resident of Danbury, in the same State, where he died. By his will he bequeathed his gun and sword to his only son, John. He was the father of seven children: John, Elizabeth, Sarah, Mary, Martha, Anna and Rachel. The only son was born in 1733, and died October 21, 1814. From his marriage with Huldah Fairchild he had eight children: Peter, Squire, Stephen, Gilead, Diodote, Silas, Huldah and Deborah. The father of these was sergeant of a company of 100 men raised in Danbury, May 17, 1775, which joined the 6th regiment, commanded by Col. David Waterbury.

Peter Ambler, of the above family, was the grandfather of our subject. He was born at Danbury, Conn., September 20, 1759, and there continued to engage in farming throughout life, owning the land on which the Danbury fair is now held. During the Revolutionary war he served as artificer in the Colonial army, and later took a prominent part in public affairs, being a member of the State Legislature for one term. He held membership with the Baptist Church, in which he served as deacon, and died in that faith March 7, 1836. On October 21, 1784, he had married Miss Hannah Shove, who was born October 27, 1761, and was the daughter of Deacon Benjamin and Sarah Shove, and their family included the following children: Fairchild, Benjamin, David, Thomas, Joseph, Silas, Sarah, Rachel and Hannah. The mother of these died April 22, 1843.

Rev. Silas Ambler, Baptist minister, father of our subject, was born at Danbury, Conn., March 12, 1798. He was married August 29, 1822, to Miss Eunice D. Olmstead, who was born October 28, 1800, at Wilton, Conn., and died October 3, 1892, at Stanford, N. Y. They had a family of seven children: Samuel H., our subject; Mary E., who makes her home in Greene county, N. Y., is the widow of Ezekial Griffin; Augustus, born April 19, 1829, died April 22, 1852; Catherine, born May 23, 1831, is the widow of Levi Boyce, of Greenville, N. Y.; Sarah, born January 31, 1835, is the wife of Henry Knickerbocker, of Bangall, N. Y.; Emeline, who was born April 6, 1837, and died April 3, 1869, was the wife of Charles Sheldon, now deceased; and John P., a sketch of whom appears elsewhere. The father was for a time a minister in the Baptist Church, having charge of congregations at Cornwall and Norfolk, Conn., but in 1840, on account of ill health, he gave up preaching and located upon a farm in the town of Stanford, Dutchess Co., N. Y., near Stissing, which is now owned by our subject. He there spent his remaining days, dying November 22, 1857, honored and respected by all.

The birth of Mr. Ambler, the subject of this review, occurred at Danbury, Fairfield Co., Conn., June 3, 1824, but most of his early life was passed at Norfolk, in the same State, where he attended school and remained a member of the parental household until his marriage, March 20, 1851, in the town of Stanford, Dutchess county, to Miss Olive Boyce, a daughter of Jacob and Olive (Morse) Boyce. To our subject and wife have come the following children: Franklin A., born December 31, 1856, died at San Jose, Cal., June 11, 1884; he had married Hattie Vassar (daughter of John E. Vassar), by whom he had two children—Alice May and Edward Vassar. Emma D. was born May 20, 1858. Asa T., born March 1, 1860, wedded Mary Deuell, and they have two children—Chester Franklin and Olive Martha. Charles, born February 2, 1864, married Elizabeth Vandewater. Alfred Silas, born November 25, 1867, is now the medical superintendent of the Kingston Avenue Hospital, at Brooklyn, New York.

For twenty years after his marriage, Mr. Ambler engaged in agricultural pursuits, but in 1870 he sold his farm, as he had been appointed agent on the N. D. & C. R. R., and erected a store building at Stissing, where he was engaged in general merchandising for twenty-five years, which store is now conducted by his sons, Charles and Asa T. He was made postmaster of the village, and also served as agent for the P. & E. R. R. In politics, Mr. Ambler casts his ballot in support of the men and measures of the Republican party, and has held the office of excise commissioner. For forty years he has been a member of the Baptist Church, at Bangall, and his genial, social nature makes him a popular citizen.

ALFRD ALLENDORF (deceased) was born September 17, 1829, a son of Philip and Elizabeth (Stickle) Allendorf, prosperous farming people of the town of Red Hook, Dutchess county.

After completing his literary education Mr. Allendorf began his mercantile career as a clerk, and gradually worked his way upward. At the close of a few years of preparatory labor in this line, he left the firm by whom he was employed, and established a general merchandise store at Upper Red Hook, which they conducted some three years, then coming to Red Hook, they opened a store under the firm name of Conkling & Allendorf, which venture proved highly successful. Through honorable and upright dealing they soon gained the confidence of the public, which they succeeded in holding for over twenty years, at the end of which time the partnership was dissolved, Mr. Allendorf taking the store and Mr. Conkling the lumber and coal business.

On October 11, 1854, our subject was married to Miss Catherine A. Shook, who was born July 6, 1830, at the old homestead of the Shook family, where her father was engaged in farming. Two daughters blessed this union: (1) Nellie S., born at Red Hook, February 28, 1856, who became the wife of Silas S. Schoonmaker, October 30, 1878, and they now reside at Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; they have one child—A. Allendorf, born January 14, 1880. (2) Fannie L., born at Red Hook, April 27, 1860, married Charles B. Hoffman, and they have two children—Bessie C., born November 11, 1881; and E. Marjorie, born May 15, 1885. Mrs. Schoonmaker and Mrs. Hoffman received their primary educations at the schools of Red Hook, completing their studies at the DeGarmo Institute, Rhinebeck.

John Shook, the father of Mrs. Allendorf, was also a native of the town of Red Hook, where his entire life, was devoted to agricultural pursuits. He wedded Miss Nellie Shoemaker, daughter of George Shoemaker, of Red Hook, and they became the parents of the following children: George Adam, born May 3, 1803, was educated for the ministry of the Reformed Dutch Church, at Carlisle, but owing to ill-health was prevented from accepting a call, and died in 1836; Anna Maria, born March 18, 1805, became the wife of Moses Ring; Cornelia, born June 22, 1807, married Lewis Elseffer; Helen, born September 20, 1809, wedded Everet Traver; Aaron, born September 6, 1811, married Catharine Cramer; Gertrude C., born December 21, 1813, remained single; Walter, born April 4, 1816, married Eliza A. Allendorf; Alonzo, born May 4, 1818, died in infancy; Archibald, born July 24, 1820, wedded Elizabeth Lamoree; Alexander, born October 6, 1822, married Clarissa Squires; John A., born July 3, 1825, married Frances Lathrop; and Catherine A. (wife of our subject) completed the family.

The integrity of Mr. Allendorf stands as an unquestioned fact in his history—endowed by nature with a sound judgment and an accurate, discriminating mind, he did not fear the laborious attention to business so necessary to achieve success. This essential quality was ever guided by a sense of right which would tolerate the employment only of the means that would bear the most rigid examination, by a fairness of intention that neither sought nor required disguise. He was a thorough Christian, a devout member of the Lutheran Church, and was prominently identified with the Masonic fraternity and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, being at the time of his death one of the members of Christian Lodge, I. O. O. F., of Red Hook.

MON. EDWARD HARRIS THOMPSON. The family of which the subject of this sketch is a distinguished representative originated in England, where it has held an honored position from an early period, its coat of arms bearing the motto, "In lumine luce", being an interesting reminder of the olden time. The head of the American branch, Anthony Thompson, came to this country with his wife, two children and two brothers, John and William, in the company of Governor Eaton, Rev. Mr. Davenport and others of Coventry, England, arriving at Boston, June 26, 1637, according to Winthrop's Journal, or July 23, 1637, as stated by Cotton Mather. Like many other dissenters from the Church of England at that day, they sought in the New World freedom to worship in accordance with their own faith, and relief from the persecutions and burdensome taxation which were their lot in their native land. The party led by Messrs. Davenport and Eaton had a larger proportion of wealthy and energetic men than any other which had arrived up to that time, and several towns made tempting offers to the emigrants, but it was Quinipiac, or New Haven, that was finally decided upon as a location. Anthony Thompson signed the Colony Constitution June 4, 1639, and all the brothers soon secured farms in the vicinity. John's estate at New Haven, where he died December 11, 1674, is said to be still in the possession of some of his numerous descendants. Anthony and William resided at New Haven. Anthony died March 23, 1647, and left a large estate, which was divided under his will between his six children and his second wife. His original purchase and the house thereon was given to his son John, and the lands afterward acquired, to Anthony, Jr., while with the exception of a certain sum to his daughter Bridget, a child of his first wife, on condition that she would marry in accordance with the wishes of the deacons of the Church, the remainder was left to his wife, Catherine, and her three daughters. The wife's share was conditional upon her widowhood, and as she married Nicholas Camp, July 14, 1652, it probably reverted to this family. Anthony, Jr., made his will December 26, 1682, while on a visit in Milford, and died three days later. The greater part of his property was left to his brother, John. William Thompson was probably a bachelor as at his death in 1682 his will, which was made October 6th of the same year, distributed his property among his relatives, particular mention being made of his nephew John.

John Thompson seems to have been a sea captain. He died June 2, 1707, and an inventory of his estate is on record. Three children are named in the registry of the town, viz.: Mary, born September 9, 1667; Samuel, born May 12, 1669; and Sarah, born January 6, 1671, but he probably had two or three previously. Samuel was married, November 4, 1695, to Rebecca Bishop, daughter of the Lieutenant Governor, and lived at the Beaver Pond, now Westville, about two miles from New Haven. He was captain of the military company in New Haven, and must have been a man of great physical vigor, as in his eighty-second year he rode from New Haven to Goshen, about fifty miles, on horseback, this trip being among the reminiscences of his grandson Hezekiah, who rode behind him. Samuel died at Goshen. His children's names, with dates of birth, are as follows: Samuel, December 2, 1696; James, June 5, 1699; Enos, March 3, 1702; Gideon, December 25, 1704; Rebecca, February 23, 1708; Judah, June 10, 1710 (died August 5, 1712); Judah, October 5, 1713; and Enos, August 18, 1717. Most of this family lived to an advanced age, and some settled in what is now the town of Stanford, Dutchess county, others in Connecticut. Samuel located on the east side of the town of Stanford, near Federal Hill, and in 1785 he, or Ezra [Enos?], built a brick house, which has been occupied by the family ever since. In 1783 his son Caleb built a brick house in the same locality. James Thompson died in 1737, as a result of a fall from a cherry tree, and his son, Hezekiah, then two years old, was placed under the guardianship of his uncle Enos, who bound him out at the age of fourteen to learn the saddler's trade. The boy had higher ambitions, however, and, as soon as he could, began the study of law at Woodbury, where he rose to prominence in the profession and built himself a stately residence. He died in March, 1803, leaving two sons: William, who lived in Sullivan county, N. Y., was the first judge of that county, and died December 9, 1847; and John, an Episcopal clergyman at New Durham, Greene Co., N. Y., and died August 4, 1864.

Amos Thompson settled near Thompson's Pond, now Hunn's Lake, in the town of Stanford, Dutchess county, about 1746. He and his wife Sarah (Allen), whom he wedded in 1726, had seven children: Allen, born in 1727; Rebecca, in 1729; Amos, in 1731; Ezra, in 1734; Sarah, Eunice and Mary. Allen died soon after the removal to Dutchess county. Amos was educated at a college in New Jersey, and became a Presbyterian minister, locating first at North Canaan, Conn., and later in Loudoun county, Va., where he died in 1804. He married Miss Jane Evans, of Maryland.

Gideon Thompson lived at Goshen, Conn. Rebecca married Mr. Austin, of New Haven, and had a son, Deacon Austin, who became a citizen of that place. Judah (2d) probably lived and died in New Haven. Enos had a son, Smith Thompson, who became a judge of the Supreme Court of the United States, and later was secretary of the navy. Enos Thompson Throop, a grandson of Enos, was governor of New York State and charge d'affairs at Naples.

Amos Thompson, born in 1731, married Mary Smith, of Suffield, Conn. Asa Allen John, their son, born January 12, 1760, married Mary Knap, January 19, 1783, and died May 28, 1813. Their son, Allen Thompson, our subject's grandfather, was born August 10, 1783, on the old homestead at Thompson's Pond, now known as Hunn's Lake, in the town of Stanford, and passed a considerable portion of his life there, following his chosen work of farming, in which he was unusually successful. In later life (in 1825) he moved to a farm in the town of Pine Plains, now occupied by C. C. More, where he died May 20, 1849. His wife, Eliza (Pugsley), to whom he was married March 18, 1806, died December 29, 1861. They had five children, whose names, with dates of birth, are here given: Edward P., born February 6, 1807; John Allen, November 6, 1808; Cornelius Allerton, December 20, 1810 (died November 15, 1832); and Cornelius, March 10, 1824. John Allen Thompson, our subject's father, was born at Thompson's Pond, but his life was spent mainly in the town of Pine Plains, Dutchess county, where he owned a farm of 120 acres southwest of the village of Pine Plains. From a business standpoint, he was very successful, accumulating a fine property, and he was also prominent and influential in local affairs. He was a leading member of the Presbyterian Church, holding office for many years; but he never sought or held political place, although he supported staunchly the principles of the Whig party in early life, and later espoused with equal earnestness the Republican faith. An earnest student of his times, he was well-informed on all the topics of general interest. On May 9, 1855, he was married to Lucy Ann Viele, a member of one of the most prominent families of Washington county, N. Y., and her father, Stephen L. Viele, was a member of the State Assembly in 1836.

The subject of the sketch, the only son of this marriage, was born at Pine Plains, September 25, 1856, and was educated at the Hudson Academy. In 1882 he entered the Millerton National Bank as bookkeeper, George S. Frink being president, and William M. Dales, cashier. On the death of the latter in 1883, Mr. Thompson was elected to the vacant position, and in 1886 he was chosen president, which office he held until 1895. On June 9, 1886, he married Rachel Irene Carpenter, daughter of Hon. Edmund T. Carpenter, who was mayor of Hudson City, N. J. They have had three children: Harry Scott, Lucy Irene, and John Allen.

Mr. Thompson is a man of fine physique and great industry. His energy and ability have not been confined to business life, his success there, combined with his high reputation for integrity, winning him the confidence of the people, and leading to his election on the Republican ticket to various positions of public trust and responsibility. His interest in local movements has always been recognized as a strong influence for progress, and E. H. Thompson Hose Co. was named in his honor. He was a trustee of the village for five years, and was its president at the time for the building of the water works of which he was one of the chief promoters. In 1892 he was elected supervisor of the town without opposition, and in the same year he was chosen to represent the first district of Dutchess county in the Assembly by 419 plurality over James H. Russell, Democrat, and Tiel, Prohibitionist. In 1893 Mr. Thompson submitted to the Assembly a bill amending the charter of the city of Poughkeepsie, and one relating to the Matteawan State Hospital for Insane Criminals. On returning to the Assembly in 1894, having been re-elected in 1893, by a plurality of 843 over Oakley I. Norris, Democrat, and V. M. Buck, Prohibitionist, he was appointed chairman of the committee on Banks and a member of the committee on Railroads, and the committee on Charitable and Religious Societies. That year he introduced a bill amending the banking law, and one incorporating the Poughkeepsie and Wappinger Falls Electric Railway Co. He was again re-elected in 1894, receiving 4,692 votes against 3,418 cast for S. M. Davidson, Democrat, and 210 for C. N. Nichols, Prohibitionist. In 1895 he was chairman of the committee on Commerce and Navigation, and a member of three important committees—on Ways and Means, on Banks and on Military Affairs. In 1895 Mr. Thompson introduced a bill largely increasing the scope of investments of savings banks of the State. The banks had for years endeavored to secure such legislation, but failed. By his untiring efforts the bill became a law, and is known as the "Thompson Law," and is highly regarded by the banks. On May 1, 1896, Hon. F. D. Kilburn, superintendent of banks of the State of New York, appointed Mr. Thompson a bank examiner, located in the City of New York.

MARVEY BRETT, a venerable and highly respected resident of Matteawan, is a descendant of one of the oldest families of Dutchess county, being a direct descendant of Mame Brett, whose ability and forceful character, no less than her extensive landed possessions, made her a leading figure among the early settlers of this section. She was the only daughter and heir of Francis Rombout, the patentee of the Rombout tract, which patent was granted to him October 17, 1685, and from whom the first titles to lands in Fishkill were derived by the settlers. He was a native of Holland, and was sent as supercargo to New Amsterdam (New York) by the Dutch East India Company. At the expiration of his apprenticeship he engaged in business in the city with Gulian Verplanck, forming a partnership which lasted several years.

was for several years alderman of New York, and mayor of that city in 1679. In September, 1683, he married Mrs. Helena Van Balleu (née Teller), whose first husband was named Bogardus. Only one child graced this union: Catharyna, who was born in New York, and at the age of sixteen married Roger Brett, an Englishman, and a merchant of New York City. A few years later she and her husband took up their residence in Fishkill, on lands which, after the death of her father in 1691, became her heritage. The precise year of their settlement here is not known; but January 10, 1709, they gave a joint bond (they previously partitioned the tract between themselves so as to hold it in severalty) to Capt. Gylob Shelly, of New York City, to secure payment of £399, 6s, with which it is believed they built a dwelling house and a gristmill the following year. The house, built in 1709, is still standing in Matteawan, in good preservation, and is known as the "Teller Mansion." The gristmill was located at the mouth of the Fishkill, on its north bank. It was the first of its kind in the town or county, and exerted an immense and beneficial influence on the settlements in the locality. Madame Brett died in 1764. She had three sons—Francis, Robert and Rivery—and one daughter, married to Jacobus Depuyster. Of the sons, Francis married Margaret Van Wyck, and had two daughters—Hannah (married to Henry Schenck), and Margaret (the youngest; married to Peter A. Schenck)—and two sons—Theodorus and George. Rivery (the youngest son of Mrs. Brett) died at the age of seventeen.

George Brett, our subject's grandfather, was born in the town of Fishkill, and passed his life there engaged in agriculture. He and his wife, whose maiden name was Marie Cooper, were devout members of the Reformed Dutch Church, although George had in his youth been identified with the English church. Their children were: Deborah and Margaret (deceased), who never married; Francis G., the father of our subject, and Sal, who married a Mr. Willett, a cabinet-maker.

Francis G. Brett was born in the town of Fishkill, in 1775, and for many years operated the mill at Matteawan, belonging to the Brett estate. He was a Whig in politics, and was influential in local affairs. His wife, Margaret Campbell, who was born in 1777, probably in Dutchess county, died April 9, 1835, and Mr. Brett's death occurred August 14, 1835. They were highly esteemed among their associates, and while not members they inclined toward the Reformed Church. They reared a family of eight children: William, a machinist of Matteawan, died in Brooklyn, N. Y.; James, also a machinist (now deceased), was a resident of Matteawan; Alfred, a silk dyer, of Matteawan, passed away in early manhood; Harriet and Jane Ann (deceased) did not marry; Harvey, our subject, is mentioned more fully below; Edgar, who died in Albany, was prominent in religious work as a member of the M. E. Church, and in later life was a local preacher; Charles is a pattern maker in Newark, New Jersey.

Harvey Brett was born January 15, 1813, and throughout his eighty-four years he has had his home in the beautiful little city of Matteawan. At an early age he displayed mechanical ability of a high order, and in 1830 he began to learn the blacksmith's trade, which he followed until June 28, 1873. He then retired from business, but his active mind and still vigorous physique have occasionally found congenial exercise in the creation of some article of use or ornament. He works in all kinds of metals, also in wood, some beautiful pieces of furniture in his home giving evidence of his skill in that line. Among the choice specimens of his works in metals is an elegant jewel case of copper. Mr. Brett has always taken an intelligent interest in public questions, and in politics is a Republican. For many years he has been a member of the M. E. Church. On October 10, 1837, he married Miss Susan Colman, a native of Orange county, N. Y., a daughter of Abram Colman, a well-known resident of Orange county. She passed away in 1880, the mother of four children: Charles is a merchant at Matteawan; Abram died in 1893; Wesley is employed with his brother Charles; Emily died at the age of six years.

Before closing this sketch we give the copies of two original letters from Lord Cornbury, governor of New York, in possession of Miss Hannah Teller, and dated "New York, 10ver 4, 1709," the other in the possession of Mrs. Hannah Wiltse, Fishkill Landing, and dated December 15, 1709.

SIR:—The nurse telling me a boat was going up to you, I was not willing to omit the opportunity of writing to you, though we have no news here, only of a great battle in Flanders, where my Lord Marlborough has obtained a great victory. I expect to hear every day of the arrival of the Virginia Fleet, by which I hope to have news from England. In the meantime, I wish you and Mrs. Brett all the health, happiness and satisfaction of a merry Christmas and happy New Year, and am, sir,

Your most humble servant,
CORNBURY.

My service to Mrs. Brett.

SIR:—Yours of the 9th of the last came safely to my hands, for which I return you thanks. I would have sent an answer sooner, but I can't find one master of a sloop that will undertake to deliver a letter. There is no news of the fleet, and by what I hear from other parts, I believe we shall see no fleet this year; nor do I yet know what our people here will resolve upon. I have not yet heard one line from England, since my Lord Lovelace arrived. I hope my daughter is arrived there safe before this time. I am glad she did not go with the last fleet, for Capt. Riddle, who commanded the Falmouth, in which she must have gone, was attacked by a French man-of-war of twenty guns, who boarded him, but Riddle got clear of him and got safe into Plimouth with all his fleet. We have no news to entertain you with; as soon as I have any you shall have it. I am sorry to hear Mrs. Brett has not been well. I hope before this time you are all well.

I was in hope before this time I should have seen you or Mrs. Brett here, where, with my short commons, you will always find a most hearty welcome. I entreat you to give my humble service to Mrs. Brett, and do me the justice to believe that I am, sir,

Your humble servant,
CORNBURY.

EDWARD W. SIMMONS, of Millerton, one of the most prominent citizens of Dutchess county, is distinguished for his ability in educational work, and in public affairs, and as a lawyer, his labors in these widely different lines being equally able and effective.

His ancestors for three generations have been farmers of that locality, his great-grandfather, Peter Simmons, having come from Holland in the eighteenth century, and settled in the northern part of Dutchess county, or possibly in the adjoining portion of Columbia county. Nicholas Simmons, our subject's grandfather, was born in Dutchess county, and although he learned the shoemaker's trade his attention was mainly devoted to agriculture. He married Christina Snyder, and they had eight children. He and his wife both died in 1840, and their remains were buried in Broome county, New York.

William Simmons was born in Pine Plains, in 1787, and grew to manhood there. He engaged in farming in the town of Northeast for a time, until, in 1818, he moved to Ancram, Columbia county, and purchased a farm where he lived for five years. He then returned to Northeast, and in 1824 settled on the old Roe homestead, remaining there until 1831, when he rented a farm of the Winchell heirs, where Millerton now stands, subsequently purchasing the Thomas Paine farm, which he sold in 1837. In that year he moved to Broome county, and there lived until 1864, when he returned to Millerton to end his days. He was a successful farmer, and ranked among the leaders in local affairs, holding various official positions. He entered the war of 1812 as a private, and became a non-commissioned officer. His wife, Clarissa Roe, a lady of Scotch and Irish blood, whose parents, Silas and Mercy (Harvey) Roe, reared a family of ten children: Uziel, Amos, Alva, Harvey, Jeduthan, Lyman, Anna, Laura, Clarissa and Amanda. Mrs. Simmons was killed September 13, 1827, by a fall from a wagon; her husband died February 14, 1868. They had five children, whose names with dates of birth are as follows: Harvey Roe, September 29, 1814; Edward W., April 14, 1816; Julia (Mrs. Lewis Barnes, of Broome county), February 5, 1819; Amanda (Mrs. Henry Wheeler, formerly of Amenia, now of Morris, Ill.), October 19, 1822; and James, April 17, 1827, who is now a leading minister of the Baptist Church. Owing to his mother's premature death he was placed in the care of his brother Edward at an early age, and was prepared for college by him. He was graduated from Brown University, also from the Newton Theological Seminary, at Rochester, and has since been given the honorary degree of D. D., by Brown University. His first pastorate was in Providence, R. I., and later he was in charge of Churches in Indianapolis, Philadelphia and New York. In 1866, he went to New York City as secretary of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, and a few years afterward was called to Trinity Baptist Church, on Fifty-fifth street. He has since entered the service of the Baptist Publication Society of Philadelphia, and has charge of their interests in New York and other States. He has been a devoted worker in the cause of Home Missions, and in the building of schools in the Southern States, the institution at Abilene, Texas, known as Simmons College, having been established through his efforts.

Edward W. Simmons was born on the old farm, about one mile from the village of Millerton, and with the exception of a few months at the academy at Hudson, his schooling was limited to the district schools of the neighborhood. He made the best of his opportunities, however, and also studied diligently in private and in the winter of 1832-33 began teaching at Lime Rock, Conn. From that time until 1848 he followed this occupation with marked success, his thorough mastery of the studies through which he had plodded without assistance enabling him to understand and relieve the difficulties of his pupils. In 1838-39 he taught a school of high grade at Greene, Chenango Co., N. Y., and from there went to Great Barrington, Mass., and conducted a large and prosperous school for two years. He then spent two years at Sheffield, Mass., teaching Latin and Greek in addition to the higher English branches. His health failing, he returned to Millerton in 1843, and opened a private school with an able assistant, the late Alexander Winchell, who afterward became eminent as a geologist, and was for many years a professor in the University of Michigan. Mr. Simmons spent the most of his time for the next two years in Broome county, and in 1851, his health being restored, he built the store now occupied by James Finch, which was the first building erected in Millerton. He opened a general store there, which he conducted for twenty-five years, when he transferred the business to Mr. Finch, who had been his clerk for fifteen years.

Mr. Simmons gained a practical knowledge of surveying in his youth, and did a great deal of work in that line at different times, and as his wide range of studies had already included some reading on legal subjects, he was often employed in conveyancing. The confidence which his clear judgment and accurate information inspired caused him to be consulted more and more frequently upon general legal points, and upon the suggestion of Judge Hogeboom, he engaged in the practice of law, being admitted to the bar in 1867, while still in mercantile business. He has been very successful, as a large number of substantial clients, and has taken a notable share in public affairs. He was financial secretary of the New York State Constitutional Convention, in 1867, of which William A. Wheeler was president, and Samuel Tilden, Horace Greeley and other well-known men were members. In local affairs it would be difficult to enumerate his varied services. He was supervisor for five terms, being chairman of the board during the first year, and he was one of the committee to go before the State board of assessors to secure a reduction in the assessment of Dutchess county, their action resulting in a saving to the county of $200,000 in three years. He has been an unwearied advocate of good schools, and every measure for local improvement has found in him a champion. He was a Free-soil Democrat in early years, but voted for Fremont in 1856, and since that time has been a Republican.

On April 23, 1839, Mr. Simmons was married to Harriet N. Winchell, daughter of John Winchell, and had two sons: Alfred, who was born November 8, 1842, and died August 6, 1864; and James, born in 1851, and died in 1853. Mrs. Simmons died December 29, 1868, and June 16, 1869, Mr. Simmons married Mrs. Sarah E. Trowbridge, née Mead, a daughter of Deacon John K. Mead, of Amenia. He has been a member of the Baptist Church for sixty-three years; belongs to Webatuck Lodge No. 480, F. & A. M., in which he has held the office of senior deacon, and is a member of the New York State Bar Association. Although now eighty-one years old, Mr. Simmons enjoys comparatively good health, and attends daily to his profession.

JAMES B. SIMMONS, D. D. The subject of this article is a native of Dutchess county, and the youngest brother of Edward W. Simmons. Exiled from home in his early boyhood, Edward took him into his own family to live, and into his academy to fit him for college. Not only so, but he admonished him as a father, helped him when in trouble, guided him in counsel, and, above all else, led him savingly to Christ. The two have been greatly attached all their lives, and for the best of reasons.

The only account we have been able to secure of James is the following by a Confederate soldier now residing in one of the Gulf States. The author of this sketch is an eminent Doctor of Divinity, widely known not only throughout the United States, but in other lands also. Speaking of Dr. Simmons as "A Foundation Builder," he says:

"When a small edifice or a temporary structure is to be erected, one man frequently plans, erects, completes, and uses the building. But when the great cathedral at Cologne was finished, the man who had conceived the plan, and laid the foundation, had lain in his grave over five centuries. The glory of the cathedral, however, is a sufficient monument to his memory. For a large structure, there must be breadth of thought and work in the foundation. Dr. Simmons is peculiarly gifted in the ability to plan wisely, and lay such broad foundations that future generations may successfully build thereon.

"This is illustrated in his work in behalf of Christian education. He does not believe in working for one race, or one caste, or one section, but has distributed his labors to different races and different sections, and made them so broad that the capstone must of necessity be laid long after the founder has ceased to live on the earth.

"Under his wise administration, as Corresponding Secretary of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, locations were secured for seven Christian schools for the negroes of the South; one each in Washington, Richmond, Columbia, Raleigh, Augusta, Nashville and New Orleans. These are well chosen, strategic points, every one of them. Six of these institutions, on the very localities purchased by Dr. Simmons, have had marvelous growth. The properties, to-day, are vastly more valuable than when he acquired them. For the thirty acres of the Roger William University at Nashville which he purchased for $30,000, the Home Mission Society, as I am told, could since have taken $200,000, had they been willing to sell.

"It was deemed advisable to remove the school located at Augusta to Atlanta, and it is doing a magnificent work there. Dr. A. E. Dickinson, editor of the 'Religious Herald of Virginia,' has well said: 'Those seven institutions of learning for the colored people of the South, which Dr. J. B. Simmons was instrumental in establishing, will be a better monument to his memory, than seven towering shafts of granite.'

"Seven streams of light and knowledge for over a quarter of a century have been flooding the South with blessings from these young Colleges. And these streams have been broadening and deepening as the years roll on, and will doubtless continue to bless generations yet unborn. These schools were not founded for a day, a year, or a generation, but for all time.

"Here we have the example of a man, who was the grandson of a New York slaveholder,* devoting seven years of the most intense toil,

*Silas Roe is here referred to. He was the maternal grandfather of James B. Simmons, and owned five hundred acres about one mile southwest of where Millerton now stands. When the Act of Emancipation for the State of New York went into effect, on July 4, 1827, Silas Roe was the owner of two negro slaves, whose names were Simon West and Samuel Bowen.

anxiety, and labor to the Christian education of those who had been slaves, and succeeding in establishing seven institutions of learning, and raising money to secure properties ample for their use in the long years to come. The foundations were well laid, not on the sands of popular enthusiasm or partisan prejudice, but on the firm rock of Christian duty, in loyalty to Jesus Christ.

"Rev. H. M. Tupper, D.D., president of Shaw University at Raleigh, N. C., used to say that Dr. Simmons had the best conception of any man he knew, as to the sort of schools needed for the education of the Freedmen. And it is not too much to add that the seven original Freedmen Colleges, which were fashioned under his molding hand, became in no small degree the models for those that have been added since. At the same time he praises in most emphatic terms the good men who have preceded him, as well as the good men who have followed him in the work.

"When Dr. Simmons retired from his office as Corresponding Secretary of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, that organization, in annual meeting assembled, adopted the following minute:

'The present condition of our educational work in the Southern States bears a most impressive testimony to the wisdom, the energy and the consecration exhibited by Rev. James B. Simmons, D.D., in the location and conduct of the Freedmen's Schools, and in the development of Christian enterprise and liberality in their behalf. He has written his name upon the religious history of a emancipated race. The future will be his monument.'

"But Dr. Simmons was too broad a man to confine his work to one race. He saw the need of the colored people, and gave his heart throbs, tears and prayers, accompanied in every instance by his monied contributions, to help them. Many years before this, however, he had laid his vigorous hand to the work of helping the cause of education among the white race. As early as 1859, nearly a decade before he was called to be Secretary of Home Missions, and when he was not worth as much as fifteen hundred dollars all told—he pledged one thousand dollars of that amount to assist in founding an institution for the higher education of young ladies in Indianapolis, Ind. where he was then settled as pastor. And he paid every cent of that money. The coming on of the war, and other causes, led to the discontinuance of the school, and this thousand dollars, with other property of the Institution was afterward turned over to the Divini

School at Morgan Park, which is now a part of the great Chicago University, and is still doing good in the cause of Christian education there.

"In 1874, when there was a crisis in the financial affairs of Columbian University, located at the national capital, he threw himself in the breach, at the call of his brethren, and raised, in six months, sixty-four thousand dollars, to complete the required conditions for an endowment of three hundred thousand dollars ($300,000), thus establishing the permanency of that institution for Christian education in the heart of the nation.

"In 1891 the writer of this, from his official position, chanced to know that Dr. Simmons was not content with what he had done for the cause of Christian education, but was looking around for further opportunity to do good. About this time I received a letter from Rev. G. W. Smith, of Abilene, Texas, asking if I knew of any source from which help could be obtained in founding a much-needed institution of learning in that rapidly-growing section of central Texas. I gave him the address of Dr. Simmons, and correspondence was begun between them. Dr. Simmons and his son visited the field, and the result was that, through the benefactions of himself and family, Simmons College, at Abilene, Texas, has begun its career of blessing in the great Southwest. Located in a fertile country, with a field to grow from as large as the entire State of New York, and which is rapidly filling up with a superior population, it is difficult to estimate the future possibilities of Simmons College. As to a name for this new school, Dr. Simmons proposed 'Christlieb College,' which means 'College of Christ's Love.' But his family, and the vote of the College Trustees, overruled him.

"A Northern man, a strong opponent of slavery, and one who had given so much of his time to aid the negroes in education, Dr. Simmons now gave his means to found a college for white people in one of the old Slave States. He has helped ten colleges all told. With him the question was not whether a man was a white man, a negro, an Indian, an Armenian, or a Chinaman; not whether he is a Northern man, a Southern man or a Western man, but was he a man, and was help needed, and could it be given? The foundations he has endeavored to lay are as broad as the needs of humanity, without reference to race or conditions. Strong in his convictions and outspoken in the expression of them when necessity requires, he is the soul of courtesy to all, and charitable toward the opinion of others. He always leans toward mercy's side.

"The following incident beautifully illustrates this characteristic. Rev. John S. Ezell, a Baptist minister of South Carolina, was confined in the military prison at Albany, New York, having been convicted of complicity with Ku-Kluxism in his native State. Southern papers were denouncing his incarceration. But Dr. Simmons, instead of stopping to talk, went straight to Albany, visited the imprisoned minister, encouraged him to tell his story, went to Washington and personally laid the matter before Gen. Grant, then President of the United States, and obtained his release. He then took Bro. Ezell to his home, which at that time was in Brooklyn, and treated him with Christian hospitality, and sent him on his way rejoicing. Dr. Simmons did not sympathize in the least with the spirit of Ku-Kluxism, or any other lawlessness, but he delighted to assist a Christian gentleman in distress. No wonder that Bro. Ezell has often written him with gratitude, saying: 'I was in prison and you visited me.'

"Rev. J. L. Reynolds, D. D., of South Carolina, referring to Dr. Simmons having secured from President Grant a pardon for Ezell, says: 'This was well and nobly done. Such a deed appeals to the South, and will do more toward bringing about the era of good feeling, than all the resolutions that could be written, or harangues that could be spoken. We thank Bro. Simmons.'

"I have spent months in Dr. Simmons' company. We differed widely upon many questions, and discussed them freely without the slightest acrimony or ill feeling. Tenacious of his own opinions, and firm in his convictions, he is yet so broad and full of Christian love and courtesy, that he is the finest example I ever knew of the 'fortiter in re, et suaviter in modo'—(Vigor in execution, accompanied by gentleness of manner).

"We may learn three lessons from his life:

"1. A poor boy, thrown upon his own resources at fifteen years of age, he has attained great distinction as a man of learning, and wide influence. Let no boy despair of making a full-grown man because he is poor.

"2. He has often told me that he never could have accomplished a tithe of what he has but for the educational training which he received. He spent three years in the preparatory school, four years in college, graduating at Brown University, and three years in his theological course, graduating at Newton—ten years in all. Let no man rush into his life-work without thorough preparation. Rather than work with dull tools, make any sacrifice to sharpen them.

"3. Dr. Simmons has a loving place in the hearts of the people of all sections, and of the different races of the country, because he loved them all. Let no man despair of being esteemed and loved just as broadly as he esteems and loves others. I am proud to number Dr. James B. Simmons among my warmest friends, on account of his great learning, his true heart and his broad Christian Charity."

EBBE P. WING, one of the honored and respected citizens of the town of Dover, Dutchess county, is still residing on the old homestead farm, where his birth occurred in 1806, and although he has reached the age of ninety years, he is yet an active, well-preserved man. On completing his education in the common schools near his home, he turned his attention to farming, and at the age of twenty-four years purchased a farm near Poughkeepsie, which he operated some three years. He then returned to the old homestead, where he has since remained.

Thomas Wing, his paternal grandfather, was a native of Massachusetts, born near Cape Cod, where he was educated, and when still a boy he learned scythe making in Boston. Coming to Webatuck, town of Dover, Dutchess county, he there engaged in that business for himself. Previously to his removal he had married Miss Hannah White, and in Rhode Island one child was born to them, but the births of the nine others occurred in Dover town; they were Thurston, George, Jackson, Benjamin, Rhoda, Mary, Katie, Annie and Deborah. The eldest son, Thurston, was two years of age when brought to Dover town, where he attended the common schools and engaged in farming as a life work. By his marriage with Miss Mary Young he has seven children: Archibald, Elijah, Thurston, Phœbe, Rhoda, Sallie and Mary Ann. George, the second son, was also educated and engaged in farming in Dover, his native township, wedded Miss Martin, and to them were born eight children: Theodorus, John, Martin, Shedrick, Thomas and Agrippa (twins), Hiram and Maria.

Jackson Wing, the third son, and the father of our subject, was born on Christmas Day, 1771, received a common-school education, and from the age of seventeen carried on farming in connection with his father until his marriage, at the age of twenty-eight. He wedded Miss Hannah Preston, daughter of Ebenezer and Phœbe (Odel) Preston, who had six children: John, Abijah, Smith, Ebenezer, Hannah and Mary. Her grandparents were Ebenezer and Hannah (Smith) Preston. After his marriage the father of our subject engaged in agricultural pursuits on his own account, which proved very successful, and also conducted a mill which came into his possession through his wife. The large brick house which still belongs to the family was built by him in 1806. Later in life he conducted the tavern at South Dover known as the "Moose Head," for fifty years. He was a man of remarkable memory and of good business ability. In politics he was a Democrat, and was once elected poor master.

Our subject is the third in order of birth in the family of seven children, of whom John and Daniel died in infancy. Phœbe, born in 1808, became the wife of Egbert Sheldon, by whom she had two children, William and Orville. Alfred, born in 1811, wedded Miss Mary Tabor, daughter of Russell Tabor, a farmer of Dover town, and they had one child Hannah, who died at the age of twenty years. Preston, born in 1813, never married. Obed, born in 1817, married Miss Ann Vincent, of Dover Plains.

Like his father, Mr. Wing, the subject proper of this review, always votes the Democratic ticket, and is one of the prominent and representative citizens of the township. On reaching man's estate he was united in marriage with Miss Maria Sheldon, and they became the parents of three children: Hanna was born in the town of Dover, in 1831, married Theodore Preston, by whom she had two children—John, who died in infancy, and Mary who died at the age of twenty years; Sheldon a well-known farmer of Dover town; and Edgar, born in 1841, died at the age of twenty-four years.

Agrippa Sheldon, the father of Mrs. Win-was also a native of Dover town, where on reaching manhood he engaged in cattle droving and as a general farmer. He married Polly Palmer, and to them were born eight children: Egbert, Levina, Hebern, Abbie, Maria, Palmer, Emeline and Ann.

Robert W. King

Jackson S. Wing, grandson of the gentleman whose name introduces this sketch, was born May 23, 1858, reared on the farm, and educated at the common schools, also at Amenia seminary. At the age of sixteen he commenced working in a store at Wings Station, where his present place of business is, and for five years clerked there, during the winters attending school. In 1880 he took an interest in the mercantile firm of Chapman & Wing, which continued three years, at the end of which time Mr. Wing sold out his interest, and then clerked a short time in Poughkeepsie; but owing to impaired health he had to abandon work for a time. On February 15, 1882, he married Miss Mary O. Straight, who was born in the town of Kent, Litchfield Co., Conn., and was educated in Amenia Seminary, and in 1893 one daughter, Winifred Straight, was born to them. In 1887 he was appointed mail agent on the run between New York and Chatham, in which capacity he remained some eighteen months, in 1890 establishing his present extensive mercantile business at Wings Station. In politics he was originally a Democrat, but for some years back he has voted the Prohibition ticket; he is at present serving his second term as postmaster at Wings Station, and was town clerk one term. In religious faith he is a member of the M. E. Church. Mr. Wing has traveled throughout the United States considerably, and is a man of good solid information.

Henry Straight, the great-grandfather of Mrs. J. S. Wing, went from Rhode Island to Litchfield county, Conn., locating first in the town of New Milford, and later in the town of Kent, where he followed his occupation of farming. He was three times married, his first union being with Miss Peet, and to them were born four children: Catharine, Polly, Sarah and Hannah. He next wedded Mrs. Terrel, a widow lady who had two daughters, and to them was born a son, Augustus. After the death of the second wife he married Mrs. Martha Hendricks.

Henry Augustus Straight, the grandfather, was born in the town of New Milford, Litchfield Co., Conn., was there educated in the common schools, and engaged in farming. He was a prominent member of the Friends Church, as was also his wife, taking an active part in their services at the old Branch meeting house at South Dover, Dutchess county. He married Miss Abigail Sherwood, of New Milford, Conn., by whom he had four children.

(1) Marshall Straight, who was born in 1816, in Kent, Litchfield Co., Conn., followed farming, and for his first wife wedded Mary Buckingham, by whom he has four children: Carl, who was killed in the army; Alice, who became the wife of Theodore Wickwire; and Fred and Orin, the former of whom married Emma Beech. After the death of the mother of these children, Marshall Straight married Miss Asenith Wilbur, and after the latter passed away he married her sister, Miss Hannah Wilbur. His fourth wife bore the maiden name of Sophia Terrel, and after her death he married Miss Josephine Wakeman.

(2) Olive Straight, who was born in Kent, Conn., in 1819, became the wife of William D. Hoag, a farmer of Quaker Hill, Dutchess county, and they had three children: Mary E., who remained single; Ira, who married Sarah Hoag, and Aurelia, who married Edmund Post.

(3) Henry Straight was born in Kent, July 4, 1825, was educated in the common schools, and also followed farming. He married Miss Roccelanie Peet, daughter of Riley and Sarah Peet, agriculturists of the town of New Milford, Litchfield Co., Conn. Three daughters were born of this union: Helen S., who remained single; Augusta, who married Seymour Woolsey; and Abbie, who married Chester Wittlesey.

(4) John Straight, the father of Mrs. J. S. Wing, was born in the town of Kent, Litchfield county, in October, 1831, and like the rest of the family received a common-school education, and engaged in agricultural pursuits. By birthright he was a member of the Society of Friends, was a Republican in politics, and held a number of township offices. He married Miss Rachel A. Peet, a daughter of Riley and Sarah Peet, of New Milford, Conn., and to them were born three children: Flora A., who was born in Kent town, in 1856, and married John R. Judd, a farmer of that township; Mary O., who was born in 1860, and is now the wife of Jackson S. Wing; and Walter A., an agriculturist, who was born in 1865, in Kent town, and married Miss Minnie Sheldon, daughter of William and Frances (Ward) Sheldon, farming people of South Dover, Dutchess county. Walter Straight and his wife have two children: Walter A., born in 1886, and Mae B., born in 1888.

On the maternal side, Mrs. Jackson S. Wing traces her ancestry back to three brothers who came to this country from England—Samuel, John and William Peet. The first named was her ancestor. Her great-grandfather, who bore the same name, was born and educated in Connecticut, where he engaged in farming, and married Miss Lucy Bostwick, by whom he had six children: Ebenezer, who married a Miss Beacher; Samuel; Luna, who married Anson Sperry; Elijah, who remained single; Ryley; and Carlos, who died when young.

Ryley Peet, the grandfather, was born at New Milford, Conn., in 1787, was there educated, and also followed farming as a lifework. A strong Democrat, he served in the Legislature of his native State for one term. He married Miss Sarah Terrill, daughter of James and Sarah Terrill, agriculturists of New Milford, and to them were born eight children: (1) Luna M., who married Abel Bristol, has two children—Andrew, who married Hannah Camp; and Eleanor P., who first became the wife of Mr. Woodhull, and after his death married Rufus Leavitt. (2) Sarah F. is the wife of Horace Merwin, and had five children—Carlos F., who married Alice Monroe; Garwood, who died in the army; Sarah, wife of Daniel Marsh; Orange, who married Mary Beach; and Florence C., wife of Henry Lemon. (3) Lucy A. married Anan Marsh, and has one child—Alice G., who married Walter B. Bostwick. (4) Roccelanie, as before stated, married Henry Straight. (5) Samuel R. married Laura Tompkins, and has four children—Edgar A., who wedded Hattie Squires; Don C., who married Urania Buckingham; Adelaide, who never married; and Sarah, who married Charles Tabor. (6) Rachel A. married John Straight, and is the mother of Mrs. J. S. Wing. (7) Mary A. wedded Benone Camp, and has one daughter—Mary, who became the wife of Franklin Gibson. (8) Lehman H. married Justina Howland, and had four children—Merritt, who married Cadelia Lake; Garwood, who married Maude Bixbee; Hattie, who married Walter Hatch; and Ralph, who wedded Mary Newton.

ENOS J. CHASE (deceased). Among the influential citizens in his day, in the town of Pine Plains, Dutchess county, and one of its most prosperous and successful business men was this gentleman. He was entirely a self-made man in the truest sense of the word, having been the architect of his own fortune, and for thirty-three years he was at the head of a large general mercantile store in Pine Plains, which grew from a very humble origin.

Mr. Chase was born at Hibernia, Dutchess county, May 22, 1840, and was of German descent. His father, Edward Chase, was a miller by occupation, and at one time was quite prosperous, but later in life lost all. He married Sarah Ann Carhart, and to them were born three children: Enos J.; Thomas H., of the town of Stanford, Dutchess county; and Sarah, wife of Isaac Butler, who is from Moravia. The father's death occurred at Bangall, Dutchess county, in July, 1874. Our subject received excellent educational advantages for those early days, having attended the public schools at Bangall, also the Nine Partners school near Hibernia, and became a well-informed man. On starting out in life for himself he commenced as clerk for Elias August, with whom he remained for one year, and in 1863 began business for himself in the store which he occupied some thirty-three years. At first, as his capital was quite limited, he carried a small stock of drugs and groceries but he kept adding thereto until he became the proprietor of a large general mercantile establishment. For about three years, during the early seventies, he had a partner; but with that exception he carried on business alone for thirty-three years with most gratifying results. He was a man of even temperament and excellent judgment, and these, together with indomitable energy and laudable ambition brought him success. As he had concentrated his whole attention upon his business, he had little time to devote to politics, aside from casting his ballot in support of the Democratic party, and he always refused to accept public office. He was reared amid the Society of Friends, and grew up to be a man of high moral standard. For several years he served as treasurer of the Presbyterian Church at Pine Plains.

In 1866, Mr. Chase was united in marriage with Miss Augusta Ham, daughter of Frederick T. Ham, and to them were born three children: Frederick H., who is in charge of the store; Jennie; and Frank Edward, also in the store. Mr. Chase died February 22, 1893.

The Ham family was one of the oldest in Pine Plains. Peter F. Ham, the grandfather of Mrs. Chase, was a large land owner in the western part of the township. He married Catherine Trumpour, who died October 8, 1848, and his death occurred in 1865. Their only child, Frederick T. Ham, was a farmer in his earlier days, about 1846 removing to Pittsfield, Mass., where he engaged in merchandising for two years. Until 1867 he carried on farming, but in that year went to Rhinebeck, Dutchess county, where he was indirectly interested in business for a short time. Going south in 1871, he located upon a large plantation in Georgia, and was there engaged in cotton raising until his death in 1879. He had married Susannah Fulton, daughter of Ephraim Fulton, and their family consisted of four children: Fulton P., who died in 1874; Sarah A., wife of W. B. Vibbert, of Pine Plains; Augusta, Mrs. Chase; and Newton, who is living upon the plantation in Georgia. The mother's death occurred in 1881.

JONATHAN M. GARRATT (or Jonathan Miller Garrett) is a native of Albany county, N. Y., born at Westerlo, January 21, 1821, and is a son of Levi Garratt, whose birth occurred in the town of New Baltimore, Greene Co., N. Y. His great-grandfather was a farmer of Saratoga county, N. Y., and by his marriage with a Miss Potter, of Bristol, R. I., had a family of sixteen children—ten sons and six daughters. Two of the sons located in Prince Edward county, Canada, two in Maryland and Virginia, two in Saratoga county, N. Y., two in Greene county, N. Y., and one in Maine, while one died in youth. The sisters married and settled in Greene, Albany and Columbia counties.

Simeon Garratt, the grandfather of our subject, was born in Saratoga county, where he was reared, and married Lois Curtis, but later became a resident of Greene county, here following farming until his death, which occurred when he was ninety-four years old. His family included six children, as follows: Levi (the father of our subject), Potter, Peter, Samuel and Elim, all agriculturists, and a daughter, who married Daniel Gregory, a blacksmith.

Levi Garratt married Lydia Miller, also a native of Greene county, daughter of Jonathan and Lydia (McCabe) Miller. Her father was born in Putnam county, N. Y., of English descent, where he learned the tanner's trade; but after his marriage he drove with a double team from his native county to Greene county, becoming one of its pioneer settlers, and in the midst of the wilderness took up 600 acres of land, where he ever afterward made his home, dying at the age of seventy-five, his wife when ninety-six years old. He was the father of eight children: Mathew, a farmer of Saratoga county; Jonathan, Jesse and Sherod, agriculturists of Greene county (the last mentioned married a Miss Garratt, and had two children); Hannah, wife of Ephraim Garratt, a farmer of Albany county; Sarah, who married a Mr. Greene, of Greene county; Lydia, the mother of our subject, and Rhoda, wife of Rev. Levi Hathaway, a minister of the Christian Church, and a man of great power and energy.

Shortly after their marriage the parents of our subject removed to Albany county, N. Y., where they located on a farm. Eleven children were born to them: Elmina, the eldest, married Ab. Seaman, a farmer of Albany county; the twin of Elmina died in infancy; Roxey Ann married Thomas C. Seaman, a stone dealer; Edward W. married Miss Bedell, and was a farmer of Greene county; Jonathan M. is the next child; Simeon C. married Miss Fish, and is a farmer of Ulster county, N. Y.; Rhoda wedded George Lee Shear, a farmer of Albany county; Caroline became the wife of Albert Bedell, also a farmer of Greene county; Lydia M. married Smith Powell, a farmer of Greene county; Alzada married Albert Holenbeck, a carpenter and builder of Coxsackie, Greene Co., N. Y.; and one child died in infancy. The parents were conscientious, earnest Christians, and in politics the father was a Democrat. His death occurred in 1885, when he was aged about ninety-eight years; the mother died October 2, 1866, aged seventy-five years.

On the home farm in Albany county Mr. Garratt, the subject proper of this review, passed his early life, and he followed teaching in the winter seasons for ten years, his summer months being devoted to agriculture. During the following seven years he was engaged in the cultivation of a farm of 200 acres; but in the spring of 1867 he came to Poughkeepsie, and formed a partnership with Thomas C.

Seaman, his brother-in-law, in the stone business, which connection lasted about fifteen years.

On September 3, 1873, Mr. Garratt married Mrs. Lydia G. Doty (née Smith), of Poughkeepsie, a widow lady, and is a native of Dutchess county. Mr. Garratt is identified with the Democratic party, and, though past his three-score years and ten (seventy-six), is still well-preserved, both mentally and physically. He is an intelligent, well-informed man, possessed of sound common sense, and has the respect and confidence of all who know him. Mr. Garratt, after losing his wife, who died February 22, 1896, bought a farm in the town of Lloyd, Ulster Co., N. Y., to assist his brother and sister (Simeon and Lydia) in their financial difficulty, with whom he is making his home, post office address: Highland, Ulster Co., N. Y. The family name was originally Garratt, but is now usually spelled Garrett.

SHELDON WING, a prominent and progressive agriculturist and stock dealer of Dutchess county, and the only living son of Ebbe P. Wing, of the town of Dover, was born December 10, 1833, in Manchester, a village of the town of Lagrange, Dutchess county.

Mr. Wing received a liberal education at the district schools of the neighborhood of his boyhood home, subsequently taking two terms at a Quaker boarding school. After he was fourteen years of age he worked on a farm during the summer, and when he was twenty-one he commenced for his own account on his present farm, which at that time comprised 270 acres, and so continued eight years. In 1855 he paid a four-months' visit to Ohio and Iowa, and in February, 1861, he gave up farming, and proceeding once more to the latter State embarked in the stock business, buying cattle and hogs and shipping same to Chicago and New York. This line of trade he prosecuted with great success some four years, or until 1865, when, owing to the sickness of his brother Edgar, he returned to the town of Dover, and was induced by his father to remain, although he was strongly inclined to go back to Iowa. He has since conducted the old homestead, which now comprises about 600 acres of prime land, whereon he keeps 110 cows, shipping the milk to New York, besides engaging in general farming, and he has also done a considerable amount of commission business in that city—buying and shipping all kinds of produce; and during the thirty years has paid several more business visits to the West. Of the many well-to-do-farmers of Dutchess county, he is among the most prosperous and influential, active and enterprising, and highly respected for his straightforward dealings and uniform integrity. In politics he is a Democrat, and has been urged many times by his friends to stand for office, but on account of his business interests has invariably declined; he was nominated for sheriff in the fall of 1894, refusing to run, however, and he has served as supervisor of the town of Dover two terms. Socially, he is a member of the F. & A. M., No. 666, Dover Plains.

On October 21, 1856, Mr. Wing was married to Miss Jane L. Chapman, who was born in 1837 at Dover Plains, Dutchess county, the only daughter of Reuben W. and Murilla (Ward) Chapman, by which union there were two children: Jackson S. (mention of whom is made in the sketch of Ebbe P. Wing), and Anna F. (who resides at home).

Reuben W. Chapman, father of Mrs. Wing, and a farmer and carpenter by occupation, was born in the town, of Dover, Dutchess county, December 28, 1798, a son of William and Rachel Chapman. On September 28, 1826, Reuben W. married Murilla Ward, and they had four children—three sons and one daughter: (1) Higham W., a merchant, born January 9, 1829, married Cordelia Sheldon January 9, 1851, and died January 16, 1882; he had three children—George T., William T., and Allie, who married William Arnold. (2) George W., born May 9, 1833, married Sabina Haft, February 7, 1866, of which union there are two daughters living—Ella L. and Adelaide; the father died July 15, 1885, and the mother is also deceased. (3) Mrs. Wing comes next (4) Homer W., born November 23, 1843, married Phoebe Brown on October 13, 1869, and they have two children—Cora (now Mrs. Richard Brill) and Edna (at home). Reuben W. Chapman died July 27, 1859; his wife Murilla, born July 4, 1807, died December 30, 1873.

GEORGE STORM (deceased). As an extensive land owner and successful agriculturist, the subject of this memoir held a prominent place among the business men of the town of East Fishkill, Dutchess county. Bu in the estimate of his character, his ability in financial affairs counts far less than the qualities which as an upright and public-spirited citizen identified him with the high interests of the community.

The Storm family is widely dispersed, yet the different branches can all trace connection. Mr. Storm's parents, Charles and Mary (Adriance) Storm, were both natives of the town of East Fishkill, and his mother was born in the house which is now occupied by the family. They had children as follows: Susan, the widow of William P. Storm, formerly a tea merchant in New York City; John, a farmer in East Fishkill, Dutchess county; George, our subject; Charles (deceased), formerly a farmer in East Fishkill.

George Storm was born August 11, 1839, at the present homestead, and passed his entire life there. On September 23, 1868, he married, for his first wife, Miss Emma Haight, of Westchester county, who bore him four children: Mary (1), Henrietta, Maria H., and Mary (2); of whom, Maria H., now at home, is the only survivor, the others dying in early youth. The mother passed away March 11, 1880, and on October 10, 1883, Mr. Storm married her sister, Carrie Haight, a native of Westchester county. She is the daughter of the late Epenetus Haight, a well-known farmer, and granddaughter of Daniel Haight. Her mother, whose maiden name was Maria Hunt, was a daughter of William Hunt, and a descendant of an old English family. No children were born of the second marriage.

Mr. Storm owned about 430 acres of land, from which he raised a variety of crops. The home is a beautiful one, and the estate very valuable. Politically, he was a Republican, and, while he was not a politician, he took great interest in all public questions. He was actively helpful in religious and philanthropic movements, and he and his wife were leading members of the Reformed Church. His death occurred November 4, 1893, and in his taking away a loss was felt throughout a wide circle of friends, to whom his quiet but steadfast Christian character had endeared him.

WILLIAM J. MERWIN (deceased) was descended from an old Connecticut family. His grandfather, Capt. John Merwin, was born and reared in that State, and became prominent agriculturist at New Milford (now Bridgewater). His first wife, Mercy, was born in 1706, and died November 7, 1776. On December 31, 1777, he married Mrs. Ruth Welsh, a widow, who was a member of the well-known Gaylord family, of Gaylord's Bridge. She died March 16, 1816. Capt. Merwin had seven children by his first marriage, and six by his second.

Daniel Merwin, our subject's father, was born March 28, 1788, at the old home at Bridgewater, and was educated in the local schools. He followed agricultural pursuits there throughout his active business life. On November 22, 1815, he married Miss Amy Peck, who was born in 1799, the daughter of Andrew Peck, of Newton, Conn., and they had eight children, as follows: (1) Ruth, born April 7, 1817, was married four times. (2) John H., born September 7, 1821, married (first) Miss Julia Buckley, and (second) Mrs. Elizabeth Starr, but had no children. (3) Sarah, born June 3, 1823, married (first) Oliver Smith, and had children—Fred, Ella, Josephine, Almon (who married Delia Rugles), Cornelius, William and Ida; she married (second) Clover Sanford, a man of wealth and prominence, of Bridgeport, Conn., a manufacturer of hats. (4) Daniel G., born November 28, 1825, married Miss Susan Atwood, and they had three daughters—Emma, Alma and Nellie. (5) George A., born May 20, 1828, married Miss Charlotte Tompkins, and had three children—Homer, Florence and Frank. (6) Frederick S., born October 2, 1830, married Miss Lucy J. Carter, and is proprietor of a hardware establishment in Pawling. (7) William J., our subject, comes next in order of birth, and will be more fully spoken of presently. (8) Harriet O., born November 12, 1834, married Charles S. Trowbridge, a paper-box manufacturer of South Norwalk, Conn.; they have three children—George, Flora and Nellie.

William J. Merwin was born in Bridgewater, Conn., November 3, 1833, and attended the schools of his native town until he was about sixteen years old. He possessed good literary taste, and was always fond of substantial reading, history being his favorite study. Soon after leaving school he went to Savannah, Ga., and engaged in mercantile business for for some years, later removing to Barcelona, Spain, for his health, where he spent one year. After his return to Connecticut, he again went to Savannah, as clerk in a large dry-goods house; but the outbreak of the Civil war caused him to come north again, his sympathies being with the Union cause. In 1860 he located at Pawling, purchasing an interest in the firm of J. W. Stark & Co., dealers in dry goods and groceries, Mr. Merwin and Mr. Wilde being the junior members. Later, Mr. Holmes bought Mr. Wilde's interest, and on the disposal of the Stark interest some time afterward, the firm became Merwin & Holmes. This was one of the largest establishments of the kind in that part of the county, and its success was due in a large measure to Mr. Merwin's efforts. His genial nature, even temper and gentlemanly manner, made for him many friends, and he held a gift for dealing with the public which served him well on many occasions. He was much interested in the success of Republican principles, and took an active part in local politics. Previous to 1884 he held the office of postmaster at Pawling for a number of years, and was supervisor of the town also, for several terms. As treasurer of the Pawling Savings Bank from its organization, in 1871, until his death, 1892, he was the responsible official of the institution, and it was largely through his instrumentality that it gained its present high reputation. In early years he was an Episcopalian, but there being no Church of that denomination in Pawling, he united with the Methodist Episcopal Church in later life. Socially he was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity. A self-made man, his experiences have served to broaden his natural sympathy for the unfortunate, and by his counsel and assistance helped many a deserving person to prosperity. Mr. Merwin married Miss Elizabeth Mitchell Campbell Van De Burgh, daughter of Hexton Van De Burgh, and had one son, William J., who is now a student in Wesleyan University.

HEXTON VAN DE BURGH, born in 1815, was a merchant in Pawling and Beekman, later a farmer, and was always interested in public affairs. He was a son of Gen. George Van De Burgh, who was an officer in the war of 1812, and was one of the prominent men of the county. He was a brother of Dr. Van De Burgh, of Rhinebeck, a noted homeopathic physician. Hexton Van De Burgh married Catharine R. Campbell, daughter of Archibald and Elizabeth (Mitchell) Campbell, and granddaughter of Archibald Campbell, the first of that family to come to America. He came over here as an officer in the English army, and was killed at the skirmish of White Plains on the night before the battle. He lived here as an officer, and was granted a large tract of land in Putnam and Dutchess counties, N. Y. Col. Archibald Campbell married Jane Monroe, and had three children: Archibald; Duncan, born in 1767, who was a surgeon in the English army in the West Indies; and Mary, who was born in 1776, and never married. Archibald Campbell was born in the year 1769, near the depot in what is now the town of Pawling, and as a son of an officer in the English army he was taken to England to be educated; but after a few years, becoming tired of that country, he returned to America with a cargo of merchandise. About 1791 he engaged in mercantile business at what is now Pawling, and was thus employed for some years. He then bought the home on which Irving Hurd, his grandson, now lives, and kept adding to his landed possessions until he had about one thousand acres. He was a man of strong character, great executive ability and fine mental gifts, and was much consulted as an arbitrator. He was one of the foremost men of the M. E. Church. As a Jacksonian Democrat, he was somewhat prominent in local politics, and, taken all in all, he was a unique character. He married Elizabeth Mitchell, daughter of Thomas Mitchell, and had children as follows: Archibald, born in 1793; Jane married Rev. Cyrus Foss, and had three sons who were ministers, one being Bishop Foss, of Philadelphia; Eliza married Daniel Calhoun, a merchant; Mary married Benjamin Hurd; Stacia married Cushion Green Duncan C. was the father of Henry Campbell Sarah married Samuel Merrick; Harriet married (first) Dr. Fowler, and (second) Rev. John Pierpont, of Boston, the well-known poet and preacher, and grandfather of J. Pierpont Morgan; Thomas C., a lawyer in New York, married Cordelia Noxon, of Beekman. Archibald Campbell died in 1847, his widow on January 27, 1858.

JOHN H. VAN KLEECK, one of the leading insurance men of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, was there born December 27, 1837, and is a son of George M. and Elizabeth (Wilson) Van Kleeck, the former also a native of Poughkeepsie, and the latter of England. The Van Kleeck family was founded in this country by Holland emigrants who located the Empire State, and in Poughkeepsie John M. Van Kleeck, the grandfather of our subject, was born and reared. As a life work he followed freighting on the Hudson. In his family were the following children: Robert M., who was a farmer in the town of Fishkill, Dutchess county; George M., the father of our subject; Edgar M., a dry-goods merchant of Poughkeepsie, who early went to California, but returned to that city, where he died; and Hester F., who died unmarried.

The entire life of the father was spent in Poughkeepsie, where for many years he engaged in the dry-goods business. Our subject is the eldest in his family of four children, the others being: Robert (now deceased), who was teller in the Savings Bank of Poughkeepsie; Richard, who is now a resident of California; and Hester M., the wife of Jacob V. Overocker, who carried on farming near Poughkeepsie. The parents were both communicants of the Episcopal Church, and in politics the father was first a Whig and later a Republican. He departed this life in 1884, his wife in 1892, respected and esteemed by all who knew them.

The boyhood days of John H. Van Kleeck were spent in Poughkeepsie, where he attended private schools, and after finishing his education he entered his father's dry-goods store as a clerk. He there remained from the age of fifteen until forty-five, being for some time a partner; but in 1879 they disposed of their stock, and entered into the fire-insurance business under the name of George M. Van Kleeck & Son, which they carried on until the death of Geo. M. Van Kleeck, since which our subject has continued it. Their first office was on Market street, whence they removed to the Savings Bank building, and later to the present place on Garden street.

In politics, Mr. Van Kleeck is a Republican, supporting the men and measures of that party, and religiously is connected with the Episcopal Church. He leads a moral, honest and upright life, and as a result has won the respect and esteem of the community in which he lives.

MON. JAMES ADDIS SEWARD (deceased). Few among the able sons of Dutchess county have displayed the versatile talents and business acumen which characterized the subject of this memoir. In politics and finance he was a leader, and his influence social, religious and educational affairs was no less pronounced. His family was among the oldest of New England, the head of this branch having come from England in 1638. His grandfather, William Seward, was born in Guilford, Conn., but settled in Dutchess county, town of Fishkill (now Wappinger), where his son, Philander, our subject's father, was born. Philander Seward was a prominent farmer and mill owner at New Hackensack, where he died in 1853. He married Susan Montfort, by whom he had six children: William H. was drowned in Texas in early manhood; P. George, an enterprising young business man, who conducted grist and saw mills in his native town, died at an early age; Maurice Dwight will be fully spoken of presently; Caroline A. died at fourteen; James A. is our subject; Ogden T. was a banker at Elgin, Ill., and died at the age of thirty-four.

Maurice Dwight Seward was born October 10, 1830, at New Hackensack, N. Y., where, in June, 1854, he married Mary Marvin, and in September of that year he moved to Elgin, Ill., where he engaged in the agricultural-implement business. His health failing, he, in 1857, removed to Rosemond, Ill., where he lived on a fruit farm until the latter part of 1865. In the spring of 1866 he removed to Normal, that State, where he engaged (first) in a general merchandise business, and (afterward) in a loan and real-estate business. In 1871 he was one of the originators and organizers of the company known as the Bloomington Stove Co., Bloomington, Ill., in which business he remained until his death, October 27, 1876. In his position as superintendent of sales of the company, and also as inventor of a number of stoves and furnaces, he placed the company in the fore ranks with their competitors. During all his life he was interested in Church work, being an organizer of several of the Churches of which he was a member, and latterly was quite prominent in the Second Presbyterian Church, Bloomington, Ill. He was held in high regard by his business associates, and by those with whom he had business dealings, for his strict integrity and business qualities. His home life was an unusually happy one; he was of gentle manners, and his thoughtfulness for others made him greatly looked up to and revered, not only by his family, but by all with whom he came in contact.

James A. Seward, the subject proper of this memoir, was born in New Hackensack, January 3, 1836, and acquired his education in part at the neighboring district schools, in part at those of the village of Fishkill. At seventeen he went to New York City and spent two years as clerk in a cloth-importing house. He then visited Illinois, and was engaged in photography at Elgin, but after a short time returned east. On October 12, 1858, he married Miss Mary B. Platt, a native of the town of Wappinger. Three brothers by the name of Platt came to this State from Connecticut at an early period, of whom one settled at Plattsburg, and one, Zephania Platt (Mrs. Seward's grandfather), located in Dutchess county, in the town of Wappinger, where her father, Hervey D. Platt, was born. He was a Whig in politics, and a member of the Reformed Dutch Church. He married Miss Phœbe F. Cary, a member of one of the oldest families in the town of Beekman, and made his home upon a farm in his native town, where he died in 1877, and his wife in 1862. Mrs. Seward was the eldest of three children. The others, Ebenezer C. and Elizabeth R., are both deceased. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Seward lived for two years on a farm at East Mills, Dutchess county, and then moved to Poughkeepsie, where Mr. Seward was interested in various business enterprises. He was also for a time engaged in the manufacture of carriages in Baltimore, Md. Later was in the furniture business at Poughkeepsie and New York City; but he finally returned to his native town, where his death occurred May 1, 1892. A man of great public spirit and wide sympathies, he entered heartily into all movements in which he saw good. He and his wife contributed liberally to the Reformed Dutch Church, and his interest in religious work, as well as in educational movements, was shown in many ways. He was active in the Masonic fraternity, and in the Republican party, holding several prominent offices at various times, including two terms as Assemblyman from the First District of Dutchess county. He was also the first supervisor of the town of Wappinger, serving in that capacity for two consecutive terms.

Mr. and Mrs. Seward had three children: Irving P. died at the age of eight years; Carrie A. married John C. Kingman, of Cedar Falls, Iowa, and died at the age of twenty-nine, leaving one child, Arthur S. Kingman; and Sarah S., the wife of Robert Johnston. The family has always occupied a high position socially, and their home at New Hackensack is one in which cultured tastes and wealth combine to make it charming.

COL. SAMUEL LEITH. To a patriotic American there can be no badge of honor equal in merit to a title won by gallant service in the field of battle for the cause of freedom and union. The subject of this sketch, now a prominent resident of Matteawan, Dutchess county, enjoys this distinction, and though of foreign birth has demonstrated his devotion to his adopted country in bloody combat, in toilsome marches, in the camp, and in the loathsome prisons of the South, in which so many brave souls found death a welcome relief from intolerable suffering.

The many friends of Col. Leith will be glad to find a permanent record made of a life so well worthy of emulation. He was born August 22, 1839, in Dumfriesshire, Scotland, but his family has long been identified with Leith, one of the oldest cities in Scotland, his ancestry being traced back to about 1200 A. D. His grandfather, Andrew Leith, was a butcher by trade, and in fact that occupation seems to have been hereditary in the family. Andrew Leith married a Miss MacGregor, and had seven children: James, David, Andrew, John, Samuel, Walter and Margaret, none of whom came to America. David Leith, our subject's father, was born in Leith, Scotland, and during his active business career was a butcher and drover, his trade in the latter line extending into England and Ireland, where much of his buying was done. He was killed by accident, in 1840, while traveling on a mail coach. His wife, Margaret (McMaster), who like himself was a devout Presbyterian, had passed away the previous year. Six children were born to them, of whom our subject was the only one to settle in America: David died in Scotland; Andrew, a retired butcher and drover, is living in the old country; John died there; Margaret married James McKnight, a celebrated artist in Edinburgh, Scotland, but neither is now living; Elizabeth (deceased never married).

Col. Leith's boyhood was spent in his native land until the age of eleven years. He was trained to habits of industry, and while attending school would spend some time before and after the daily sessions in driving a butcher's cart. In 1850 he started from Liverpool on the sailing vessel, "William Nelson," for the New World, and on landing in New York worked at such employment as he could find. He drove a butcher's wagon for a time, and then, after a short service in a tin shop, was employed by Julius Closs in the wholesale butchering business until 1858, when he located at Fishkill Landing, and established a butcher shop. The breaking out of the Civil war found him eager to defend the Union, and at Fishkill he recruited Company C, 18th N. Y. V. I., becoming lieutenant April 23, 1861. There being no time to wait for "red tape" in those perilous days, he paid the railroad fare of his company to Albany in order to get them to the front at once. For this generous expenditure he was re-imbursed seventeen years later, through the efforts of Hon. James Mackin. From Albany they went to Virginia, via Washington, and they took part in the battle of Manassas Junction. The regiment then returned to Alexandria for drill, and in the spring of 1862 participated in the seven-days' fight on the peninsula near Richmond. About this time Col. Leith, on account of not receiving the promotion he felt he was entitled to, resigned his position, and returning to the North helped to raise a new company in New York and Brooklyn, known as Company H, 32d N. Y. V. I. On this he held the rank of first sergeant, and after passing an officer's examination he was made orderly sergeant. This regiment took part in the battle of Antietam, and our subject's gallantry won him promotion to the rank of second lieutenant. After the battle of Blackwater, Va., he was made first lieutenant, and soon after his regiment was ordered to rejoin the army of the Potomac for the campaign through Pennsylvania and Maryland. He was in the battle of Gettysburg during the first three days of July, 1863, and was wounded there. On being granted a thirty-days' furlough he came home, and on his return to his regiment was promoted captain. Not having fully recovered from his injuries, he could not safely resume active work in the field, and he served six weeks as provost marshal of Newbern, N. C., before taking charge of his company, which was then that State. From there he was ordered to Washington for an examination, which he passed with honors, and he was then commissioned colonel of the 49th U. S. Colored Troops; but preferring to remain with his old comrades, he did not take the position. After his return to his regiment he saw much active service in the battles of Kington, Woodbury, Whitehall and Goldsboro, and in the running fight known as the Tarboro and Newbern raid, his conduct on the field winning him new honors, he being promoted to the rank of major. At the battle of Bachelor's Creek, February 1, 1864, he was wounded and captured, and then began what was for him the hardest experiences of his long service. He was incarcerated in Libby Prison until Grant had fought the battle of the Wilderness, when Major Leith was transferred, with other prisoners, to Danville, Va., and later to Greensboro, N. C., and Macon, Ga., where they were kept in a stockade. While there a money broker from the South bought from Mr. Leith a note on the Newburg (N. Y.) Bank for $100 in gold, paying him $10,000 in Confederate money, with which he bought provisions and shared them with his comrades. A little later he gave another note of like value and obtained $50,000 in Confederate money for same, with which he again fed his starving friends. By his generosity he must have saved hundreds of lives. After Sherman captured Atlanta another transfer took the prisoners to the jail at Charleston, S. C., where they remained for a short time before removal to Annapolis, Md. Afterward they were taken to Wilmington, N. C., and here Major Leith was finally liberated; but he was so weakened by sufferings that he was obliged to spend two weeks in hospital at Annapolis before he could return home, where he arrived in March, 1865. On April 5, he reported for duty at Annapolis; but fortunately the long struggle was nearing its end, and on June 29, 1865, he was mustered out of the U. S. service at Raleigh, N. C., and later was discharged from the State service at Harts Island, N. Y. At that time he held the rank of brevet colonel, and his popularity with his old company is shown by a gift from them of a gold watch as a token of their affection and their admiration of his bravery. A beautiful silk flag had been presented to the company through Col. Leith by ladies of Fishkill, including Mrs. Samuel Ver Planck, Mrs. Charles M. Wolcott, Mrs. Walter Brett, Mrs. James Mackin and Mrs. John G. Monell. After entering active service Col. Leith found the caring for the flag too much of a responsibility; so, when he was at Alexandria, Va., he sent it by express, addressed to Hon. James Mackin, of Fishkill Landing. On his return home he found, however, that the flag had never reached its destination, and no trace of it has ever been discovered. Our subject holds a commission as colonel of the 49th Reg. U. S. Colored Troops, signed by President Lincoln.

After his return to the paths of peace Col. Leith carried on the butcher business at Fishkill Landing until 1873, when he was employed as watchman of the Glenham Carpet Mills. This position he has now held for nearly a quarter of a century, his fidelity making him invaluable to his employers. His services have also been in demand by the people for various public offices, and he is at present the collector of taxes for the village of Matteawan.

On January 1, 1861, Col. Leith was married to Elizabeth Miller, of Fishkill. She died July 16, 1889, leaving five children: Emma, Samuel, Jr., David, William and Walter. Of these all are single except William, who married Catherine Ward; he resides at Matteawan.

Col. Leith is a steadfast Republican, and has never wavered in his allegiance to that party. His sterling qualities of character command the esteem of all who know him, and his influence is felt for good in local affairs. Fraternally he is a Freemason, having joined the order nearly thirty years ago, and for twenty-eight years he has been a member of the G. A. R., Holland Post No. 48, in which he has held the office of commander, and various other offices. At present he is inspector of the G. A. R. for Dutchess and Putnam counties.

CHARLES H. ROBERTS, United States appraiser of cigars and tobacco at the Port of New York, is a prominent resident of Pawling, Dutchess county, and has done much to advance the educational interests of that town, and to encourage progress in other lines.

Mr. Roberts is a native of Utica, Oneida Co., N. Y., born in 1856, and was educated in New York City, attending the public schools for some years, later taking a collegiate course. On entering business life he first secured employment with the Weed Ore Mines, later with J. M. Childs & Co., of Utica, and afterward spent some time as bookkeeper for a large paper factory. In 1883 he was appointed to his present position, in which he is regarded as an expert. In political faith he is a Republican, but he has never taken an active share in party work or aspired to a place on the ticket. His hearty assistance is given to any effort for the benefit of Pawling, and he was one of the first school trustees under the union free school movement, and aided in bringing the schools under the control of the regents. He is a Master Mason, a member of White Plains Lodge, and of Lodge No. 330, K. T., of New York. On February 22, 1882, he was married to Miss Margaret A. Bangs, and they have had five children: Arthur B., born February 14, 1886; Lucy K., May 11, 1889; Deane J., June 15, 1891; Donald, April 23, 1894; and Helen M., January 2, 1896.

Mr. Roberts is a son of Thomas David Roberts, a well-known mechanical engineer of New York City, and his wife, Catherine Matilda (Dana), a descendant of one of the oldest and most distinguished families of this country. The first of the line, Richard Dana settled at Cambridge, Mass., in 1640, and his son, Jedediah, was one of the pioneers of Ashford, Conn. Jedediah Dana and his wife Elizabeth had a son James our subject's great-great-grandfather, who won high honors by his gallantry as a soldier in the Revolutionary army. He was born at Ashford, Conn., October 10, 1732, and appears to have commenced his military career among the Provincial troops under Sir William Johnson. He assisted in building the fort at Lake George, and was at the battle of Lake Champlain when the fortification there was attacked by the French, and Gen. Johnson was wounded. At the beginning of the Revolution he was captain in Col. Storr's regiment, Gen. Putnam's brigade of Connecticut Militia. He arrived at the American camp in Cambridge immediately after the battle of Lexington, joining the force under Gen. Ward, and was among the troops who were detailed to throw up breast-works on Bunker Hill, where during the night a fortification of earth was hastily constructed. Col. Prescott was the engineer, and he requested Capt. Dana's orderly sergeant to assist in laying out the redoubt. The British forces crossed the river at Urummisset Ferry, and when the second division of 500 men landed they marched up Malden river to gain the rear of the fortifications. This movement was first perceived by Capt. Dana, who informed Gen. Putnam. By his order 500 of the Continental troops marched to meet the British, and took up their position in two lines behind a fence. Capt. (afterward Col.) Knowlton was in charge of the detachment, with Capt. Dana second command. Gen. Putnam in giving his directions to these officers, asked: "Do you remember my orders at Ticonderoga?" "Yes," was the reply, "you told us not to fire until we could see the whites of the enemy's eyes." "Well," said Gen. Putnam, "I give the same order now." The British advanced with muffled drums and soft fifes, and soon passed over the fence south of the one where the Americans were drawn up. Capt. Dana was directly in the line of the British forces, and the men awaited their coming in perfect quiet, word having been given that it would be death to any man to fire before Capt. Dana. When the column was eight rods distant the Captain ordered the rear rank to lie down flat, and at this word the British officers faced about and ordered their men to deploy from the center. On the instant Capt. Dana, Lieut. Grosvenor and Ord-Serg. Fuller fell, and the British commander, supposed to be Maj. Pitcairn, fell mortally wounded. The British troops broke and retreated, but formed and advanced again, the movement occupying perhaps twenty minutes. When they reached the fence they fired, and Lieut. Grosvenor was wounded in the hand, and a bullet which had passed through a rail lodged upon his shirt, flattened and harmless. He bound up his hand and retired from the field. Capt. Knowlton's musket was broken by a cannon ball, and within five minutes after Lieut. Grosvenor was injured a cannon ball struck a rail which hit Capt. Dana in the breast and knocked him down, breathless. He recovered, however, and remained until the line was ordered back; but after his arrival at the quarters he was confined to his room for several days. The last countersign given by Gen. Washington after the battle of Bunker Hill was Knowlton, and the first parole was Dana. In July of the same year an oration was delivered by Dr. Leonard, Gen. Washington's chaplain, and a declaration read, and at the conclusion of these exercises an aid of Gen. Washington advanced from headquarters bearing the American standard with an order from Washington to Capt. Dana to carry it three times around the fort and interior circle of the army, with the injunction that he must not let the colors fall, as it would be considered a bad omen for the American cause. The Captain declined, doubting his ability to perform the duty in the proper manner, and the aid returned to headquarters with his apology. He soon came back, however, with Gen. Putnam, who, in his familiar way, clapped Capt. Dana on the shoulder, and said with an old-fashioned oath: "Dana, you look like a white man, take the colors and clear away!" and the army immediately opened right and left to make a passage for Gen. Washington and the officers. The next day, in his orders, Washington expressed the most flattering approbation of the manner in which Capt. Dana had performed his part in displaying the flag.

The Captain was six feet, one inch in height, and his presence was noble and commanding. His manners were modest and retiring, and although he was frequently offered promotion in the army he uniformly declined. For a time he had in his service as a waiter and secretary a boy who afterward, as Capt. Eaton, distinguished himself in the war with Tripoli, his father having placed him at the age of fifteen under Capt. Dana's care. At the close of the Revolution Capt. Dana settled at Cobleskill, Schoharie Co., N. Y., where he occupied a small log cabin, but notwithstanding his humble circumstances the Legislature appointed him brigadier-general, the first of that rank in Schoharie county. On the death of Gen. Washington, Gen. Dana and Redington held a funeral service at the house of the latter under the Masonic ritual, the ceremony being one of the most imposing ever witnessed in that part of the State. The coffin was placed upon a bier, and a heavy pall thrown over all, with flowers and evergreens in profusion. The two heroes were chief mourners in this solemn rite.

Gen. James Dana and his wife had four sons—Joseph, William (our subject's great-grandfather), Thomas and Alvin—and five daughters—Mrs. Anna Garvie, Mrs. Nancy Brigham, Mrs. Sophia Scripser, Mrs. Elizabeth Butler and Polly. William Dana was born at Cobleskill, June 2, 1770, and died February 2, 1852. He was married September 27, 1795, to Anne Southworth, who was born April 17, 1773, and died April 30, 1846. They had eight children: Luman, Horace, Hiram, Elizabeth, Bradley, Lydia, Eli and Nancy.

Horace Dana, our subject's grandfather, was born at Cobleskill, March 2, 1799, and after acquiring an education in the district schools there he engaged in farming at Lawyersville, N. Y. He was a Democrat in politics, and prominent in Masonic circles. On December 22, 1819, he married Miss Eleanor Van Dreser, who was born at Cobleskill, May 10, 1797, and died August 12, 1881. They had nine children: William, Hiram, Lydia, Catherine Matilda, Nancy, Gilbert, Elizabeth, Emma and Thomas. Catherine M. Dana was born in Cobleskill, January 16, 1832, and was educated there; but after her marriage to Mr. Roberts her home was in New York City. Our subject was the eldest of four children, the others being Eleanor, born in 1858, died in 1860; Elizabeth D., born in 1860; and Thomas E., born January 28, 1867.

Mrs. Charles H. Roberts is a granddaughter of the Rev. John Bangs, who was one of three brothers, viz.: Nathan H., Heman and John, who were all ministers prominent in Methodism. Her father, Rev. Nathan H. Bangs, named for his uncle, was born in 1825 at Kortright, Delaware Co., N. Y. In 1853 he joined the "New York Conference," and until the time of his death, in 1884, he was a fearless advocate of all the great questions of reform. He was a brilliant and forcible speaker, as well as being an energetic and untiring worker in the profession he had chosen. He married Miss Lucy Jane Pinney, and had five children: Hervey Pinney, who never married; Margaret A. (Mrs. Roberts); Arthur E., who married Annie Ketcham; John A., who married Elizabeth Dobson; and Grace M., who remained unmarried. Mrs. Bangs was a lineal descendant of Humphrey Pinney, who came from England in 1630 in the ship "Mary and John," and settled at Dorchester, Mass. His son, Capt. Nathaniel Pinney, born in 1671, had a son, Capt. Abraham Pinney, who died in 1780. He was the father of Capt. Abram Pinney, who had nine children: Ruth, born in 1774; Azariah; Martha; Abner Putnam; Hulda; Levi; Chester H.; Betsy; and John, Mrs. Bang's grandfather, who was born in 1787. Hervey Pinney, Mrs. Bang's father, was a well-known farmer at Bethel, Sullivan Co., N. Y., and her mother's name was Margaret Everard.

REV. JOHN J. McGRATH. The indomitable energy which has ever characterized the priesthood of the Catholic Church is well exemplified in the subject of this sketch, who during his pastorate in the Church of St. John, the Evangelist, at Fishkill, has not only quickened the spiritual life of his flock, but has established outward zeal in new and commodious buildings devoted to the uses of the parish.

Our subject is of Irish descent, his grandfather Dennis McGrath, having been a native of Waterford, Ireland, where he remained all his life. D. J. McGrath, our subject's father, left his old home in Ireland, about 1854, for America, and on reaching this country settled in New York City, where he was engaged in a wholesale trade in coffee, tea, and similar commodities until a few years ago, when he retired from business. His wife, Ann (Boland) who died November 22, 1896, was also native of Ireland. John Boland, her father, a carpenter by trade, came to America to see better opportunities than his own land afforded and became very successful, his work giving employment to a number of men. Of the twelve children of D. J. and Ann McGrath six are now living, our subject being the eldest (2) Michael is a physician in New York City (3) Thomas is a real-estate dealer in the same city; (4) Margaret is at home; (5) Joseph is studying medicine; and (6) Mary is the wife of Dr. John T. Reilly, of Matteawan, New York State.

Father McGrath was born in New York City, February 7, 1855, and passed his boyhood there. His parents, being devout Catholics, sent him to the parochial schools, which he attended until he reached the age of sixteen. In 1876 he entered Niagara College, and on completing his course went to Allegany, N. Y., where his preparation for the priesthood was continued in St. Bonaventura Seminary under the Franciscan Fathers. On June 1, 1880, he was ordained by Bishop Stephen P. Ryan, of Buffalo, and his first appointment was at St. James Church, in New York City. On November 4, 1880, he went to Matteawan, N. Y., as assistant to Rev. John C. Henry, for years and a half being spent there before his transfer to St. Mary's Church, at Newburgh, which was then under Father Henry's charge. There he passed four and one-half years, at the close of which incumbency Archbishop Corrigan appointed him to St. Joseph Church, Croton Falls, our subject's first independent charge. The influence of his zealous work was soon apparent, in the village of Katonah, an out-mission of Croton Falls, grounds being purchased for a new church, which was built during Father McGrath's brief pastorate of twenty months. The new edifice stands an eminence overlooking the limpid waters of the picturesque Cross river, and, while there has been no pretense at architectural grandeur, it stands to-day, in its simplicity, one more evidence of man's desire to glorify the Omnipresent and Omnipotent God. On October 14, 1890, it was solemnly dedicated to Almighty God under the title of St. Mary, by His Grace Michael Augustine Corrigan, Archbishop of New York. Father McGrath's administration of parish affairs was characterized by good judgment and financial ability, and, therefore, he was promoted to a larger and more prominent parish at Fishkill Landing, N. Y. On December 4, 1890, he was installed as pastor in present congregation at Fishkill, and the work of improvement was at once begun there, a beautiful new church being erected in the following year. Later the rectory and school were built, making a notable record of practical work. But while these results may attract the attention of the casual observer to the exclusion of all others, it is in the unification and inspiration of his people that Father McGrath finds his best reward for the past labors, and a hope for the future widening and deepening of the spiritual influences which promote true prosperity.

THOMAS HENRY NELSON (deceased), who in his lifetime was a prominent representative of the farming interests of the town of Red Hook, Dutchess county, where he possessed one of its model homesteads, embracing 210 acres of rich and fertile land, was born October 21, 1822, and died November 20, 1896.

The homestead is supplied with all modern conveniences and accessories, the fields are all tilled, the buildings are of a substantial character, and the whole place denotes the late owner to have been a man of progressive spirit, energetic and industrious, and a capable manager. This pleasant home is presided over by his sister, Miss Sarah C. Nelson. Our subject was a native of Dutchess county, born in the town of Poughkeepsie, and had been familiar with the various employments of farming since a boy, having been reared in the agricultural districts of Dutchess county, mostly in the town of Red Hook, where he acquired his education in the academy of that place.

The ancestry of our subject is traced back to Polycarpus Nelson, who came from England about 1725 or 1730, and purchased a tract of land in the town of Clinton (now Hyde Park), Dutchess county. In 1736 he deeded this to his son, Francis Nelson. The latter wedded Miss Mary Skinner, of Mamaroneck, Westchester Co., N. Y., and to them were born fourteen children—seven sons and seven daughters: Reuben, Samuel, Mephobosheth, Mary Ann, Catherine, Anna, Lucretia, John, Theophilus, Joshua, Justus, Frances, Christina and Charity. Of this family, John Nelson in 1743 married Elizabeth Davenport, of Cold Spring, Dutchess county, and to them were born two children: Thomas, the grandfather of our subject; and Elizabeth, who became the wife of Abner Armstrong, and eleven children grace their union. For his second wife John Nelson, in 1748, wedded Rebecca Scott, of Kinderhook, Columbia Co., N. Y., and they became the parents of four children: Anna, born in 1750, married Thomas Barker in 1771; William married Nancy Emory, the daughter of a major in the British army; Francis married Miss Wright in 1775, and John married Sarah Reed.

Thomas Nelson, the grandfather of our subject, was born in the town of Clinton, Dutchess county, March 17, 1744, and was united in marriage April 11, 1769, with Miss Sarah Wright, daughter of Jacob Wright, who came to Dutchess county from Long Island prior to the Revolutionary war. He married Elizabeth Haight, daughter of John Haight, of Stephentown, N. Y., and to them were born seven children: Jacob, who was killed during the Revolution; Nathan, who wedded Mary Vail; Joseph, who was killed while aiding the Colonies in their struggle for independence; Elizabeth, who became the wife of Seth Whitney; and Sarah, the wife of Thomas Nelson. Thirteen children were born to the grandparents of our subject, several of whom died in infancy. The following grew to maturity: Wright was born February 2, 1770; John, born July 31, 1771, married Celia Pells September 18, 1794, and they had four children; Elizabeth, born May 11, 1773, became the wife of George Parker, of Lancashire, England, December 22, 1798, and they had six children; Jacob, born May 8, 1779, is known to have left several children, although there is no authentic knowledge concerning him; William, born June 29, 1784, who became a lawyer of prominence, and served two years in Congress, left a large family, several of whom are still living; Joseph, born April 1, 1786, left a number of children, none of whom now survive, but there are several of his grandchildren living; Sarah married John Nalross; and Samuel, the youngest, was the father of our subject.

Of this family Samuel was born in the town of Clinton, February 14, 1793, and November 15, 1820, he was married to Miss Christina Benner, who was born May 11, 1799, a daughter of Hendrick Benner. The following children blessed their union: Thomas Henry, whose name introduces this sketch; Sarah C., born December 10, 1824; Theodore Ten Broeck, March 22, 1827; Arthur, June 15, 1829; Christina J., January 27, 1832; and Elizabeth, April 4, 1835.

JOHN T. SMITH has been identified with the business interests, progress and growth of Fishkill, Dutchess county, for a period covering nearly forty years. His ancestors on the father's side were originally from England and Holland, but have been natives to the soil for five generations. During the war of the Revolution they shared the privations and hardships of the Continental soldiers. Thomas Smith was born on a farm in the town of Kent, Putnam county, in 1782; his father, Philip, and his grandfather, Edward, were farmers, and he followed in their footsteps. His father left an estate of considerable value, but it was largely spent in litigation. He was married in 1802 to Helliche, the daughter of John and Rachel (Daniels) Smith; the family came originally from Holland.

Thomas and Helliche Smith had two sons: Philip T. and Silas G. The latter was born in the town of Kent, Putnam Co., N. Y., in 1816, and his early life was spent on the farm. In 1835 the family removed to Matteawan, and he became a clerk in the Matteawan Company's store, then under the management of David Davis. In 1839 he was married to Jane A. Alexander, daughter of John and Margaret (McDowell) Alexander, of the town of Butternuts, Otsego Co., N. Y.; the family emigrated from the North of Ireland. Thomas Smith purchased a farm in Steuben county, and removed there in 1838. He died at the home of his son Silas; in 1852, his wife, Helliche, died also at the home of Silas in 1866.

Silas G. Smith removed to Pulteney, Steuben Co., N. Y., in 1840, and was engaged in selling merchandise and buying grain for the New York market until 1853, when at the request of Mr. David Davis, his former employer, he returned to Matteawan, and formed a co-partnership with him in the store formerly owned by the Matteawan Company. For three years they conducted a successful business, but the company operating the mills became financially embarrassed, and Mr. Smith disposed of his interest in the business to Mr. Davis, and purchased the property at Fishkill-on-Hudson since occupied by the firm of S. G. & J. T. Smith. When the village of Fishkill Landing was incorporated, he served as a member of the first board of trustees, and was re-elected several times, but was always averse to accepting public office. He was president of the Mechanics Savings Bank for ten years previous to his death. In politics he was a Whig in early years, and became a Republican on the organization of the party. He was a man of a high sense of honor and of the strictest integrity, and was a consistent member of the Baptist Church. He died February 9, 1883, leaving a reputation without blot, or blemish.

John T. Smith was born in Matteawan July 15, 1840, in the house opposite the "Beacon Hose Co. House," at the corner of Fountain and Liberty streets. While still an infant his parents removed to Pulteney, Steuben Co., N. Y., and from the time he was old enough he attended the public schools in Pulteney until the family returned to Matteawan, in 1853. In 1854 he attended a private school in Matteawan kept by Mr. Oliver, and in 1855 and 1856 the private school of G. F. Caswell. After his father commenced business at Fishkill Landing, in the fall of 1857 his time was entirely devoted to business, and in 1861 the firm of S. G. & J. T. Smith was formed. The business was successful from the first, being conducted on such lines that won the confidence and support of the community, and it was gradually extended until the present time it occupies the building 25 x 200 feet fronting on Main street and running through to Spring street, and also an annex on the east side of 45 feet, used as a shoe department, and the second story of the Savings Bank building, used as a carpet department. In 1873 a branch store was opened on Fountain Square, Matteawan; in 1878 as removed to the corner of Main and North streets, and now occupies the double store at this location.

Mr. Smith was married at Northfield, Vermont, September 5, 1866, to Carrie A., daughter of Rev. John B. and Mary A. (Cady) Pitman. They have had five children, one of whom died in infancy, the others are: Bertram L., who graduated from Williams College in 1894, and Arthur Raymond, who was educated at Mount Beacon Academy, both of whom are associated with their father in business; Clarence A. is a student at Trinity College, Hartford, Conn., and Elsie A. is attending De Garmo Institute.

The family attend the Reformed Church. Mr. Smith has been, since early life, a member of Beacon Lodge, F. & A. M. He has served several years as trustee of the public schools, and a number of terms as trustee of the village, which he was president from 1877 to 1882. He was elected supervisor of the town in 1882, and was re-elected the three succeeding years, serving as chairman of the board in 1883 and 85.

To mention the business operations in which Mr. Smith has been engaged, would be to make a list of the most important undertakings in his locality since he entered business. He was largely instrumental in securing the location of the Dutchess Hat Works in the village. In 1879 he joined with several gentlemen of the town in organizing the Fishkill Telephone Co., and was the active manager until the company was merged in the Hudson River Telephone Co. Lines were built in the principal streets of Fishkill Landing and Matteawan, and extended to Fishkill Village, Wappingers Falls, New Hamburg, and Newburg, a cable being laid across the river at the latter place. The company had a larger number of subscribers, and a generally more satisfactory service than has been had since. The Fishkill Hat and Shoe Company is another enterprise in which he was associated; but this proved an unfortunate venture. He was one of the organizers and a trustee of the Mount Beacon Penny Association. On the organization of the Mechanics Savings Bank, in 1866, he was elected secretary, and served in that capacity until the death of his father in 1883, when he was elected president, which position he has held since; he is the only charter member on the board. He succeeded James Macken as president of the First National Bank, in 1886, and still holds the position. The banks have always retained the full confidence of the public, and never during time of the most serious financial panic and disaster has there been a run or any indication of want of faith in their stability. The National Bank has recently erected one of the finest and strongest Safe Deposit Vaults between New York and Albany. The average line of deposits in the National Bank is about $300,000, and it has a surplus of about $80,000. The Savings Bank has one million, four hundred thousand dollars on deposit, with a surplus of one hundred and eighty thousand.

Up to 1892 the local transportation between the villages of Fishkill Landing, Matteawan and Glenham, and the depots and ferry, was by hack, stage or omnibus. Mr. Smith and some of his friends, believing that the interests of the town required a more expeditious and convenient mode of transit, undertook to supply the deficiency by an electric street railway, and accordingly the Citizens Street Railway Company was organized, with Mr. Smith as president and general manager. Work was commenced May 27, 1892, and the first car ran over the line August 27, 1892, the success of the enterprise justifying fully the judgment of those who planned and built it. In 1895 the Fishkill Electric Railway Co. was organized, and Mr. Smith was elected president. A road four and one quarter miles long joining the Citizens at the Fountain Street crossing, Matteawan, and running to Fishkill village, was laid out and completed June 13, 1895. This road was leased to the Citizens Company, and the two are now operated under one management. Notwithstanding the great depression in business for the last three years, the roads have proved a success, and have earned a reputation for enterprising management and prompt and efficient service second to none of the roads in the smaller cities of the country. As may be inferred, Mr. Smith is devoted to business and is an indefatigable worker, mastering all the details of every duty he assumes. Systematic and thorough in all his undertakings, his knowledge of affairs and close observation allows little to escape his notice, and keeps him closely in touch with the numerous duties that demand his attention. He is particularly fortunate in his family relations. His home erected in 1871 comprises about five acres of lawn and garden, commanding a magnificent view of mountain and river, and is presided over by a lady whose kindness, culture, refinement and devotion to her family makes an ideal home.

CHARLES SHERMAN (deceased) was a native of the town of Beekman, Dutchess county, born October 24, 1826, and belonged to a family that for several generations has been prominently identified with the interests of Dutchess county. Benjamin Sherman, his great-grandfather, was born February 3, 1736, and died in 1805, while his grandfather, Uriah Sherman, was born in 1765, and died February 26, 1822. The latter married Paulina Hurd.

The father of our subject, who also bore the name of Benjamin Sherman, was born in the town of Dover, Dutchess county, December 29, 1798, but passed most of his life in the town of Beekman, dying there November 10, 1862. He married Miss Hannah Brill, and they became the parents of seven children: John B., who is engaged in business at the stock-yards in Chicago; Charles and Alexander, both deceased; Maria, wife of James Ashly, of Chicago; I. N. Walter, of Chicago; Phebe E., wife of George Brill, of Chicago; and William W., of the same city. By trade the father was a blacksmith.

The subject of this sketch received a good district-school education in the town of Beekman, where his early life was passed, and when a young man he went to Chicago, Ill., becoming connected with the stock-yards, in fact helping to found the stock-yards at what was then the foot of Madison street and the southwestern plank road (now Ogden avenue). He was engaged in that business for many years, and in 1865 returned to the town of Beekman, where he carried on farming during the remainder of his life.

In the town of East Fishkill, Dutchess county, Mr. Sherman was married to Miss Mary A. Rogers, and to them were born a daughter, Caroline Adriance, and a son, George Benjamin, born April 28, 1867, died April 22, 1876. Stephen Rogers, the father of Mrs. Sherman, was a native of the town of Beekman, as was also his father, John Rogers. The former was a farmer by occupation, and was killed by a runaway before his daughter was born. Her mother bore the maiden name of Caroline Adriance. There were only two children in the family, the brother of Mrs. Sherman being Jacob A. Rogers (now deceased).

In politics Mr. Sherman first affiliated with the Whig party, later becoming an ardent Republican, while socially he was a member of Hopewell Lodge, F. & A. M. Throughout his career his duties were performed with the greatest care, and his personal honor and integrity were without blemish. His memory will be a sacred inheritance to his relatives, and will be cherished by a multitude of friends. As a husband and father he was a model worthy of all imitation, unassuming in his manner, sincere in his friendships, steadfast and unswerving in his loyalty to the right. He died October 15, 1882.

GEORGE LOCKWOOD, a retired carriage manufacturer and well-known citizen of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, was born in Yorkshire, England, near Huddersfield, July 17, 1823, and was a six-year-old boy when brought to this country by his parents.

Our subject spent his boyhood in the city of Poughkeepsie, and in 1842 was apprenticed to Lewis F. Streit for two years, after which he went into partnership with Mr. Streit in the manufacture of carriages, remaining with him until the business was discontinued in 1888. Since then Mr. Lockwood has led a retired life. He was married in Poughkeepsie November 1, 1853, to Miss Alvira Mason Jenks by whom he had three children: Alma Kate who married William Oscar Poole; Ella Pauline; Edgar Streit, who married Miss May F. Howard, and they have one child—George Howard, born March 14, 1887. Mr. Lockwood is a member of the Veteran Firemen's Association, and of Niagara Steamer Co. No. 1, of which latter he has been a member since 1843. In politics he is a Democrat, and in 1863 was elected alderman from the Sixth ward. He also served as Alms House commissioner.

William Lockwood, the father of our subject, was born in Yorkshire, England, where he received his early education, and later was engaged in the manufacture of woolen cloth. He was married in Yorkshire to Miss Hannah Hurst, and they had the following children: Rachel, married to Joseph Eastmead; Sarah, married to William Knight; George; John, married to Margaret Wigg; Henry; Margaret, married to Theron Shaw; Jane, married to J. Dakin; and Mary, married to Henry Godfrey (now deceased). They are all now deceased except George, Jane and Mary. In 1829, e father came to this country, and to Poughkeepsie, where he worked in the Williams factory for several years, and then went to Titusville, in the town of Lagrange, where he lived for a time. From there he set out by boat for Michigan, with the intention of buying a farm in that State; but while sailing up the lake he was drowned near Detroit. This was in 1850. His wife died in Titusville, N. Y., in 1876.

George Jenks, the father of Mrs. George Lockwood, was born in the town of Amenia, Dutchess Co., N. Y., June 24, 1795. He married Miss Catherine Knickerbocker, who was born in Amenia October 8, 1803, and to them came four children, namely: Alvira Mason, Sarah Ann, Andrew M., and Lucy Maria, the latter of whom is now deceased. Mr. Jenks, who was a blacksmith by trade, died August 19, 1832; his wife departed this life in November 30, 1881.

William Jenks, the grandfather of Mrs. Lockwood, was one of the early settlers of Amenia. He married Miss Sarah Mygatt, and they followed the occupation of farmers. Both were natives of Rhode Island.

JOSEPH G. FROST, a leading undertaker of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, is also one of the most popular officials of that city, having the distinction of being the only Republican candidate to be elected at one of the elections on the city ticket. His family is of English origin, and he is a descendant of one of three brothers of that name who came from England in early times, one settling in Massachusetts, one on Long Island, and one, his ancestor, near Rensselaerville, Albany Co., N. Y., where many descendants now live.

George Frost, our subject's grandfather, a farmer by occupation, was a life-long resident here, and three of his six sons settled in the neighborhood. Of the others one located near Madison, Wis., and two in Poughkeepsie, one engaging in the confectionery business. The other, William Frost, our subject's father, born in 1799, was nineteen years old when he went to Poughkeepsie and found employment as a clerk with his cousin, Solomon B. Frost. He was admitted to partnership after a few years, but later formed the firm of Frost & Van Wyck, and was in the dry-goods business at No. 316 Main street at the time of the great fire. He rebuilt the store, which is now occupied by Quintard Bros., and continued his business there until 1849, when he disposed of it and went to Washington, then called Nine Partners, the location of the well-known boarding school, and conducted a store there for two years. In 1851 he returned to Poughkeepsie and resumed his business there, but after the death of his brother, Stephen, in 1854, he sold out and took his brother's store, which he sold four years later to Mr. Atkins and his son Robert. He then purchased the business of R. D. C. Stoughtenburgh, on the corner of Main and Garden streets, continuing it at the corner of Main and Crandall streets, occupying three stores. This was one of the largest stores in the city at the time of his death, January 13, 1878. He was a Hicksite Quaker, and his upright character made a friend of every acquaintance. In early life he was an Old-line Whig, but the introduction of the slavery question into politics made him an earnest supporter of the Republican party from its very beginning. He married Sarah H. Woolley, daughter of Joseph P. Woolley, a prominent resident of Dutchess county, and they had three children, of whom our subject was the youngest. Robert W. was a well-known business man of Poughkeepsie, who died in 1892. Mary E. is now the wife of George G. Berry, of Brooklyn, New York.

Joseph G. Frost was born February 6, 1839, in Poughkeepsie, at No. 302 Mill street, in the house now owned by Mr. Pelton. He received a good education for the time, attending the Dutchess County Academy under Prof. P. S. Burchan and Prof. McGeorge. In 1854 he began the study of dentistry with Dr. Charles H. Roberts and remained with him until the spring of 1859, when he opened an office for himself at No. 292 Main street. In 1862 he was obliged to abandon all work on account of ill health, and after two years of rest he engaged in clerical labor in the office of Provost Marshal W. S. Johnson, where he remained until his appointment in 1865 to the office of city chamberlain. In 1866 he was reappointed to the common council, and in 1867 and 1868 was elected city collector on the Republican ticket. In 1868 he formed a partnership with Robert H. Woolley, under the firm name of Woolley & Frost, and purchased the harness business of James Bogardus, which he continued until 1874, the firm name being changed several times, however, first to Frost & Parrish, then to Frost & Davis, and finally to J. G. Frost. On disposing of this enterprise to Overocker Bros. in 1874, Mr. Frost engaged in the undertaking business with Mallory & Doughty, and later with Nelson & Seward, and in 1876 he established a business in his own name at the corner of Main and Academy streets, which he has since continued successfully, removing five years ago to his present location, No. 319 Main street. In 1881 he was elected coroner for three years, and has held the office for five consecutive terms. His last election falling at a time when the Republicans encountered reverses everywhere, he was the only one on the ticket to win the day. He has held the office of supervisor of the Third ward for two years, 1877 and 1878. He was one of the founders of the Hudson River Driving Park Association and its secretary for several years, and has taken an influential part in many local movements.

In 1865 Mr. Frost married Miss Rebecca C. North, daughter of Reuben North, who was for many years the cashier of the Poughkeepsie National Bank. They have six children: Helen North, Mina Louise, Raymond Mott, Allen, Marion North and Louis North. Mr. and Mrs. Frost are members of Christ Church (Protestant Episcopal), and he is an active supporter of its various lines of effort. In his younger days he was much interested in the fire department, and he is now a member of the Veteran Firemen's Association. He also belongs to the F. & A. M. and the K. of P.

MRS. MARY MELVILLE WATKINS. As a substantial citizen of Pawling, Dutchess county, the late Alexander Watkins was widely known, and his high character as a man drew to him the friendship and warm esteem of those whom business relations had brought into acquaintance. For many years he had been engaged in business as a blacksmith, winning a reputation as a leading worker in his line, and his death from pneumonia, in 1891, caused sincere grief among the people who had known him as neighbor and friend, as well as among the closer circles of the home, where the loss fell heaviest. He left a widow, Mrs. Mary Melville Watkins, and six children by his first wife, Miss Ella Dougherty, also survive him, namely: Harry, Charles, William, Agnes, Alexander and George.

Mrs. Watkins is a native of Brooklyn, N. Y., and her education was acquired in the schools of that city. Her family is of Irish origin, the home of her ancestors being at Dublin, where her grandfather, John Melville, was born, lived and died. He was educated in the schools there, and became a carpenter by occupation. He and his wife, Madge Farrell, reared a family of children, among whom was John Melville, Mrs. Watkin's father, who was born in Dublin, but was brought to America at a very early age. His education, which had already been begun in the schools of his native place, was completed here, and he then engaged in business as a ship carpenter, and was employed in that capacity for about thirty years in the navy yard at Brooklyn, N. Y., where his death occurred in 1863. He married Miss Mary Howard, and of their four children Mrs. Watkins is the only survivor, the others—James, John and Bessie—having died in childhood.

RICHARD TITUS (deceased) was born in the town of Lagrange, Dutchess county February 4, 1838, and was a well-known citizen of that locality. [A history of his ancestry will be found in the sketch of his brother Robert.] His boyhood days were spent in Titusville, where he attended the district school and he later became a student at the private school of E. R. Roe, in Cornwall.

Mr. Titus learned the business of paper manufacturing in Columbia county, N. Y., but for many years was a member of the firm of E. Titus & Sons, manufacturers of woole goods. When the Civil war broke out he responded to the call for volunteers, and in October, 1862, enlisted in the 150th Regiment N. Y. V. I., which was assigned to the Army of the Potomac. He served until the close of the war, and his record as a brave soldier is a truly precious legacy to his family. He entered the army as first lieutenant, was promoted to captain, and for gallant conduct was breveted major. The war ended he returned to Lagrange, and resumed his business, which he carried on until his death, March 19, 1888. He was a quiet, unostentatious man, fond of his home and family, and universally liked and respected by his associates. He was married in the town of Lagrange September 5, 1866 to Miss Harriet Hopkins, whose birth took place in that township May 18, 1841, and this union six children were born, namely: Elias, Elizabeth, Florence, Alida, Marion and Richard William.

Dr. William H. Hopkins, the father of Mrs. Titus, was born in Carmel, Putnam Co., N. Y., February 3, 1813. He was graduated from the Medical Department of Yale University in 1837, and in the following year passed as physician and surgeon of the State prison at Sing Sing. In 1838 he located at Sprout Creek, in the town of Lagrange, Dutchess county, taking the practice of Dr. Sleight. On February 5, 1840, he was united in marriage with Jemima, daughter of Elias T. Van-Benschoten, and the following children blessed their union: Harriet, born May 18, 1841; Elias T., September 3, 1843; John, July 8, 1845; Elizabeth, May 10, 1848; and William G., February 28, 1850.

Dr. Hopkins remained at Sprout Creek until 1868, then went to Providence for a year. In 1870 he removed to Hyde Park, where in connection with his practice he carried on a drug store until his death, which took place in 1890. Dr. Hopkins' ancestors came over in the "Mayflower" and he inherited the best characteristics of his Puritan forefathers. He was a man of much ability, and held an honored place in his profession. In politics he was a Republican; socially a member of the Masonic order; in Church connection, a vestryman and treasurer of St. James Episcopal Church at Hyde Park.

JOSEPH D. HARCOURT (deceased). In 1866 J. W. Harcourt, of Albany, N. Y., obtained the escutcheon and genealogical part of the Harcourts, which traces that family back to the remote period of A. D. 876, and shows it to have been one of the most ancient, honorable and wealthy in England. Further research having been made, it has developed that Richard Harcourt (1) was the son of a sister of Francis Weston, and settled in Warwick, R. I., about 1650. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Potter, who was an ancestor of Bishop Potter. Richard Harcourt (1) removed with the Townsends to Long Island about 1656, and afterward became one of the first settlers of Oyster Bay. He was twice a member of the Court of Commissioners, and at Oyster Bay was constable, justice of the peace and surveyor, appointed to confer with the governor, which offices in those days were among the very highest. His children were Daniel, Benjamin, Isabel, Elizabeth, and Mary Dorothy, Sarah, Mercy and Meribah.

Of Daniel nothing is known except that his wife's name was Sarah, and that he moved to New Jersey. Benjamin married Hannah Dickenson, and had two sons, Nathaniel and Robert. In his will Nathaniel speaks of his "mother Esther," probably Esther Townsend, of Oyster Bay, as she was married to a Harcourt. The residence of Richard Harcourt (1) was situated about 200 yards from the present steamboat landing at Oyster Bay, a beautiful spot. The family graveyard has been ploughed up, and all traces of the headstones lost. The Harcourt family has always been prominent in the history of Wappingers Falls, and its member are worthy of place in the records of Dutchess county.

Richard Harcourt (2), father of Joseph D., was born September 27, 1779, in Milton, Ulster Co., N. Y., a son, it is supposed, of Nathaniel Harcourt, above mentioned. He married Elizabeth Merrit, who was born December 26, 1788, in the town of Marlboro, Ulster county, and eight children were born to them, their names and dates of birth being as follows: Jane, 1805; Nelly M., 1807; John W., 1809; Caroline, 1811; Elizabeth, 1815; Mercy, 1819; Joseph D., 1822, and Sarah A., 1824. The father of these, who had been a farmer all his life, died July 12, 1827, the mother on January 13, 1860.

Joseph D. Harcourt, the subject of this memoir, was born in Milton, Ulster Co., N. Y., January 6, 1822, and received his education there. His first employment was as a clerk in a store at Clintondale, from which place he went to Albany, N. Y., where, for about five years, he was superintendent of a steamboat house, which ran a steamboat over the People's Line on the Hudson river. His next location was at Wappingers Falls, whither he removed after his marriage, and with whose interests he was identified for over half a century. He engaged in the mercantile business, which he carried on until his death, October 13, 1882. He was married, March 4, 1844, to Miss Mary E. Woolsey, who was born in the town of Lloyd, Ulster county, September 4, 1823. Her father, Daniel Woolsey, was from the same township as was his father, Moses Woolsey. The latter married Miss Kilsey, and had several children. Daniel married Miss Elizabeth Deyo, the daughter of Noah Deyo, of one of the old families of Ulster county. Of this union seven children were born, as follows: Abby, who married Monroe Deyo;

Phebe, who became the wife of James Elting; Mary E., who became the wife of our subject; Warner, married to Sarah Allen; Roenna, who married Orlando Elting; Anthony, married to Phebe Curtis; and Charles, married to Hattie Carmon.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Harcourt settled in Wappingers Falls, where Mrs. Harcourt still makes her home. Here the following children were born to them: Jay D., who is interested in the machine and foundry business in Poughkeepsie; Mary E., married to Denis Van Wyck, a native of Hopewell Junction, Dutchess county (Mr. Van Wyck died August 4, 1880, leaving one child, Nellie); Emma W. and Carrie, who died in infancy; Elizabeth W., married to Dr. I. M. Cornell; Israel T. N., a merchant at Wappingers Falls.

During his active life Joseph D. Harcourt was one of the leading citizens of his village, and took part in all matters of public interest, such as schools, churches, etc., and was president of the Wappinger Savings Bank. He was a liberal contributor to all worthy enterprises, and did much to promote the growth of the town. He was a kind husband and tender father, and had many warm personal friends who deeply mourned him. His widow is a most estimable woman, and his children rank among the best people of the village where their parents spent so many years.

THOMAS REED, one of the oldest members of the New York Stock Exchange, and a well-known business man, now residing at Rhinebeck, was born in that village, September 14, 1822.

For many generations his ancestors resided in Cumberland, England, and his grandparents, Thomas and Anna (Hall) Reed, reared there a family of three children: Stephen, Mary and John. Stephen Reed died in 1785. His son, John, our subject's father, was born in 1777, and received his education in his native place. In 1811, inspired with a desire to try his fortunes in the New World, he came to America, and locating at Rhinebeck, engaged in farming. He was a Baptist in religious faith, and ever active in furthering the cause of religion. He married Elizabeth Scott, a daughter of Robert Scott, one of the pioneers of Rhinebeck, who came to the county in 1795 from Lincolnshire, England. Robert Scott was a man of fine talents, and his excellent education enabled him to become a very successful teacher; in 1796 he opened a school at Rhinebeck, and enrolled the children of some of the best families in New York City, many of the pupils becoming men of note. Before coming to this country, Robert Scott, though of a family belonging to the Established Church, had become a Wesleyan, and traveled about his native country preaching as a minister of that denomination. He later became a Baptist, and then followed his trade, that of cabinet-making, until his coming to this country, and also for a few weeks after he reached New York. He became the founder of the Baptist Church at Rhinebeck, and was the first pastor. He died September 24, 1834, and his wife, Elizabeth Kitching, survived him twenty years, dying at the age of ninety-four. Of their four children, Mrs. Reed was the eldest; Ellen married O'Hara D. T. Fox, of Ulster county; Ann married Charles Logan, of Rhinebeck, and died at the age of eighty-nine years; Mary married William Hughan, and died at Rhinebeck in 1831; and Jane married Jacob Dedrick, and died at Saugerties. John Reed died in 1857, and his wife in 1852. Of their two children, Thomas, our subject, is the elder, and Mary is now the wife of Cornelius A. Rynders, of Rhinebeck.

Thomas Reed received a good education for his time in the schools of his native town, and his later reading has made him unusually well informed upon current topics. His first employment was in the dry-goods store of William B. Platt, as a clerk and later as a partner, in all covering a period from 1837 to 1850; he then clerked in New York in the wholesale dry-goods store of L. & V. Kirby for two years, thence going to Saugerties where under the firm name of Wilbur, Reed & Russell he was engaged in the wholesale Blue stone and general merchandise businesses until 1864, since which time he has been connected with the New York Stock Exchange. His first partner as a stock broker was C. N. Jordan (the firm being Reed & Jordan), the present sub-treasurer of New York.

On June 7, 1851, Mr. Reed was united in marriage with Julia A. Van Keuren, a daughter of Garrett Van Keuren, and a grand daughter of Abram Van Keuren, an early settler at Rhinebeck, and a soldier in the war of the Revolution. Abram Van Keuren bought the estate now occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Reed in 1782, and built the house in which they no live, and in which his death occurred in 1817. To our subject and his wife have been born six children, namely: Cora married Rev. Lewis A. Mitchell, of Niagara Falls; Anna Hall is at home; Thomas Reed, Jr., an attorney and counselor at law, is a member of the New York Stock Exchange; Sarah married Frank Herrick, of Rhinebeck; Henry, Helen (a member of the class of '86 of Vassar College) and Julia are at home. Mr. Reed is now located on his charming estate at Rhinebeck, and there, with his wife and family, is now enjoying the fruits of his past labors. He is a man of much public spirit, a Republican in politics; and he and his family are members of the Baptist Church, taking a generous interest in its various lines of work. Mr. Reed is also a member of the New York Historical Society.

GEORGE T. BELDING, who passed from earth December 19, 1888, at the age of fifty-eight years, was one of the prominent citizens of Dover Plains, Dutchess county, where, as a leader among men, his name is held in reverence and honor. He was born January 28, 1830, the son of Dr. Silas T. Belding, of Dover Plains, who was quite a literary man in his day. Previous to the outbreak of the Civil war our subject had established a clothing store in Chicago, Ill., but after the close of that struggle he returned to Dover Plains, and purchased the William H. Belding farm in the town of Dover, which he conducted for some time. He afterward erected a three-story building in the village, where he carried on merchandising up to the time of his death.

During his residence here, Mr. Belding was very influential in public affairs, as by his strong force of character and undoubted integrity, he gained the confidence of the people, who saw in him a man whom they could trust as a guide, and well fitted to hold public office. He filled many positions of honor and trust, including that of supervisor, which he held for several terms. His death left a vacancy hard to be filled, and was considered a severe blow to the material interests of the town.

Mr. Belding was united in marriage with Miss Sarah E. Adriance, who was the only one of the three children born to John and Eliza Storm) Adriance that lived to adult age. Both parents had been previously married. To our subject and his estimable wife were born five children: Elias S., who was born in Chicago, and is now the wife of Henry Hasbrouck, superintendent of the Ralston Brick Company; Walter A., who married Caroline Lawrence, by whom he has two children—George T. and Chester L.; Fred K., who is an employe of the Harlem road; and Mary B. and Harriet C., who died in infancy.

The Adriance family are of Dutch descent and were among the early Holland people who came to America. Mrs. Belding has the coat of arms that was worn by Heinrich von Adriance, who was bourghermeister of Freiburgh in 1549, and who is described in the records as Friheir or Baron. The arms are a cross upon a rock between two grape vines supporting two wolves.

Abraham Adriance, the grandfather of Mrs. Belding, was a native of Hopewell, Dutchess county, born April 6, 1766, and after completing his education in the common schools always devoted his time to agricultural pursuits. On July 13, 1788, he married Miss Anna Storm, whose birth occurred in 1760, and five children were born to them: John, the father of Mrs. Belding; Edwin, who married Eliza O'Connor; Albert; Eliza, who became the wife of Richard Parmalee; and Catherine, who wedded Charles Carmen.

John Adriance was also born at Hopewell, his birth occurring January 10, 1795, where he graduated from the public schools, and after learning the trade of silversmith established himself in that business at Poughkeepsie. He was associated with a Mr. Hayes, under the name of Hayes & Adriance, and this firm did a successful business. As the firm was one of the best and most reliable, much of the solid silverware in use in this part of the country was stamped with their name. Mr. Adriance was always of an inventive turn of mind, and it was through his efforts that the famous Buckeye Mower was placed upon the market. He established the first plant for manufacturing that machine at Poughkeepsie, where he also made plows and other agricultural implements, but made a specialty of the mower and he always conducted that business alone. As previously stated, he was twice married, his first union being with Miss Sarah Harris, a daughter of Capt. Joseph Harris, of Poughkeepsie, and to them were born five children: George H., Walter, John P., Anna E. and Blandena.

(1) George H. Adriance, deceased, the first son of John Adriance, Sr., was born in Poughkeepsie and was educated there and at Dover Plains. He married Miss Matilda Ross and they had three children: George, Anna and Nellie. In religious belief Mr. Adriance was a devout Methodist.

(2) Walter Adriance, the second son, was born and reared at Poughkeepsie, there obtaining his education, and on reaching manhood was united in marriage with Miss Cordelia Brinckerhoff, a daughter of Derrick Brinckerhoff, who was an agriculturist, and belonged to one of the oldest families of Dutchess county. Four children were born of this union, as follows: William died in infancy; Sarah B. married Stanley Kipp, by whom she has three children; Anna, who wedded Henry Raynor, also has two children; and Nellie died in infancy. Both daughters now make their home in Rutherford, New Jersey.

John P. Adriance, the third son, was also born in Poughkeepsie, where he attended school, and was later a student in the Dover Plains Academy, from which he graduated. Going to New Preston, Conn., at an early age, he there engaged in merchandising for some time and was very successful. On selling out that business he went to New York City, where he conducted a hardware establishment, associating with him Mr. Platt, the firm being known as Adriance & Platt, who were located at 165 Cortland street. Previous to his removal to that city, however, he had conducted a similar business in New Hampshire. The firm of Adriance & Platt became, in a short time, one of the leading business houses of the city, and always held a high reputation. Owing to pressing business in Poughkeepsie, at the Buckeye Mower plant, which was conducted by his father, Mr. Adriance removed to that city, though he still kept his interest in the New York firm. Being a man of superior business ability and good management, he assumed control of the works. Many of his relatives find employment in different ways with the firm. He always took a deep interest in political affairs, but could never be prevailed upon to accept public positions. He took great pleasure in fast horses, and owned some fine stock. An active Church worker, all worthy projects and deserving people always found in him a willing and ready helper, but his charities were always performed in a quiet way.

On June 22, 1891, John P. Adriance was called from this life, and the following sermon, which was preached at his funeral, plainly indicates the character of the man:

The greatness of sewing—Mark x:43-44. Whosoever will be great among you, shall be your minister; and whosoever of you will be the chiefest, shall be servant of all.

Throughout the preaching of this sermon, I am sure there has been in your mind, even as there was in mine throughout the preparation of it, the thought of one, who with abundant and most sincere sorrow was laid to rest, only six days ago. Our loss is so fresh and deep that it will force itself upon our attention at every turn, and to take no notice of it this morning here in this church which he loved so well, and helped so richly, were well nigh impossible. Words of praise concerning him it is needless for me to speak.

The silent sorrow permeating the whole city is eloquent; and the spontaneous expression of esteem uttered by all who were acquainted with him; the lamentations of those who had been privileged to share his friendship; and above all the tender benedictions of the many to whom he had been a generous benefactor are his biography. Nor would words of public praise be fitting. He never sought them, nay, he rather shunned them. On these days when ostentation and flourish of trumpets are found so often, even in philanthropic and religious activity, it was delightful to meet one who was wholly free from them—one who obeyed so constantly the divine injunction: "When thou doest alms let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth." And to proclaim his good deeds openly now, pleasant as the task would be, were a violation of the modest secrecy with which he covered them. But the lesson of his life is plainly before us and may be spoken of, though very briefly, from the pulpit to-day.

John P. Adriance was unquestionably one of the chiefest among our citizens. Public opinion, with no dissenting voice, declares that no man held a higher place in the confidence and esteem of his fellows, no man had a wider influence, or will be more sorely missed. The secret of his supremacy is the same which our text has brought before us. There have been among us men more wealthy than he, just as wise and able in business matters, equally blessed with the graces which make a charming social life. But his endowments, to a most unusual degree, he constantly employed in the service of others. Wealth to him was a sacred trust, and in parting gifts, and still more in private charities, known only to the recipients and to Heaven, he made his money of service to all. Because he thus used it he found the bitterness which lies in large possessions; and the envy and the bitterness which riches often beget were felt by none toward him. The poor rejoiced in his prosperity, because they felt it in a certain sense to be their own. In the manner his practical wisdom and business ability were in the service of all who needed it. The man who had perplexity and needed safe counsel came often to him; he gave it—not as men often give, carelessly and impulsively—but with the same due consideration and deep thought, as if the matter were his own. The man who found himself amid the breakers of financial disaster, lost unless some stronger arm and expert hand could take the helm, found such in him. There are many men to-day, in this city and elsewhere, to whom in a time of greatest danger he came as an angel of salvation.

And the joys of private life were of the same to him, save as he could share them with others. His home was like a home to the many to whom he gave a fatherly thoughtfulness, a brother's love. His acts of gracious service to those who were in sorrow, or trial, or bereavement, or need of any kind, were unnumbered. To a remarkable degree he put himself in your place, and acted accordingly.

to the revelation thus given. He was a great man; great because he rendered great service. Up from the whole city, from the hearts of poor and rich alike, from all sorts and conditions of men, comes the common testimony—"He ministered to me." Is not this true greatness? Can any other compare with it? The secret of such a life of all lives which humble themselves to help others, lies in Christianity. It is possible only to one who walks humbly as the servant of God, who loves Christ, and seeks to be like Him, and who looks upon all men as suffering, needy, helpless brethren of the dear Lord and Master of the world. May each of us learn the lesson which lies in the beautiful years of him we mourn to-day; and may a double portion of his spirit rest upon all who take up the service from which he has been called to receive reward.

While in New York City, John P. Adriance was united in marriage with Miss Mary Ruthven Platt, daughter of Isaac Platt, a wealthy and retired merchant of that city. To them were born the following children: Isaac R., who married Ada Campbell; John E., who wedded Mary Hasbrouck; Harris E., who wedded Sarah Holmes and is a minister in the German Reformed Church; William A., who married Minnie Horton; James Ruthven, who died at the age of twenty-one; Francis, who married Mary Hampton; and Marion R., who became the wife of Silas Woodell. All of these children were college graduates.

James R. Adriance was the first of the above family to pass away. He was born in New York, June 8, 1836, but when only two years of age was taken by his parents to Poughkeepsie, and in that beautiful city on the banks of the Hudson, his childhood and youth were passed. He was fitted for college under the care of Otis Bisbee, Esq., at Riverview Academy, and in the summer of 1871, with an elder brother and another young man, sailed for Europe in charge of Rev. Alfred E. Myers. They spent a year in foreign travel, extending their tour as far east as Athens, Constantinople and Smyrna, returning the following summer. He completed his preparatory studies and entered the freshman class of Williams College in September, 1874. In the early spring of 1876, during his sophomore year, he entered upon a Christian life, connecting himself at a later period with the Second Reformed Church at Poughkeepsie. He graduated with honor in July, 1878, and was elected by his class, one of the two marshals. He again sailed for Europe toward the close of the summer, and during the remainder of the Paris Exposition took charge of business connected with his father's firm. Being particularly fond of the study of languages, he at once entered upon a course of instruction, with the view of perfecting himself in the French language.

He remained in Paris through the winter for that purpose, and in February joined a party of friends who were visiting the south of France and Italy, spending a few days in Rome at the time of the Carnival. He there contracted the fatal fever, which developed itself soon after his return. He spent a short time in Paris, and ten days in England, sailing for home Monday, April 7. After a disagreeable voyage they arrived on the following Monday. After reaching home he was stricken down, and, notwithstanding the best of care, he died on April 21, 1879.

(4) Anna E. Adriance, the oldest daughter, married Dr. F. H. Simpson, who was a prominent dentist of Poughkeepsie, and was also quite a musician, being a member of the Mendelssohn Musical Society of that place. They removed to the far West. In their family were five children: Annie, who died in infancy; Albert A.; Sarah E., who married William Egbert; Louis, who died in infancy; and Harry Adriance. The second child, Albert, is now employed in the Buckeye Works of Poughkeepsie. He married Miss Lizzie Campbell, and they have a son, Albert Simpson.

(5) Blandena Adriance married Zebulon Rudd, teller of the Fallkill bank of Poughkeepsie. He was made cashier of the Dover Plains National Bank at the time of its organization, was later cashier of the First National Bank of Poughkeepsie, and afterward engaged in the brokerage business for himself. Three children were born to him: Charles A., who married Miss Ella Robinson, died in 1894; John A. has been quite a traveler, and at one time was engaged in the lumber business at Seattle, Wash., but now makes his home in Poughkeepsie (he married Miss Bertha Morgan, of Nebraska, and they have one daughter—Helen M.); Arthur B. attended Williams College, and is now a theological student in New York City, preparing for the Episcopal ministry.

Mrs. Sarah (Harris) Adriance died June 3, 1838, and for his second wife Mr. Adriance was married to Mrs. Eliza (Storm) Orton, whose birth occurred in 1804, a daughter of Abram G. and Mary (Adriance) Storm, and who by a former marriage had one son, who died February 5, 1828. To the second marriage of Mr. Adriance were born at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., the following: Sarah E., September 27, 1842; and Susan and Mary, twins, who died in infancy. The mother of these children died in 1845 and the father April 19, 1873.

PHILIP HOAG is a worthy representative of a family long identified with the history of Dutchess county. His grandfather, Benjamin Hoag, a farmer by occupation, was a native of Dutchess county, born at Pawling, and was a son of John Hoag. Being a member of the Society of Friends, he could not take up arms during the Revolutionary war, but was ever a patriotic man. He married Miss Abigail Wing, of Quaker Hill, Dutchess county, and to them were born seven sons: (1) Elihu, the father of our subject, who will be spoken of presently. (2) Philip married Barbara Lyster, and had two children—Peter and Abby Jane (of these, Peter married Hannah Tompkins, and had five children: Sarah Elizabeth, Mahala Allen, Philip Henry, Jane and Mary Frances, the sons being in Ohio, the daughters in Missouri. Abby Jane married Alfred Haight, and had two children: Amanda and Cornelius, the latter of whom lives in Michican, and has two children—Alfred and Edith; Amanda married Joseph Van Voorhes, and had five children—Mariam, Alfred, Court, Emily and Willis). (3) Eliab died in infancy. (4) Sanford married Mahala Allen, and had one son—Charles, now deceased. (5) Matthew married Sallie Spalding, and has two children—George and Phoebe, both deceased. (6) Willet married Jane Shears, and has one son—Benjamin, living in Palmyra, Neb., of which city he has been mayor. (7) Abraham married Phoebe Ferris, and had two children—Edith and Sanford. The last named (Sanford Hoag) married Lydia Benson, and three children graced their union: Edith, Elihu and Charles; Elihu married Ida Benton, and they have four daughters—Gertrude, Eda, Ida, and Annie.

Elihu Hoag (the father of our subject), who was always known as "Squire Hoag," was a native of the town of Pawling, followed the vocation of farming, and for a number of years served as justice of the peace. He wedded Arabella Marsh, daughter of Joseph Marsh, of Connecticut, and five children graced their union: Philip, the subject of this review; Langdon (deceased), who married Mary Dorland; Hannah and Arabelle, both single, who reside at the old home in South Dover; and Nora A., deceased in infancy. Langdon, the second son, was born and educated in Dover town, where he carried on farming for some time, but the latter part of his life was passed in Poughkeepsie.

In the town of Dover, Dutchess county, Philip Hoag, our subject, was born June 23, 1818. He attended the common schools, later a select school at Warren, Conn., where he paid $3.00 a term for tuition, and $1.25 for board, with flour at $11.00 per barrel. After leaving school he assisted his father upon the farm till the latter's death, after which event he and his sisters remained on the homestead by their father's desire, and he has ever since followed agricultural pursuits, to which he was reared. He has held numerous town offices with credit to himself, and to the satisfaction of all concerned. In politics he is an Old-line Democrat, and from boyhood has been possessed of strong Prohibition tendencies. Always a great reader, he is well-informed on the general questions of the day, as well as history. He has been executor for many estates, both among his neighbors and at a distance from home.

Mr. Hoag has been twice married, first time to Miss Mary A. Ward, by whom he had three children: (1) Nora, born in Dover, married Gilbert Taber, a farmer, and has four children—George (married to May Stevens), William, Wright (married to Ida Hufcut), and Mary (married to G. A. Stripling). (2) Martha, who was born in Dover town, married Rozell Meade, a farmer of that town, and they have children—S. Jennie, Nora B., Mary L., Morris P. and Jerry L. (3) Frank, also born in Dover town, is there engaged in farming; by his marriage with Miss Elizabeth R. Stark, a daughter of Cyrus Stark, of Dover, he has two children—Mary E. and Frank P. After the death of his first wife, our subject married her sister, Miss Sarah A. Ward.

Mrs. Hoag traces her ancestry back to Peltiah Ward, who was born in England, and who was one of five brothers—Ichabod, Peltiah, Ebenezer, John and Nathan—who in an early day sailed from Ireland to America. Peltiah locating in Massachusetts, where he died. He was born December 21, 1689, and was married December 20, 1725, at Killingworth, R. I., to Jerusha Kelsey. A son, Ichabod, later moved to Killingworth, R. I., and thence to New York State, locating in Dutchess county. He was a captain in the Revolutionary war. Ichabod, the son of Peltiah, and a farmer by occupation, was the great-grand father of Mrs. Hoag. He was born in 1743, in Killingworth, R. I., and died December 30, 1822, in Dutchess county. He married Mehetable Marcy, and to them were born nine children: (1) Griffin married and had four children—John, who wedded Miss Carhart, daughter of Jacob Carhart; Spencer, who married Miss Pattie Soule; Annie, who became the wife of a Mr. Traver; and Mehitabel, who married William Lee. (2) Peltiah (the grandfather of Mrs. Hoag) was born in 1770, and educated in the town of Dover, and was a farmer and cattle drover; he was married February 27, 1791, to Miss Anna Soule, who was born September 24, 1774, a daughter of Ichabod Soule, and to them were born five children—Henry, who married Almeda Beardsley; Ira; Edward P. (father of Mrs. Hoag); Griffin; and Sarah, who married Miron Preston. Peltiah Ward, the father of these, died November 2, 1830, his wife on July 20, 1840. Henry Ward and wife have four children, namely: George, born December 18, 1814, married Elizabeth Somers, and they had a daughter, Frances, who married William Sheldon; Jane, born November 17, 1819, never married; Peltiah, born December 31, 1821, married Jane Hermance, of Poughkeepsie, and to them were born six children. He was first an attorney and later a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and at the breaking out of the Civil war was the presiding elder of the Ellenville district, N. Y. He immediately recruited a company, of which he became captain, went to the front, and was killed at the battle of Bull Run, Virginia, falling with the flag of the regiment, which he was carrying at the time. Martha, the fourth child of Henry Ward, was born March 27, 1826, and married Jackson Bowdish, by whom she has one child, a daughter, Cornelia, who married A. Wing. The latter was cashier of the Pawling Bank for thirty years. His death occurred at Poughkeepsie, N. Y. (3) Ichabod, an agriculturist, married Rachel Hurd, and they have one child, Myron. (4) Joseph, also a farmer, wedded Eliza Newton, and they had seven children: Phœbe; Marilla, who married Reuben Chapman; Newton and Alfred (twins); Mrs. Eliza Flower; Mrs. Sallie Sweet; and Mrs. Hetty Pool. (5) Ebenezer, an agriculturist, married Miss Abba Sheldon, daughter of Agrippa Sheldon, by whom he had seven children: Waldo, Amanda, Lodesca, Ebenezer, Polly, Henry and Oneida. (6) John, an agriculturist, married Miss Cynthia Cyher, daughter of Peter Cyher, and they had one son, Griffin. (7) Jerusha became the wife of Reuben Wooster, by whom she has five children: Peter, Ichabod, William, Oliver and Hannah. (8) Mehitabel married Edmond Varney, a farmer, and they had seven children: Alfred; John, who married Alma Stone; Milton; Ann; Mrs. Almeda Stillwell; Clarinda, who married Dr. D. T. Marshall; and Frances. (9) Polly married Daniel Cutler, a farmer, and they had seven children: John, Fannie, Elma, Mrs. Jane Drufee, George, Ward and Amor.

Edward P. Ward, the father of Mrs. Hoag, was born in the town of Dover, Dutchess county, November 10, 1796, was there educated, and was employed as a carpenter and millwright. In February, 1817, he married Miss Amy Pray, who was born March 3, 1796, a daughter of Andrew and Mary (Duncan) Pray, and they became the parents of ten children: (1) Andrew, who lives in Eden, Fond du Lac Co., Wis., was born December 20, 1817, married Miss Almere Sheldon, daughter of Luther and Mary Sheldon, by whom he had four children—Annie, Mary, Delilah and Sarah L.; after the death of his first wife, he wedded her sister, Miss Amanda Sheldon, and they had two children—George and Hasley. (2) Mary A., born January 20, 1820, was the first wife of our subject. (3) Hannah, born March 17, 1822, married Harrison Sheldon, and they had two children—Marion, who became the wife of William D. Williams; and Emily, who married George Preston (after the death of her first husband Mrs. Sheldon married Cornell Waite, and they had four children—Mary A., unmarried; Henry, who married Adda Kingsbury, from Alliance, Ohio; William, who married Annie Davis; and Irving, unmarried; Mr. and Mrs. Waite live in Dutchess county). (4) Thaddeus, born February 4, 1824, married Lois Dean, daughter of Zenus Dean, of Deposit, Broome Co., N. Y., and they had one son—George, who married Ella Rosencroft, of Ithaca, N. Y.; Thaddeus is deceased, and his family reside at Deposit, Broome Co., N. Y. (5) Francis M., born March 27, 1826, married Charlotte Northrup, and they had four children—Josephine (who married Charles Lawrence), John, Jesse and Bennie; Francis M. resides at Newton, Sussex Co., N. J., and has been in the Legislature three years, both as assemblyman and senator. (6) Louisa M., born February 20, 1829, died unmarried. (7) Sarah A., born September 17, 1831, is the wife of our subject. (8) Henry, born September 11, 1835, married Bathsheba Barnes, and had six children—Amy, single; Sarah E., wife of Wallace Freeman, of Norfolk, Va.; Henry B., single; Mary L., wife of Albert H. Prentice; Edna G.; and Edward P. Henry, the father of these, has for the past twenty-eight years been a Presbyterian minister in Buffalo, where he has built a fine church, and has a congregation numbering over 1,200. (9) Martha, born November 4, 1837, died in infancy. (10) Edward, born January 14, 1840, wedded Mary Mygatt (whose parents were from Amenia, Dutchess county), and had three children—Charles and Clinton, both unmarried; and a daughter who died in infancy; Edward lives at Deposit, Broome Co., N. Y. Edward P. Ward, the father of this numerous family, died August 15, 1855, and his wife on April 17, 1869.

Mrs. Philip Hoag has been a member of the W. C. T. U. of Dutchess county for the past twenty years; is serving her fifth year as vice-president of same; has been a delegate to the National Convention of that society, three times, and to the State Convention nearly every year.

EDWARD BUCHANAN MANNING, the superintendent of the extensive works of C. S. Maltby at Millerton, Dutchess county, was born November 1, 1847, on the Shenandoah river in Jefferson county, W. Va., than a part of the Old Dominion. The family is of English origin, the first of the name settling in Virginia about the year 1774. Nathaniel Manning, our subject's great-grandfather, was born in New Jersey in 1738, was graduated from Princeton College in 1762, and became a physician and surgeon. Later he went to England and was ordained as a minister by the Bishop of London, and on his return to the colony settled in Hampshire county, Va., where he was in charge of a parish until his death in 1776.

Jacob Manning, our subject's grandfather, was born in New Jersey, and became a successful farmer. He married Miss Mary Rutherford, née Darke, a widow, the daughter of Gen. William Darke, an officer of the Revolutionary army, and a representative of one of the wealthiest and most aristocratic families in the State. He was a large landholder, and his daughter inherited from him an immense estate. He took a prominent part in public affairs and in military operations at various times, and he and a son were with St. Clair at the time of his defeat in 1791, when the son was killed and the General wounded. Darke county, Ohio, is named in his honor. The following extract from a biographical sketch of Gen. William Darke appears in Vol. XVII of Harper's Magazine: "His name belongs to the Biography of American Heroes; nor is it unknown in the early statesmanship of Virginia. Gen. Darke was in the State Convention of 1788, and voted for the Federal Constitution. He was badly wounded at St. Clair's defeat and his son, Capt. Joseph Darke, was slain. He served previously in the Revolution and suffered long as a prisoner. He was one of the Rangers of 1755 (then nineteen years old), serving under Washington in Braddock's ill-managed march toward Fort Duquesne. He was born in Pennsylvania, but came to Virginia in 1741, when six years old. The splendid estate, where he reared his family, was on Elk Branch, Duffield's Depot being included in it." This sketch also states that Darke was one of the few officers who served uninterruptedly throughout the Revolutionary war and the subsequent struggle with the Indians in the Northwestern Territory—a fact which is shown by the large grant of land in this county (Jefferson) made to him by the Commonwealth of Virginia. Jacob Manning was not active in public affairs, but was probably a Whig in politics. He died about 1824 and his wife in 1842. They had four children: Jacob, Mary, Nathaniel W. and Monroe.

Nathaniel William Manning, our subject's father, was born in 1814, in the Shenandoah Valley, and followed the occupation of farming, in which he was fairly successful. He was a man of fine intelligence and studious habits, and at one time studied medicine with Dr. Briscoe, a brother-in-law, although he never practiced. In the political affairs of his locality he was a leader, holding various offices, including that of sheriff of Jefferson county. He married Martha Craighill, daughter of Price and Eliza (Little) Craighill. This family was of Scotch descent and among the most prominent of that region. The eldest son, William Nathaniel Craighill, was the father of William Price Craighill, who is chief of engineers in the United States army with the rank of brigadier-general. He was second in his class at West Point and was a professor there for a number of years. The other children were Addison, Martha (Mrs. Manning), John Little, Samuel and Fenton. Mrs. Manning died in 1876, and her husband survived her only two years. Six children were born to Nathaniel William and Martha Manning: Fannie, Mary, William, Edward B., Addison and Lucy, all of whom are living.

Edward B. Manning was unfortunate in his early educational opportunities, as the war interfered with the schools of his neighborhood during the years when he might have found them most helpful. He had no schooling after the age of thirteen, but his naturally quick and intelligent mind has enabled him to remedy the deficiency to a great extent and gain a good, practical education. Among his recollections of the exciting scenes of his boyhood, the trial and execution of John Brown are prominent and he also visited him in his prison cell. At the age of twenty he left home and secured employment as a fireman on the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, in the west division, and a year later he went to Jefferson county and for five years ran a steam sawmill in the Shenandoah Valley, in which he had an interest. In the spring of 1873 he began to work for C. S. Maltby, as engineer at his iron furnace in Knoxville, Md., and in the fall of the same year he came to Millerton as assistant engineer. He soon became first engineer, and also founder in charge of the furnace. In 1884 he was appointed superintendent of the entire plant, and this responsible position he still holds with satisfaction to his employers and great credit to himself. The furnace is now closed and Mr. Manning takes charge of the mine. He is actively interested in public affairs and has a wide acquaintance with the leading men of his native State, ex-Postmaster General Wilson being one. Although he is known as a Democrat, he is inclined to be independent, being an advocate of protection and sound money. He was elected highway commissioner in 1889, 1890 and 1891, and later was appointed to fill a vacancy, and he is now the nominee of his party for the office of supervisor. He belongs to the Masonic Order, Webatuck Lodge No. 480, F. & A. M., of Millerton, of which he has been master for three years, and also to the Poughkeepsie Chapter No. 72.

In 1880 Mr. Manning married Miss Josephine Traver, who was born in Frederick county, Md., and is the daughter of Freeman Traver, a well-known citizen of Columbia county. Mr. and Mrs. Manning have seven children: William, Lucy, Perry, Nathaniel, Virginia, Elizabeth and Freeman.

WILLIAM B. PLATT (deceased). The subject of this memoir, who was for many years a prominent merchant of Rhinebeck, Dutchess county, and later was president of the First National Bank of that place, was a native of Poughkeepsie, born February 1, 1799. His family originated in England, and his father, John Platt, who served in the Revolutionary war, and was a farmer by occupation, was an early settler in Dutchess county, coming from Long Island, where a branch of the family had located some time before. He married Catherine Barnes, by whom he had three children, our subject being the second. Isaac, the youngest son, was a resident of Poughkeepsie, while Eliphalet became a prominent physician at Rhinebeck and was noted for his varied talents as well as for his skill in his profession. There was also a half brother, Henry.

William B. Platt engaged in mercantile business in Hyde Park at an early age and in 1830 removed Rhinebeck and opened a general store at the northwest corner of Montgomery and W. Market streets. After conducting it alone for several years he formed a partnership with Christian Schell, which lasted for a number of years, when Mr. Platt retired. He then became interested in the First National Bank as director, and was soon after chosen president, which position he held with marked ability until his death. He was never active in politics, although, first as a Whig and later as a Republican, he took keen interest in the questions of his time. In various religious and philanthropic movements he was a helpful factor, and he was for many years a leading official in the Reformed Church.

On December 6, 1826, Mr. Platt was married to Miss Sarah C. Stoutenburgh, born in 1807, the daughter of John I. and Sally (Griffin) Stoutenburgh, of Hyde Park. Two children blessed this union: John H. (deceased), born in 1827, was a well-known lawyer of New York; and Elizabeth, born in 1830, married Charles H. Adams, a prominent manufacturer of knitted goods at Cohoes, N. Y. They had two children—a daughter, Mary Egberts Adams, now the widow of Robert Johnston, who was interested in the Harmony Mills at Cohoes (she has one son, Robert, born in 1882), and a son, William Platt Adams, formerly in the knitting business, but now retired.

The subject of our sketch departed this life in 1879, his death bringing a sense of loss to all who had ever come within his influence. Nine years later his wife followed him, and the remains of both now rest in the cemetery at Rhinebeck. Thoroughly progressive, and ever loyal to the interest of his town, Mr. Platt was a leading citizen of his day, and was esteemed and loved by everyone for his mental ability and moral worth. His personal appearance was most prepossessing, his manners genial, courtly and refined, and his kind heart and well-stored mind made him a valued friend and companion.

JOHAN G. WAIT, a prominent dairyman and agriculturist residing near Dover Plains, Dutchess county, was born July 8, 1829, in the town of Unionvale, where his family has been well known for many years. He was educated there, and in early manhood engaged in his present business, which he has conducted twenty-eight years, keeping as many as fifty cows: In local affairs he has taken an influential part, holding various township offices at times, and supporting the principles of the Republican party. He married Miss Catherine Van Wagoner, a descendant of one of the old families of Clinton, Dutchess county, and has had six children: Hattie, the wife of Arthur Benham; Sophia and Joseph, who are not married; Franklin, who married Sarah Schermerhorn, and they have one child—Eva; Minnie, who is at home; and Isaac P. (deceased).

The ancestors of the Wait family were early settlers of Rhode Island, where Joseph Wait, our subject's grandfather, was born and educated. He settled in Unionvale, town of Dover, and he and his wife, Sarah (Draper), reared a family of eight children, of whom, Joseph Wait, our subject's father, was the eldest. Of the others, George married Lucinda Beatty; Patience married Robert Cornwall; Catherine married William McDowell; Mahalie never married; Helen was the wife of Beria Suthern; Mary married a Mr. Hall; and Sarah was the wife of Braria Austin.

Joseph Wait was born in the town of Unionvale, Dutchess county, in 1797, and after acquiring the education afforded by the time and locality he learned the carpenter's trade, and engaged in house building. He was the leading builder of the day there, having erected most of the houses in the township, besides the churches in Dover and the residence now occupied by our subject. He married Miss Amelia Applebee, by whom he had ten children: Helen, Catherine, Edgar, Mary, Oliver and Nannie, all six now deceased; the others are: Charles, who married (first) Susan Bertram, (second) Anna Kelley, and (third) Sarah Porter; John G., our subject; William M., who married Louisa Russell, and James E., who married Carrie Rozell.

Mrs. Waite's ancestors have been engaged in agricultural pursuits in Clinton for several generations, and her grandfather, Solomon Van Wagoner, was born there. He married Hannah Ham, and had eight children, of whom two died in infancy; the six who lived to maturity were: Perlee, our subject's father; Alonzo, who married Mary Dart; Lewis, who married Polly Finks; Margaret, the wife of Stephen Harris; Mary, who never married; and Julia A., the wife of Stephen Hoag. Perlee Van Wagoner was also a lifelong resident of Clinton, where he was well known and highly respected. He and his wife, Hattie (Traver), had four children, Mrs. Wait being the eldest; Mary J. married Chancey Isabell; Theron is not married; and Cornelia is the widow of Dyer Holdridge.

Our subject owns a fine farm of 219 acres of land at Lithgow, in the town of Washington, Dutchess county, which he farms in connection with the place of 365 acres, on which he has resided some twenty-one years. He has a beautiful home, and he can look upon his possessions with pride, as he came by them through his own efforts.

FRANKLIN LENT HAIGHT, a well-known teacher of this section, is at present the superintendent for eastern New York and northern New Jersey of the business of the Central School Supply House, of Chicago, Ill., the largest dealers in school specialties in the United States. In this occupation, as well as in his previous career as a teacher, Mr. Haigh has been eminently successful, his work in establishing agencies, meeting school boards and superintendents, and others interested in the purchase of supplies, being performed with tact and ability, and the introduction of many new and valuable methods and appliances into the schools of this section may be attributed largely to his judicious exposition of their worth. Apparatus for teaching physiology, and a new series of relief forms showing the topographical features of the earth's surface, are the main specialties.

The Haight family appears to have descended from Baron Johanus Von Height, who went from Normandy to Britain during the thirteenth or fourteenth centuries. The immediate ancestors of the American branch were among the earliest settlers of Massachusetts, Simon Haight (or Height, as it appears on different records), with his wife and three or four children arriving from England on the ship "Abigail," in 1628 or '29, and settling at Saem, Mass., under Endicott. The descendants are now very numerous, and are located in various parts of the country, many of them, in past, as well as present times, occupying places of trust and honor.

Mr. Haight was born at Fishkill, Dutchess county, November 7, 1853, the son of Sylvanus Haight, a well-known agriculturist. He was a native of Putnam county, N. Y., born March 20, 1823, and his wife, Margaret Lent, was born in Westchester county, September 17, 1825. Both are living, as are seven of their eight children, viz: Anna A., Mary Z., Eugene L., Frederick C., Franklin L., Sherman and Edward. Katie, the sixth child, died at the age of six years. After attending the Fishkill schools for a time Mr. Haight, in 1874, entered the State Normal School at Albany, and was graduated in 1876. He then taught successfully in the public schools of southern Dutchess county for nearly fifteen years, and in 1893 he accepted the position which he now fills so ably. In politics he is a Republican.

Mr. Haight has a charming home, known "Sylvan Place," an estate of about twenty acres, located on Hopewell avenue, three-fourths of a mile east of Fishkill Village. The house is spacious, and the grounds in front of it 125 x 225 in extent, are beautified by large maples and other shade trees. There are two orchards on the property, containing a variety of fruit, including seventy apple trees and five hundred peach trees, with some pear trees.

Mr. Haight married Miss Anna Snook, daughter of Gilbert Snook, a life-long resident of Fishkill, and his wife, Antoinette (Young), formerly of Westchester county. Two children were born of this union: May Elizabeth, in 1883, and Clifford Lent, in 1884. Both Mr. and Mrs. Haight are active members of the M. E. Church at Fishkill, with which he has been connected as trustee and steward for several years.

J CORNELIUS HAIGHT. The Haight family, which has been prominent for many years in this section, both numerically and by virtue of their ability and energy in various lines of effort, is of Puritan ancestry, and the subject of this sketch, a well-known retired business man of Fishkill-on-Hudson, is of the eighth generation in direct descent from Simon Hait, or Hoyt, or Hoit, who was born in 1595, in Dorsetshire, England, and died September 1, 1657, at Stamford, Conn. He was one of the Puritans who left their native land for America on October 6, 1628, in the vessel "Abigail," with Col. John Endicott, who was afterward appointed Governor of the colony.

Second Generation: John Hoyt, the eldest son of Simon, was born in Dorsetshire, England, in 1614, and died September 1, 1684, at Rye, Westchester Co., N. Y. He was fourteen years old when he landed in this country, and lived for some years in Massachusetts, later at Fairfield, Conn., and in 1665 moved to Westchester county, N. Y., being one of the grantees who purchased land of the patent of Thomas Pell. He married Mary Budd, and had five children: Samuel, Mary, Rachel, John and Simon.

Third Generation: John, the fourth child of John and Mary Hoit, was born at East Chester in 1665. On June 26, 1696, he was chosen town clerk of Rye, Westchester county; as constable in 1702; as supervisor in 1711; served as a representative or member of the Assembly from 1712-13-14-15. In 1716 he was justice of the peace, and was honored with the distinctive title of "Mr." John Haight. He was again chosen supervisor in 1717-19-20. He was chosen churchwarden of Grace Church, at Rye, in 1719. He had been a vestryman in 1712. On February 11, 1715, he was one of a committee appointed to lay out the tract of land purchased from the Indians, and on March 13, 1721, he obtained, from King George II, Royal letters of Patent to the Charter of White Plains. His father, in company with Joseph Budd and Daniel Purdy, had also received letters of patent from the crowned King George I, to a large tract in Westchester county, containing about 1,560 acres. Mr. John Hoit married Elizabeth Purdy, daughter of Daniel Purdy, and had eight children, as follows: John, Samuel, Jonathan, Joseph, Daniel, Elizabeth, Eunice and Mary.

Fourth Generation: Daniel, fifth child of John and Elizabeth Haight, was born about 1688, died at Yorktown, Westchester Co., N. Y., in 1772, a prominent Episcopalian. He married in 1718 Elizabeth Norton, daughter of Joseph Norton, and had nine children: Joseph, James, William, Daniel, Jonathan, Rachel, Jenimah, Elizabeth and Charity.

Fifth Generation: Joseph, born at Yorktown, Westchester Co., 1719, died in Phillipstown, July 30, 1776; married Hannah Wright, daughter of John Wright, of Yorktown, Westchester Co., N. Y. They both died of smallpox on the same day, only an hour and forty-eight minutes apart. Their twelve children were: Mary (or Polly), John, Joseph, Sylvanus, Stephen, William, Daniel, Beverly, Hannah, Phebe and Esther (twins), and Martha. Phebe married Col. Zebulon Butler, of the Revolutionary army. Daniel, the father of Joseph, purchased a tract of land on the water lot of the Phillips patent, called Phillips Precinct, old Dutchess (now Putnam) county, in 1748, containing 640 acres. Joseph (his father having given him a deed in 1750) moved from Rye, Westchester county, to Phillipstown in 1751, and erected a log house by the old Indian path on the west side of Clove creek. In 1765 he built the first frame house on the east side of Clove creek, all the material for it being made on the farm, which at that time contained a sawmill, blacksmith shop and carpenter shop. Joseph and two of his sons were carpenters.

Sixth Generation: Capt. John Haight, son of Joseph and Hannah (Wright) Haight, was born at Rye, August 18, 1743, and on March 20, 1770, in the old Col. Beverly Robinson house, in Putnam county (from this house the traitor Arnold made his flight), was married to Merriam Swim, who was born December 25, 1749, at Highland Falls, daughter of Cornelius Swim, of Highland Falls, Orange county. Mr. Haight was a prominent man, a captain in the Revolutionary army in the Seventh Regiment, otherwise called Col. Henry Luddington Regiment (John Haight, captain, date of appointment May 28, 1778), and served throughout the war. In 1807 and 1808, he was a member of the Assembly from Old Dutchess county (comprising both Dutchess and Putnam). In 1813 he was associate justice of Putnam county, and in 1820 served as judge of the Putnam Court of Common Pleas. In religious affiliation he was a member of the old Presbyterian Church of Brinckerhoff, and held the office of ruling elder for forty years which incumbency he filled with satisfaction to his constituents. His death occurred July 15, 1836, in the old Haight homestead at Phillipstown, Putnam county. To Mr. Haight and his wife were born the following children: James, Joseph I., Cornelius I., Sylvanus, Henry (deceased in infancy) John, Henry, Mary, Stephen, Jacob I., Hannah, and Miriam, widow of Capt. John Haight, March, 1841. Beverly Haight, son of Joseph and Hannah (Wright) Haight, and brother of Capt. John Haight, was born in 1763, and married Charity, daughter of Joseph and Sarah (Larrabee) Hustis. They had eight children, as follows: Elizabeth, Joseph, Joshua, Mary, David, Esther, Beverly, and John.

Seventh Generation: Beverly Haight, son of Beverly and Charity (Hustis) Haight, and father of our subject, was born at the old homestead in the town of Fishkill, Dutchess county, March 30, 1801, and passed his life there, being actively engaged in farming until his sixty-fifth year, when he retired. He served as assessor of the town of Fishkill 1859-60. He was twice married, his first wife being Eleanor Burroughs Haight, who was the daughter of Cornelius I. and Hannah (Burroughs) Haight, granddaughter of Capt. John Haight. She was born February 10, 1801, in the town of East Fishkill, Dutchess county, and died January 24, 1866, in Phillipstown, Putnam county. They were the parents of our subject. For his second wife Beverly Haight was married, November 16, 1868, to his second cousin, Susan A. Mead, daughter of Robert and Sarah (Purdy) Mead, of Newburg, Orange county. She died in Newburg October 2, 1882, leaving no issue.

Eighth Generation: J. Cornelius Haight, our subject, was born at the old farm July 15, 1835, and was the only child of his parents. His early education was acquired in the joint district schools of Fishkill and Phillipstown.

the academy at Fishkill Village, and in the English Classical school kept by the Rev. Dr. Pingree, at Roseville, N. J. On completing his course of study, he returned home and worked for his father during the following season. The next two winters were spent in teaching at Davenport's Corners, Putnam county, and then, after a few months as clerk in the store of Daniel J. Haight, of Peekskill, N. Y., he went home for a time. He has been twice married: In the winter of 1858 he wedded Miss Sarah Jane, daughter of Henry Warren and Jane (Mekeel) Haight, and a lineal descendant of Uriah Mekeel, one of the earliest settlers near Cold Spring, Putnam Co., N. Y. In the spring of 1859 Mr. Haight was employed in a store at Union Corners, near Hyde Park, but after a few months he moved to Matteawan and entered the service of the Seamless Manufacturing Co., of which D. W. Gitchell was manager. He remained there two years, when the attractions of the old home and the free life of a farmer led him to return to the homestead. His first wife, Sarah Jane, died December 4, 1873, and September 5, 1877, he married Julia Matilda Raynor, who was born in New York City September 9, 1842, daughter of John and Mary A. (Bijatall) Raynor, of the same city. One child, Willie Raynor, was born to this union, August 18, 1878, but died in infancy.

Until 1880 Mr. Haight assisted his father, and then bought a farm in the town of Wappinger, for four years engaging in horticulture there. Selling out in 1884 he moved to Fishkill Plains for one year, and then to Arthursburg, where for a year he was in the dairy business, and for the year following was engaged in gardening, and in carrying the mails from Arthursburg to the station. In 1886 he went to Fishkill village, spending a year with a son-in-law, John R. Phillips, then removed to Phillipstown, and lived at the homestead of his mother's family until May, 1895, when having purchased a tract of land in Fishkill-on-Hudson from Mrs. Sophia Grohl, and built a residence thereon, he removed to that place. He now owns ten building lots there.

As an ardent Republican Mr. Haight takes an active share in party work, and has been a delegate to several county conventions. Since 1856 he has been a member of the M. E. Church, of which he has now been a steward for eight years and trustee for six years. He and his wife are both helpful in Church work, and are teachers in the Sunday-school. He is also a member of the Sons of the Revolution. Of his nine children by his first wife five died in infancy, and a brief record of the others is as follows: Eleanor A., the eldest survivor, married John R. Phillips, of Fishkill, and died March 20, 1886, leaving one son, Charles H. Edgar Holden resides at the Beverly Haight homestead. Beverly W. is in the grocery business at Newark, N. J. Grace A. married Charles D. Rogers, a farmer and dairyman near Fishkill village. Mr. Haight has been engaged for several years past in the compilation of a genealogy of the Haight Family with the expectation of publishing it in book form.

AKIN FAMILY, whose name both in past and present times has been closely associated with the most important events in the history of this section, is of Scotch origin.

John Akin, the first ancestor of whom there is a definite account, was born in Scotland in 1663, and when about seventeen years of age he came to America and located at Dartmouth, Mass. He married Mary Briggs, who was born August 9, 1671, a daughter of Thomas Briggs. Of their ten children, the eldest son, David, born September 19, 1689, at New Bedford, Mass., engaged in farming, and after his marriage to Sarah Allen came to Dutchess county and made his home at Quaker Hill. Two children were born to him, John and Jonathan. John Akin, the great-grandfather of Miss Mary J. Akin, of Pawling, married Margaret Hicks, by whom he had one son, John; that son, John, married Mollie Ferris, and had the following children: Albro, Sarah, Margaret, Ann, Daniel and Ananda. John Akin also had three daughters: Ann, Mary and Abigail.

Albro Akin, our subject's father, was born at Quaker Hill, March 6, 1778, and in his day was one of the leading citizens of Dutchess county. On March 24, 1815, Gov. Daniel D. Tompkins appointed him to the office of judge of the court of common pleas for life, as was the custom in those days. When he was sixty years old he resigned, having been judge for twenty-three years. This position he filled with distinguished ability. His first wife, Paulina Vanderburgh, who was born December 15, 1783, died in 1810, leaving three children: Albert John, who married Jane Williams; Almira V., the wife of Joshua L. Jones; and Helena Maria, who married John W. Taylor. Mr. Akin's second wife, Sarah (Merritt), died without issue, and he married a third wife, Jemima Thorne Jacacks, daughter of David and Mary (Thorne) Jacacks. Seven children were born of this union: (1) Mary J., who has always been a leader in the social life of the locality, filling every duty with grace and dignity. Among other events in which she took part was the ceremony attending the opening of the Harlem railroad, where she was chosen to hand the shovel to the one who broke the first sod for that undertaking. (2) William Henry, who married (first) Martha Taber, and (second) Sarah Miller, and had two children: Albro, who married Emma Read, and has two children—Albert and Helen; and Amy, who married Benjamin Aymer Sands, and has one daughter—Mary E. (3) Cornelius is still single. (4) Gulielma Maria Springet Penn was named after William Penn's wife, whose name was Gulielma Maria Springet Penn. (5) Amanda, who married Dr. Charles W. Stearns. (6) Annie, who married William Hamilton Ogden, and has one daughter—Harriet Hamilton. (7) Caroline, who married Adolph Wilm-Beets, from Hamburg, Germany.

LEACH FAMILY, THE, which has long held a prominent position in the town of Pawling, Dutchess county, is one of Colonial stock, and by intermarriage it is related to others of our leading pioneer families, notably the Akin and Ferris lines, so well known in the history of this region. The genealogical records of these families give interesting data of the early times.

Amos Leach (I), the head of the Leach family, came from Wales to America with two brothers, and landed in Massachusetts. After living there for some time he moved to Connecticut and settled in Leach Hollow, town of Sherman. He married Mercy Martin, of Dover, Dutchess county, and to their union were born seven sons and five daughters, as follows: (1) Amos Leach (II) married Deborah Wanzer, November 25, 1752. (2) John Leach married (first) Martha Wanzer, April 2, 1760, and (second) Hannah Page, July 9, 1772; he removed in 1785 to New Fairfield, Vt., with his large family of children, where many of his later descendants are still living; he was the executor of his father's will, which is now on file at Danbury, Conn. (3) Simeon Leach married Elizabeth Prindle, January 22, 1766. (4) Ephraim Leach married Dorothy Bennett, February 8, 1762. (5) Ebenezer Leach is more fully spoken of farther on. (6) James never married. (7) Ichabod Leach married Ruth Marsh, January 1, 1776. (8) Mercy Leach married Ebenezer Wright. (9) Sarah Leach married Silas Hall, January 4, 1757. (10) Jemima Leach married David Prindle, January 19, 1763. (11) Miriam Leach married Samuel Marsh, November 13, 1771. (12) Johannah Leach married Thomas Northup, August 25, 1757.

Ebenezer Leach, fifth son of Amos Leach (I), married Mary Marsh, daughter of Elihu and Mary Marsh, whose children were: Elihu, Joseph, Samuel, John, Daniel, Amos, Sophia, Eunice, Lydia, Mary and Ruth. Ebenezer Leach and his wife Mary (Marsh) had three children: Lucy, who married Husted Wanzer; William, who is mentioned below; and Susanna, who married Gilbert Lane, and had eleven children.

William Leach (I), second child of Ebenezer Leach, was married 25th of the 10th month, 1792, to Charlotte Stedwell, who was born 19th of 5th month, 1772, daughter of Gilbert and Mary Stedwell. To William Leach and his wife were born the following children: (1) Anna Leach, born 27th of 9th month, 1793, married Abraham Wanzer (no issue). (2) Mary Leach, born 11th of 10th month, 1795, died November 30, 1875, aged eighty years; she married Philo Woodin, of Columbia, N. Y., February 26, 1822, and had three children. (3) Moses W. is more fully spoken of below. (4) Lucy Leach, born 4th of 7th month, 1800, died May 28, 1885, aged eighty-five years lacking five weeks, married Ebenezer Wanzer, October 26th, 1820, and had three children. (5) Susan Leach, born 21st of 1st month, 1803, died February 27, 1888, married George Mooney, November 17, 1822, and had five children. (6) Phebe Leach, born 13th of 6th month, 1805, died January 1, 1867, married Jacob Wanzer, October 2, 1826, and had six children. (7) Ira Leach, born 4th of 10th month, 1807, died May 1857, married Elizabeth Haviland, November 12, 1830, and had three children. (8) Merr H. Leach, born 11th of 12th month, 1800, died October 13, 1850, aged forty-one years ten months; he married (first) Phebe Dorla

MARTIN LEACH.

Purdy, and (second) Susan W. Marriot, October 10, 1838, by whom he had three children. (9) Paulina Leach, born 26th of 12th month, 1811, died July 14, 1882, in the seventy-first year of her age; she married Dr. David Sands, of New York City, June 16, 1834, and had eleven children. (10) William Leach (II), born 4th of 6th month, 1815, died October 19, 1874, aged fifty-nine years, four months and thirteen days, married Catherine Peck, of Brookfield, Conn., and had three children. (11) Jane Charlotte Leach, born 31st of 1st month, 1818, died March 9, 1852, aged thirty-four years, one month, married David Sanford Dunscomb, of Reading, Conn., and had three children. The father of this family died November 20, 1860, aged eighty-nine years and thirteen days. The mother passed to her final rest in September, 1846, aged seventy-four years and four months.

Moses W. Leach, third child of William Leach (I), was born 18th of 3rd month, 1798, died October 18, 1848, aged fifty years and seven months. He married Phebe Akin, September 26, 1821, and they became the parents of seven children, as follows: (1) Peter A., born January 16, 1824, died March 29, 1888, aged sixty-four years, two months and sixteen days. (2) Anna A., born October 19, 1825, died August 31, 1860. (3) LILLIUS CORNELIA, born August 22, 1829, is the one who furnished the data for this memoir. (4) Isaac A., born November 20, 1833, died July 22, 1855. (5 & 6) Elizabeth F. and Abigail (twins), born April 9, 1837; the former died May 17, 1856, aged nineteen years, one month and four days, the latter died August 8, 1837, aged four months. (7) MARTIN, whose portrait here appears, was born September 6, 1839, at Kinderhook, Columbia Co., N. Y., and is the only male descendant living of this Leach family. He had a high-school education, is a farmer by occupation; he is living at the old Akin homestead, as is also his sister, Lillius C. In religion and politics, father and son represent the same.

Moses W. Leach, the father of this interesting family, was of an ingenious turn of mind, and invented the first mowing machine. He had a good education for his day, and was well-informed on all questions of the times in which he lived. In religious faith he was a member of the Friends Society, and in politics he was a stanch Democrat, but no office-seeker.

Jonathan Akin (I), son of David and Sarah

Akin, of Quaker Hill, the great-grandfather of L. C. Leach and her brothers and sisters, was represented in the government; also his grandson, Jonathan Akin (II), the son of Isaac A. and Anna Wing Akin, of Pawling. The forefathers were people of large estates, and agriculturists by profession. The Akin family were people of high standing, and were well known at home and abroad.

GENEALOGY OF THE AKIN FAMILY, OF DARTMOUTH.—John Akin, of Scotland, emigrated to America about 1680, and settled at Dartmouth, Bristol Co., Mass. He died June 13, 1744, aged eighty-three years. He was twice married, first to Hannah Briggs, and (second) to Miss Sherman. He had fifteen children, namely: (1) David, born September 19, 1689, married Sarah Allen, and they settled on Quaker Hill. (2) Thomas, born March 20, 1702, married Abigail Allen, of Dartmouth, in 1727. (3) James, born August 1, 1706, married, November 14, 1728, Anne Fish; his second wife was Ruth Sandford. (4) Benjamin married Eunice Taber, September 13, 1739; second wife, Lydia Almy; third wife, widow Barker, from whom he separated in about one year; he died in 1800, aged eighty-seven years. (5) Ebenezer, who was a militia captain, died November 16, 1770. (6) Timothy, born June 6, 1695, died a bachelor. (7) Elihu, born August 6, 1720, married Ruth Penny, in 1744; for his second wife he married Miss Wilcox, when he was seventy years old. (8) Joseph was lost at sea. (9) Deborah, born December 30, 1692. (10) Mary, born January 23, 1697, married a Mr. Aldin, and died aged over ninety years. (11) Hannah, born March 12, 1699. (12) Judith, born January 1, 1691, married John Getchel, April 10, 1727; she died aged ninety-three years. (13) Elizabeth, born May 20, 1704. (14) Susanna, born September 27, 1718, married Hicks, of Fall River. (15) Abigail.

David Akin, eldest son of John Akin, came to Quaker Hill and there settled. He and his wife Sarah (Allen) reared a family of ten children, as follows: (1) John Akin married Margaret Hicks, of Portsmouth, R. I., January 29, 1742, she died October 8, 1803, and he passed away April 7, 1779. (2) Mary Akin married Abraham Thomas, at Dartmouth, July 24, 1740. (3) Elisha Akin married Elizabeth Tripp, July 5, 1734. (4) Josiah Akin married Judith Hurdleston, of Dartmouth, in 1746. (5) Abigail Akin married Murry Lester. (6) Sarah Akin died young. (7) Hannah Akin married James Birdsall. (8) James Akin married Patience Howard. (9) David Akin (II) married Deborah Gray. (10) Jonathan Akin (born July 26, 1737) married Lillius Ferris, daughter of Benjamin (I) and Phebe (Beecher) Ferris. They had eight children, whose names and dates of birth and their matrimonial partners are here given: Elizabeth, April 3, 1758, married Peleg Howland, son of Nathaniel Howland. (2) Isaac, August 27, 1759, married Anna Wing (daughter of Jersham Wing and Rebecca, his wife), moved to Canada, and their two children were—Martha, who married Daniel Merritt, and Jonathan Akin (II), who married Harriet Taber. (3) Martha, March 1, 1761, married William Taber, son of Thomas Taber. (4) Benjamin, October 26, 1762, married Martha Palmer, daughter of John and Hope Palmer; moved to Greenbush; Benjamin Akin was drowned in the Hudson river. (5) Abigail, March 9, 1764, married Mathew Pendergast, and had two children—William and Lillius. (6) Sybil, November 26, 1767, married William Field. (7) William, June 13, 1769, married Matilda Cary, daughter of the eldest Dr. Ebenezer Cary (lived in Greenbush). (8) Peter is more fully referred to below.

Peter Akin, of Pawling, Dutchess county, was the youngest child of Jonathan and Lillius (Ferris) Akin, grandson of David and Sarah (Allen) Akin, of Quaker Hill, and great-grandson of John Akin, of Scotland, who came to America about 1680, and settled at Dartmouth, Bristol Co., Mass. He was born January 8, 1771, and married Abigail Ferris, only child of Mathew and Sarah (Kelly) Ferris. They became the parents of the following children: (1) Sarah Akin married Jesse Skidmore, and had four children, viz.: Peter A., who married Ruth Moore; Andrew J., who married Fannie Wing; and Elizabeth and Abigail (both deceased). (2) Mathew F. Akin. (3) Phebe Akin, born September 1, 1803, married Moses W. Leach, died February 21, 1858, aged fifty-four years [record of children, etc., given in Leach genealogy]. (4) Lillius Akin married Daniel P. Haviland, and had nine children, as follows: Elizabeth F. married Thomas Wetherald; William T. married Elizabeth D. Hoag; Abigail A. married Philip H. Haviland; Isaac H. died August 15, 1858, aged eighteen years; Jonathan A. married Angeline Hungerford; Daniel J. was drowned;

Lydia W. married Merritt Haviland; Lillie A. married Samuel R. Neave; and Joseph H. married Ella Patchen. (5) William P. Akin, born July 23, 1810, died August 16, 1882, aged seventy-two years and twenty-three days; he married Lydia Moore, October 23, 1833, and to their union came the following children: Ruth M. Akin married Franklin Haight (deceased); Abigail F. Akin married Charles Wild; Jonathan Akin married Anna Tweedy (both now deceased); Lydia Akin married Cyrus Hiliker (deceased); Anna M. Akin married Daniel Edward Wanzer (both now deceased). (6) Isaac Akin (2) died February 17, 1863, aged forty-nine years. (7) John Akin died March 28, 1829. (8) Peer Akin died in October, 1805. (9) Infant son, died 1797. (10) Infant daughter, died 1799. The father, Peter Akin, died December 2, 1860, aged eighty-nine years, ten months and twenty-five days. The mother, Abigail, passed away July 16, 1844, aged seventy years.

GENEALOGY OF THE FERRIS FAMILY.—Samuel Ferris and Jerusha Reed, Presbyterian or Puritans, came from Reading, England, probably about the year 1678. There are records in Stratford showing that the Ferris family were in America in 1650.

Zachariah Ferris, son of Samuel Ferris, married Sarah Noble in 1698, and had eight children, whose names with dates of birth are as follows: (1) Deborah, June, 1700; (2) Joseph Ferris, September 27, 1703, married Hannah Weltch, November 11, 1725; (3) David Ferris, May 10, 1707; (4) Benjamin Ferris, November 10, 1708; (5) Sarah Ferris, November 10, 1710 (the first white child born in New Milford, Conn.); (6) Hannah Ferris, August 6, 1712; (7) John Ferris, February 6, 1714, more fully spoken of below; (8) Zachariah, September 30, 1717. Five children of this family, viz.: David, Benjamin, Hannah, John and Zachariah became eminent and valuable Quaker preachers. Their lovely mother also became a Friend or Quaker in the early days of that society.

Benjamin Ferris, fourth child of Zachariah Ferris, married Phebe Beecher, of Litchfield, Conn. They had eight children, whose names with dates of birth are here given: Zebulon, born March 19, 1729; Reed, born August 16, 1730, married Anna Tripp; Susannah, born September 8, 1731, married Elijah Doty; Lillius, born July 9, 1736, married Jonathan Akin, son of David Akin; Benjamin, born September 25, 1738; Gilbert, born March 15, 1740; Phebe, born and died 1734; and Edmond, born July 4, 1748.

Benjamin (III) Ferris, son of Benjamin (II), married Mary Howland, and seven children were born to them, as follows: Walter, January 1, 1768; Lillius, September 25, 1769; Wayman, September, 1771; Edwin, February 20, 1778; Peleg, January 21, 1781; Ebor, May 26, 1784; Phebe, January 28, 1788.

John Ferris, seventh child of Zachariah (I), and grandson of Samuel Ferris, was tortured and killed by the Indians between 1740 and 1750. He married, and had two children—Zachariah and Huldah (the last named married a Mr. Beardsley). Zachariah married Huldah Adams, granddaughter of John Adams, from Wales, who lived to the age of 110 years. To their union were born the following children: (1) Mary, who married Seth Whittock, and had one daughter—Nannie, who married Philonen Prindle, and had eleven children; (2) Betsey, who married Ebor Ferris, son of Benjamin Ferris, of Quaker Hill, thus bringing together the two branches of the family. They had twelve children, of whom three died in childhood, and one, Zachariah, in 1825, at the age of seventeen. (3) Julia Ann, married Calvin Hyde, and had nine children.

LEWIS D. HEDGES (deceased) was for several years one of the leading merchants of Pine Plains, Dutchess county. He is a native of that section, born at Jackson Corners, town of Milan, Dutchess county, in 1812, and on both the paternal and maternal sides was descended from old English families, who located on Long Island at a very early day in the story of this country. His grandfather, John Hedges, was there born, and his farm on Long Island is now owned by one of his grandsons. He there married Jerusha Hunting, daughter of Rev. Hunting, the first Presbyterian minister on that island, who had seven daughters. Mr. and Mrs. Hedges were born seven children: Mrs. Jerusha Huldred; Mrs. Lucinda Hedges; Mrs. Harriet Hand; Stephen; John; Josiah; and Harriet, who died unmarried.

Prior to 1812, Josiah Hedges, the father of our subject, removed to Dutchess county, locating in the town of Milan, where he engaged in farming, and was one of the prominent and representative men of the community. He was united in marriage with Elizabeth Dibble, daughter of Christopher and Eliza Dibble, and to them were born two children: Mary, wife of Isaac Smith, whose descendants now live at Millbrook, Dutchess county; and Lewis D. The father was called from this life in 1844, and his wife died in 1851.

In the district schools of the town of Milan, Lewis D. Hedges secured his elementary education, and being a great reader he became a well-informed man. In 1840 he began general merchandising in Pine Plains, and later formed a partnership with William Davis, which connection was continued for about a year. He carried on mercantile pursuits up to the time of his death, which occurred on January 4, 1859, and met with a well-deserved success. His first location was where the opera house now stands, but he later removed to the store which is now owned by W. S. Eno. He was one of the foremost merchants of the place, and was highly respected by all with whom he came in contact.

On August 1, 1844, Mr. Hedges led to the marriage altar Miss Mary Pulver, daughter of Andrus and Margaret (Thomas) Pulver, who were of English descent. Her paternal grandfather, Nicholas N. Pulver, resided on a farm east of the village of Pine Plains, and by his marriage with Polly Parks had children: Andrus, Nicholas, Filer, Mary, Sutherland, Matilda, Lewis and Julia. His death occurred in 1850, and his wife died in December, 1856. The father of Mrs. Hedges was born in 1800, and in later life purchased of Dr. Reynolds what is now known as the "Stissing Hotel," but was then called the "Pulver's Hotel," which he conducted for many years. He stood very high in the estimation of his fellowmen, and had the confidence of all who knew him. In his family were three children who grew to years of maturity: Mary; Frances Thomas, wife of Henry Myers; and Cornelia B., wife of Egbert Van Wagner. The mother of Mrs. Pulver bore the maiden name of Denton, and her mother was a Peck. Mrs. Pulver for her second husband married Henry C. Myers. Two daughters blessed that union: Elizabeth, wife of B. C. Rizedorf, and Margaret, who married (first) Eben Husted, and (second) William Juckett.

Three children blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Hedges: Lewis M., of Chicago, who married Catharine O. Crononin; Henry C., who is at the head of the advertising agency of Barnum's circus; and Elizabeth, wife of Isaac Rollins, of the town of Milan, by whom she has two children—Mary H. and Lewis H. H.

In politics, Mr. Hedges affiliated with the Whig party, was very positive in his views, and was greatly interested in all local political affairs. He was public-spirited and progressive, giving his support to all measures for the benefit of the community, and was an important factor in the upbuilding of the locality. He was one of the reliable members of the Presbyterian Church, and was a conscientious Christian gentleman.

J WATSON VAIL, a prominent citizen and leading photographer of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, whose gallery is located at Nos. 254 and 256 Main street, is a native of Dutchess county, born May 18, 1849, on a farm in the town of Unionvale, where the family have lived for several generations. They were of English origin, and the great-grandfather of our subject, who served as a captain during the Revolutionary war, was born probably on the old family homestead in Unionvale.

There the birth of Israel Vail occurred, and on attaining adult age he was united in marriage with a Miss Hall, also a native of Dutchess county, by whom he had nine children: Hiram, who became a builder and, later, a banker of Amenia, Dutchess county; Jarvis, a farmer of Dutchess county; Isaac, who was also an agriculturist; Edmond, the father of our subject; Hubbard, a mason by trade; Alanson, who carried on farming; Mary, wife of Alfred Van Black, a miller of Unionvale; Rebecca, who never married; and Phœbe, wife of James Losee, a farmer. On the old homestead the father of this family departed this life.

Edmond Vail, the father of our subject, was born and reared there, and educated in the district schools of the neighborhood. He wedded Martha Husted, who was born in the town of Washington, Dutchess county, and was a daughter of Lewis Husted, a farmer by occupation and a native of Dutchess county, his birth having occurred in the same house where his father was born. The parents of our subject began their domestic life upon a farm in the town of Unionvale, but later removed to Poughkeepsie, where the father was engaged in the insurance business until his death in 1884. In politics he was an ardent Republican. The parental household included five children, namely: Lewis H., who is president of the Dutchess County Insurance Co.; Herbert, now engaged in clerking; J. Watson, the subject of this sketch; Alonzo H., who is in partnership with our subject, and is also in the insurance business; and Dr. Edwin S., a specialist, who is engaged in the practice of medicine at Enfield, Connecticut.

Until he was seventeen years of age J. Watson Vail, whose name introduces this record, remained upon the home farm, assisting in its cultivation and attending the common schools of the locality. His first independent effort in life was as an employe in a carriage factory which he entered in 1865, and there remained for about a year and a half. He then took instructions in photography under Isaac N. Van Wagner for about fifteen months, after which he went to Fishkill, N. Y., where he opened a small gallery; but at the end of five months he returned to Poughkeepsie. On May 20, 1868, he opened his present gallery, where he has since successfully engaged in business.

On April 5, 1876, Mr. Vail was united in marriage with Miss Flora H. Sterling, Poughkeepsie, a daughter of Junius Sterling, dry-goods merchant of that place. Her father was born in Salisbury, Conn., and was the son of William C. Sterling, who owned large iron interests in that State, but later in life came to Poughkeepsie, and was president of the Fallkill National Bank. The political support of Mr. Vail is given the Republican party, in the success of which he takes a deep interest. In manner he is pleasant and genial in disposition kindly, and is universally held in the highest regard.

A SA B. CORBIN. The Corbin family is well known in the town of Pawling, Dutchess county, and its members in every generation have given evidence of the qualities which constitute good citizenship.

John Corbin, the father of the subject of this sketch, was a native of that town and passed his life there, acquiring his education in its public schools, and engaging in agricultural pursuits on arriving at manhood's estate. He was a devout Methodist, working actively to advance the cause of religion, and was beloved throughout the community. He married Phœbe Burdick, and had three children, of whom

ASA B. CORBIN.

Asa B. was the second. The eldest, John Corbin, Jr., was born in the town of Pawling, and his education was obtained in the public schools. He was engaged in business as a carpenter and wagon maker during the greater portion of his life. He and his wife Matilda (Ferris), had one daughter, Alice, who was born in Pawling, is now the wife of Mr. Garner, a farmer in Connecticut, and they have one child. The youngest of the three children of John Corbin, Sr., Betsy, born 1813, married Horace Haviland, and died March 28, 1894.

Our subject was born December 16, 1814, was educated at the common schools, reared on a farm, and learned the trade of a carpenter, later also that of wagon maker. Some forty years ago he established that business, in connection with undertaking, in Pawling, and continued same up to his death which occurred February 28, 1887. He was a man of good executive ability, and accumulated a fine property. On December 16, 1859, he married Mary L. Allen, and they had one daughter, Grace A., born September 22, 1866, now the wife of Alonzo M. Leach. The mother died June 16, 1889; she was born April 25, 1835, a daughter of Horatio and Hannah (Pendley) Allen, farming people of the town of Pawling, who had a family of four children: Susan, Ruth, Gideon and Mary L. Asa B. Corbin was a progressive man, originally a Whig, and later a Republican in politics, finally joining the Prohibition party on its formation, and in 1860 he served as supervisor of his county. In temperance work he was extremely active, giving freely to the cause of his time and money, and he was a zealous member of the M. E. Church.

ALONZO M. LEACH was born January 18, 1855, in Sherman, Conn., a son of David W. and Samantha M. (Hawes) Leach, who were the parents of three children, Alonzo M. being the youngest. Florence, the eldest, married Edward P. Briggs, a merchant of Sherman, Conn., and they have one child, Belle. Charles I., the second in David W. Leach's family, married Ida H. Wanzer, and they have had two children, Ray, and one that died in infancy. They live on the old farm in Leach Hollow, Conn. The Leach family are of Scotch extraction, and trace their pedigree back to Ichabod Leach, who was one of three brothers (sons of Moses Leach) who came from Scotland. David W. Leach, the father of Alonzo M., was born in 1822, a son of David Leach. He was a Democrat, served as a captain in the old State militia, and was a member of the State Legislature, besides holding other minor offices at various times. Samantha M. (Hawes) Leach (the mother of Alonzo M.) was the third in the family of thirteen children born to David Hawes and his wife. She died in 1877.

Alonzo M. Leach received his primary education at the common schools of the neighborhood of his boyhood home, afterward attending the Golden Hill Institute, Bridgeport, Conn., where he was graduated in 1874. He then worked on a farm until 1882, in which year he came to Pawling, where he entered the employ of Merwin & Holmes, general merchants, with whom he has remained ever since, with the exception of one year he spent in Bridgeport. On October 19, 1892, he and Miss Grace A. Corbin were united in marriage. They have one child, Helen M., born December 31, 1894. In his political preferences Mr. Leach is a Republican.

COURT B. CUNLEY, the well-known tobacconist of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, was born near Hillsdale, Mich., November 13, 1838, a son of Daniel and Sarah Ann (Van-Voorhees) Cunley.

Our subject spent his boyhood at Fishkill, attending the public schools. He learned the tobacco trade of the John Jay Cox Co., at Fishkill, and then went to New York City, where he finished his trade. Returning to Fishkill he again worked for the John Jay Cox Co., subsequently going to Red Hook and again to New York City. In 1867 he came to Poughkeepsie, and started business at the old stand established by Rudolph Griner in 1835. Mr. Cunley began the manufacture of cigars in 1879, and in 1882 moved into the store he now occupies.

Our subject was married at Fishkill, June 11, 1858, to Sarah J., a daughter of Morgan Owen, and their children were: Frank G., Minnie V. and Fred. Mr. Cunley is a member of Poughkeepsie Lodge No. 266, F. & A. M.; Poughkeepsie Chapter No. 172, R. A. M.; Commandery No. 43, Knights Templar; King Solomon's Council of Royal and Select Masters; member of the N. Y. Mystic Shrine of Mecca Temple; thirty-second Degree of Aurora Grata Consistory of the Valley of Brooklyn, N. Y.; past exalted ruler of the Elks; member of the K. of P. No. 43; and of Fallkill Lodge No. 297, I. O. O. F. He attends the services of the Hedding Methodist Episcopal Church. In politics our subject is a Republican, and for six years represented the Third ward in the city council. He was on the water board for three years, and for the same length of time on the Alms House board. He was a promoter of the Electric Light & Power Co., in Poughkeepsie, and was chairman of the lighting committee in the council. As it was through his zeal that the plant was put in, he was called the "electric light alderman." He has always taken a great interest in politics. Since living in Marshall street he has built three houses, and he also owns property on College avenue and Grand avenue.

Daniel Cunley, the father of our subject, was born June 12, 1801, in Stuttgart, Germany, where he received his schooling. He was in the German army for five years. In 1822 he came to Fishkill and worked in a woolen-mill as dyer, and was married in that town to Miss Sarah Ann Van Voorhees, who was born in Fishkill, October 20, 1809. They went to Hillsdale, Mich., soon after their marriage, making the journey by packet on the canal and across Lake Erie. In Hillsdale he bought a farm of about 352 acres, but, becoming afflicted with the ague, he sold out and moved to Allegany county, N. Y., and farmed there; but on account of the fever and ague he again sold out and returned to Fishkill, where he remained until his death, September 25, 1885. Mrs. Cunley died February 29, 1884. They had the following children: Court B., our subject; William H., born in 1840; George A., born in 1843; and Mary, John Wesley and Fletcher, who are deceased.

The following is the pedigree of the Van-Voorhees family, taking only our subject's branch. The full record of this family makes a volume of over 700 pages. The English meaning of the Holland name of Van Voorhees is "from before Hees," Van meaning "from" and Voor meaning "before." Hees being a small village about a quarter of a mile south of the town of Ruinen, in the province of Drenthe, Holland, which, in 1660, contained nine houses and about fifty inhabitants. The earliest of the family of whom we have any definite information is Coert Alberts of Voorhees, the father of the emigrant ancestor, Steven Coerte Van Voorhees, and from the fact of his second name being Albert, with the terminal "s," we know that his father's first name must have been Albert.

I. Coert Alberts Van Voorhees had seven children, of whom Steven Coerte Van Voorhees was the eldest.

II. Steven Coerte Van Voorhees was born, in 1600, at Hees, Holland, and died February 16, 1684, at Flatlands, Long Island. He married (1) in Holland (wife's name not known); (2) prior to 1677 on Long Island, Willempie Roelofse Senbering, born in 1619, died in 1690. He emigrated from Hees, April, 1660, in the ship "Bontekoe" ("Spotted Cow"), November 29, 1660. He purchased from Cornelis Dircksen Hoogland nine morgens of corn land, seven morgens of woodland, ten morgens of plain land, and five morgens of salt meadow in Flatlands, Long Island, for 3,000 guilders. He also bought the brewery. He and his wife were members of the Dutch Church of Flatlands.

III. Coert Stevense Van Voorhees (third child of No. II), born 1637, died 1702, married 1664 to Marretje Gerritse Van Comoenhoven, born April 10, 1644, died 1709. He was a representative of Flatlands in the General Assembly at New Amsterdam city hall April 10, 1664, and delegate to the convention of March 26, 1674, at New Orange, to confer with Governor Colve. He was deacon of Dutch Church, magistrate 1664 to 1673, and captain of militia in 1689. He had nine children, of whom Johannes Coerte Van Voorhees was the youngest.

IV. Johannes Coerte Van Voorhees, born April 20, 1683, married (1) November 19, 1703, Barbara Van Dyck, (2) May 2, 1744, Sarah Van Vliet, died October 10, 1757. After his first marriage he left Flatlands and settled at Freehold, N. J., on a farm of 200 acres. From there he moved to Rombout precinct, now Fishkill, Dutchess county, buying 2,790 acres of land of Philip Verplanck, of the manor of Courtlandt. He was one of the organizers and many years elder of the Dutch Church at Fishkill village. The tombstone in the Dutch church-yard bears this inscription: "Here lyes the body of John Van Voorhis, aged seventy-five years. Deceased October 10, Anno 1757."

V. Coert Van Voorhees (second child of No. IV) was born April 5, 1706, married June 16, 1727, Catherine Filkin, died March 19, 1785. He lived at Fishkill.

VI. Zachariah Van Voorhees (tenth child of No. V) was born March 25, 1748. Married (1) February 12, 1772, Anna Lawrence, born August 27, 1751, died December 10, 1781; (2) November 25, 1786, to Nancy Springsteen, who was born May 15, 1763, and died February 9, 1851. He died July 3, 1811. He resided at Fishkill.

VII. Coert Van Voorhees (third child of No. VI) was born July 15, 1777, married May 8, 1803, to Elizabeth Palmer, born 1787, died December 17, 1869. He died in 1818.

VIII. Sally Ann Van Voorhees (third child of No. VII) was born October 20, 1809. She married Daniel Cunley, and died February 29, 1884.

IX. Court B. Cunley (eldest child of No. VIII) was born November 13, 1838.

SAMUEL VAN COTT (deceased). Among the sturdy, energetic and successful farmers of Dutchess county, who thoroughly understand the vocation they follow, and consequently are enabled to carry on their calling with profit to themselves, was the subject of this sketch, who was actively engaged in agricultural pursuits in the town of Lagrange, some thirteen years.

Our subject was born in the town of Dover, Dutchess county, February 8, 1826, and came of the Holland lineage. His grandfather, John Van Cott, who was born in Long Island, N. Y., married a Miss Titus, and in their family was Stephen Van Cott, the father of our subject, who was also born on Long Island, and engaged in farming, in the town of both Dover and Washington, Dutchess county. He was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Doty, and to them were born the following children: Nelson (deceased), Martha, Jane, George Snuel, and Caroline and Oliver (both deceased).

Samuel Van Cott was reared amid the hills of the town of Washington, and there breathed the spirit of freedom and independence which was so largely characteristic of him. He secured his education in the common schools, and at an early age received a home training upon his farm, which well fitted him for the calling he so long followed. He was born in the town of Dover, but most of his boyhood days were spent in the town of Washington, where he remained until nineteen years of age, when he went to Onondaga county, N. Y., there conducting a store for a short time. For five years he was engaged in farming in Broome county, N. Y., after which he went to California, where he remained in the mining districts some three years. Returning to New York State, he again located in Broome county, where for some time he followed agricultural pursuits, and was also engaged in the same occupation in Herkimer county several years. Later, for seventeen years, he conducted a farm in Onondaga county, but in 1882 he returned to Dutchess county, and made his home in the town of Lagrange until his death, which occurred February 6, 1896.

On Long Island in 1860, Mr. Van Cott married Miss Elizabeth R. Velsor, daughter of John Velsor, and the following named five children blessed their union: John, Valentine, Henry R., George S. and Charles P. A staunch adherent to the Republican party, Mr. Van Cott took an active interest in politics.

HENRY JOSEPH TAYLOR, a highly-respected citizen of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, is a native of New York, born at Highland Falls, December 4, 1862. Many of the ancestors of our subject were natives of Dover, Dutchess county, where his paternal grandfather's birth occurred; but most of his life was passed in Danbury, Conn., at which place he was employed as a hatter.

The father, Ezra Taylor, was also born at Dover, where his early education was received, and for ten years he there worked as a mechanic, after which he removed to Spuyten Duyvel, N. Y., where he worked at his trade for several years. He then went to West Point, N. Y., where he was employed by the government until 1885, and during the Civil war enlisted there in the Union service, but did not leave that post. For over twenty years he made his home at Highland Falls, N. Y., where he was highly respected by his fellow citizens. He was a man of excellent education, with scarcely an enemy in the world, of a retiring disposition, and, though often tendered public office, would never accept. At Dover, Dutchess county, Ezra Taylor married Deborah Lee, daughter of Thomas Lee, but she died in April, 1892, leaving five children: Royal E., a carpenter of Peekskill, N. Y.; Martha A., wife of Capt. H. H. Meeks, of Yonkers, N. Y.; Warren Madison, who is connected with the Ansonia Clock Company, of South Brooklyn, N. Y.; Henry J., subject of this review; and William E., head salesman for C. Crum, furniture dealer, at Newburg, New York.

The boyhood days of Henry J. Taylor were spent at Highland Falls, where he attended school until sixteen years of age, when he came to Poughkeepsie and for three years worked for his uncle, William Taylor, in the grocery business. He then went to New York City, where he remained five years, being employed by the New York, New Haven & Hartford Steamboat Company, and on his return to Poughkeepsie was in the grocery store of R. B. Cary for one year. The following five years he worked for Holmes & Boice, after which he went to Arlington, where he and his uncle, William Taylor, engaged in the grocery trade, under the firm name of Taylor & Taylor, for a couple of years. On selling out his interest to his uncle, our subject entered the employ of E. S. Craft, with whom he has remained since July, 1894.

On October 24, 1888, at Highland Falls, Mr. Taylor was united in marriage with Miss Olive T. Faurot, daughter of Capt. Theodore Faurot, and their union has been blessed with two children: Lee Faurot, born in July, 1889, and Henry Earle, born in October, 1892. Mr. Taylor has made many friends since coming to Poughkeepsie, and by all who know him he is held in the highest esteem.

DC. TRIPP, M. D., the leading physician and surgeon of the town of Beekman, was born July 6, 1848, at Ithaca, N. Y., the only child of F. W. and Rebecca (Taber) Tripp, the former of whom was a native of Pawtucket, R. I., the latter of New York. The father owned and operated a machine-shop at Ithaca, where the iron work for canal boats, etc., was turned out.

Our subject, after completing his education at the schools of his native town, entered the office of Dr. S. P. Sackett, where he commenced the study of medicine. Subsequently he attended Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York City, where he was graduated in 1875. For a time he practiced on Twenty-fourth street, that city, while taking a post-graduate course, but being persuaded by his relatives to return to Ithaca, he did so, and for the following seven years was in active practice there.

While attending medical college in New York, the Doctor met Miss Sarah Elizabeth Sands, daughter of Dr. Samuel Sands, of Darien, Conn., to whom he was married June 5, 1878. On April 3, 1885, he became a resident of the town of Beekman, Dutchess county, having bought the practice of Dr. Clark A. Nicholson, who soon afterward died. He was the leading physician of the locality, and Dr. Tripp has proven himself a worthy successor. Successful from the start, he has a large and growing practice, not only in the town of Beekman, but in the towns adjacent on the west. He stands high among the medical fraternity of the county, and is a member of the Dutchess County Medical Society.

JUDGE ANDREW COLE (deceased).
A man's reputation is the property of the world. The laws of nature have forbidden isolation. Every human being either submits to the controlling influence of others, or as master spirit wields a power either for good or for evil on the masses of mankind. There can be no impropriety in justly scanning the actions of any man as they affect his public and business relations. If he is honest and eminent in his chosen field of labor, investigation will brighten his fame, and point the path that others may follow with like success. From among the ranks of quiet, persevering, and prominent citizens there is no one more deserving of mention in a volume of this character than Andrew Cole, who departed this life at his late residence in Pleasant Valley, December 3, 1896.

Judge Cole was a native of Dutchess county, born in the town of Unionvale, July 2, 1825, and was the son of William Cowles (the name was spelled by his ancestors). The father was also born in the town of Unionvale, the date of his birth being October 14, 1792, and was the only child of John M. Cowles, who was of Holland descent, and a prominent farmer of Unionvale town, where both he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives. They were earnest members of the Society of Friends. William Cowles was united in marriage with Miss Charlotte Lake, who was born September 30, 1792, in the town of Lagrange, Dutchess county, where her father, James Lake, was a lifelong agriculturist. The young couple began housekeeping upon a farm in Lagrange town, and later became residents of the town.

of Unionvale, and upon the old homestead where the father died February 20, 1845; his wife passed away February 23, 1871. They, too, were members of the Society of Friends, and were also the maternal grandparents of our subject, and in politics the father was a Democrat.

Andrew Cole, whose name opens this sketch, was the fifth in order of birth in the family of seven children, the others being Milton, who engaged in farming in the town of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, where his death occurred; James, who followed the same pursuit in Lagrange town, where he died; Parleman, a conductor, who died in Pennsylvania; Elizabeth, who became the wife of Jarvis Emigh, a miller and the postmaster at Hyde Park, Dutchess county, and now makes her home in Poughkeepsie; Mitchell, who is engaged in wagon making; and William H., who at one time followed carpentering in Dutchess county, later in Brooklyn, where he died.

In the usual manner of farmers' boys our subject spent his boyhood and youth, receiving his literary education in the old district school, and at the Nine Partners School, in which he taught for a time. He then entered the law office of Varick & Eldridge, Poughkeepsie, where he remained some time, from there proceeding to LaCrosse, Wis., where he was admitted to the bar, and tried his first suit in that now thriving city. It was then a mere hamlet, the houses being all made of logs, and he built the first frame house on what is now Second street. He was also one of the first lawyers of Winona, Minn.; here he was appointed district attorney, and afterward elected probate judge of Winona county, there remaining until 1857, when on account of ill health he returned to Pleasant Valley, where he passed his declining days. While a resident of Winona he was one of its most active and influential citizens, and served as attorney for the owners of the city.

In 1852 Judge Cole was united in marriage with Miss Sarah A. Mastin, a native of New York City, and a daughter of James B. Mastin, who finally became a resident of Pleasant Valley, where his death occurred. The ancestors of the Mastin family were from England. By the union of our subject and wife were born three children: Lilly N., Zoda A. and Wilhelmina, all of whom died in childhood.

Although Judge Cole was not engaged in active practice of law after his return to Dutchess county, his services were, nevertheless, frequently sought in legal matters, and he took a lively interest in everything pertaining to the legal fraternity. He was prominently identified with the Democratic party, but was never prevailed upon to accept office, though often urged to do so. His estimable wife holds membership with the Presbyterian Church, but he always adheres to the faith of his ancestors, being a Friend to the day of his death. In the taking away of Judge Cole, the Dutchess county Bar has lost one of its most able members; Pleasant Valley, one of its most prominent and most highly esteemed citizens; and those of his own household, a genial companion and sympathetic adviser.

JOHAN C. SICKLEY, the city librarian of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, is a native of Springfield, N. J., born August 29, 1855, and is descended from John Sickley, Sr., a sea captain, of Holland birth. John, Sr., was married in Holland; his wife was drowned at sea. Their only child, John Sickley, Jr., was born at Schooley's Mountain, N. J., and in that State engaged in agricultural pursuits. By his marriage with Sarah Allen he became the father of nine children: Margaret; James; John, who was shot during the Revolutionary war, at Millstonebridge, N. J.; Archibald, the grandfather of our subject; William; Catherine; Obediah; Eliza and Robert.

By occupation the grandfather was a farmer and successfully followed that pursuit in New Jersey, his native State, but his death occurred in California. He was united in marriage with Miss Sarah Hazen, of the same State, and they became the parents of six children: John C., the father of our subject; Ziba H., who was a merchant of Springfield, N. J.; Jane, who married Theodore Pearson, a farmer, millwright and county judge of Union county, N. J.; Clarissa, who wedded Halsey Burnett, a boot and shoe merchant; James, a farmer of New Jersey; and Andrew J., a farmer of the Empire State.

The father of our subject was born in Springfield, N. J., and was reared on a farm in that State. On reaching manhood he there kept a country hotel for some time. The lady who became his wife bore the maiden name of Mary C. Bradbury, and she was also a native of Springfield. Her father, Samuel Bradbury, was a paper manufacturer of that place, and was the son of John Bradbury, who was born in England and sent out by that country to travel through America and report on the condition of the country. He published a work on his travels, entitled, "Bradbury's Travels in America in 1809-10-11." After their marriage the parents of our subject located on a farm in Springfield, where six children were born to them, namely: Ellen and Clarissa, both of whom died in childhood; John C., subject of this review; George, who died while young; and James and Mary, who are living with their mother upon the old homestead. The father, whose life was passed in farming and hotel keeping, died in August, 1865. In politics he was an unswerving Democrat, and held several important offices in his locality.

Our subject spent his early days upon the home farm, aiding in its operation, and attending the district schools of the neighborhood; his education, however, was completed in the schools of Poughkeepsie, where his mother removed with her family in 1870. He began the study of law with Judge Nelson, and later was with Mr. Crummev. On being admitted to the bar in 1877, he began the practice of his chosen profession, which he continued for some time; but in 1883 was appointed city librarian, and is still serving in that capacity to the satisfaction of all concerned.

Mr. Sickley married Miss Olivia M. Townley, a native of New Jersey, and a daughter of Albert Townley, a farmer by occupation, who is of English lineage. One child blesses this union, Katherine O. The parents attend the Episcopal Church, and are widely and favorably known.

CORNELIUS R. VAN WYCK (deceased) was one of the influential and highly respected citizens of the town of East Fishkill, where almost his entire life was passed. There his birth occurred, March 28, 1814, and there his great-grandfather, Richard Van Wyck, a native of Long Island, located at an early day, the grandfather of our subject, Cornelius R. Van Wyck, being born there January 26, 1753. C. R. Van Wyck was a lineal descendant of Cornelius Baruse Van Wyck, who emigrated from Holland in 1650, and settled in New Amsterdam.

Col. Richard C. Van Wyck, the father of our subject, was also a native of the town of East Fishkill, born June 11, 1783, and throughout life engaged in milling, farming and merchandising, in Dutchess county. He married Elizabeth Thorn, and to them were born the following children: Rynier, a farmer of Fishkill, who married Elizabeth Van Wyck; Cornelius R., subject of this review; Jane E., who became the wife of John Adriance, a farmer; Anna, who married Jacob Horton, a farmer of East Fishkill; Phœbe, who married Cornelius S. Van Wyck, also an agriculturist; Henrietta who married James Du Bois, a farmer of Hudson, N. Y.; and Mary, who wedded Robert McMurry, a merchant of New York City.

Our subject was reared to agricultural pursuits, but for a short time during early life he was engaged in merchandising in Poughkeepsie after which he again turned his attention to farming. He continued to operate his farm in the town of East Fishkill with the exception of seven years, when he carried on the same occupation in Culpeper county, Va., and was quite successful in his undertakings.

On January 11, 1843, Mr. Van Wyck was united in marriage with Miss Phœbe C. Wortman, who was also born in the town of East Fishkill, and is the daughter of Denis and Elizabeth (Ropalje) Wortman, the former native of Westchester county, N. Y., and the latter of East Fishkill town, this county. Her mother was the daughter of Jeromus and Elizabeth (Bedell) Ropalje, the former born on Long Island, while her paternal grandfather James Wortman, was a native of Westchester county, and a farmer and architect by occupation. James Wortman, father of Dr. Denis Wortman, was a descendant of Dirck Jansen Wortman, who emigrated from Holland in 1616, and settled in Brooklyn, and was of Huguenot descent. After their marriage her parents located at East Fishkill, N. Y., where her father engaged in the practice of medicine for the long period of forty-seven years, and was a most successful physician. He died greatly lamented May 2, 1864, surviving his wife only a few months, her death having occurred January 14, 1864. They were earnest members of the Reformed Dutch Church, and reared a family of four children: Elizabeth, who married John P. Flagler; Phœbe, widow of our subject; Denis, a prominent Reformed Dutch minister of Sangerties, N. Y.; and Ann Alet.

Mr. and Mrs. Van Wyck commenced their married life at Fishkill Plains, N. J., afterwards moving to the home in Hopewell, N. Y., fmerly the home of Dr. Wortman and wife (the father and mother of Mrs. Van Wyck). Ten children were born to them: Richard C., a prominent and beloved physician, who married Charlotte Underhill, and died January 28, 1896; Denis W., a merchant of Wappingers Falls, N. Y., who married Mary E. Harcourt, and they had one child, Phebe Ellen (he died August 4, 1880); Eliza, who died at the age of five years; Anna; Eliza Janette; Mary, who died August 18, 1873; Phœbe Jane; Margaret W.; James C., a merchant of Matteawan, N. Y.; and Henrietta Du Bois.

Richard C. Van Wyck, M. D., eldest son of Cornelius R. and Phœbe C. Van Wyck, was a prominent and beloved physician. He was graduated in medicine from the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York City, March 12, 1867, after which he served two years in Bellevue Hospital on the Surgical Staff. He then went to Europe for the purpose of perfecting himself in his chosen profession. Returning, he practiced awhile in Denver, Col., and afterward in Virginia (where he went on account of his health). Recovering his health, he settled in Hopewell, and continued in active practice until his death. He was thrown from his carriage, his horse taking fright at a railroad crossing, and fatally injured January 25, 1896, and died January 28, 1896. There are few physicians who possess more completely the confidence of their patients than he did, and few have been more widely missed or so sincerely mourned. Denis Wortman Van Wyck, second son, was greatly beloved and respected, and was a merchant at Wappingers Falls.

The parents were both devout members of the Reformed Dutch Church, and in political sentiment Mr. Van Wyck was an ardent Democrat. His death occurred June 14, 1879, and was mourned by many warm friends. He was an active, public-spirited citizen, who had the respect of all who knew him, and took a prominent part in those matters relating to the best interests of the community.

WILLIAM PLATTO. Among those who followed the old flag on Southern battlefields is this gentleman, now one of the leading business men of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, where he is conducting a successful carriage manufactory. He was born in that city, December 23, 1845, and is the son of Thomas Platto, a native of Schenectady, N. Y. His paternal grandfather, Thomas Platto, who was a farmer by occupation, was born in the Mohawk Valley, and became the father of five children. It is a family tradition that great-great-grandfather Thomas Platto was killed by Indians at Tribes Hill in the Mohawk Valley.

In Schenectady, Thomas Platto, Jr., passed his boyhood days midst play and work, and learned the carriage maker's trade. When about twenty years of age he came to Poughkeepsie, where he met and married Mary Proper, who was born in the town of Milan, Dutchess county, and was the daughter of Isaac and Mary Proper, agriculturists of that locality. The young couple began their domestic life in Poughkeepsie, where the father engaged in the manufacture of carriages during the remainder of his active career. He died there in 1872, and his wife in 1891. He was first a Whig in politics, and later cast his ballot with the Republican party; both he and his wife were devout members of the Baptist Church. The family of this worthy couple consisted of five children. (1) James H., who was engaged as a bookkeeper in Chicago, Ill., died in 1881; he belonged to the Knights of Pythias fraternity, and was also a member of the Masonic order. (2) Charles V. L. is an assistant editor of some newspaper, and a resident of Hoosick Falls, N. Y. (3) William is next in order of birth. (4) Sarah married Frank Kennedy, of Syracuse, N. Y.; (5) Catherine G. is the wife of Charles H. Baker, of the same city.

William Platto, whose name introduces this review, spent his boyhood days in Poughkeepsie, receiving his education at the Dutchess County Academy, but when a youth of only seventeen summers, the Civil war having broken out, he enlisted in July, 1862, in Company D, 128th N. Y. V. I. After participating in many hotly-contested engagements, and making for himself an honorable war record, he was discharged and returned to his home in Poughkeepsie. In 1866 he took charge of his father's carriage business, and was very successful in its operation. The plant was located at Nos. 7, 9 and 11 South Hamilton street, and our subject still owns that block, which has been in the hands of the family for about sixty years.

Mr. Platto is an unswerving Republican, taking an active part in political affairs, and in January, 1895, was appointed chief of the police department of Poughkeepsie, in which office he is still serving with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of all concerned. He is an active worker in the Grand Army of the Republic, belonging to Hamilton Post, of which for three terms he served as commander, and is numbered among the valued citizens of Poughkeepsie who have been devoted to the public welfare. He has manifested the same loyalty in days of peace as in days of war, and all who know him have for him the highest regard.

WILLIAM H. SHELDON, in whose death Poughkeepsie lost one of her brightest, most progressive and useful young business men, was born October 29, 1859, in Beekman, Dutchess county, New York.

Jeremiah Sheldon, father of our subject, was born in the town of Dover, Dutchess county, of English ancestry, and was a farmer by occupation. A stanch Whig and Republican, he took an active part in political matters. He married Miss Sophia M. Doughty, also born in Dutchess county, daughter of Joseph Doughty, and their children are as follows: Amelia B., married to Kromaline Andrews (they make their home on the old farm); Mary J., unmarried; and William H., the subject of these lines. The father died May 19, 1882, the mother on February 1, 1886.

William H. Sheldon passed his early days on his father's farm, attending the district school, and, later, the academy at Moores Mill. Subsequently he entered Claverack (Columbia county) College, and completed his education at Wilbraham (Mass.) Academy; then returned to the farm, where he remained until his uncle, Wilson B. Sheldon, was elected county clerk, when he became his assistant in the office, there remaining some time. Our subject then formed a partnership with R. D. Cornell in the hay, straw and feed commission business; but after a short time this partnership was dissolved, and in the fall of 1881 Mr. Sheldon embarked in the coal business. He began in a very small way, but was so successful, and his trade grew so rapidly, that he began wholesaling, supplying coal for the Harlem Railroad Company. At the time of his death he was the largest wholesale and retail dealer in the vicinity, and had a prosperous future before him, his well-known integrity and fair dealing making him popular throughout the county, and bringing him customers from all parts. Besides attending to his regular business he acted as general manager of the Poughkeepsie & Eastern railroad, which was purchased some years ago by Russell Sage, who appointed Mr. Sheldon general manager of that road. So faithfully and thoroughly did our subject do his work, that his employer took him into his confidence, and was influenced by him in his business probably more than by any other man. Too close application to business, however, and his earnest devotion to the many societies, etc., of which he was an active member, began ultimately to make inroads upon his health, and for some time prior to his death evidences of a breaking up of his constitution became apparent to his friends, and even to himself. The close of the year 1894 found him engaged in a more than usual amount of work, preparing for the ensuing year, thereby necessitating additional exertion from his already impaired system; nevertheless, unflinchingly he worked early and late, carrying all his duties to a successful termination. The strain, however, was more than exhausted nature could stand, and one evening, while at the home of a neighbor, his tired brain refused longer to work. Kind hands guided Mr. Sheldon to his home, where the best of care was given him for a time, but his frenzies became so wild and uncontrollable that, for the better protection, he was taken to the State Hospital for the Insane, where, in spite of all that science and medical skill could accomplish, he grew weaker every day, till January 19, 1895, death relieved him from his sufferings.

The earthly career of William H. Sheldon was cut short just when most promising, and when he had made the reputation of being one of the ablest and most enterprising business men in Poughkeepsie. In his home circle and among his personal friends his untimely departure from their midst was most deeply felt. Full of life and energy, buoyant in spirits, and of a loving, generous disposition, he was missed as few men are, and his place will be hard to fill. He was a member of nearly all the fraternities in the county, and also of the New Manhattan Athletic Club of New York City; was a Thirty-second degree Mason in high standing, and also a member of the Methodist Church. In politics he was a stanch Republican, and he served as alderman of the Fifth ward of Poughkeepsie. No better citizen; o one more highly esteemed, has left his impress upon the community.

On December 26, 1883, Mr. Sheldon was married to Miss Augusta Baright, who was born in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., January 27, 1863. Her father, Daniel S. Baright, who was a native of the same township, born March 25, 1838, married Mary Wing, who was born in the town of Clinton, June 15, 1840, and their children were: Augusta, William M., Irving G. and Frederick. Mr. Baright is a farmer, and also deals in agricultural implements. His grandfather was a native of Holland, and his father, Elijah Baright, born in the town of Pleasant Valley, N. Y., was a wealthy farmer. He married Amy, daughter of Samuel Carpenter, and a relative of J. Du-Bois Carpenter, elsewhere represented in this volume. In religious faith the Barights were all Hicksite Quakers, and in politics were Whigs or Republicans. The maternal grandfather of Mrs. Sheldon, Alexander Wing, a quiet, unassuming man, spent his entire life on a farm in Clinton; he was a Democrat in politics, and attended the Christian Church. One child, George B., born December 3, 1891, is all the family born to our subject and his wife, whose all too short happy married life was brought to so sad a close.

CHARLES EDGAR FOWLER, of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, was born in Carmel, Putnam Co., N. Y., April 6, 1841. He is a son of Ammon Merrick Fowler, who was a son of James H. Fowler, of Carmel, and a grandson of Ammon Fowler, of Bedford, Westchester Co., N. Y., and a great-grandson of Joseph Fowler, of West Patent.

Ammon Fowler (the father of Charles) lived near Lake Mahopac, in the town of Carmel, Putnam county. He was an upright, unassuming man, of noble, Christian character, and for many years was an elder in the Gilead Presbyterian Church of Carmel. His wife (the mother of Charles) was a woman of clear intelligent Christian faith, and a worthy member of the same Church as her husband. She was Charlotte Louisa Crane, daughter of Natanial Crane, of the town of Carmel, and granddaughter of John Crane, of the same town. John Crane held a captain's commission under the Provincial Congress of the Province of New York, and after the Declaration of Independence received a captain's commission from George Clinton, then Governor of New York, and held it through the war. John Crane's grandfather was Joseph Crane, and Joseph Crane's grandfather was John Crane, from England.

Charles E. Fowler received a common-school education, and from 1857 to 1861 worked at wagon-making; from 1861 to 1869 at mill construction and repairs, and the development of water powers. During this latter period he pursued the study of mechanical, hydraulic and civil engineering. In 1869 he married Louisa Maria Richards, daughter of David Belden Richards, of the town of Southeast, Putnam Co., N. Y., a man of marked integrity of character. D. Belden Richards' wife, mother of Louisa, was Delia Foster, daughter of Thomas Foster, of the town above mentioned. She was a most worthy woman, and a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church. Thomas Foster, father of Delia, was the son of James Foster, grandson of Thomas Foster, and great-grandson of Chillingworth Foster. Chillingworth was the son of John Foster, and grandson of Thomas Foster, who came from England in 1634.

In 1869 Charles E. Fowler entered the employ of the Peekskill Manufacturing Co., of Peekskill, N. Y., as draughtsman and mechanical engineer. In 1871 he began the practice of land surveying and civil engineering, in connection with the work of the Manufacturing Co. In 1872 he opened an independent office, but continued the work for the Manufacturing Co. This practice continued until 1881. During this period he, as chief engineer, designed and supervised the construction of the public water works of the village of Peekskill, also a system of water works for the village of Tarrytown, N. Y. He was also corporation surveyor for the village of Peekskill during several years of this period. In January, 1881, he was appointed superintendent of the water works and sewers of the city of Poughkeepsie, which office he held until May, 1896, when the water works and sewers, under a revised charter, became a part of the public works of the city, and he was appointed superintendent of public works, which office he now holds.

In 1857 he united with the Presbyterian Church of Carmel, and in 1870 with the First Presbyterian Church of Peekskill. He was an elder in the latter Church from 1874 till his removal to Poughkeepsie in 1881. In 1881 he united with the First Presbyterian Church of Poughkeepsie, was chosen an elder in that Church in 1891, and still retains that office.

The water and sewer systems of the city of Poughkeepsie, with which Mr. Fowler has so long been identified, are worthy of note for the fact that they were constructed by the same commission, at the same time, were designed to work in harmony and have continued under the control of one department of the city government, thereby securing the best attainable sanitary results. The water system is further notable for being the first in this country to adopt artificial purification by means of sand filtration on the European method. The Hudson river is the source of supply, the water being pumped from the river to the sand filters, and thence to a reservoir on College Hill, at an elevation of 280 feet above mean high water in the river. The works were built in 1869-1872, and originally comprised about seventeen miles of water mains and about thirteen miles of sewers. Seven miles of water mains and three and one-quarter miles of sewers have been added during Mr. Fowler's term of service. The original water commissioners, in 1869, were Stephen M. Buckingham, Edward Storm, Edward L. Beadle, Edgar M. VanKleeck, James H. Weeks and Abram Wright.

The water commissioners held their final meeting on May 2, 1896; the last commissioners being Charles L. Lumb, Edmund Platt, Howard W. Welles, Abraham S. Humphrey and Charles H. Shurter. The numerous commissioners holding office between the years 1869 and 1896 comprised some of the most esteemed citizens and business men of Poughkeepsie. The Board of Public Works, having charge of the water works, sewers, streets, bridges and parks, was organized May 2, 1896. The commissioners were James E. Dutcher, James B. Platt and Walter R. Case.

CHARLES M. WOLCOTT (deceased). The Wolcott family have held a distinguished place in the history of this country from the earliest times, Colonial records showing various members to have occupied high positions, and one of the name is enrolled among the immortal signers of the Declaration of Independence.

The first of the family to leave the ancestral home in Somersetshire, England, was the Puritan Henry Wolcott, who crossed the ocean with his son Simon in 1630, and settled in Windsor, Conn. The town of Wolcottville (now Torrington) was named in honor of the family. These early pioneers were men of independent means, and Henry and Simon were active in the administration of the public business of the colony. Simon's son, Roger Wolcott, who was born in Connecticut, was elected Governor in 1750, and served for four years. Oliver Wolcott, a son of Roger, and the grandfather of the gentleman whose name opens this sketch, was one of the representatives of the Colony of Connecticut, whose names are affixed to the Declaration of Independence, and during the Revolutionary war he held the rank of brigadier-general in the patriot forces. His part in the struggle was a notable one, and the histories of that time make frequent mention of him. An incident in his life was interesting. A leaden equestrian statue of George III stood in the Bowling Green, in the city of New York. At the breaking out of the war this was overthrown, and, lead being highly valuable, it was sent to Gen. Wolcott's at Litchfield, Conn., for safe keeping, where, in process of time, it was cut up and run into bullets by his children and their friends. Oliver Wolcott was elected Lieutenant-Governor in 1786, and Governor in 1796, which office he held until his death, December 1, 1797.

Judge Frederick Wolcott, the father of our subject, preferred the practice of law to public life, and on two occasions declined a nomination as a gubernatorial candidate. His brother Oliver, however, did not share this disinclination for official duties, and not only served a Governor of Connecticut but was Secretary of the Treasury under President Washington. Judge Frederick Wolcott was a graduate of Yale College, and prepared for the bar in early manhood; later he engaged actively in professional work, and served as judge for many years. He was one of the leaders in the Whig party of his day, and despite his reluctance to enter political life was elected to various positions, which he filled ably, including the post of representative in the State Legislature. He married (first) a Miss Huntington, daughter of Joshua Huntington, a well-known citizen of Connecticut, and (second) Mrs. Ann Cook, daughter of Samuel Goodrich, of Berlin Conn., a member of another old and influential family which has been prominently represented in political, social and business life, and has produced a number of eminent clergymen.

Charles M. Wolcott was one of a family of twelve children, his birth occurring in Litchfield, Conn., November 20, 1816. On completing his education he left home to engage in commercial life, entering the commission business in Philadelphia. After a time he transferred his offices to New York City, forming a partnership with his brother Henry, who went to China in the interests of the firm. On November 26, 1849, he married Catharine A. Rankin, daughter of Henry Rankin, Esq., a prominent merchant of New York City, who was a native of Scotland, and for forty years was an elder in the Scotch Presbyterian Church, under the pastoral care of the celebrated divine, Dr. John Mason. After his marriage Mr. Wolcott settled at Fishkill-on-Hudson, upon an estate known as "Roseneath," where his wife had previously resided. From that time his attention was chiefly occupied with the management of his extensive landed interests, and he was identified with all the progressive movements of the locality, whether in agriculture and manufacturing or in the no less important fields of art and literature. In politics he was an Independent. His wife passed away June 24, 1889, and he survived her but a short time, breathing his last on November 20, of the same year.

Three children were born to this union: Henry Goodrich, a well-known attorney at Fishkill; Katharine Rankin, wife of Samuel Verplanck; and Annette Rankin, who is not married. Mrs. Verplanck still resides at the family homestead "Roseneath," which is a charming place overlooking the Hudson, the elegant residence and extensive grounds displaying in their appointments a refined and cultured taste.

ABRAHAM W. IRISH. The early ancestors of our subject were French, were military men, and served in the first and second Crusades; the name was originally "D'Irey." The family moved to Germany, where the D' was dropped, and the name became Irey. In the wars between Germany and England the Ireys espoused the cause of the English. They were successful as generals, and one of them was knighted on the field of Hodden.

When the family went to England the name was changed to Irish, and one of the members became sheriff of London, holding the office for nine years. Another member of the family came to this country as a common soldier under Miles Standish, and it is from this ancestor that the family in America are descended.

Abraham W. Irish was born in the town of Pleasant Valley March 31, 1825, and after his mother's death was taken by his uncle, Abraham Wing, and his wife, by whom he was brought up and educated, and who were the only parents our subject ever lived with. Mr. and Mrs. Wing were Quakers. Abraham lived with them until he was of age, when he went to New York City and secured a situation in a store in Bleecker street, remaining there during the summer of 1844. In the summer of 1845 he went to Matteawan, and taught school there for six years. In 1851 he was married in that city to Miss Caroline West, and began farming. His health failing him from overwork, he bought a store on his grandfather's place in the town of Lagrange. This he sold in 1863 and moved to Poughkeepsie, where he took a position as cashier for Smith Brothers. In politics Mr. Irish is a Republican. He was in the county clerk's office for nine years, and in the surrogate's office for eight years. He is now clerk of the surrogate's court, which position he has held for six years, during which time he has not missed a day at the office on account of sickness. When he was out of office Mr. Irish was in the millinery and fancy-goods business, and at one time was with a Mr. Sisson, dealer in second-hand furniture. Mrs. Irish died in 1887, and our subject subsequently married Mrs. Rachel Le Roy.

Amos Irish (grandfather of our subject), a farmer by occupation, was a Quaker, and was greatly persecuted during the Revolutionary war. His children were as follows: Jedediah, Charles, Joseph, Asa, Ruth, Rachel, Esther, Jonathan and David, all of whom are now deceased.

Joseph Irish (our subject's father) was born in Pawling, where he spent his youth. He was married, in the town of Beekman, to Miss Phœbe Dorland, a daughter of Enoch Dorland, and they had the following children: Edmund, Catherine, Jane, all now deceased, and Abraham W. (there were also half brothers, Charles, and William and Henry, twins). Our subject's mother died when he was two weeks old. Joseph moved to Pleasant Valley after his first marriage, and engaged in farming. After the death of his wife he moved to New York City and worked at trucking. He was married there to Miss Jane Stephenson, who was born at Gaylords Bridge, Conn. None of their children are living. Mr. Irish died in Pawling at the age of eighty-six years.

FRANK B. VAN DYNE, one of the prominent business men and leading undertakers of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, was born in Milton, Ulster Co., N. Y., October 10, 1857, but belongs to a family of Holland origin that has been connected with the history of Dutchess county for several generations. Here his grandfather, Oliver Van Dyne, was born, reared and engaged in farming throughout life. He wedded Susan Smith, by whom he had two sons: James A., a carpenter by trade; and William H., the father of our subject.

The birth of the latter occurred in Dutchess county, December 18, 1832, and he early became familiar with the duties that fall to the lot of an agriculturist, as his boyhood days were passed upon his father's farm. He married Miss Anna C. Brevoort (a lady of Holland descent), who was born in Fishkill, N. Y., where her father, Benjamin Brevoort, was employed at shoemaking. Five children were born to this union, namely: James H., a sign painter of Poughkeepsie; Frank B., subject of this sketch; Susan, wife of Arthur Rockwell, a silk manufacturer of Matteawan, N. Y.; Minnie, who died in infancy; and Edward, a resident of New York City. Shortly after his marriage the father went to Milton, Ulster county, where he formed a co-partnership with his brother in a general store. He next removed to Hackensack, N. Y., but at the end of two years came to Poughkeepsie, where he has since resided. He is an earnest supporter of the Democratic party, and holds to the faith of the Reformed Dutch Church, in which he was reared. His faithful wife departed this life July 3, 1893.

Frank B. Van Dyne was two years old when he left his native village, and in 1864 he came to Poughkeepsie, where he attended the public schools. On the completion of his education, he was employed in various ways until 1875, when he began working for different undertakers. In 1888 he formed a partnership with John Mellady, at No. 391 Main street, under the firm name of Van Dyne & Mellady, which connection lasted until May, 1893, when it was dissolved, and our subject removed to No. 406 Main street, where he has since been alone in business. He is exclusively engaged in undertaking, and thoroughly understands his business in its various departments.

On June 30, 1891, Mr. Van Dyne was united in marriage with Miss Minnie C. Cox, daughter of William A. Cox, of the town of Clinton, Dutchess county, where he was born. One child blessed their union, Ruth, born October 23, 1892; but March 11, 1893, the wife and mother was called to her final rest, leaving many friends as well as relatives to mourn her death. Mr. Van Dyne is a representative business man, enterprising and industrious, and holds a high place in the estimation of his fellow citizens. He is prominently identified with several clubs and social orders, among which are the F. & A. M., the Knights of Pythias, the Elks and the Royal Arcanum, while his political connection is with the Democratic party, whose principles he earnestly advocates.

CHARLES M. COLWELL, a well-known business man of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, is noted for his accurate and practical judgment of values, his high reputation in this regard making him an acknowledged expert in the appraisal of property and the adjustment of insurance claims.

The Colwell family is of Scotch origin, and four generations have been residents of Dutchess county. Samuel Colwell, our subject's great-grandfather, was a native of the town of Washington; his son, Archibald Colwell, was born in 1794, in the town of Washington, Dutchess county, and in early life was engaged in the manufacture of cotton goods, being employed as foreman in the factories at Poughkeepsie, Pleasant Valley, Hart's Village and Verbank. In his later years he followed agriculture. He was an old-fashioned Methodist, and often served as an unlicensed preacher. His wife, Abigail Hall, was a native of Connecticut and a relative of the Hubbards of that State. He died in January, 1877, and his wife in August, 1866. They had eight children: Hubbard; Louisa (Mrs. Nathan Beach); Archibald L.; Julia (Mrs. John Burnett); Samuel; Edwin; Mary (Mrs. William Ackerman); and Sarah (Mrs. Henry H. Seaman).

Archibald L. Colwell, our subject's father, was born March 22, 1819, in the town of Washington. His early life was passed in Poughkeepsie, but for the last fifty-five years he has lived at Verbank, following the occupation of shoemaker and dealer. He has always been quiet in his tastes, but is a man of good natural powers, and has been successful in business. Before the war he was a Whig, and later a Republican, and he has served one term as justice of the peace and two terms as postmaster at Verbank. Like the majority of his family, he is a Methodist. In 1841 he married Sarah Seaman, daughter of Samuel Seaman, a well-known resident of the town of Washington. Her family is of English descent, and one of the oldest in the county. Mrs. Colwell died in August, 1893, but her husband still survives. They had five children, to whom they gave excellent educations. (1) Seaman A. was graduated from the Albany Normal School in 1862, and for some time was a teacher and county superintendent of schools in Pulaski county, Ill.; he is now a successful farmer and horticulturist there. (2) Charles M. is our subject. (3) Mary M., who is a graduate of Claverack College, Columbia county, N. Y., married Dr. A. G. Paine, of Chicago, Ill. (4) Armeda J., who was graduated from Amenia Seminary, married Charles T. Bird, of Wilkesbarre, Penn.; both have been dead for a number of years. (5) Phœbe married B. F. Conkright, a leading real-estate dealer of Chicago, Illinois.

Charles M. Colwell, the second in order of birth, was born January 4, 1847, in the town of Unionvale. He acquired the rudiments of knowledge in the district schools at Owego village, which were unusually good, and afterward studied at Claverack College one year. At eighteen he left school and went to Poughkeepsie to learn the carpenter's trade with Nelson Seaman. He followed this occupation for twenty years, and that of contractor and builder for about twelve years. He was superintendent of construction of the U. S. Government Building at Poughkeepsie under appointment of Charles J. Folger, Secretary of the Treasury. About 1887 he became engaged in the insurance business as appraiser of damaged buildings, and his services have been called into requisition in different parts of the State. He has done a great deal of work before the State Board of Assessors, and in condemnation proceedings in railroads acquiring real estate.

A strong Republican in principle, he has been active in political work. In 1873 he was elected assessor, and served for nine consecutive years; in 1888 he was elected supervisor of the Fifth ward, and held that office one term. At the beginning of President Harrison's administration he was appointed clerk in the Revenue office of the Fourteenth District, and held this throughout Harrison's term. When a successor was appointed he became deputy revenue collector for the counties of Dutchess and Columbia for six months. In 1894, three days before the expiration of his term, he was elected clerk of the board of supervisors of Poughkeepsie, which office he yet holds, and January 1, 1895, he was appointed president of the board of civil service for the city. He has always taken an interest in affairs of a non-political nature, and was in the National Guard for eight years, serving as first lieutenant of Company A, 21st Regiment.

On March 22, 1868, Mr. Colwell married Miss Mary F. Hayman, daughter of Richard R. Hayman, a prominent resident of Poughkeepsie, and they have three children: Grace F., the wife of Charles J. Knapp, of Poughkeepsie; and May M. and Richard H. at home. The family attend Trinity M. E. Church.

FRANK VAN KLEECK, a well-known merchant of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, was born in that city June 25, 1857. Here also his paternal ancestors for six generations back lived.

Baltus Barentszen Van Kleeck, who was the first of the name to emigrate from Holland to this country, bought a farm, in 1697, where the city of Poughkeepsie now stands, and later built the first stone house in the place, which was situated on Mill street, near Vassar. This was in 1702, at which time the present fine city consisted of only a few huts, no houses. He was a member of the Colonial Assembly, and was succeeded by his son Johannes. Six children constituted his family, namely: Barent, Johannes, Lawrence, Peter, great-great-grandfather of our subject; Sarah and Elizabeth. Of these Peter became the father of Baltus, and he the father of Peter B., the great-grandfather of our subject. His son, Tunis Van Kleeck, the grandfather of our subject, was born June 14, 1773, in Poughkeepsie, where he was reared to manhood and learned the trade of a hatter, establishing himself in business there in 1799, his first store being situated opposite Crannell street. His second location was where Joseph's clothing store now stands, while the third was on the site of the present store, which was occupied in 1854. On January 15, 1792, he married Irene Bacon, and nine children were born to them, of whom the following record is given: Sally A. married B. Davis Noxon, a lawyer of Syracuse, N. Y.; Cornelia married George W. Somarindyck, of Poughkeepsie; Eliza became the wife of Rufus Cossit, a lawyer of Syracuse; George married Mary E. Tallmadge, a merchant in Poughkeepsie; Edgar who was a merchant in New York City, and married Nancy Graham (he died in Orange county); Albert was our subject's father; Mary became the wife of Willett Raynor, of Syracuse; Louisa married Edward Beach, a merchant in Poughkeepsie; William H., who was a wholesale grocer in New York City, married for his first wife a Miss Mary Haight, and for his second wedded Miss Margaret Hardenburg. On the death of the father of this family, which took place September 1, 1831, the business was continued by his son Albert, and has been in the family ever since. In politics he was a Whig.

Albert Van Kleeck, father of our subject, was born December 27, 1807, in Poughkeepsie, where (as has been stated) he carried on his father's business as a hatter until his own death, November 7, 1866, and he was succeeded by his son Edward, who, on February 1, 1890, took his brother Frank in as a partner. Edward died November 13, 1890, and his widow and Frank continued the management of the establishment until February, 1894, since which time the latter has assumed full control. On September 25, 1833, Albert Van Kleeck was married to Miss Eliza Green, a native of England, and of this union ten children were born, as follows: Davis, Edward, Harriet, Elizabeth, Julia, Cornelia, Albert, Augustus, Irene and Frank. The mother of these died in 1863. Mr. Van Kleeck was a prominent man in his community. In 1857 he was elected treasurer of Dutchess county, and was appointed postmaster under Lincoln. He was reappointed under Johnson, and died during that administration. In politics he was originally a Whig, becoming a Republican on the formation of that party.

Frank Van Kleeck was married September 24, 1891, to Miss Sarah P. Sleight, who was born in Dutchess county, a daughter of Henry A. Sleight. Mr. Van Kleeck is a Republican, a member of the F. & A. M., of the Holland Society, and of the Amrita Club, a social organization, of which he has been president.

HON. AUGUSTUS MARTIN (deceased). Among the able men who have represented Dutchess county in the State Assembly the late Hon. Augustus Martin will always hold a notable place in the history of the locality; his integrity and high sense of honor, no less than his practical sagacity in public affairs, winning and retaining for him the esteem of all classes of people.

His family has had in the past many members whose lives have been conspicuous for the same admirable qualities, and his direct ancestors were among the pioneer settlers in this section. Hendrick Martin, who came to America in 1727, built at the village of Red Hook, Dutchess county, a residence which is one of the oldest houses in the State; occasional repairs and alterations have still left intact a large portion of the original structure. It is located about one-eighth of a mile from the old New York & Albany post road, upon land leased from the Beekman patentee. In 1751 Hendrick Martin leased some adjoining lands from the Van Benthuyzen patentee. It is related that when his son Gotlob married, the father took a large stake, and walking to a suitable spot drove it into the ground, remarking to the son that it was time for him to "swarm for himself." Here Gotlob built, in 1776, a stone house of the substantial Colonial type, which is still standing. At the moment when the Declaration of Independence was being read in Philadelphia, the rafters of this historic mansion were being put in place by the workmen. Gotlob's son John married, in 1789, Isabella Fulton, a relative of Robert Fulton, the inventor, and had ten children Philip, Michael S., Augustus, Robert, Claudiu G., James, Edward, Joseph, John and Serena. Their grandfather willed the estate to them but they were not willing to take it from their mother, and after her death it was purchased by Edward as a home for his sister, who, like himself, never married. Edward Martin, wh was born February 18, 1811, and died December 3, 1893, made a large fortune as a civil engineer, some real estate, which he took in payment from a railroad for his services, proving very valuable, a portion of it lying within the present limits of Chicago.

The late Augustus Martin was born in Red Hook, December 13, 1808, and although his early educational opportunities were limited to the common schools of that town, his fine mental endowment enabled him to acquire a wide and liberal education through the channels of observation and private reading. While a young man he was elected on the Democratic ticket to the State Assembly, and was a member of that body for two years (1852-53) under Gov. Seymour. In local affairs he held a prominent place, and was chosen to many positions of trust, including that of supervisor, and his interest in educational affairs, and desire that children of all classes should have ready access to the paths of knowledge, led to years of faithful service as a school trustee. He was an active helper in religious movements, and was a trustee of the Lutheran Church, at Red Hook, of which he was a member. His wife, Lydia Maria (Benner), was born in Red Hook, December 28, 1811, the daughter of Judge Jacob Benner, a leading member of the legal fraternity. She died February 23, 1864, and Mr. Martin followed her January 14, 1875. Of their six children the first two—Margaret M. and Marian M., died in infancy; the others are: Cora A. (Mrs. John B. Scott); Ella A.; Isabella (now Mrs. Luther L. Stillman); and Serena.

MRS. JANE M. CHAPMAN. The late Frank Chapman, whose sudden death in 1893, from heart disease, cut short a life which had been filled with quiet but effective endeavor, was a native of the town of Dover, Dutchess county, where he received his education. As a young man he engaged in mercantile business in Pawling, Dutchess county; but after some years he went to New York City, as bookkeeper for J. B. Dutcher, and held that responsible position until his death. His widow, formerly Miss Jane M. Bishop, was born in the town of Washington, Dutchess county, in 1831, and was educated in the town of Amenia. Their marriage took place in 1861, but no children were born of the union. Mrs. Chapman now resides in Pawling.

The Bishop family was known in New England at an early day, and Abiah Bishop, Mrs. Chapman's grandfather, was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. He was born and educated in Rhode Island, and in early manhood learned the cooper's trade. His wife, Ruth (Wilbur), was a native of the town of Washington, Dutchess county, and a descendant of a prominent Quaker family. Two sons were born of their union: Archibald, who married Angeline —; and George (Mrs. Chapman's father), who was born in the town of Washington, in 1809, and after availing himself of the advantages afforded in the common schools learned the trade of wagon making. He followed this for some time, later becoming station agent at Wassaic, Dutchess county, in which position he continued until his death, in 1874. He married Miss Desire Northrop, whose father, Samuel Northrop, was a prominent farmer of the town of Washington. Her mother's maiden name was Mary Benham.

Mrs. Chapman was the eldest in a family of eight children; the others were born and educated in the town of Amenia. (2) Seneca S. followed the sea from early manhood, and since sailing for the West Indies has never been heard from; it is not known whether he married or not. (3) Mary A. married (first) John Clark, and had two children who died, and after his death she wedded Joseph Hobbs, by whom she had one son, Amos A. (4) George W. was a machinist by trade, and became master mechanic of the New York & New Haven railroad; he married Miss Isabella McConnell, and had six children: George, Jennie, Isabella, Hattie, Minnie and Ida F. (5) Charles W. was engaged in business in New York City at the beginning of the Civil war; he enlisted in the 61st N. Y. V. I., and lost his life in the seven-days' struggle at Bull Run. (6) Catherine M. married Edward Brown, an engineer of Amenia; they have no children. (7) William G. was connected with the condensed milk factory at Wassaic; he married Miss Josephine Nichols, and had one son, Harry, who died in infancy. (8) Noah L. was superintendent of the Gail Borden Condensed Milk factory at Wassaic; he married (first) Miss Hattie Noyce, and after her death he wedded Miss Jennie Jones; by his first marriage he had one son, Frank, who died in infancy, and by the second there were three children: Lena, the wife of Dr. Fred Brace; Cora L., who is at home; and one who died in infancy.

JAMES VAN WYCK. The Van Wyck family is prominent in this region not only by reason of the number of its members, but for the ability and public spirit shown by many of them in past and present times. The first of this branch of the family to locate in Dutchess county was Theodorus Van Wyck, our subject's great-grandfather, who was born at Hempstead, Long Island. He purchased 900 acres of land of the Madame Brett patent in the town of Fishkill (now East Fishkill), Dutchess county, and in 1740 built the house which is still occupied by his descendants.

Although this old homestead has rarely appeared in print, there are few of our old places more permanently associated with the pleasant social life of the early settlers, and with the personal presence of the prominent actors in the Revolutionary period. Dr. Dorus Van Wyck, on his marriage, abandoned the homestead to a tenant farmer, and took up his residence on the north side of the Fishkill creek, near Gen. Swartwout's. At this time the Jay family, including the distinguished patriot, Governor and Chief Justice John Jay, moved north, seeking refuge from the threats and depredations of the Tories and "cowboys" who infested the lower counties, under the protection of the British at New York. The Van Wyck homestead being vacant, it was hospitably offered them by its owner, and it was occupied by Gov. Jay for about two years. It was during his residence here (the family fortunately being absent), that a band of "cowboys" crossed the mountains one night and robbed them of a quantity of silver plate. A "spontoon," or rude lance, dropped by the robbers, is now preserved at Washington's headquarters, at Newburg. It was from this house that John Jay set off on his mission to France, to aid in negotiating a treaty of peace with England.

Theodorus Van Wyck was a man of marked ability, a farmer and surveyor, and was so greatly interested in the development of the locality that with his negroes (slaves) he opened up highways through the forests in many directions. His maps of Poughkeepsie and the Nine Partners tracts are still in existence. He was an active worker in the Presbyterian Church. In 1752 he was appointed judge of the court of common pleas of Dutchess county, by George Clinton, then governor of the Province of New York. His death occurred in 1755. His wife was born on Long Island, of English descent, and they reared a large family, consisting of two sons and a "noble group of girls," whose married names were Platt, Hoffman, Graham, Bailey and Adriance, respectively. The daughter of one of these became the wife of Chancellor Kent. Of the sons, the elder, William, was a farmer in East Fishkill, while the other, Dorus, our subject's grandfather, became a leading physician in the same locality. He married Diana, a daughter of Col. John Brinckerhoff, and made his residence at the old Brinckerhoff estate. They had several daughters, and three sons—John B., Abraham, and William—who settled upon farms in East Fishkill.

Gen. Abraham Van Wyck, our subject's father, married Miss Susan Haight, the daughter of a prominent farmer of Westchester county, N. Y., and reared a family of five children: Henry, a farmer in Hughsonville, who married Miss Ann Lee, of Yorktown; James, our subject; Ann, who married Ralph Mead, a merchant in New York City; Louisa, the wife of the Rev. Samuel Van Vechten; and Susan, who married Robert Lane, a merchant in New York City.

James Van Wyck was born September 4, 1810, at the residence built by his father, Gen. Abraham Van Wyck, higher up on the ridge, and now in the possession of the family of his grandson, the late Richard T. Van Wyck. On his marriage in 1834 James Van Wyck remodeled the old mansion for his own abode, which was again enlarged and renovated a few years since, and here he has happily resided for more than three score years.

On arriving at man's estate our subject engaged in farming, succeeding to 414 acres which belonged to his father. He has been largely interested in raising stock and grain, although not giving exclusive attention to them. He has been twice married: First, on November 12, 1834, to Miss Cornelia Ann Van Wyck, daughter of Richard T. Van Wyck, a leading resident of Fishkill. To this union were born two sons: Abraham J., who was a Methodist minister at Casenovia, Mich., and died January 9, 1887; and Richard T., who was a farmer in his native township, and died January 2, 1892, leaving a widow, two sons and a daughter. On October 3, 1849, Mr. Van Wyck, for his second wife, married Miss Elizabeth M. Van Brunt, of Brooklyn, a descendant of one of the old Dutch families of Long Island; her father, Nicholas Van Brunt was a well-known merchant of New York. 11 politics Mr. Van Wyck is a Republican, and in religious faith he adheres to the Reformed Dutch Church, he and his wife attending services at Hopewell Junction. Both as a substantial business man and a progressive citizen, he commands the esteem of the people of the vicinity.

THOMAS H. SEAMAN. As an enterprising and wide-awake business man of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, and one who, through his own efforts, has established himself among the prominent men of the city, we take pleasure in giving a brief biography of this gentleman. He is engaged in the stone business, taking contracts for street work and building purposes.

Mr. Seaman was born at Syracuse, N. Y., June 13, 1849, and is of Holland extraction. His father, Thomas C. Seaman, was a native of Albany county, N. Y., and was a son of a farmer of that locality. On starting out in life for himself he engaged in teaching, and on leaving his native county went to Syracuse, where for a short time he followed farming. He then located at Coeymans, N. Y., engaging in the stone business at that place until his removal to Wilbur, where he was similarly employed. In 1861 he established himself in that line of trade in Poughkeepsie, which he continued to follow until his death in November, 1888. His political support was given the Republican party. He had married Miss Roxey A. Garratt, a native of Greene county, N. Y., and a daughter of Levi G. Garratt, an agriculturist. Five children were born of this union: Lydia M., who married George Stoddard, a truckman, of Poughkeepsie; Annie E., who died unmarried; Alvena H., wife of Daniel White, a moulder of Poughkeepsie; Ursula, who wedded Henry Warner, an engineer; and Thomas H., of this review.

The childhood days of our subject were mostly spent in Wilbur, N. Y., where he was educated, and early began to learn the stone business with his father, with whom he continued operations until the latter's death. He still continues to deal in stone at Poughkeepsie, and has built up a large and lucrative business.

Mr. Seaman was united in marriage with Miss Catherine DuBois, a native of Dutchess county, where her father, James DuBois, followed the occupation of farming. One child has been born to them: Mary N., now the wife of William L. Dobbs, of Poughkeepsie. The parents are earnest Christian people, faithful members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and take an active interest in everything intended to promote the moral or material advancement of the community. Politically, Mr. Seaman votes the Prohibition ticket, as the platform of that party embodies his principles on the temperance question.

MARTIN FENDEL, the well-known and popular proprietor of the "Old German Tavern", No. 229 Union street, Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, was born at Bingen-on-the-Rhine, Germany, March 7, 1864. He spent his boyhood in Germany, attending school in the town of his birth, and was then in the coal business with his father for two years.

In 1885 Mr. Fendel came to America on a visit, and traveled throughout the United States selling wines to wholesale dealers, and he traveled back and forth between the two countries thirteen times. He was married in New York City, in 1889, to Miss Messerschmidt, a native of that place. Of this union the following children were born: Freddie, born in Bingen; Josephine and Kate, born in New York City; and Gertie, born in Poughkeepsie. There was also an adopted child, Joseph, who died when three months old. After his marriage our subject spent one year in Germany, and two and a half years in New York City, engaged in selling wines to the wholesale trade. In March, 1894, he came to Poughkeepsie and opened the "Old German Tavern," a typical German inn.

Mr. Fendel is a member of Concordia Lodge, Knights and Ladies of Honor, and attends the Catholic Church. He is a naturalized citizen, but takes little interest in politics.

CHARLES H. BUCKINGHAM, a prominent resident of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, whose extensive travels have made him at home in nearly every country on the globe, is in direct descent of the eighth generation from one of the earliest settlers of Connecticut.

The name Buckingham is derived from "Bucan," "Becen," or "Beechen"—beech trees—and "ham"—a village—as a family name it doubtless has its origin in the county of Buckingham, England, whose shire town is also Buckingham. Many members of the American branch of the family have filled positions of honor and importance in various fields of effort. Thomas Buckingham, the Puritan ancestor of this line, was one of the company to which Eaton and Hopkins, two London merchants, and two ministers, Davenport and Prudden, belonged. They arrived at Boston June 26, 1637, in the ship "Hector," and on March 30, 1638, sailed for Quinnipack (now New Haven), where such records as this are found on the old town books: "Mr. Wilke is ordered to pay Thomas Buckingham five bushels and a half of Indian Corn destroyed by Mr. Wilke's hogs."

In 1839 Thomas Buckingham settled in Milford, Conn., where his name stands fifth on the list of Free Planters, and he was one of the "seven pillars of the church" there. He was married twice, first to Hannah ———, by whom he had five children: Hannah, Daniel, Samuel, Mary and Thomas. For his second wife he married Ann ———. His youngest son, Rev. Thomas Buckingham, was born November 8, 1646, and began preaching in Wethersfield when only eighteen years old. In 1665 he preached in Saybrook. He was one of the founders of Yale College, and a Fellow of that institution. Among the clergymen of his time he held a high rank, leading in all the efforts for the prosperity of the Church, and he was one of the Moderators of the famous Synod of 1708, which convened at Saybrook, and formed the platform for the Churches. On September 20, 1666, he married his first wife, Hester Hosmer, by whom he had nine children: Hester, Thomas, Daniel, Stephen, Samuel (1), Samuel (2), Hezekiah, Temperance and Anne. His second wife, whom he married August 10, 1703, was Mary Hooker. He died April 1, 1709.

Thomas Buckingham (3) was born September 29, 1670, and lived to be nearly one hundred years old, dying September 12, 1769. He was a landholder in Lebanon, Conn., and a prominent man in town affairs, being appointed to many offices of trust, and was also a leading member of the Church. On December 16, 1691, he married Margaret Griswold, and had eight children: Thomas, Samuel, Jedediah, Margaret, Mary (1), Mary (2), Joseph and Sarah.

Thomas Buckingham (4), the great-great-grandfather of our subject, was born January 24, 1703, and became a seafaring man. On April 5, 1722, he married Mary Parker, by whom he had four children, whose names with dates of birth are as follows: Jedediah, January 20, 1727; Stephen, September 20, 1729; Mary, July 27, 1732; and Sarah, 1734. He died December 13, 1760, and his wife survived him at least eleven years.

Jedediah Buckingham, our subject's great-grandfather, was born at Saybrook, Conn., married Martha Clark, of Lebanon, and settled in Columbia, Conn., where he died July 9, 1809, his wife surviving him until May 20, 1821. They had children: Sarah, Thomas, Joseph and Mary (twins), Jedediah P., Sarah, Stephen, Esther, Martha and Nancy Ann.

Stephen Buckingham, our subject's grandfather, born May 12, 1763, was a farmer and large land owner at Columbia, Conn. He served three years in the Revolutionary war, was sent to France to effect an exchange of prisoners, and was absent about a year, being shipwrecked in the Bay of Biscay. On January 2, 1798, he was married to his first wife, Polly Dorrance, of Lebanon, who died January 26, 1799, and on June 30, 1807, he married, for his second wife, Polly Brewster, of Exeter Society, Lebanon, a descendant in the sixth generation from Elder William Brewster, of Plymouth, Mass., and daughter of Ishaboc and Lucy Brewster. She was born August 12, 1777, and in 1869 was living in Poughkeepsie in her ninety-second year, in good health, able to walk about the house without assistance. Stephen Buckingham died February 26, 1814, leaving four children whose names with date of birth are here given: Mary Dorrance, January 26, 1799; Stephen M., July 12, 1808; Charles J., July 7, 1810, and Ichabod B., August 3, 1813, who died November 8, 1819.

Charles J. Buckingham, the father of our subject, passed his childhood at the old home in Columbia, Conn., and prepared for college at Boston Academy, Colchester, Conn. He entered Trinity College in 1829, with a view to the ministry of the Episcopal Church; but his health failing, his studies were remitted for a time. On resuming them, he again found it necessary to desist. After a long voyage to the Mediterranean he made a third attempt, but was finally compelled to relinquish his literary pursuits. He made another voyage to Europe, and on regaining his health engaged in the mercantile business there and in New York City, where he resided until his removal to Poughkeepsie in 1849. During the last years of his life he devoted much of his time to the public schools of the latter city, and to other educational interests.

On October 16, 1839, he was married, at Poughkeepsie, to Emily Williams, a native of New York City, born January 21, 1818, the daughter of Josiah and Martha (Looinis) Williams. She died in Poughkeepsie, January 26, 1848, and he survived her until October 2, 1889. They had four children: Emily Adelia, who was born November 7, 1840, and died December 30, 1840; Charles Henry, our subject, born September 13, 1842; Richard Cook, born January 11, 1844, who died July 20, 1845, and Martha Williams, born September 26, 1845, who was married December 27, 1871, to George W. Wood.

Charles H. Buckingham, our subject, was born at Bowling Green, New York City. His boyhood was mainly spent in Poughkeepsie, where he attended the College Hill School. At the age of twenty he went to New York and engaged in the dry-goods commission business with Hunt, Tillinghast & Co., with whom he remained eight years. He was also interested in mining in Colorado and ranching in Nebraska. Since 1870 he has spent most of his time traveling, and has circumnavigated the earth once, and been partly around it several times. He was on the first merchant steamer that entered the harbor of Osaki, Japan, and was one of the first Americans to visit the city of Pekin, after it was taken by the English and French in 1860. Some years were spent in visiting points in France, South America, Mexico, Java, the island of Juan Fernandez, and other places of interest, and he has been in nearly every country on the globe. On March 22, 1888, in Poughkeepsie, he was married to Elizabeth Van Loan, daughter of Benjamin Van Loan, a well-known resident of Catskill Village. His wife has accompanied him on many long journeys, but they are now enjoying the comforts of their elegant home in Poughkeepsie.

[LEWIS CARMAN (deceased), who in his lifetime was a well-known business man of Bangall, Dutchess county, a dealer in coal and farm produce, and the efficient agent of the N. D. & C. R. R., was born in the town of Stanford February 1, 1860.

The family name was originally Preston, and his paternal grandfather, Martin Preston, was a native of the town of Milan, Dutchess county, where, in his later years, he followed farming. He was a Quaker in religious faith; married and had three children: Ada M., who died in 1886; Leonard L., our subject's father, and Nathan C., who was in the United States naval service for many years, including the stirring times of the Civil war. He died in 1886.

Leonard L. (Preston) Carman, our subject's father, lived in New York City until the age of seven, later moving to Stanfordville, where he spent some years, meanwhile attending the schools of that village; for two winters he studied at the Nine Partners Boarding School, in the town of Washington. At the age of nineteen he was adopted by an uncle, Leonard L. Carman, of the town of Stanford, his name being changed by act of Legislature from Preston to Carman. At the age of twenty-one he took charge of the farm, on "Bangall Lane," relieving his adopted parents of care during their later years, and on their death, in 1860, he succeeded to the estate, where he continued to reside until his death, October 30, 1892. He was a member of the Baptist Society. In his earlier years he was a Whig, later becoming a Republican. He was twice married, first to a Miss Sackett, who died leaving no children. His second wife was Miss Emma J. Preston, a daughter of Ebenezer Preston, a leading resident of the town of Stanford. Two children were born of this union: Lewis, our subject, and Ada M., who married Joshua R. Traver (deceased).

Lewis Carman, the subject of this sketch, attended the district schools of the town of Sanford during early boyhood, and later studied at a private school in the same locality. After he had learned all that they were prepared to offer, he studied for sometime at the Pelham Institute, Poughkeepsie. Returning home, he assisted upon the farm until 1884, when, having learned telegraphy at home, he accepted the position of agent of the N. D. & C. R. R. at Bangall. He also dealt extensively in coal and farm produce. Politically he was a Republican and was one of the leaders among the younger members of the party in his vicinity. For several terms he served as town clerk, and April 1, 1889, he was appointed by President Harrison postmaster at Bangall, retiring August 1, 1893. He was married April 12, 1887, to Miss S. Jeannette Crampton, a daughter of H. E. Crampton, M. D., of New York City, and four children were born to them: Lewis C., Jeannette, Leonard and Ward. Mr. Carman was a leading member of the Baptist Church, and he belonged to the K. of P. Lodge No. 43, at Poughkeepsie. He died September 27, 1896, of typhoid fever, after an illness of only two weeks.

JULIUS BENEDICT, a prominent resident of the town of Northeast, and proprietor of an extensive iron foundry in New York City, is a direct descendant in the eighth generation from Thomas Benedict, who was born in Nottinghamshire, England, in 1617, and came to America in 1638, settling on Long Island.

His son Samuel, from whom this branch of the family traces their descent, was one of the early settlers of Danbury, Conn. Samuel's son, Nathaniel, born March 27, 1679, had a son Nathaniel, who was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. He had a son Nathaniel, whose son, Nathaniel, our subject's grandfather, was born January 1, 1768, and became a farmer at Salisbury, Conn., where he died January 23, 1835. He was married (first) August 24, 1787, to Jerusha Terry, who died at Sharon, Conn., October 10, 1822, and he married (second) Rebecca Darrow. By his first wife he had eight children, whose names with dates of birth are as follows: Ethel, November 15, 1788; Abel, November 3, 1789; Delia, November 23, 1791, married January 30, 1817, to Nathaniel Cady; Benjamin, March 7, 1793, moved to the town of Northeast, Dutchess county, where he became a well-to-do miller, owning the stone mill now belonging to Martin Paine; Nathaniel, who married Polly Fuller, and lived in Connecticut and later in Yellow Springs, Ohio, was an iron founder, and a man of political and military prominence, being a member of the Connecticut Legislature in 1833, '34, '38 and '51; a justice of the peace at Salisbury, Conn., in 1830, '43 and '49; assessor in 1850; captain of the Connecticut Militia in 1820, major in 1828, and lieutenant-colonel in 1835; Asahel, also an iron founder, married Betsey, daughter of Charles Belden, of Canaan, Conn., and died in May, 1839; Olive, April 6, 1803, was married (first) on April 24, 1825, to Horace Wheeler, and (second) to Ammon Williams; James, May, 1805, was married April 11, 1831, to Maria, daughter of Richard and Elizabeth Kellogg, of Sharon, Conn., and resided at Wellington, Ohio, where he died.

Abel Benedict, our subject's father, was a native of Bethel, Conn., but spent most of his life at Sharon, where he and his brother Nathaniel owned an iron foundry. He was of an inventive turn of mind, and was the main factor in the success of the enterprise. In later years he engaged in farming at Sharon. He was never active in politics, but was much interested in local improvements and in religious movements. He married Wealthy Wheeler, daughter of Amos Wheeler, and had six children, as follows: Angeline married Francis Rogers, of Parma, Mich.; Caroline married Charles Lamb; Julius, born November 3, 1818; Horace; Lucy A. married Edwin Hartwell, of Sharon; Mary married Lee Canfield, Jr.; and Matilda M. married Charles Lamb, of Sharon.

Julius Benedict was born at Sharon, Conn. and during his early years he attended the public schools there. He also studied for a short time at Salisbury, and acquired a fair English education, which he has supplemented by a generous course of reading on current topics. He remained with his father until he was about twenty-four years of age, learning the details of work in the foundry, and in 1845 he established a foundry at Falls Village on his own account. This he carried on successfully until 1854, when he removed to Irondale, Dutchess county, and built a blast furnace, which employed eight or ten inside workmen and several colliers. In 1860, he disposed of this, and then conducted a small foundry at the same place for two years, manufacturing shot and shell for Mr. Hotchkiss the inventor. The exigencies of the war creating a large demand for these articles, the business was transferred to New York, and conducted on a larger scale, and Mr. Benedict leased the foundry on East Seventeenth street where he remained three years, removing afterward to West Forty-sixth street. In 1878 he bought the property at No. 548 West Fifth street, where his foundry now stands. Since 1867 he has been engaged principally in manufacturing sash weights, and grate bars for steam boilers, and for some years he has made the patent grate bar of W. W. Tupper & Co. He employs a force of about thirty-five men usually, and enjoys an extensive and profitable trade.

On January 5, 1846, Mr. Benedict was married to Maria, daughter of Lee Canfield, of Falls Village, Conn., and made his permanent home on the old Wheeler homestead, near Coleman Station, a fine farm of 140 acres, which he purchased in 1887. His wife died June 9, 1885, leaving one son, William B., who was born April 13, 1848, was a banker in New York City, but died in Denver, Colo., in February, 1886; there was also a daughter, Clara Maria, born February 2, 1855, and died in February, 1872. Mr. Benedict's close attention to business has prevented him from taking an active part in political life, but he is a generous sympathizer in all movements for the public welfare. In early life he was a Whig, voting for Gen. Harrison in 1840, and he became a Republican on the formation of that party.

JOHN J. BAHRET, a well-known business man of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, is a native of that thriving city, born May 5, 1840.

Jacob Bahret, father of our subject, was born in 1809 in Wurtemberg, Germany, was educated in the schools of Burgstal, and learned the tailor's trade. In 1835 he came to America, locating first in New York City, where he remained three years. He then moved to Poughkeepsie and engaged in merchant tailoring at the head of Jay street, near Market, but after a time he entered the employ of Smith & Fineley at No. 280 Main street, and in 1844 he bought their business, which he carried on until his death, in 1865. He was a man of sterling qualities, fully identifying himself with the best interests of his adopted country, and during the Civil war he was an active member of the Union League. He was married in New York City in 1836 to Miss Dortha Furch, a native of Germany, by whom he had six children: Julia Caroline, the wife of August Koch; John J., our subject; Phœbe R. (now living), who married C. Buechler (now deceased); Mary C. and August P. (twins both deceased); and George, a resident of St. Louis, Mo. The mother of these died in 1849 and the father subsequently married Miss Fredrica Dietz. Seven children were born of this union, of whom only three are now living: Louisa Nesbit, Charles H. and Frederick, all residents of Poughkeepsie.

John J. Bahret received his early education at the public schools of his native city, also at the Lancaster school. At the age of thirteen he became a salesman for his father, as time passed learning the trade, and after the death of his father he took charge of the business in partnership with August Koch, at Nos. 276 and 262 Main street. In 1882 the partnership was dissolved, and Mr. Bahret continued the business at No. 262 until 1894, when he moved to No. 174 Main street, where his sons, A. H. and P. E. Bahret, now conduct it. For over thirty years Mr. Bahret held a prominent place in business circles, and was for some time a director in the Farmers' & Manufacturers' National Bank of Poughkeepsie. He was twice married, first on September 6, 1863, to Miss Mary Griffin, of West Redding, Conn., who died in October, 1869. Two children were born to them, Willie G. and Dora, both of whom died in infancy. Mr. Bahret was married the second time September 5, 1870, in Saugerties, Ulster county, to Miss Sarah T. Allard, and their children are Adella, James L., Arthur H., Percy E. and Ruth E. He and his wife are leading members of Trinity M. E. Church, of Poughkeepsie, and the family have taken an influential part in many philanthropic movements within and without the Church.

ABRAM B. CRAPSER, the well-known engineer of the steamer "Hasbrouck," was born November 21, 1832, in Pleasant Plains, town of Clinton, Dutchess county, and is of German origin. His great-grandfather was a native of Wurtemberg, Germany, and on coming to America his passage was paid by his mother. On his arrival he bound himself out to a man living in Wurtemberg, town of Rhinebeck, Dutchess county, which village was named for his birthplace. At that time he had some money, and as his employer was in need of financial assistance, he aided him. Later he became a large property owner in Clinton town, Dutchess county. He was married at Wurtemberg, N. Y., and became the father of four sons, one of whom was John Crapser (the grandfather of our subject), who was born May 20, 1750.

On February 19, 1778, John Crapser was married to Charity Ostrum, who was born March 12, 1760, and fourteen children were the result of this union, their names and dates of birth, etc., being as follows: John J., July 5, 1780, died September 12, 1860; Anna, October 27, 1781, d. December 7, 1859; Albertus, January 14, 1784, d. September 4, 1880; Frederick, September 20, 1785, d. March 1, 1861; Cornelius, August 30, 1787; Catherine, August 23, 1789, d. May 8, 1832; Elizabeth, September 25, 1791, d. August 21, 1854; Margaret, January 24, 1794; Mary, June 1, 1796, d. January 12, 1823; Levi, July 14, 1798, d. May 21, 1855; Gertrude, August 25, 1800, d. January 5, 1852; Philip, June 3, 1803, d. September 19, 1872; Sarah Ann, March 27, 1805, d. July 3, 1860; and Elias, June 21, 1807, d. February 7, 1786. The father of this family was a member of the Lutheran Church, and devoted his life to agricultural pursuits in the town of Clinton until his death, which occurred February 24, 1824. His wife was called from earth December 28, 1851.

Elias Crapser, the youngest in their family, and the father of our subject, was born in the town of Clinton, where his early life was passed in rural pursuits. In 1830 he went upon the river, at first as the owner of a sailing vessel, and afterward, for half a century, as pilot and captain on steamboats, for many years being with the Commercial Transportation Co. From 1850 up to the time of his death he made his home at Poughkeepsie, passing the last four years with his son, Abram B. Crapser. He was married January 14, 1830, to Rebecca C. Nickel, of the town of Rhinebeck, and they became the parents of the following children: Anna M., born September 22, 1830, became the wife of Abram Wallace, December 2, 1847; Abram B., whose name introduces this sketch, is the next in order of birth; Emeline G., born November 15, 1835, married Ransom La Paugh, January 6, 1855 (he died May 16, 1896); Catherine E., born April 5, 1838, wedded George Clarke, February 12, 1861; Levi, born April 8, 1841, married Mary J. Ackert, June 29, 1864; William H., born November 3, 1843, married Catherine Whitner, of Brooklyn, August 15, 1868; Henrietta was born September 22, 1846; Rebecca, born December 7, 1849, died July 23, 1851; Nelson, born March 15, 1852, married Julia Fraleigh, October 1, 1873; and Charles, born November 4, 1854, wedded Rose Golden, January 5, 1882. The mother of these died April 18, 1879.

Our subject spent his boyhood in New York City, where he was educated, and at the early age of ten years began boating with his father during the warmer months, while in the winter he attended school. At the age of sixteen he secured a position as deck hand on a steamer, where he remained for nearly one year, and then was made assistant engineer on the "Cygnet," being thus employed by the Commercial Transportation Co. of the Philadelphia and Albany line for four years. At the age of twenty he was made chief engineer, filling that position on the "Swan," "Patroon," "Commerce," "Tempest," "Constitution," "Commodore Foote," "Commodore Du Pont," "William H. Aspinwall," "Columbus," "Francis King" and "Reliance." During the Civil war he was chief engineer on the "Vidette," in the Burnside expedition, and for three years was in the government service. Since the close of the struggle he has been chief engineer of the steamer "John L. Hasbrouck," all of which will indicate his faithful discharge of duty, and the high regard in which he is held by his employers. He is the pioneer engineer of the Crapser family, and he now has four brothers, a nephew, son-in-law and two sons, who are also engineers, raised by him to the trade, besides a brother-in-law (now deceased.)

On December 13, 1855, Mr. Crapser was married, to Adaline Ackert, who was born in Pleasant Plains, town of Clinton, September 1, 1833, and seven children blessed their union, namely: Lester A., born February 22, 1858, and married Carrie Falk June 5, 1882; Ethelward V., born December 12, 1859, married Mary Tracy, March 18, 1885; Ida M., born February 12, 1862, became the wife of Walter L. Simmons July 1, 1883; Ella R., born April 25, 1865, died February 19, 1868; Ira E., born October 18, 1868, died February 2, 1869; Lillie Belle, born August 26, 1872, married Samuel H. Miller November 14, 1894; and Freddie B., born June 3, 1874, died on the 26th of July following. The children that married all have families.

Mr. Crapser is one of the oldest members of Lodge No. 266, F. & A. M., of Poughkeepsie, which he joined February 21, 1859, and also belongs to and is one of the charter members of the Masonic Mutual Benefit Association, and a member of the Marine Engineer Beneficial Association. His courteous, genial manner has gained him a large circle of warm personal friends, and he justly deserves the confidence and esteem of all with whom he comes in contact either in a business or social way.

JOHAN P. AMBLER, wholesale and retail dealer in books, stationery and fancy goods, Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, was born June 25, 1841, in the town of Stamford, Dutchess county, and is the son of Rev. Silas and Eunice D. (Olmstead) Ambler.

The Ambler family, of which our subject is a worthy representative, was founded in America during its early history. The first to locate in New England was Richard Ambler, who was born in Somersetshire, England, in 1609, and was one of twenty-four men who organized the town of Watertown, Conn., taking deed from the Indians, and he became a leading resident of that town. He was twice married and became the father of three children: Sarah, Abram and Abraham. His death occurred in 1699. Of his family, Abraham, who was a Baptist minister in Bradford, Conn., was born in 1642, and he was also twice married, his union with Mary Bates being celebrated in 1662; they made their home in Stamford, Conn. Their son John was born in 1668, and in his family were three children: John, Stephen and Martha. The birth of John Ambler, of this family, occurred at Stamford, Conn., in 1695, and he became a resident of Danbury, in the same State, where he died. By his will he bequeathed his gun and sword to his only son, John. He was the father of seven children—John, Elizabeth, Sarah, Mary, Martha, Anna and Rachel. The only son was born in 1733, and died October 21, 1814. By his marriage with Huldah Fairchild he had eight children: Peter, Squire, Stephen, Gilead, Modote, Silas, Huldah and Deborah. The father of these was a sergeant of a company of 100 men raised in Danbury May 17, 1775, which joined the 6th Regiment, commanded by Col. David Waterbury.

Peter Ambler, of the above family, was the grandfather of our subject. He was born at Danbury, Conn., September 20, 1759, and here continued to engage in farming throughout life, owning the land on which the Danbury Fair is now held. During the Revolutionary war, he served as artificer in the Colonial army, and later took a prominent part in public affairs, being a member of the State legislature for one term. He held membership with the Baptist Church, in which he served as deacon, and died in that faith March 1836. On October 21, 1784, he had married Miss Hannah Shove, who was born October 27, 1761, and was the daughter of Deacon

Benjamin and Sarah Shove, and their family included the following children: Fairchild, Benjamin, David, Thomas, Joseph, Silas, Sarah, Rachel and Hannah. The mother of these died April 22, 1843.

Rev. Silas Ambler, Baptist minister, father of our subject, was born at Danbury, Conn., March 12, 1798. He was married August 29, 1822, to Miss Eunice D. Olmstead, who was born October 28, 1800, at Wilton, Conn., and died October 3, 1892, at Stamford, N. Y. They had a family of seven children: Samuel H., a sketch of whom appears elsewhere; Mary E., who makes her home in Greene county, N. Y., is the widow of Ezekial Griffin; Augustus, born April 19, 1829, died April 22, 1852; Catherine, born May 23, 1831, is the widow of Levi Boyce, of Greenville, N. Y.; Sarah, born January 31, 1835, is the wife of Henry Knickerbocker, of Bangall, N. Y.; Emeline, who was born April 6, 1837, and died April 3, 1869, was the wife of Charles Sheldon, now deceased; and John P., born June 25, 1841, is the proprietor of a book store at Poughkeepsie, N. Y. The father was for a time a minister in the Baptist Church, having charge of congregations at Cornwall and Norfolk, Conn., but in 1840 on account of ill health he gave up preaching, and located upon a farm in the town of Stamford, Dutchess Co., N. Y., near Stissing, which is now owned by our subject. He there spent his remaining days, dying November 22, 1857, honored and respected by all.

John P. Ambler spent his boyhood days on his father's farm in the town of Stamford, and when fifteen years of age entered Greenville Academy, where he spent two years. He then taught school in Stamford for one year, and the following year drove a market wagon. During the winter of 1860-61 he attended Eastman Business College, at Poughkeepsie, and in 1861 entered the bookstore of J. H. Hickok, in Poughkeepsie, as clerk, remaining there some six years. He was next employed in a similar business with H. A. Reed, and on July 12, 1869, he purchased a small news business on Market street. From this modest beginning he has built up an extensive and prosperous trade, and now owns a large building facing on both Market and Main streets. Here he has a fine assortment of fancy goods, a complete line of stationery; his establishment is the headquarters for all the latest publications. His industry, enterprise and undoubted integrity, as well as his courteous manners, have made him popular with all classes of people and have brought him well-deserved success, and a host of warm friends.

On November 16, 1870, Mr. Ambler was married to Miss Mary A. Tracy, a native of Shelburne, Vt., and daughter of Hon. Guy Tracy, a farmer of that place. They have one child, Donna Louise. Mr. Ambler is a Democrat and in 1884 was a candidate on that ticket for county treasurer, being defeated by only fifteen votes. He has been a member of the board of health for two terms. Socially, he belongs to the I. O. O. F., Royal Arcanum, and of the Reform Club, of New York City, while in religious faith he and his wife are members of the First Reformed Church.

JOHN U. ABEL (deceased) was numbered among the prosperous and skillful farmers of the town of Unionvale, Dutchess county. Here his grandfather, Daniel Abel, reared his family of seven children: Jacob, John, Lawrence, William, Peter, Mary (who became the wife of Daniel Uhl) and Gideon. Jacob Abel, the father of our subject, spent his entire life in Unionvale, devoted to agricultural pursuits. He married Miss Margaret Uhl, and in their family were three children: (1) William W., who married Helen Cornell, and had two children—Mary Elizabeth, deceased; and Evaline, who married Henry Brill, by whom she has two children—Theodore R. and Helen. (2) Our subject is the next in order of birth. (3) Mary wedded Luman B. Odell, who was killed by accident, and they had three children—Daniel, Wright and Flora.

In the town of Unionvale, Dutchess county, John U. Abel was born October 11, 1821, and he acquired such an education as the common schools of the locality afforded, and for one year attended school at Quaker Hill. For some time he followed the profession of teaching; but his time was mainly devoted to his farming interests, which were quite extensive, and at his death, which occurred November 6, 1893, he left a large estate. He was a popular and influential citizen, one who easily gained the friendship of those with whom he met either in a business or social way, was charitable and benevolent, and took a commendable interest in the welfare and prosperity of those around him. For a number of years he served as supervisor of his township, was president of the Agricultural Society, and held several other positions of honor and trust. He was prominently identified with the Masonic order, in which he took an active interest. On June 4, 1846, he was united in marriage with Miss Esther Odell, who was born in the town of Unionvale, March 9, 1829, and was educated there and in Amenia. She still survives her husband, and like him is held in the highest respect.

Uriah Odell, the grandfather of Mrs. Abel was a native of Pawling town, Dutchess county, and followed the vocation of a farmer. He married Miss Esther Sheldon, and to them were born the following children: John, Daniel, Benjamin, Isaac, Abijah (who married Ann Hubbard), Ann, Lamira (who married David Hubbard); Sallie, and Polly (who married Daniel Butler).

Daniel Odell, the father of Mrs. Abel, was born in Pawling town in 1781, attended the common schools of Delaware county, N. Y. and later carried on farming in Unionvale town. In the old training days he served a captain of a company of militia, and took prominent part in public affairs. For his first wife he married Miss Esther Stevens, daughter of Archibald Stevens, of Dover town, Dutchess county, and to them were born two children: (1) Samuel, born December 3, 1800, married Hannah Hunt, and had three children—Duane, Sheldon and Adeline. (2) Ebenezer, born August 23, 1812, married Sallie A. Baker, and had two children—Ann E., who married Duane Odell; and Levina, who died unmarried.

On June 20, 1817, his first wife died, and on November 17, 1817, Daniel Odell married Miss Esther Cole, a daughter of Royal and Hannah Cole. During the Revolutionary war her father aided the Colonies in securing their independence, and lived to be over ninety years of age, dying on the Fourth of July. Seven children graced the second marriage, namely: (1) Olive A., born June 2, 1818, married Henry W. Uhl, a farmer of Unionvale, to whom she had a son, Daniel H., who died when young; her death occurred in 1840. (2) Daniel W., born April 28, 1821, was a farmer by occupation, and married Hannah Devine, daughter of Abel Devine, by whom he had a daughter, Mary E., who died at the age of seventeen years. For his second wife, Daniel wedded Elizabeth Giddley, of the town of Lagrange, Dutchess county, and they had two children: Ardell E., who married Robert Dey, and later became the wife of Zachariah Dorland; and Willis B., who married Annie Baker. (3) Newton B., born January 18, 1823, married Christina Baker, and they had one child: Ida, who married Frank Akerley. After the death of his first wife he wedded Annie Morey, and to them was also born a daughter: Levina M. (4) Luman B., born February 23, 1826, wedded Mary Abel, and had three children: Daniel J., who married Hatie Coe; Wright, who married Inez A. Brill; and Flora M., who married Charles Brill, Jr. (5) Mrs. Esther Abel is next in order of birth. (6) Alexander J., born April 17, 1832, wedded Mary L. Taber, of Washington town. (7) Hannah L., born March 6, 1840, married Rev. S. W. Butler, a minister of Fall River, N. Y., who is now living in Nebraska. They had two children: Wright A.; and Odell C., who was born at Fall River, February 22, 1874, was educated in the De Garmo Institute, Fishkill-on-Hudson, and is now engaged in farming.

John W. Abel

ABIAH W. PALMER, who was called from this life in January, 1882, was widely known throughout Dutchess county, having spent most of his life in Amenia, and by all held in the highest regard. He was born January 25, 1835, at Amenia, on the old homestead which was deeded to his father by the Pine Partners, the son of Abiah Palmer, Sr., who removed from the town of Stanford, Dutchess county, to Amenia, in 1789, and immediately took an active part in public business, being a successful farmer and mine owner. He died before his son was born, and the mother of our subject passed away when he was only nine years old. He then made his home with two half brothers and two half sisters.

Mr. Palmer pursued his academical course at the Amenia Seminary, later was a student at the Cazenovia Seminary, and at the age of twenty years entered Union College, which he attended for two years. On account of illness he was not permitted to graduate, being compelled to relinquish his studies in 1856, and soon afterward he started for Europe, where the following two years were passed in travel. On his return home he was not strong or thoroughly well, but greatly improved in health. Being nominated by the Republican party in 1859, he was elected to represent his district in the General Assembly, receiving over seven hundred majority, and at once took high rank in that body. In the following year he was unanimously renominated, an honor he was compelled to decline; but later he was in the Senate for two consecutive terms, taking there, also, a prominent and active part, and serving on several important committees.

Among the valuable property owned by Mr. Palmer was the iron mine at Amenia, which he sold just before the Civil war broke out. For years he served as president of the First National Bank of Amenia, and was re-elected to that position the day after his death, as the news of that sad event had not reached the village. He was always a strong Republican in politics, socially was connected with Amenia Lodge No. 672, F. & A. M., and was a man of deep religious convictions, but not a member of any Church. Public-spirited and progressive, he was one of the most popular citizens of the community, and no words are needed to assert his high and delicate sense of honor—his blameless integrity, both in public and private life. In 1860 he received the nomination for comptroller of New York State, but was defeated. At Westfield, Mass., in 1872, he was married to Miss Jeanette Yeamans, a daughter of Roland Yeamans, and two children were born to them: Roland Swift and Katharine.

Mr. Palmer was a man of great influence, his advice being often sought and deferred to by far older men, and no one's opinion in the community on any subject of business action, or social expediency, carried greater weight than his. He had a marvelous faculty of seeing, in any emergency, the precise thing that should be done. His sympathetic, genial nature put him often in confidential relations with all, and no person was so unpopular or so obscure as to forfeit his kind attention. For a number of years prior to his death he was in very poor health, and often made trips to the South and to Colorado. A year before his death he located permanently at Manitou Park, Colo., hoping that the high latitude and pure air would give him, at least, a partial restoration of health. But it was decreed otherwise, and he would have been glad to have returned to Amenia; but the condition of his health rendered it impossible. He breathed his last at Manitou Park, and his remains were brought back to Amenia and interred. We cannot better close this brief record of his life than by quoting a letter written by Bishop H. N. Powers in tribute to him:

"I wish that I might stand up among those who gather at Mr. Palmer's grave, and pay a tribute to his youth. I knew him from his early childhood to the years when he bore great public trusts with distinction and honor, and my recollection of him is singularly delightful. All through his boyhood and youth I can recall nothing about him but what is suggestive of rare qualities and a noble nature. His inclinations from the first were good. With his unfolding intelligence he seemed instinctively drawn to what was morally wholesome, refining, uplifting.

"From his incipient boyhood he showed those traits and that disposition which are prophetic of an honorable and useful manhood. As time went on he developed into the thoughtful, gentle, ingenuous, studious youth of high aims and most attractive presence. His natural talents were remarkable. His sympathies led him into the best associations. His spirit was lovely. There is no face, among those of my early acquaintances, more clearly stamped upon my memory than his, and every lineament of it indicated sincerity, sensibility, a keen, bright intelligence. His deep, soft, luminous eyes, so trustful and searching, seem looking upon me now, with meanings that go to my heart.

"I thank God that it has been my privilege to see and live in contact with a young life so fair and lovely as his. The very thought of it is refreshing, and I shall carry its sweetness with me while I live."

WENDEL STROBEL (deceased). Many of the best class of citizens of Dutchess county have come from over the sea, particularly from the empire of Germany. They have transported to this country the industry, thrift and economy of their native land, and have been important factors in the upbuilding and advancement of the land of their adoption. Of this class of honest, alien-born citizens, none have occupied a more prominent place than Mr. Strobel and his family. He was born, reared and educated in Germany, and was one of the twelve children of Peter Strobel and wife, who were also natives of the Fatherland.

In the year 1826, in Hessen-Darmstadt, Germany, Mr. Strobel was married to Miss

Christina Ruth, who had received an excellent education in her girlhood. Three children were born to them, the birth of the eldest occurring before they left their native land. They are as follows: Peter, who served as a soldier in the German army; Mary; and William, who married a young lady of Barrytown, Dutchess Co., N. Y., by whom he has four children. In 1846, with his family, Mr. Strobel left Germany for America, and in Barrytown made his home until called from this life about four years ago. He enjoyed the esteem and regard of the entire community, and at his death was deeply mourned.

Henry Hirtsel, the maternal grandfather of Mrs. Strobel, was born in Hessen-Darmstadt, Germany, and there married Barbara Metz, of the same place. They had both received common-school education in their native land and in the same province where their birth occurred were born their two children: Peter who married Eliza Stormf; and Susan; the latter was given excellent educational advantage in the Fatherland, and there she married Valentine Ruth. They always made their home in Germany, where were born to them five children, as follows: Mary, who remained single; Catherine, who married Anthony Halsey; Christina, widow of our subject; Elizabeth, who died at the age of fifteen years; and Valentine, who was also married. Mrs. Strobel and the other children were all born and married in Germany.

CHARLES L. FLETCHER, M. D. The first of the Fletcher family to come to the New World was Cotton Fletcher, a Congregational minister, who was born in England. He reached the shore of this country in 1630, landing at Plymouth, Mass., with which colony was his mission, and from him sprang the present family of Fletcher, of which our subject is a worthy representative.

Calvin Fletcher, the grandfather of the Doctor, was born at Poultney, Vt., in 1733, but in childhood removed with his parents to Grand Isle county, of the same State. He received a common-school education, and became a very successful farmer. He took a prominent part in political affairs, and was called upon to serve in numerous town offices. By his marriage with Miss Eunice Davidson, of Vermont, he had nine children: Asenith, who married Benager Phelps; Olive, who married Fisher Ames; William, who married Mary Landon; Thomas, who married a Miss Phelps; Cotton, who married Ann Landon; Edward, the father of our subject; Ruth, who married Benjamin Boardman; Lydia, who married Calvin Robison; and Eunice, who married G. I. Rice.

Edward Fletcher, the father, was born in Grand Isle county, Vt., in 1819, and after the completion of his education turned his attention to mercantile pursuits for a number of years. He then engaged in farming for a time, but afterward returned to merchandising. He was one of the active and leading members of the Republican party in the community where he made his home, and at different times filled all the town offices with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of all concerned.

Edward Fletcher was married to Miss Eliza M. Landon, a daughter of Baldwin and Minerva (Phelps) Landon, agriculturists of Vermont. Ten children were born to this worthy couple, as follows: (1) Arelia E. married Edwin Phelps. (2) Henry C. engaged in the ranch business in Montana, and was there married. (3) Edward C. died at the age of seven years. (4) Charles L. is the next in order of birth. (5) Edgar E., who was born in Vermont in 1853, was educated in the same academy and university as our subject, and is now engaged in the practice of medicine at Boulder, Mont. He married Miss Emma Robison, and they have three children. (6) Fred is now engaged in civil engineering, and owns a foundry at Bozeman, Mont. (7) Frank studied law, but never engaged in its practice; for some time he followed farming, but is later connected with the Eagle Condensed Milk factory at Wassaic, N. Y.; he married Miss Carrie Rozwell, and has four children—Barbara, Leon, Edna and Francis. (8) Eliza is now engaged in the mercantile business in New Bedford, Mass. (9) Kate M. is the wife of Hegiston Hoag, a prosperous farmer, and they have three children. (10) Ernest, the youngest of the family, is now engaged in the ranch business at Boulder, Montana.

The birth of our subject occurred in the town of Milton, Chittenden Co., Vt., while his primary education was obtained in the public schools, and he supplemented the knowledge there acquired by a course in the academy at South Hero, Vt., from which he graduated. He then entered the medical department of the Vermont University, graduating with the class of '73, at the age of twenty-two. The following year he commenced the practice of his chosen profession in the town of George, Franklin Co., Vt., but in the fall of 1881 located at South Dover, Dutchess county, and has since been one of the most successful physicians of the community. In 1892 the Doctor purchased a fine farm of 335 acres on what is called Chestnut Ridge, which is well stocked and highly improved. Before coming to this county he held a number of town offices in his native State. As a Master Mason, he is connected with Dover Plains Lodge No. 666, F. & A. M. He stands deservedly high as a member of the medical fraternity, and as a private citizen also holds an enviable position in the estimation of his fellowmen.

Dr. Fletcher was married to Miss Helen Corwin, and to them were born four children: Helena and Edward, who died in infancy; C. Harold, who was born in 1880, and is now preparing for college; and Alice C., who died at the age of nine years.

THOMAS K. CRUSE, A. M., M. D., a leading physician and surgeon of Wappingers Falls, Dutchess county, was born in Baltimore, Md., March 3, 1849, and is a son of Isaac Cruse, whose birth occurred in Alexandria, Va., in 1806. His paternal grandfather, Thomas Cruse, was a native of Dublin, Ireland, by occupation a linen merchant, and he there married a Miss Hamilton, of the same city. About 1798, a continuance of residence in Dublin having become impossible by reason of his affiliation with the fomenters of Emmet's rebellion, Thomas Cruse and family emigrated to Virginia, and there he started a successful business in the importation of Irish linens. In religious belief he was an Episcopalian, and in politics a Federalist. His family comprised four children, namely: Mary, who became the wife of a Mr. Power, of Carlisle, Penn.; Eliza, who married James Creighton, of Philadelphia; Franklin, who died in infancy; and Isaac, the father of the subject of this sketch.

On reaching manhood Isaac Cruse left the Old Dominion for Baltimore, Md., where he engaged in merchandising. He there wedded Mary W. Kelso, a native of Pittsburg, Penn. She was a daughter of Dr. Joseph Kelso, surgeon to the Pennsylvania Hospital, Philadelphia, he being of Scotch descent through the Galbraiths of Revolutionary fame. Six children were born to Isaac and Mary W. Cruse: Anna E., who married David H. Paige (vice-president Texas & Houston Central railway), of New York City; Bertha, wife of Charles H. Currier, of the same city; Mary W., married to Edward J. Peters, also of New York City; Virginia, wife of Eugene W. Watson, captain United States navy; Emmeline H., widow of Graham Blandy, long a member of the New York Stock Exchange, and Thomas K., subject of this sketch. On leaving Baltimore, Isaac Cruse removed to New York City, where for twenty-five years he was an active member of the Produce Exchange, and at one time its president. Throughout life he was a staunch Democrat, and a pillar of the Madison Square Presbyterian Church, now under Dr. Parkhurst's charge.

When a child, Thomas K. Cruse accompanied his parents to New York City, where through five years he attended old ward school No. 45, in Twenty-fourth street. Leaving school, he was successful in gaining entrance to the College of the City of New York, from which institution he took his Bachelor of Arts degree in 1868. Having thus completed a sound literary and scientific education, he began the attendance of lectures at Bellevue Hospital Medical College, from which he graduated as Doctor of Medicine in 1870, when barely twenty-one years of age. Immediately after graduation, and after a hard competitive examination, he was appointed resident surgeon to Bellevue Hospital, subsequently, also, receiving the appointment of surgeon to the Bellevue Hospital Bureau of Relief for Out-Door Poor. These positions kept the Doctor hard at work during most of the first four years of his professional life, although for a few months of that period he served also as surgeon to the White Star line of transatlantic steamers.

After a term of hospital attendance in London, England, Dr. Cruse started private practice in New York City, later at Tarrytown, N. Y., and in 1876 took up his residence at Wappingers Falls, N. Y., where he has made his permanent home, although for a year he was absent in England and France, and later in Florida, traveling. For a time also he held the post of professor of genito-urinary diseases in the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Chicago, Ill., and in 1886, after competitive civil-service examination, was appointed Medical Examiner at Washington, D. C., in the Pension Office. After serving for awhile in Washington, he resigned his position, and has since given all his energies to his Dutchess county practice.

On November 3, 1883, Dr. Cruse was married to Florence S. Warhurst, of Brooklyn, N. Y., she being a daughter of Thomas Warhurst, the veteran dramatic agent. They have had two children, boys, one, Thomas Galbraith, born in 1893, died in 1895; the other, Creighton, born in 1896, survives.

The Doctor is an independent in politics, is a member of the I. O. O. F., and of the Foresters of America, of various professional organizations, of the Dutchess Club, of Poughkeepsie, of the Chi Psi Alumni Association of New York City, and of the Society of Alumni of Bellevue Hospital Internes. He is surgeon to the Foresters, to the Hudson River Stone Supply Co., and from 1885 to 1893 served the village as health officer, during which time he was zealous and impartial in his efforts to enforce strict isolation of persons suffering from contagious diseases. At one time Dr. Cruse gave a big slice of his time to writing papers for medical journals and others—original papers and criticisms. Two of his productions have been honored with prizes. One, on "Rupture of the Bladder," took the one-hundred-dollar prize of the Alumni Association of Bellevue Hospital Medical College, and was published in the Medical Record in 1871; the second, on "Injuries which happen to the Wrist Joint, especially dislocations and fractures, receive the one-hundred-dollar prize of the New York State Medical Society for 1874, and was published in the volume of transactions of the Society for that year.

Dr. Cruse, although not in the metropolis has won an enviable reputation as an up-to-date operative surgeon, and the great esteem in which his abilities are held by his professional brethren is the best testimony to his worth.

MILLER BROTHERS is the name of a well-known firm of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, dealers in marble and granite, whose place of business is located at Nos. 101 and 102 Market street. In 1894 Philip and Valentine M. Miller formed a partnership, since which time they have conducted their present business with remarkable success, combining the virtues of energy and perseverance with excellent judgment and industrious habits.

Valentine Miller, father of our subject, was born in Germany in 1825, and was there reared to habits of thrift and economy, which principles characterized his whole life. Hoping to better his financial condition, he, in 1855, emigrated to the New World, locating finally at Poughkeepsie, where he first worked with Peter Joy in the bluestone business. Not long afterward he became a member of the firm of Nellson & Miller, in the marble business, which connection continued until the death of Mr. Nellson, when Mr. Haxby was received as a partner. On the latter's death, the firm became Miller & Van Wyck, which so continued until Mr. Miller was called from earth, in August, 1877.

Valentine Miller married Elizabeth Dilge, also a native of the Fatherland, and a family of eight children were born to them: Feierabend and Peter, residents of Poughkeepsie, where the former is in the butchering business; Phillipina, deceased; Philip and Valentine M. (who comprise the firm of Miller Brothers), and Maggie (wife of John Hall, a coal dealer), Kate, (wife of Valentine Hall), and Jacob (a printer), all of Poughkeepsie. The mother of these died in August, 1893; the father was a prominent member of the Lutheran Church, thoroughly identified with its interests, and in politics he affiliated with the Republican party. Both he and his wife were highly respected and esteemed as valuable members of the community.

PHILIP MILLER, the senior member of the firm of Miller Bros., was born at Poughkeepsie January 17, 1861, and in the city schools acquired his education, subsequently learning the marble business with his father. In 1891 he went to Jersey City, where he was employed in that line until 1894, when he returned to Poughkeepsie and formed the partnership with his brother, Valentine M., in the marble and granite business at their present location on Market street, since which time they have done an extensive business.

Philip Miller was married to Miss Mamie Kuhner, a member of the Zither Club.

VALENTINE M. MILLER, the junior member of the firm of Miller Bros., was born April 8, 1864, at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., where he received his education. He wedded Miss Catharine Laufersweiler, and one daughter, Viola May, has been born to them. Valentine M.

Miller is a member of the order of Chosen Friends and of Fallkill Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

Although still young men, the Miller Brothers are very liberal and public-spirited men, taking a foremost position in every movement or enterprise promising to accrue to the benefit of the people in general. In politics they follow in the footsteps of their father, and hold an equally high position in the regard of their fellow citizens.

RICHARD BRIMSON CARY (deceased). Few among the business men of Dutchess county, past or present, have devoted to commercial life as many years as did the subject of this biography. Born November 26, 1814, in East Fishkill, he began his mercantile career at the age of twenty-one, and not until the early part of 1896 did he lay aside his active responsibilities.

His ancestry is an honorable one. His paternal grandfather, Joseph Cary, was a soldier in the Colonial army during the Revolutionary war, and enjoyed the unique distinction of having first seen the light February 22, 1732—the day and year of Gen. Washington's birth. The parents of our subject, Isaac and Nancy (Burrow) Cary, were highly respected residents of East Fishkill, and he and a younger brother, Uriah, constituted the family.

Richard B. Cary's early education was such as the district schools of the locality afforded in his day, and although they do not compare favorably with those of to-day, yet he managed to secure a good foundation for later progress through reading and observation. His first business venture was in a general merchandise store at Johnsville, N. Y., in partnership with William Pierce, and on the dissolution of the firm seven or eight years afterward Mr. Cary went to Glenham, N. Y., the manufacturing village between Fishkill village and Matteawan, and carried on a similar business for three years, with Thomas Burroughs as a partner. Mr. Cary then moved to Fishkill village, where he and Jacob G. Van Wyck opened a general store, and after a time Mr. Cary purchased Mr. Van Wyck's interest, and for many years continued the business alone. During the past twenty-five years he was a commercial traveler, representing a firm of paper manufacturers; but failing health compelled him to retire, and he died a few months after, August 25, 1896.

Mr. Cary was married October 22, 1844, to Miss M. Garetta Washburn, daughter of Jarvis and Hettie (Fuller) Washburn. Mrs. Cary passed away December 26, 1891, in her sixty-fifth year, mourned as a loving wife and mother, and by many as a cherished friend. They had five children: Jarvis, Edgar, Mary, Frank and Arthur, of whom all are living except Frank, who died in infancy, and Edgar, who died at the age of thirty-six years leaving a widow and two daughters. Politically Mr. Cary was a Republican, but he did not take an active share in party affairs.

EDWARD BRAMAN, of Hyde Park, Dutchess county, is the representative of a well-known family there, connected with the Sextons, Van Vliets, and others, whose genealogies are of unusual interest.

The name of Braman first appears in New England in 1653, at Taunton, Mass., where the first settlers were mostly from Somersetshire and Devonshire. The name belonged to Plymouth, in Devonshire, in that day, but there were also Bramans in London and Chichester, then and later. Thomas Braman, of Taunton, 1653, is believed to be the ancestor of all bearing the name in this country.

The immediate ancestor of the family, who came to live in Dutchess county, was James Braman, of North Kingston, R. I. He also owned lands in Voluntown and Preston, near Norwich, Conn., and about 1733 he took up his residence in Voluntown, where he died about January 1, 1741, leaving, by his wife Elizabeth, seven children: Elizabeth, b. March 2, 1730; John, b. April 12, 1731; James, b. October 13, 1732 (ancestor of the Bramans of Richfield, N. Y.); Anna, b. August 28, 1734; Thomas, b. May 25, 1736; Benjamin, b. June 6, 1738, unmarried; and Esther, b. February 1, 1741. Of these, John and Thomas died in Dutchess county. Thomas, after serving in the "old French war" (he was at Fort Edward in August, 1756), bought land near Old Attlebury, in Stanford, in 1761 and 1765. His wife, Anna, born December 21, 1735, died February 9, 1799. He died ——— 26, 1808 (tombstone injured), and they were buried in the ground he gave for a church long since extinct. He left no children, but made his nephew, Braman Barlow, his principal heir.

John Braman, eldest son of James and Elizabeth, was born in North Kingston, R. I., April 12 (O. S.), 1731, and died at Hyde Park September 6, 1810. He married, February 5, 1763, Eunice, eldest daughter of Benjamin Adams, of Lexington, Mass., baptized June 3, 1731, died August 15, 1774. They had five children: Anna, b. December 6, 1763, d. 1846, second wife of the Hon. Benjamin Fitch, of Pawlet, Vt.; Cyrus, b. November 28, 1766 [See below]; Lucy, b. June 14, 1768, d. August 20, 1796, first wife of Benjamin Fitch, above mentioned; Eunice, b. September 15, 1770, d. November 21, 1836, m. Samuel Palmer, of Preston; and Mary, b. May 18, 1772, d. 1809, m. Job Wickes, of Burlington, Otsego Co., N. Y. John Braman settled in the East, or "Long Society," of Norwich (which was set off to the adjoining town of Preston in 1786), near the junction of the Quinebaug and Shetucket rivers. After a residence of forty years in a very pleasant locality, all his children being married, he sold his property there, in order to make his home with his only son, with whom he removed to Clinton, now Hyde Park, in April, 1800.

Cyrus Braman, born at Norwich, November 28, 1766, died at Hyde Park, October 10, 1850. He first married, on December 26, 1793, Elizabeth Dunbar, only child of Capt. Joseph Teel and Elizabeth Searle, born at Charlestown, Mass., July 9, 1775, died at Hyde Park December 4, 1801. Her mother was of the family of the Rev. John Searle, of Stoneham; and her father was descended from one of the oldest families of Malden, Mass. Capt. Teel fought at Bunker Hill, and was in the Massachusetts Line in the succeeding war, was present at White Plains and at Burgoyne's surrender, etc. At one time he was a paymaster. He died at his son-in-law's house, at Hyde Park, February 14, 1843, aged ninety-eight years. He was long an elder in the Reformed Dutch Church. Cyrus Braman married, second, on April 11, 1802, Mary, born February 27, 1772, died October 26, 1849, only surviving daughter of Samuel Hitt and Ruth, his wife, daughter of William and Magdalene (Woolsey) Dusenbury, of Harrison's Purchase Westchester county. The Dusenbury home stead was in the family nearly a century and half. It was later owned by Benjamin Halliday and, since, by the Hon. Whitelaw Reid. Samuel Hitt was the only child of Samuel Hitt, of Harrison (then a part of Rye), wh died in 1742, when the son was only a year old. He received a classical education, and inherited a considerable estate, which was much diminished by the vicissitudes of the Revolutionary days, as he lived "between the lines" and suffered from both sides. His daughter was old enough to remember some of the events of those troublous times.

After the war he removed to Dutchess county, and for some years lived on the place, late of Elias Butler, then the property of Judge David Johnston, of Lithgow. Here his wife died, March 20, 1807, aged sixty-one; he died August 3, 1810, aged sixty-nine. By his first wife Cyrus Braman had four children: Joseph Teel, b. January 29, 1796, d. August 1, 1869, unmarried. Elizabeth Dunbar Teel, b. June 22, 1797, d. January 16, 1875; m. in 1816 John Church, of Yates county, N. Y. John Adams, b. January 18, 1799, d. September 13, 1886, unmarried; some time a merchant in New York and Syracuse. Cassandana, b. October 24, 1800, d. December 12, 1801. By his second wife he had seven children: Ruth Hitt, b. January 8, 1803, d. in New York December 8, 1846; m. in 1821 William Elsworth, of New York, afterward of Hyde Park, and had four children. Mary Smith, b. March 8, 1805, d. May 12, 1881, unmarried. Samuel Hitt, b. January 20, 1807, of whom mention will presently be made. Catharine, b. February 12, 1809, d. in Poughkeepsie, January 30, 1890; became the second wife of William Elsworth; no children. Cyrus, b. March 17, 1811, d. June 1, 1812. Phebe Stephenson, b. May 23, 1813, d. August 15, 1861, unmarried. William Henry, b. December 27, 1815, d. in New York February 24, 1876; he was a merchant in New York; he married Sarah, daughter of John W. Elsworth, and sister of William Elsworth, and by her who is living, 1897) had one child, Adelaide, who married Dr. William Brinck, now of Newburg. Cyrus Braman was educated at a high school at Norwich. After his first marriage he lived in Norwich for several years, but in 1796 Joseph Teel bought property in Rhinebeck afterward owned by Freeborn Garrettson, Jr., and since by the Astors), and this led to the removal of the Braman family to Hyde Park. In November, 1799, Cyrus Braman bought of Rhinehas Eames "Lot No. 2," of the Hyde Park Patent. This had belonged to Anna Magdalen Valleau, wife of Lucas Lesier (commonly called "Madame Lesier"), sister to the wife of Dr. John Bard; and thus an heir of Peter Fauconnier's estate. She built the stone house, part of which stood until 1894. At an early date this place was named "Belgrove", perhaps by Madame Lesier. In 1800 Mr. Braman bought the adjoining farm, "Lot No. 3," of Capt. Samuel Cook, both purchases comprising together 212 acres, with a frontage of about half a mile on the river. This was his home for fifty years. In 1824 he built barns, still standing, considered a marvel of convenience in their day; and in 1832 he built a new residence, having a fine river and mountain view. He was a Federalist, and later a Whig, but was averse to taking any part in political affairs. He died at the age of eighty-four, and his portrait shows him a man of venerable and dignified appearance. In 1853 his executors sold the estate to his son-in-law, William Elsworth, who died here in 1870, aged seventy-four, leaving three sons, Cyrus B., William H. and Eugene. His executors sold, in 1873, to Nathaniel P. Rogers.

Samuel H. Braman was born at Belgrove, January 20, 1807, and died there June 16, 1846. He married, May 16, 1832, Helen, daughter of Cornelius Van Vliet, Jr., of Staatsburg, and Mary Russell, born at Staatsburg, June 22, 1807, and died there October 1, 1857. They had six children: (1) Edward (now of Hyde Park), b. December 13, 1833. (2) Caroline, b. May 20, 1836, m. Samuel J. M. Sexton. (3) Hiram Van Vliet (of Poughkeepsie, and No. 321 Clinton avenue, Brooklyn, late importer, of New York), b. June 12, 1838, m. Irene Barlow, daughter of Charles Thomas Newcomb, of Pleasant Valley, and Elizabeth A. T. Sexton, and has had seven children—Helen Elizabeth (died in infancy), Mary Newcomb (m., June 11, 1896, to Francis L. Noble, counselor at law, of New York), Charles Francis (died aged fourteen years), Irene Moir, William Reginald (died aged three years), Hiram Van Vliet, Jr. (d. April 8, 1896, aged eighteen years), and Emily Louise. (4) Emily Bailey (living at Hyde Park), b. September 22, 1840. (5) Samuel H., Jr., b. April 13, 1842, d. February 14, 1869. (6) Helen, b. November 13, 1845, d. May 27, 1864. Samuel H. Braman took some interest in military affairs. He was a captain, major and finally colonel of the Eighty-fourth Regiment of Militia. His sons all went early to New York, and (later with their sisters) made their home there many years.

The ancestry of the SEXTON FAMILY* is fully set forth in Stiles' "Ancient Windsor." The first of the name who came to live in Dutchess county was the late Samuel J. M. Sexton, of Hyde Park. His line of descent from the first George Sexton, of Windsor, Conn., and Catharine, is: Capt. Joseph (1666-1742) and Hannah Wright; Joseph, Jr. (1694-17—), and Sarah Parsons; Deacon Joseph (1726-1819) and Rebecca Chapin; Joseph (1753-1823) and Hannah Cadwell, of Wilbraham and Monsoon, Mass., whose eldest son was Francis Sexton, born at Wilbraham, November 22, 1779; a merchant in New York, where he died August 7, 1839; he lived many years at No. 28 Dey street, where all his children were born. He married, December 14, 1809, Sarah Mills, born March 10, 1792, died September 21, 1862, daughter of William Ross and Johanna, his wife, daughter of Capt. Alexander Leslie (who was lost at sea) and Sarah Tufts (who married, second, John Mills, of New York). Mrs. Leslie-Mills came of a distinguished ancestry. She was a daughter of the Rev. Joshua Tufts and Abigail Ellery (cousin of William Ellery, signer of the Declaration of Independence), both of whom died at Halifax, Nova Scotia, in 1766. Her grandfather, the Rev. John Tufts, of Newbury, Mass., was the first to publish a collection of psalm tunes in New England, thereby greatly improving the singing in Churches. He was son of Capt. Peter Tufts, of Medford, and Mercy, daughter of the Rev. Seaborn Cotton, of Hampton (son of the Rev. John Cotton, of Boston), by Dorothy, daughter of Gov. Simon Bradstreet, and Anne, his wife (the poetess), daughter of Gov. Thomas Dudley. Mrs. Mills (Sarah Tufts) was born November 24, 1744, and died in New York, September 19, 1810. She lived in New York during the British occupation, being then a widow, and with her bounty relieved the wants of many unhappy prisoners of war confined there. She and her husband were prominent members of the Brick Church, and she was very active in benevolent and charitable works, and a co-worker with the celebrated Mrs. Isabella Graham. Mr. Mills died in 1815.

Francis and Sarah M. Sexton had sixteen

*The arms of Sexton, called "of London," by Burke, are: "Argent, three chaplets in bend gules, between two bendlets of the last; Crest, out of a ducal coronet or, a dexter arm in armour embowed proper, garnished of the first, holding in the gauntlet an anchor sable, fluke and cable or." An ancient seal engraved with the above crest has come down, as an heirloom, to the present S. B. Sexton, of "Torham;" and it furnished an appropriate design for his private yacht signal.

children, eight of whom died young. Those who survived were: (1) Sarah Mills, b. December 30, 1810, d. at Hyde Park November 23, 1872; m. John H. Newcomb, of Pleasant Valley, and late in life of Hyde Park, and left two surviving children, Thomas, and Johanna now widow of Walter Allen Seymour. The first of this family in the county was Thomas Newcomb, who bought "the greater part" of Lot No. 8, Great Nine Partners. His son Zaccheus, built the well-known "Brick House," and Thomas, son of the latter, was father of John H. and Charles T. Newcomb [See Newcomb Genealogy, by J. B. Newcomb] (2) Francis William, b. 1812, d. 1849, unmarried. (3) Elmira, b. 1815, d. 1865; m. John Mills Tufts, of Woodbridge, N. J., and left no surviving children. (4) Johanna, b. 1818 d. 1883, unmarried. (5) Elizabeth Ann Tufts b. October 17, 1819, d. January 20, 1889; m. (first) Charles Thomas Newcomb, of Pleasant Valley, and (second) Col. Charles Stiles Phelps of Brooklyn [See Stiles' "Ancient Windsor"]. By her first husband she had Irene B., m. H. V. V. Braman, and Mary E., who died unmarried. (6) Mary Jane, b. 1823, d. 1885; m. Charles Morgan, of New York. (7) Emily H. m. William Moir, of New York. (8) Samuel John Mills, b. August 11, 1832, d. at Hyde Park May 3, 1873. Samuel J. M. Sexton married, May 30, 1866, Caroline, daughter of Samuel H. Braman, of Hyde Park, and had one child: Samuel Braman Sexton, now of "Torham," Hyde Park, born July 19, 1866, married at Grace Church, New York, November 2, 1893, Jean Hunter Denning, daughter of the late Edwin James Denning, of New York.

The name of VAN VLIET can be traced very far back in the annals of the Netherlands. In the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, and later, several of the name achieved distinction in the fields of literature and art, and in military and civil life, the relation of which is not here necessary. That branch of the family which settled in this country came from the diocese or Province of Utrecht. Their armorial bearings, as given by Reitstap, are: "D'or, a trois losanges de gules; Casque couronné: Crest, une tête et col du chebraque de gules." In the Documentary History of New York [Vol. II, Colonial Documents] is an account of the powder used by the authorities in New Amsterdam, giving some interesting glimpses of passing even

On July 18, 1661, Governor Winthrop arrived in New Amsterdam, to proceed to "Fatherland," in the "Trouw"; July 21 the ships "Arent," "Hope" and "Trouw" sailed hence for Fatherland, and eighteen pounds of powder were fired. The "Trouw" sailed again, on her return to New Amsterdam, March 21, 1662, under the command of Capt. Jan Jansen Bestevan, and arrived on June 13, following, when six pounds of powder were fired. Among the passengers on this voyage were Adrian Gerritsen, agriculturist, from the Province of Utrecht, with his wife and five children, aged thirteen, twelve, eleven, eight and seven years. That he was the Adrian Gerritsen, or Adrian Gerritsen Van Vliet, who shortly after appears at "the Esopus" (Kingston), there can be no doubt. At marriage some of his children are recorded as "geboren in 't Stigt Van Uytrecht" (born in the Diocese of Utrecht). In the Indian attack of June, 1663, a daughter of Adrian was one of the prisoners taken, but was soon recovered with the rest. On April 28, 1667, Adrian signed, with others, reasons for being in arms. By grant and purchase Adrian became the owner of several parcels of land in Kingston and the adjacent parts of Ulster county [See Doc. Hist. of N. Y.; Sylvester's Hist. of Ulster County; Schoonmaker's Hist. of Kingston; N. Y. G. & B. Record, 1871, p. 145, &c.]. On September 1, 1689, at Kingston, "Gerritt Van Vliet" and "John Van Vliet" (sons of Adrian) took the oath of allegiance; but it is recorded that "Arre Gerrit Van Vliet" and "Derrick Van Vliet" (his other son) did not appear. [Doc. Hist. of N. Y., Vol. I., p. 173]. The wife of Adrian was Agatha Jans Spruyt, doubtless a descendant of the ancient family of Spruyt, of Kriekenbeck and Utrecht. She was frequently a witness at baptisms in Kingston. Their five children were: (1) Gerrit, or Gerard, ancestor of the Fishkill branch. (2) Jan (or John) married Judith, daughter of Frederick Hussey, an English settler and large landholder at Kingston; most of this branch remained in Ulster county, but one son, Frederick, settled, in 1725, in Somerset county, N. J., where his descendants write the name "Van Fleet." Vice-Chancellor Abraham Van Fleet, recently deceased, was a descendant of Thomas, son of this Frederick Van Vliet. (3) Dirck [See farther on, "line of Dirck Van Vliet"]. (4) Geertruyd married Gysbert Crom, of Marbletown, the owner of a large estate there, and a brother of Floris Willems Crom, of Flatbush, Long Island, patentee of the "Crom Patent", at Haverstraw. (5) Machteld married (first) Barent Van Borsum, son of Egbert Van Borsum, of New York [See N. Y. Gen. & Biog. Record, 1895-96], and (second) Jan Jacobsen Stol, son of Jacob Jansen Stol, one of the earliest magistrates at the Esopus. [The wife of Jacob was Geertruyd Andriese Van Doesburg. She married (second) Aert Martensen Van Doorn; then she died, and he married Aeltie Lansing, widow of Gerard Slegtenhorst, and mother of Elizabeth Slegtenhorst, wife of Nicholas William, son of Governor Stuyvesant.]

Line of Gerrit Van Vliet—Gerrit Van Vliet, probably the eldest son of Adrian and Agatha, married Pieternelle, daughter of Teunis Cornelissen Swart, of Albany, etc., and Elizabeth Van der Linde. Their children were: Cornelia, bapt. August 28, 1681; m. Andries Davidsen. Agatha, born about 1683; m. Marcus Van Bommel, of Poughkeepsie. Teunis, bapt. July 19, 1685, died young. Elizabeth, bapt. October 2, 1687; m. Nathaniel Davenport, of Kingston. Jannetje, bapt. October 30, 1692; m. Lewis DuBois, of Poughkeepsie. Geertje, bapt. November 11, 1694; m. Christoffel Van Bommel, of Poughkeepsie, one of the judges of the "Inferior Court of the County of Dutchess." Neeltje, bapt. February 21, 1697; m. Johannes Ter Bos, of Fishkill. Arie Gerritse, bapt. March 26, 1699 [See next family]. Teunis, bapt. June 14, 1702; m. Sara, daughter of Evert Van Wageningen and Hillegond Van Heyningen. [For his family see N. Y. G. & B. Record, 1891, p. 154]. Nelly (also Neeltje, perhaps originally Pieternelle), presumed to be a daughter, m. Christian DuBois, of Fishkill.

Gerrit Van Vliet was one of the petitioners for a minister at Kingston, 1676. He settled first at Marbletown, but removed to Fishkill, probably about 1709. His name appears in the first census of Dutchess county, in 1714, with a family of eight persons. At that time there were only sixty-seven heads of families in the county. His sons, Arie and Teunis, subscribed toward calling a minister for Poughkeepsie and Fishkill in 1745. [Hist. of the Reformed Church, Poughkeepsie.]

Adrian Van Vliet ("Arie Gerritse"), bapt. March 26, 1699, m. Janneke, daughter of Frederick Cloet, of Albany and Kingston, and Francina Du Mont. Children: Nelly (Pieter-nelle) m. Isaac Van Bunschoten; Francina m. Petrus Low, of Poughkeepsie, and was dead in 1769; Garret, living 1792 (Dutchess county deeds); Petrus, bapt. January 1, 1737 [See next family]; Teunis, bapt. October 7, 1740, m. Lammetje Romeyn, 1762; Frederick, living 1792, m. Catharina Van de Water, 1779.

Catharine Brett, of Fishkill, widow, sold, 31 August, 1726, to Adrian Van Vliet, of the same place, yeoman, for £98, New York money, a piece of land at a place called the "Steen Vlackte, or Stony Plain," lying upon Wappingers creek, "containing 80 acres and noe more." It is found that, later, he owned other lands adjoining this purchase. His will, dated 27 September, 1769, was proved 3 July, 1778, and recorded in New York. He gives all his estate, real and personal, to his wife "Janakye," for life; then to be sold; and to eldest son Garret "£25 and my gun;" to daughter Nelly, wife of Isaac Van Bunschoten, £30; to the three children of deceased daughter (Francina), wife of Petrus Low, £30; and all the remainder among his four sons, equally: Garret, Petrus, Teunis and Frederick, the first three executors. Garret, Peter and Frederick Van Vliet, and Peter Low, signed the "Revolutionary Pledge" in 1775, in Poughkeepsie Precinct. Garret and Petrus Van Vliet were deacons in the Reformed Dutch Church, in Poughkeepsie, and both first elected in 1778. [Hist. of Ref. Church, Poughkeepsie.]

Petrus Van Vliet, son of Adrian and Janneke, bapt. January 1, 1737, m. Johanna, daughter of Johannes Van Wormer,* of Albany, and Engeltje, his wife, daughter of John Concklin, of Poughkeepsie. Her tombstone, at Fishkill Landing, says "Hannah Van Vliet, died March 4, 1834, aged eighty-four years." Children: Engeltje (Angelica), afterward called "Anne," bapt. April 6, 1766, d. May 18, 1851; m. first John Cromwell, second Peter Bogardus. Jane, b. July 26, 1768, m. Jeremiah Myers, of Fishkill. Johannes Van Wormer (known as John), b. September 25, 1770 [See next family]. Arie, b. July 20, 1773, m. a Miss Borgardus, removed to Western New York. Petrus, b. October 31, 1775, of Charlotte, Vt. [See farther on]. Garret, b. December 23, 1777, of Fishkill, d. December 27, 1843, unmarried. Alida, b. February 25, 1780, m. William Higbee, removed to Vermont. Francina (later Cynthia), b. August 1, 1782, m. Jacob Bartley, removed to Vermont. Teunis removed to Vermont, then to Canada, and finally to the West. Frederick removed to Vermont, and later to Westfield, N. Y. Christian, b. January 21, 1790, m. (first) Rachel Hough, of Ferrisburg, Vt., and (second) Maria Cromwell, of Fishkill. He lived several years in Vermont, but returned to Fishkill. Gen. Stewart Van Vliet, U. S. A. (grad. West Point in 1840), is a son by his first wife [See Appleton's Cyclopaedia of American Biography]; and a son by his second wife was the late Lieut. Frederick Van Vliet, U. S. A.

John Van Vliet, son of Petrus and Johanna (or Hannah), b. September 25, 1770, d. in Fishkill October 25, 1847. He married Elizabeth Cromwell, b. February 25, 1769, d. May 17, 1837. Children: Rachel, b. November 27, 1793, d. January 11, 1874; m. Peter Brett, of Fishkill. Peter, b. July 20, 1795, d. March 20, 1846; m. Phebe Rickey; line extinct. Joseph Cromwell, b. Sarah A. Cromwell, and has children. Cornelius Westbrook, b. October 1, 1815, d. April 10, 1889; of Birmingham, Conn.; m. Eveline Hurst, and left children.

Peter Van Vliet, son of Petrus and Johanna, born October 31, 1775, went to Vermont when he became of age and settled at Charlott near Burlington, where he died, September 1, 1853. He married Sarah Hough, and had

*The will of Johannes Van Wormer, of Albany, 23 October, 1752, proved 16 October, 1753, names wife Engeltje and three daughters, Hannah, Alida and Mary. Executors, his "beloved father" (in law), John Concklin, and "beloved brother" (in law), Henry G. Livingston. The latter married Susanna Concklin; the Rev. Dr. John H. Livingston was their son.

fifteen children, some still living. None of these are connected with Dutchess county except his son Aaron (Arie), b. December 10, 1804, who returned to Fishkill, where he settled, and died March 4, 1839. He married (first) Anne Catharine, daughter of Peter Bogardus and Anne Van Vliet (no surviving issue), and (second) Matilda, daughter of Peter Brett and Rachel Van Vliet, by whom he had one son, Benson Van Vliet, of Poughkeepsie. Benson Van Vliet, born at Fishkill Landing, August 22, 1837; m. October 12, 1860, Katharine B. Saxton. Children: Bertha, Annie, Helena and Florence. He is business manager of Vassar College.

Line of Dirck Van Vliet—Dirck Van Vliet, son of the first Adrian and Agatha, died in Kingston in 1702. He married, April 23, 1685, Anna, only surviving child of Andries Barentsen and Hilletje Hendricks, from Meppel, in Drenthe, who arrived in the "Trouw," in December, 1659. Andries was wounded in the Indian attack on "Wiltwyck," in June, 1663, and, dying soon after, his widow married Albert Jansen Van Steenwyck. Anna was baptized in Kingston, September 10, 1662. She long survived her husband, and her Bible, printed in 1629, is now in the possession of Henry R. Van Vliet, of Clinton. Children: Arie (Adrian), b. June 10, 1686. Hilletje, bapt. January 1, 1688; m. Gysbert Peele, son of Paulus Peele. Andries, bapt. November 5, 1691, unmarried after 1722. Agatha, b. 1693; m. Teunis, son of Adam Swart. Cornelia, bapt. June 7, 1695; m. Matthew Edward Thompson; he was still living when Kingston was burned in 1777; his house, corner of John and East Front streets, shared the common fate; he rebuilt the house with the same walls, and it stood until recently. Gerrit, bapt. July 1697; d. young. Rachel, bapt. May 7, 1699; m. Teunis, son of Cornelius Swart, cousin of Agatha's husband; both nephews of the wife of Gerrit Van Vliet. Dirck, bapt. January 1, 1701; m. Marritje Crispel; left one daughter. Catharina, b. November 12, 1702, "between 11 and 12 o'clock."

Arie, or Adrian, Van Vliet was born in Kingston, June 10, 1686, and was the only son of the first Dirck who left sons to carry the name. He married, February 26, 1711, Marritje, daughter of Cornelius Masten and Elizabeth Van Wagenen. Cornelius was son of John Marston (as he wrote his name), an Englishman (of New York, and afterward one of the patentees of Flushing), and Dievertje Jans Van Langendyck, from St. Martins, in North Holland. He was probably named for Cornelius Wynkoop, who married his mother's sister, Marritje, and settled in Kingston, where Cornelius Masten also came to live. Adrian and Gerritje had nine children: Anna Catharina, b. June 30, 1712, d. young. Elizabeth, b. August 8, 1713; m. Gerrit Freer, of Ulster county. Catharina, b. August 1, 1715, m. William Wood, of Ulster county. Cornelius, b. October 13, 1716, d. unmarried in 1764. Marritje, b. February 17, 1718; m. her cousin, Arthur Masten. Dirck, b. November 26, 1721, of Clinton, Dutchess county [See farther on]. Johannes (twin), b. November 26, 1721, m., first, his cousin, Cornelia, daughter of Teunis Swart and Agatha Van Vliet, and, second, Seletje, daughter of Juriaan Snyder, and sister of Col. Johannes Snyder, of the Revolutionary army. Benjamin, b. May 20, 1723; m. Mach-teld, daughter of John Ostrom. Anna, b. April 5, 1726; m. John Ostrom, son of Roelof Ostrom. Adrian Van Vliet, about 1740 to 1750, bought several parcels of land in Dutchess county, mostly in the Nine Partners Patent, on which he settled his four sons. From their new homes they could still see the Catskill mountains, on which four generations of the family had now looked. Cornelius and Dirck remained where they settled, near Pleasant Plains; but John soon returned to Ulster county, where he settled on other lands of his father, near the present Eddyville; while Benjamin, about 1772, removed to the Mohawk Valley, near Schenectady. Cornelius, in his will, 1 June, 1763, proved 20 June, 1764, styles himself "of Charlotte Precinct, in Dutchess County, gentleman," and besides other bequests gives two nephews named for him, each £200.

Dirck Van Vliet, born November 26, 1721, settled in the present town of Clinton (then Crumelbow, and afterward Charlotte Precinct), where his great-grandson, Lewis Van Vliet, now lives, and died there September 26, 1800. He was buried in the Reformed Churchyard, at Rhinebeck, of which Church he had been a deacon. [Historical Address, by Rev. Dr. Drury.] He married (first) December 21, 1741, Rachel, daughter of Tjerck Van Keuren and Marytjen Ten Eyck, and great-granddaughter of Tjerck Claessen DeWitt, bapt. February 18, 1722; by her he had one child, Marytjen, bapt. August 8, 1742, who d. young.

He married (second) February 1, 1754, Helena, daughter of Johannes Weaver and Catharina Elizabeth Denmark (of Palatine families), born July 24, 1733, and died in Clinton July 27, 1805; buried at Rhinebeck. Children: Catharine, b. September 15, 1755, d. September 29, 1804; m. Col. John DeWitt, son of Capt. Petrus DeWitt, of Wittmount and Rocksdale, in Staatsburg, and Rachel Radcliff. Gerritje, b. April 15, 1757; m. Abraham Freligh, and removed, after the Revolution, to Frelighsburg, Lower Canada. Anna, b. February 10, 1759; m. (first) Denis Relyea, Jr. (of Huguenot descent), and (second) William Brink, and removed to Broome county. Cornelius, b. December 21, 1760, of Clinton [See farther on]. Elizabeth, b. October 20, 1762; m., first, Benjamin, brother of Denis Relyea, and, second, Conrad Sharpe, and removed to Chenango county. Helena, b. August 19, 1764; m. Ebenezer Babcock, of Poughkeepsie. John, b. July 2, 1766, d. at Odelltown, Lower Canada, September, 1851; m. Helena, daughter of Charles Traver and Jemima Garrison. Richard (Dirck), b. June 23, 1768, d. at Schodack December 9, 1841; m. Sarah Masten. Lydia, b. March 18, 1770, d. July 3, 1828; m. Jacob Sleight, of Clinton. Mary, b. September 17, 1773, d. April 13, 1839; m. Henry Sleight, of Clinton. Henry, b. July 9, 1775; m. Mary Seaman; removed to Aurora, Erie county.

When the Revolution came, and every man was expected to choose one side or the other, many respectable, law-abiding men were not ready for extreme measures. The list of those classed as "Loyalists" shows the names of some members of most of the best families in all the Colonies, and the greater number of these were men who, honestly differing in opinion, took no active part, and wished as well for their country as did the other party. Yet they suffered banishment or confiscation, or both, rather than do what they considered wrong. One of this class was Dirck Van Vliet. He had held an office, and had taken the oath of allegiance to "the Crown." Now when asked to take the oath of allegiance to the newly-constituted government, he said "he could not break his oath." Then he was required to retire within the British lines, and did so. He remained in banishment on Long Island five years, "without seeing one of his family," as a grandson, in Canada, records. Sabine, in his "American Loyalists," states that he was permitted to return "on the petition of Whigs," in 1784. The names of some of these are known. They believed his banishment as needless as it was cruel. He escaped confiscation, and so fared better than many others. While some of his descendants may wish his record had been different at this time, they may feel some satisfaction in contemplating his character, as a man who was willing to suffer rather than do what he thought was wrong.

Cornelius Van Vliet, son of Dirck and Helena, born in Clinton, December 21, 1760, died there February 7, 1848. He settled near his father, just east of Pleasant Plains Church. He married (first) Helena, daughter of Jost Garrison and Magdalena Van Dyck, born March 12, 1757, died June 10, 1801. Among her ancestors are the names of De Groot, Montross, Van Dyck, of New York, and Van Egmont, of Albany. He married (second) Susanna, daughter of Epenetus Platt, of New Milford and Susanna Mervyn, born August 25, 1762, died January 23, 1852. He had nine children by his first wife, and one by his second, viz.: Cornelius, b. February 10, 1783; of Staatsburg [See next family]. Levi, b. January 6, 1786; of Clinton [See farther on]. Rachel, b. April 30, 1788, d. March 15, 1810, unmarried. John, b. December 3, 1789 [See farther on]. Elizabeth, b. December 15, 1791, d. July 13, 1795. William Benthous, b. September 27, 1793, d. July 28, 1811 (he was thrown from a horse). Clarissa Maria (twin), b. September 27, 1793, d. January 26, 1871; m. John Caswell, of Poughkeepsie. Henry Hiram, b. August 19, 1796, d. June 15, 1855; merchant in New York, m. Jane, daughter of Capt. Joseph Harris, of Poughkeepsie, d. December 31, 1855, aged fifty-two; they had seven daughters—Cornelia (m. William H. Nevins, of New York), Jane (m. Henley W. Chapman, of Green Bay, Wis.), Josephine (m. Van Buren Brownley, of Green Bay), and four who died young. Richard Garrison, b. June 10, 1801, d. December 5, 1801. Platt Garrison (by second wife), b. May 15, 1807 [See below].

Cornelius Van Vliet, Jr., of Staatsburg, son of Cornelius and Helena, was born February 10, 1783, and died April 22, 1863. He married Mary, daughter of Capt. Isaac Russell and Hannah Fairbanks, who was born at Sherburne, Mass., April 15, 1783, and died April 1849. Isaac Russell fought at Bunker Hill and was in the succeeding war. He was a son of Thomas and Hannah (Coolidge) Russell.

[For his ancestry see "Descendants of John Russell, Sr. (of Woburn)," by John R. Bartlett]. Children: Helen, b. June 22, 1807, d. October 1, 1857; m. Samuel H. Braman. Hannah, b. March 16, 1809, d. December 21, 1892, unmarried. Hiram, b. January 27, 1811, d. August 26, 1837, unmarried. Clarissa Maria, b. April 9, 1813, d. February 20, 1881, unmarried. William, b. June 1, 1815, d. in New York, February 25, 1872; m. Caroline, daughter of David Mulford, and had, Jane Augusta, m. John C. Shaw, counselor at law, of New York, James Mulford, d. young, and Frederick, d. unmarried. Susan, b. October 7, 1817, d. July 21, 1891; m. the Rev. William Barham Heath, and had one child, Cornelius V. V. Heath. James Russell, b. April 4, 1820, d. April 28, 1893, of Staatsburg; unmarried. Isaac Fiske, M. D., b. June 11, 1822, d. February 23, 1876; of Rhinebeck [See below]. Mary Asenath, b. April 13, 1827, d. February 13, 1892, unmarried. Mr. Van Vliet and his brother John bought the Rocksdale estate, about 500 acres, formerly the property of Capt. Petrus De Witt, and divided it between them, John taking the westerly portion (now Mr. Alfred De Witt's), and Cornelius the easterly, with the old mansion; and this remained the home of the family until 1866.

Dr. Isaac F. Van Vliet settled at Rhinebeck. He married, in 1847, Susan, daughter of David C. Benjamin, of Fishkill, who died in Poughkeepsie February 10, 1893, and had four children: Ella, m. the Rev. Henry L. Liegenfuss, D. D., Archdeacon of Dutchess. She died in Poughkeepsie, January 23, 1894, and he died February 8, following. William B., now of Johnstown, N. Y., m. Frances S., daughter of Judge Fowler, of Milford, Conn.; no children. Edward B., d. February 19, 1875, aged nineteen. Frank B., d. in Honduras, December 6, 1893, aged twenty-seven; unmarried.

Levi Van Vliet, son of Cornelius and Helena, was born January 6, 1786, and died August 25, 1860. He married Mary, daughter of Capt. Frederick Uhl and Huldah Mulford, born February 10, 1792, died January 27, 1869. Children: George, b. July 21, 1816, d. July 12, 1845; of Poughkeepsie, civil engineer; m. Helen, daughter of John Bard and Eliza Helen Russell, and granddaughter of Anthony Bard, of Rhinebeck; no children. Lewis, b. March 18, 1827; late justice of the county court; m. (first) Jane A., daughter of William I. Brown, and (second) Mary J., daughter of John Caswell; no children. Henry Richard, b. December 8, 1833; m. Hannah, daughter of John Le Roy, Jr., and has one son, George S., who m., in 1894, Mercedes, daughter of Jacob L. Tremper, of Rhinebeck. Levi Van Vliet became the owner of the homestead of his grandfather, and later that of his father. The former he left to Lewis, and the latter to Henry. In 1847 he built a new house on the site of the one built by his grandfather, Dirck, in 1753. The old house was of stone, similar to many yet remaining in Kingston.

Col. John Van Vliet, son of Cornelius and Helena, born December 3, 1789, died at Elbridge, Onondaga Co., N. Y., in 1874. He married (first) Maria E., daughter of John Beadle, of Pleasant Valley, and sister of Dr. Edward L. Beadle, who died March 8, 1827; and (second) Ann, daughter of Thomas Thurston, of Lagrange, and widow of Baltus Overocker. By his first wife he had: Ann Maria, m. Edward Y. Barnes, and d. August 3, 1886, aged sixty-six. John Beadle, merchant in New York; m. Abbie J., daughter of Alexander Purdy, of Macedon, and had, Purdy, of New York; counselor at law, and William, d. young. Henry Edgar, of Elbridge, N. Y., d. September 27, 1873, aged forty-nine; m. Mary, daughter of James Gillies, and had, John and Mary. Erastus Lockwood, accidentally killed, while hunting, near Fremont, Kans., September 28, 1860, aged thirty-four, unmarried. In 1836 John Van Vliet sold his property at Staatsburg, and removed to Macedon, Wayne Co., N. Y.; but late in life he resided at Elbridge, to be near his son; and there he and his second wife died.

Platt G. Van Vliet, son of Cornelius and Susanna, born May 15, 1807, died December 1, 1873; married Nancy, daughter of Timothy Lamoree, of Pleasant Valley, who died April 11, 1891, aged eighty-two. Children (only one of whom survived the parents): Catharine E., d. July 1, 1854, aged nineteen years. Susan E., d. October 13, 1851, aged fifteen years. De Witt, d. October 1, 1872, aged thirty-four; m. Elma Marshall, and left two children, George Platt, who m., in 1894, Florence Aldrich, of Whitfield, N. J., and Caroline, d. 1889, aged nineteen. George L. d. son), b. January 26, 1843; m. (first) Hannah E. Doty, and (second) Mary E. Allen, and has, by his second wife, Ethel and Cornelius. John Henry, d. February 11, 1846, aged ten months. Theodore, d. February 11, 1857, aged nine years. Alice, d. December 29, 1860, aged eleven years. After his father's death, that homestead being purchased by Levi Van Vliet, Platt G. Van Vliet removed to Salt Point, where he had purchased a farm, mills, and other property, and there he resided until his decease.

WILLIAM E. BADGLEY, a well-known agriculturist, residing near Arlington, Dutchess county, is descended from one of the oldest and most highly esteemed families of the county; and although he has passed the limit of three-score years and ten he still maintains his own well-deserved reputation as a progressive, liberal and public-spirited citizen. He is a native of Dutchess county, born in the town of Clinton, September 21, 1816. His great-grandfather, Anthony Badgley, came in early manhood to Rhode Island, where his son George, our subject's grandfather, was born in 1752.

George Badgley married Elizabeth Moss, a native of Dutchess county, and purchased a farm in Pleasant Valley, where they passed the remainder of their lives. He died September 10, 1825, his wife on August 28, 1828. They had twelve children: Phœbe, who married Mr. Peters, a farmer of Pleasant Valley; Joshua, a farmer of the same locality; John, who was also a farmer, first in the town of Clinton, and later in Oneida county; Elizabeth, the wife of Peter Welling, a farmer near the old home; Mary, who never married; Anthony, a merchant in Pleasant Valley; Jonathan, a farmer in the town of Clinton; Stephen, a farmer in Saratoga county; Ann, who married John Weeks, a farmer in Delaware county; George, our subject's father; and Joseph and Elisha, neither of whom married.

The father of our subject was born February 8, 1791, and grew to manhood at the old farm in Pleasant Valley. He married Emma Seelye, who was born September 15, 1794, and was the eldest of the five children of Dr. Lewis Seelye, a prominent physician of Wayne county, where he was born, and his wife, Desire Mott. Of the others, Saphira never married; Polly was the wife of Mr.

Town, a farmer in Wayne county; Milton was a merchant in New York; and Lewis was a prominent resident of Rochester, and represented his district in Congress. (He was a blacksmith by trade). After their marriage our subject's parents settled upon a farm in the town of Clinton, where they made their permanent home. They were Presbyterians in religious faith, and politically Mr. Badgley was a Democrat. He died November 3, 1881, and his wife on May 5, 1878. Of their five children our subject is the eldest. The others were George L., who died in infancy; Mary E.; George E., a farmer in the town of Pleasant Valley; and Emma C., who married J. G. Pells, a farmer in Pleasant Valley.

William E. Badgley attended the district schools of his locality for some years, and later the Dutchess County Academy. His first employment was as a clerk in New York, where he remained fourteen months, but after that his attention was devoted to farming. On November 27, 1839, he married Jemima Thurston, a lady of English descent, who was born February 9, 1819, a daughter of Samuel Thurston, a prominent farmer of Pleasant Valley. He was also a surveyor, and laid out many of the towns of his vicinity and some of the streets of Poughkeepsie; he was a leader in political affairs, being elected to the State Legislature in 1823. In the spring of 1840 Mr. and Mrs. Badgley purchased a farm of 175 acres five miles from Poughkeepsie, admirably adapted to general farming. Ten children were born to them: Catherine died in infancy; Mary E. married Edward Van Wagner, of Newburg; George manages two large farms, and is proprietor of a "Temperance Hotel" at Washington Hollow; Calvert Jerome is a milkman, residing near Poughkeepsie; Eliphalet, a farmer, is living on the old homestead, adjoining farm to his father; William E. is a farmer in the town of Clinton; Flora and Minerva died in early womanhood; Charles is a grocer in Newburg; Emma J. lives at home. Mrs. Badgley died December 11, 1891, after more than half a century of wedded life. They celebrated their Golden Wedding with their children and grandchildren November 27, 1889. There are four generations now living, there being a great-grandson, Wm. E. Van Wagner, of Newburg.

In all the helpful activities of his community Mr. Badgley has always been a prominent factor; he is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and an ardent worker in the temperance cause, in later years voting the Prohibition ticket.

ADRIAN M. CORNELL. The Cornell family is of French ancestry. The members went to Holland on account of religious persecution, and from there came to America in the seventeenth century. They were originally Huguenots.

Adrian Martense Cornell, the subject of this sketch, was born in the town of LaGrange, Dutchess county, April 1, 1818. His early life was spent there on the home farm and in attending school. At the age of twenty-five years he left home and bought a farm in the town of Clinton, and engaged in farming. In the fall of 1841 he was married to Miss Melissa Diamond, who was born in Lagrange, and who was a daughter of Henry Diamond. Of this marriage two children were born: Margaret Jane, who married George K. Brand, and Henry, an insurance agent in New York City.

In the spring of 1864 Mr. Cornell gave up farming, after an experience of twenty-three years, as his health began to fail, and came to Poughkeepsie, where, in 1873, he engaged in the dry-grocery business, carrying a stock of tea, coffee, spices, etc., in which he has continued for twenty-two years. For twenty-one of these he has been located at 227½ Main street. He is an enterprising citizen, a conscientious business man, and a member of the Presbyterian Church. Mrs. Cornell departed his life in 1871.

Cornelius Cornell, the father of our subject, was born on Long Island, and his parents moved to Lagrange when he was seven years old. He married Miss Deborah Van Kleeck, native of Lagrange, and a daughter of Peter Van Kleeck. Her father died forty years ago, and her mother twenty-five years ago. Mr. Cornell spent his life in farming, and was said to have been the best farmer and to have had the best farm in the town of Lagrange.

Peter Cornell, grandfather of our subject, was born on Long Island. He married Miss Mary Mesoole, and six children were born to them: Cornelius, Isaac, Jane, Eliza, Sarah and Margaret. Mr. Cornell was in the grocery business at Flat Bush, L. I., where they were kept prisoners at the time of the Revolutionary war. After the war was over he moved with his family to Lagrange, and bought a farm of 400 acres, on which he lived the rest of his life. He owned a number of slaves, which he freed after going to Lagrange. He was an elder in the old Dutch Church, and was much respected in the community.

Gideon Cornell, the great-grandfather, who was born in France, emigrated to America, residing in Long Island until the opening of the Revolutionary war, when he moved to Bucks county, Penn., where he died. He came to America in the year 1736.

WILLIAM C. ALBRO. The Albro family, of which this well-known resident of Pokeepsie is a worthy representative in this generation, has a notable history, as will be seen by the following chronological record:

(I) John Albro, born in England in 1617, died December 14, 1712, at Portsmouth, R. I.; married Mrs. Dorothy Potter, widow of Nathaniel Potter.

1634. Embarked on ship "Francis" from Ipswich, England, under care of William Freeborn, landing at Boston.

1638. Went with Freeborn to the Colony of Rhode Island.

1644. Served as corporal in the Colonial militia, rising successively to lieutenant, captain and major.

1649. Was chosen to view cattle; was clerk of weights and measures, and member of the town council.

1660. Was commissioner and member of the committee to receive contributions for agents in England.

1666. Appointed with two others, to take areas of highways and driftways not set off.

1670. With three others, loaned the Colony seven pounds on account of town of Portsmouth.

1671. Elected assistant in some public office.

1676. With three others, was the committee for the care and disposal of a barrel of powder for the supply of Portsmouth; also with others, was a commissioner to order watch and ward of the Island during King Philip's war; also a member of a court martial at Newport to try certain Indians.

1677. Committee with others in the matter of injurious and illegal acts of Connecticut.

1679. One of a committee to draw up a letter to the King, giving account of the Territory of Mount Hope, and of the late war with the Indians; also appointed with one other to lay out the western line of the Colony.

1685. Major John Albro, assistant and coroner, summoned a jury in the case of an Indian found dead in Clay Pit Lands, the verdict being "That said Indian, being much distempered with drink, was bewildered, and by the extremity of cold lost his life."

1686. Member of Sir Edmund Andros' council, and present at its first meeting in Boston, December 30, 1686.

1697. Allowed twenty shillings for going to Boston.

1710. By his will, dated December 28, proved 1713, he divided a considerable amount of real and personal property among his sons and daughters, and their children. He was buried in his own orchard. His children were: Samuel, Elizabeth, Mary, JOHN and Susannah.

(II)—John Albro, born 16—, died December 4, 1724. He married Mary Stokes in 1693. 1677—He was among those who were granted 5,000 acres of land, to be called East Greenwich. 1687—He was fined 6s. 8d. for refusing to take oath as a grand juror. 1720—His will proved, December 14, 1724, left a good estate, both real and personal. His children were: JOHN, Mary, Sarah and Samuel.

(III)—John Albro, born August 23, 1694, died 17— He married Abigail Ballou in 1713. In 1717 became a Freeman. In 1739, moved from Portsmouth to New Kingston. Some of his children subsequently going to Exeter. His children were: John, SAMUEL, Mary, Maturin, Sarah and Peter.

(IV)—Samuel Albro, born October 10, 1716, died in 1767. He married Alice ——. He went from N. Kingston to Exeter, where he passed the rest of his days. His widow died in 1787. He was an elder in the Baptist Church at Exeter. His children were: Alice, Thomas, SAMUEL, Martin and Waite.

(V)—Samuel Albro, born October 12, 1749, died in 1816. He married Patience Bull. He migrated from Exeter to the Clove Valley, about eighteen miles east from Pokeepsie, N. Y. He returned to Rhode Island for a wife, who was a descendant of Henry Bull, Colonial Governor of Rhode Island in 1685–1686. He introduced an apple called the Rhode Island Greening into Dutchess county, where it thrived and became very popular, and is still a marketable winter apple. His children were: THOMAS, Samuel, Waite, Alice and Hannah.

(VI)—Thomas Albro, born May 9, 1779, died September 24, 1852. He married Ever Tice. He lived a very uneventful life, never moving from the farming section in which he was born. Was elected a constable at one time, which seems to have satisfied his political ambition. His children were: Joseph, Samuel, John, Louisa, Catherine, William, and Philo and ZENO (twins).

(VII)—Zeno Albro, born June 10, 1809, died November 25, 1883. He married Mary A. Clark in 1847. He lived in many different places in New York and Pennsylvania; he was a man of thorough integrity, and much trusted by other men. He did not seem to inherit a taste for farming, but cast about for opportunities to buy and sell horses, cattle, carriages, merchandise and real estate, in most of which transactions he showed shrewdness and good judgment. At one time he owned a farm upon which the present City of Scranton, Pennsylvania, is in part built. His children were: WILLIAM C., Louise (deceased), John P., Mary E., and Merlin.

(VIII)—William Clark Albro, born August 16, 1848, married Theodora Rogers, November 3, 1875. He attended Wesleyan Academy, at Wilbraham, Mass., and Cornell University and Columbia College Law School, then under the management of Theodore W. Dwight, receiving at the latter institution the degree of LL. B. He was admitted to the New York Bar in 1874, and has since resided at Pokeepsie engaged in the practice of his profession. He enjoys a general practice, and has been executor or administrator of several important estates. Since 1891 he has been a member of the Pokeepsie board of education, and is deeply interested in the public schools. His children were: Florence, who died in infancy, and Edna Clark, who, after completing a course at Lyndon Hall School at Pokeepsie, entered Vassar College in 1895.

REV. JOHN B. WESTON, D. D., President of the Christian Biblical Institute at Stanfordville, Dutchess Co., N. Y., was born in Somerset county, Maine, July 6, 1821, the son of Stephen and Rebecca Weston.

His grandparents, Stephen and Martha Weston, were among the earliest members of the Christian Church in that part of Maine, and his parents belonged to the same denomination, his grandfather and father both being deacons. In his fourteenth year the subject of our sketch was converted, and baptized, and united with the same Church. Reared upon a farm, his earlier years were spent in hard work, to which he is indebted, however, for the habits of industry which have made his life fruitful. His opportunities for schooling were meagre, but he learned easily, and by faithful use of such advantages as he had, and improving his leisure moments at home, he made unusual progress in study, standing high in ordinary branches, and gaining a thorough knowledge of algebra, geometry, trigonometry, surveying and navigation by private study, with his father's aid. At seventeen he began teaching school in winters; and from eighteen to twenty-two, at other seasons of the year, he attended the Academy at Bloomfield, Maine, when he could be spared from the farm work, making the equivalent about four terms in a

J. B. Weston

In this time he prepared for college in Latin and Greek, and gained proficiency in French and other advanced branches of a college course; but his means would not permit him to go to college at that time. He attended the first Sunday-school organized in his native place, and at sixteen years of age he became a teacher of a class. At about the same age he assisted in organizing the Young People's Total Abstinence Society, the first society pledged to total abstinence that he had ever known, and was one of its first officers. He has from that time taken an active interest in Temperance work. From the time of his conversion, and especially from his seventeenth year, he was interested in all religious work, and had a strong impression that it was his duty to enter the ministry, though his natural timidity made him shrink from the work. This conviction became so urgent that in 1843, before he was twenty-two, he united with the Maine Central Christian Conference, and was approved as a licentiate. In August of that year he accepted a call to a small church in West Newbury, Mass. In 1844 he was ordained, and continued to minister to his first charge until 1846, spending some time in Boston, however, in the study of Hebrew with Dr. Eli Noyes, and of elocution with James E. Murdoch, the tragedian. In 1846 he was called to be office editor and publishing agent of the "Herald of Gospel Liberty," then published at Exeter, N. H. After seven months there he moved with it to Newburyport, Mass., and in the following year he accepted a call to the Christian Church at Skowhegan, Maine, where he preached three years. He was married in 1849 to his first wife, Miss Nancy McDonald, who proved to him a true helper.

In 1850 he was a delegate to, and one of the vice-presidents of, the Christian Convention, held at Marion, N. Y., where the denomination determined to establish Antioch College. Early in 1852, he became pastor of the Christian Church in Portland, Me., and remained until October, 1853, when, to fulfill his long-cherished wish for a collegiate education, he entered the first class in Antioch College, of Yellow Springs, Ohio, of which Hon. Horace Mann was president, graduating in 1857. At the end of his third year he was invited by President Mann to take the position of Principal of the Preparatory Department; but he declined, accepting the appointment, however, after his graduation, when it was again tendered. During the war the entire responsibility of the College was on his shoulders. At the close he became professor of Greek, remaining until 1881, making twenty-eight years at Antioch. In October, 1881, he was elected President of the Christian Biblical Institute, as successor to Dr. Austin Craig, and assumed the position January 1, 1882. During the fifteen years in which he has held this position the Institute has had a steady growth and improvement. The endowment funds have been more than quadrupled; two resident professors and one non-resident professor have been added to the Faculty; the courses of study have been re-organized, and the standard of requirements raised. Students have gone out every year from the school, who are doing valuable service and holding important positions as ministers of the Gospel. Besides being the President of the school and giving daily lectures, he has done other professorial work usually devolving upon several Chairs. Since 1891 he has also been the Treasurer of the Institute, and the oversight of the property and the management of its funds have been in his hands, and important improvements have been made in the buildings and grounds. Both these positions he still holds, and now (1897) at the age of seventy-six, he is in vigorous health, and actively discharging the multiplied duties of his positions.

Dr. Weston's first wife died in May, 1858, and in June, 1860, he married a classmate, Miss Achsah E. Waite, of Chicago, who has been his assistant at Stanfordville, as she was at Antioch. He has never been athletic, but has always enjoyed good health, and had great capacity for endurance. During his forty-three years of school work he has never once missed meeting his classes on account of his own health, and never has called in a physician to see him, except on the occasion of a single accident. Possessing rare intellectual ability, united with practical judgment and force of character, he could have made his way in any sphere of life; and his unswerving devotion to the interests of the Christian Church, local and general, has made him a helpful influence in many of her most important enterprises.

STEPHEN HOLMES IRELAND (deceased) was one of the leading and progressive agriculturists of the town of Clinton, Dutchess county, where his entire life was passed, his birth occurring there October 7, 1834. The family was founded in the United States by three brothers—Isaac, William and Edward Ireland—natives of Wales. The first named (who was grandfather of our subject) was married in Westchester county, N. Y., to Phœbe Keil, whose father, Christopher, was born October 15, 1747, and when eighteen years of age came from Germany. Six children were born of this union, all now deceased, namely: Deborah, Mary, Hannah, James, Phœbe Eliza, and Ann. Isaac afterward married Mary, sister of Phœbe. He was a Quaker, and carried on farming for many years in Westchester county; but the latter part of his life was passed on a farm in the town of Clinton, Dutchess county.

James Ireland, the father of our subject, was born in Westchester county, December 29, 1806, and was three years of age when brought by his parents to the town of Clinton, where he attended school, and received his instruction in farming upon the old homestead under the able direction of his father, remaining there until the latter's death. In 1856 he bought a farm of his own in the town of Clinton, which he continued to cultivate and improve until called from this life, June 26, 1882. In that township he had married Caroline Hoag (formerly of Saratoga, N. Y., and daughter of Isaac and Martha (Hatfield) Hoag), who died in 1877.

Our subject was an only child, and after completing his education in the district schools remained upon his father's farm until his marriage, January 6, 1863, at White Plains, Westchester Co., N. Y., to Miss Elmira A. Horton, a daughter of John H. and Arna H. (Park) Horton (Quakers), of White Plains. Six children graced this union: Ella A. and Irving H. H., both of Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; Vernon A., of Clinton Corners, Dutchess county; Edwin Park Horton; Harry G.; and Zera Jay.

Mr. Ireland continued to farm his father's place until 1875, when his wife bought the present home of the family, where he remained until his death, which occurred June 20, 1892. He was a worthy member of the Christian Church of Schultzville, and in politics was a Republican after the war, previous to which event he and his father and grandfather were all staunch Democrats. He never took an active part in political affairs, preferring rather to devote his time to his business interests. He supported all feasible plans for the moral and intellectual advancement of the community, and was an important factor in promoting its welfare. A valued citizen, a kind father and affectionate husband, his memory should be cherished and perpetuated by all. He had inherited his father's farm, which, together with the home place, his widow and sons now operate very successfully. Mrs. Ireland, a most estimable lady, is demonstrating her business genius by the able manner in which she is now conducting her affairs, and the farms now yield a handsome income as the result of her good management and sound judgment.

JOHN H. LAMBERT (deceased). Among the prosperous agriculturists of the town of Rhinebeck, Dutchess county, the subject of this sketch took a leading rank. He was a descendant of an old German family, who came from the city of Bredenfeld, Mecklenburg-Strelitz.

John Lambert, his grandfather, settled upon a farm in the town of Rhinebeck, and he and his wife (formerly Miss Elizabeth Sipperly) were prominent members of the community and devout adherents of the Lutheran Church. Their only child, Henry Lambert, our subject's father, grew to manhood at his father's farm in that township, and married Eliza Fraleigh, a daughter of John Fraleigh, a wealthy farmer of Red Hook. After their marriage they located upon a farm in that township, where their only son, our subject, was born September 18, 1820. Their second child, Emeline, married John V. Benner, a farmer and wagon maker.

During his boyhood, our subject, like many another farmer's boy, desired a mercantile pursuit in preference to the routine of farm work, and for some time he was employed in a store as clerk. Even in youth he displayed the qualities of leadership, and became captain of a company of State militia. He was a fine specimen of manhood, and while on parade on one occasion Gov. Seward singled him out for complimentary notice. On November 9, 1841, he married Miss Louisa Schultz, a native of the town of Clinton, and granddaughter of Jacob Schultz, a prominent farmer of Rhinebeck. Her father, Peter Schultz, spent his later years upon a farm in Rhinebeck. (The Schultz family came from Mecklenburg-Strelitz.) Her mother's maiden name was Elizabeth Sheak, and she was a representative of one of the oldest families in the town of Clinton, her ancestors coming originally from Holland. After his marriage Mr. Lambert became a farmer, settling in the town of Rhinebeck. He tried various farms at first, but in 1850 he established his home permanently on a beautiful estate of 150 acres near the village of Rhinebeck, and was engaged in farming forty-four years, making a specialty of raising hay and grain. He was an active supporter of any local improvement, his fine abilities and public spirit giving him wide influence, and his death, which occurred January 23, 1894, was felt to be a blow to the entire community. He and his wife had long been members of the Lutheran Church, and even in the midst of his business cares he could always find time to assist in Church affairs. Politically he was a Democrat, but he did not covet office, and more than once declined to permit the use of his name as a candidate. His wife and two daughters, Addie H. and Irene, survive him, and now conduct the estate with marked success.

GEORGE W. KETCHAM, one of the prominent and influential business men of Dover Plains, Dutchess Co., N. Y., has for many years been connected with its banking interests, holding the office of president of the Dover Plains National Bank since 1875. The safe conservative policy which he has inaugurated commends itself to the judgment of all, and has secured a patronage for the bank which makes the volume of business transacted over its counters one of no small magnitude. The success of the institution is certainly due in a large measure to Mr. Ketcham, and to-day stands among the strongest financial concerns in the State. The other officers are Edwin Vincent, vice-president; Richard P. Ketcham, cashier; and George T. Barrett, book-keeper.

James Ketcham, the paternal grandfather of the subject of these lines, was a native of Long Island, where, owing to the limited means of the family and scarcity of schools at that time, he received but a meagre education. At the age of twelve years he came to Dover Plains, Dutchess county, poor in purse, but rich in energy and progressiveness. His uncle, who at that time was conducting a general store near the village, observing the remarkable energy and brightness of the boy, took him into his employ at one shilling per day; but from the small beginning he rapidly rose. During the war of 1812 he commanded a company of militia as captain, and lent valuable aid to the United States. In politics he was a Whig, and was elected a member of the Assembly from Dutchess county; also held the office of postmaster at Dover Plains for over fourteen years, and served in several other public positions. His very eventful life was ended in 1871, when he had attained the patriarchal age of ninety-four years. He had married Miss Lois Belding, by whom he had three children: John M., the father of our subject; David, who died at the age of thirty years; and Maria, who became the wife of Seneca Mabbett.

John M. Ketcham was born in the village of Dover Plains, Dutchess county, February 14, 1807, and after completing his education in the public schools he engaged in merchandising at that place, becoming very successful. In the vicinity of the village he purchased a fine piece of farming land containing a marble quarry, which property had previously belonged to his father-in-law. His farm was operated mostly by hired help, but he gave considerable personal attention to the conducting of the quarry in connection with his other business. A man of the strictest integrity, and upright in all his dealings, he held the confidence and esteem of all. He greatly increased the fortune left by his father, becoming the possessor of a handsome property. Like his father, he was a leader in politics, but was the only one of the entire family to support the Democratic party; was three times elected a member of the Assembly, and was also elected supervisor of the town of Dover a number of times.

On May 20, 1828, John M. Ketcham married Miss Elizabeth A. Stevens, daughter of Ebenezer and Elizabeth Stevens, of Dover Plains. Her maternal grandfather, Stephen Cushing, was born in the town of Dover, Dutchess county, July 8, 1749, and July 12, 1773, he married Miss Rachel Foster, who was born in the same town, July 13, 1752, a daughter of Stephen and Rachel Foster. Mr. Cushing was called from this life October 16, 1825, his wife on December 12, 1824. In their family were eleven children, whose names and dates of birth are as follows: William, April 30, 1774; Jane, May 18, 1776; Stephen, May 3, 1779 (at one time he was attorney-general for the State of New York); Milton, February 3, 1781; Elizabeth, October 4, 1782; Jeremiah, June 1, 1784; Thomas, December 15, 1785; Milton (2), September 7, 1787; Deborah, November 15, 1789; Rachel, April 23, 1791; and Catherine, July 31, 1793. Of this family Elizabeth Cushing was a native of Dutchess county, and on June 5, 1803, she became the wife of Ebenezer Stevens, who was born in Dutchess county, April 4, 1776, and died in 1843; her death occurred December 22, 1840. In their family were six children, namely: Maria T., born October 30, 1804, married Benjamin K. Delevan; Herman, born May 12, 1806, married Miss Lucy Belding; Elizabeth A., born October 16, 1808, was the mother of our subject; Catherine, born June 26, 1810, was married October 11, 1831, to John R. Preston; William, born August 26, 1821, was married in June, 1842, to Miss Mary E. Ross; and Ebenezer, born July 27, 1824, was married in 1845 to Miss Sarah K. Beldon.

To John M. Ketcham and his estimable wife were born nine children, as follows: (1) William S. was born, reared and educated at Dover Plains, and on reaching manhood he married Miss Emily Titus, daughter of Judge Titus, of the town of Washington, Dutchess county; he always took an active part in politics, as a stanch Democrat, and held several local offices, among them that of supervisor of the town of Dover. (2) John H. was also born in Dover Plains. (3) Maria L. married William R. Butts. (4) George W. is next in order in birth. (5) James C. and (6) Ebenezer both died at the age of six years. (7) Elizabeth C. married Romine Waterbury. (8) James C. married Miss Alice F. Meeker. (9) Morris married Miss Rosie H. Lowery, of Washington, D. C. The father of this family died June 17, 1853, the mother on December 21, 1888.

George W. Ketcham, whose name introduces this memoir, was born in the town of Dover, Dutchess Co., N. Y., in 1838, and received an excellent education at Brown University, Providence, R. I., where he graduated in 1860. He then engaged in the marble business at Dover Plains, and also conducted a large farm near the village; but most of his attention was devoted to the former. Like his brothers, he has always taken a deep interest in political affairs, and has served as supervisor of his native town. Through his business he has not only promoted his own interests, but has aided in the advancement and welfare of his town and county. He stands high in financial circles, and is exceedingly popular with all classes of citizens. Generous and strictly conscientious and upright in all his dealings, his career is one that he can look back upon with just and pardonable pride.

On February 20, 1867, George W. Ketcham married Miss Elizabeth A. Schofield, of Brockville, Canada, in which city her father, Augustus Schofield, was engaged in merchandising. Her grandfather, Dr. Peter Schofield, was a native of Dutchess county, N. Y., where he married Miss Deborah Cushing; but a few years after the birth of their first child they removed to Canada, where he followed his profession. Four children were born to them: Augustus, Milton, Elizabeth and Herman. Augustus Schofield was born at Pawling, Dutchess county, and was four years old when taken by his parents to Canada, where he was educated in the public schools. After laying aside his text books he commenced merchandising in Brockville, and successfully conducted his store for a number of years; he was also United States consul at Brockville some twelve years. He married Miss Electa Breckenridge, daughter of David Breckenridge, an officer in the British army, who for his services had been granted considerable valuable farming land in Canada. Three children were born of this union: William H. (deceased); Elizabeth, who died at the age of seven years, and Elizabeth A., the wife of our subject.

WILLIAM D. BUDD, a prominent manufacturer and speculator of Dutchess Junction, Dutchess county, has been for many years a leading worker in the development of that locality, having participated in some of the most important constructions and enterprises undertaken there. He is a native of Phillipstown, Putnam county, the youngest son of William and Elizabeth Haight Budd, the other children being Martha, Hannah, Jane, Mary, John and Underhill.

During his childhood his parents removed to Matteawan, and his education was acquired in the public schools of that town. He began to display his business ability at an early age by speculating in real estate, improved and unimproved, and also engaged in the wood business. In 1848 and 1849 he assisted in the construction of the Hudson River railroad, and was one of the first men to ride on cars from Fishkill to New Hamburg, or "Old Troy," as it was then called. This was the season of the great cholera epidemic, and was marked also by the loss of the steamer "Empire," and the drowning of many of her passengers and crew. The coroner, who was called to hold an inquest on the bodies, died of cholera before he had completed the task. In 1868, the same year in which ground was broken for the construction of the N. D. & C. R. R., Mr. Budd began the manufacture of brick, in partnership with Charles Griggs, whose interest he purchased four years later for $12,000. He continued the business alone for some time, and then sold a share in it to the Terry Brothers, the partnership then formed lasting six years, when the business was put up for sale at auction. Mr. Budd bought in the plant, and for the last eighteen years has carried on the business alone. The yards are located upon a tract of twenty-six acres of land originally bought from the railroad, and have recently been enlarged and much improved. He has always continued his real-estate speculations more or less, and is still interested in some important transactions in that line. He has taken part at times in various other business enterprises, and was for many years a trustee of the Fishkill Landing Savings Bank.

Mr. Budd married Miss Ann Rogers, a daughter of Samuel and Catherine (Scott) Rogers, and they have two children, Lizzie Kate, and Ella. The family attend the Methodist Church, and Mr. and Mrs. Budd have always shown an active interest in whatever concerned the welfare and advancement of the town. They have a pleasant home at Dutchess Junction. In early manhood Mr. Budd was a Democrat in politics, later becoming a Whig, and in 1860 he cast his ballot for Abraham Lincoln, since which time he has given his support to the Republican party. He held the office of collector for his town for three years—1858, 1859, and about 1877—and has been trustee of the schools of Matteawan, his interest in improved educational advantages being shown by his able discharge of the duties of that position.

CHARLES F. SEGELKEN, the efficient manager of the Western Union Telegraph office at Dover Plains, Dutchess county, is one of the leading residents of that town. He is a native of Germany, and was born in 1835, in the Grand Duchy of Oldenburg, where his family had been prominent for many generations. His grandfather, Herman Segelken, was a highly educated man, and held the position of captain of a vessel. He married, and reared a family of four children: Mary; Ann; Theresa; and Herman, our subject's father. Herman Segelken, too, was born in the Grand Duchy of Oldenburg, Germany, and after receiving a liberal education became a grain merchant and hotel keeper. His wife was Catherine S. Luhrs, also a native of Germany, and our subject was the eldest of their three children; Heinrich died in infancy; and Herman was the third.

Our subject enjoyed excellent educational advantages in his youth, and in 1854, at the age of eighteen, he came to the United States to seek his fortune. His first employment was in New York City, where he remained five years, and he then entered the service of the old American Telegraph Company, first as battery-man and then as lineman. In 1861 he was sent to Dover Plains as a line repairer and in 1864, having learned the art of telegraphy, he was appointed operator, and assistant agent of the Harlem road. In the following year he was appointed agent by J. C. Buckhouse, superintendent, and later was made the manager of the western office at that place, under Geo. B. Prescott, superintendent. He takes an active part in local affairs, and is well liked wherever he is known. In politics he is an ardent Republican, and he has served as health officer of the town. He is prominent in Masonic circles, and is a charter member of Dover Lodge No. 666, which was organized in 1867, and he has held the office of secretary for twenty-six years.

In 1866, Mr. Segelken married Miss Jeanette L. Talladay, a descendant of one of the old families of the town of Dover, and four children have blessed their union: Herman, born December 15, 1866; Charles F., Jr., August 19, 1879; George W., September 16, 1882; and Harrison, June 13, 1884. All are living except George W., who died in 1883.

Isaac Talladay, the grandfather of Mrs. Segelken, was born and educated in the town of Dover, where he engaged in agriculture. He married Miss Martha Griffin, and had eight children: Isaac; Jacob, who died in childhood; Seneca; John; Neilson, father of Mrs. Segelken; Alex; and Martha. Neilson Talladay was also a native of Dover, where he carried on carpentering. He married Miss Elizabeth Colby, the daughter of a prominent farmer of the same town, and had five children: Phœbe; Jeannette L. (Mrs. Segelken); Mary; Elizabeth; and Frank, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere.

REV. JOSHUA COLLINS, a well-known retired minister of the Presbyterian Church, has been for nearly twenty years a resident of Wappingers Falls, where his quiet but earnest and effective work in various movements tending to moral and intellectual progress is a recognized influence for good.
